On April 6, 1890, Mr. Stevens married Miss Ida E. daughter of Henry J. and Mary (Ertle) Fry, natives of Germany. The father was a prominent business man in Moscow but is now deceased. Mrs. Stevens has two sisters, Elmina Fry, treasurer of Latah county, and Emma, wife of George Steward, of Moscow. To Mr. and Mrs. Stevens there have been born the following children, Ray, Fred, Paul, Jesse, Ruth, Hazel, deceased, and Esther. James F. Stevens, a brother of our subject, was born in Tennessee and grew up in the various places where the family lived and two years after the family came to the coast he came also. He returned to Georgia and two years after that came back to Whitman county, Washington. He operated as section foreman until he was crippled by moving cars and then upon recovery he worked in Moscow. Finally, he went to Coos county, Oregon, and took a claim where he dwells at the present time, devoting his attention to his farm and the duties of a Dunkard preacher. He was married in Atlanta, Georgia, to Rhoda E. Quillen. They have six children. We desire to add that the subject of this sketch is one of the substantial and worthy men of this section and stands well with his fellows, being a man of enterprise, wisdom and integrity.

COURTNEY WALKER MEEK, deceased. One mile and one half west from Fletcher is the home allotment where the widow and descendants of the subject of this article resides, and which was also the home of Mr. Meek before his death. His name is known all over the northwest, not only on account of the prowess of his father but also because of his own activities, achivements, and personal worth. He was a man of fine appearance, strong intellectual powers, well versed in law and history and in every respect a public minded and patriotic citizen. He did pioneer work all over the northwest, fought the warring Indians, and as occasion provided settled down to producing the fruits of the field.

Courtney W. Meek was born in Idaho when it was a part of Oregon territory, on December 7, 1838, and his death occurred on May 13, 1896, being drowned in the Willamette river. His parents were the well known historical characters of Joseph L. and Virginia Meek, of whom especial mention is made in another portion of this work. Our subject was brought up at Hillsboro and attended the district school as well as the Indian school, which was located where part of the Forest Grove institution is now situated. Mr. Meek was seventeen years old when the Indian war of 1855 broke out and he and his father fought with Captains Layton and Goff. Our subject endured al the hardships and dangers incident to such a position and was also with Colonel Steptoe at the Medical Lake fight. During the Civil war he enlisted, being in Captain E. Palmer's Company B of the Oregon First Regiment of Infantry, the date of taking his place being December, 1864. On December 26, he was promoted as Corporal and saw service against the Indians. He was discharged at Vancouver on July 23, 1866. Following this he farmed in Washington county, Oregon, took a prominent part in developing the country and held county offices. In 1895 he sold out and came to his allotments and did considerable labor in locating settlers.

On September 24, 1878, Mr. Meek married Miss Adell, daughter of George and Eliza (Cathleen) Newton, natives of New York, and died in 1884 and 1896, respectively. Mrs. Meek was born in Wisconsin, on July 7, 1851. She has two sisters and one brother, Sarah, Eliza, Clark. The children born to this marriage were Josephine and George Newton, both deceased, Leonora E., and Cella W. Mrs. Meek has shown remarkable fortitude and business skill since the death of her husband. She has conducted the business, has improved the land, erected good buildings, has a large barn, a fine eight-room house and is one of the enterprising residents of the region. Mr. Meek was a member of the Pioneers' Association of Portland, the G. A. R., and of the Good Templars.

CHARLES S. PUNTENNEY is one of the leading men of the vicinity of Lookout, Nez Perces county, having a general merchandise store and a hardware establishment there. He was virtually the founder of the business industries of the place, although the name had been given when he came there. He is a native of Parke county, Indiana, being born on September 29, 1858, the son of James N. and Mary A. (Hamlin) Puntenney. The father was also born in Parke county, Indiana, on August 3, 1831, and still lives in Butler, Illinois, where he was in the state militia at the close of the Civil war. The mother of our subject was born in Springfield, Illinois, in 1839, and her father, a Methodist preacher, was a native of England, and followed preaching in Illinois. He was a younger brother of Emmons Hamlin, the famous musical instrument manufacturer. Mrs. Scott, the mother of Mrs. Puntenney was of Scotch descent, born in Kentucky and a relative of General Winfield Scott. Our subject was taken by his parents to Illinois while an infant and the father settled in Montgomery county, where he is an honored citizen. Charles gained his education there and remained at home until twenty-one. He was then a cowboy over southern Colorado, freighted and labored in the mines, where he did well. Later he returned to Butler and operated the home place and then went into the drug and grocery business in Butler. For eight years he continued thus and was prospered. In 1887, he sold out and went to Paris, Illinois, taking up the creamery business. After this we see him dealing in farm implements and then manufacturing a patent bed spring, in which he prospered. Selling out, he returned to Butler and went into the mines. Afterwards he was in Connellville, Pennsylvania, operating in a dry goods store and also in the mines. In March, 1891, he came to Boise and soon thence to Moscow. In this last town he remained in the grocery business until he sold and came to his present location in 1899. Since coming here he has done a good business and is carrying a good stock in his general store as well as in the hardware department.

On November 28, 1897, occurred the marriage of Mr. Puntenney and Miss Ida, daughter of Levi and Maria (Browning) Smith, in Hood River, Oregon, while she was visiting her sister and brother there. The father was born in Pennsylvania and mother at Baltimore, Maryland, and both died near Dayton, Indiana. Mrs. Puntenney was born in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, on July 20, 1858. Mr. Puntenney has the following brothers and sisters, Lizeth Roberts, in Litchfield, Illinois; Minnie E., teacher for years in Normal schools, Sarah E., deceased; Laura E., at home; Lylah A. Reagan, in Indiana. Mr. Puntenney is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the W. of W. His wife is a member of the Methodist church. Politically, Mr. Puntenney is a Prohibitionist and takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of government. His grandfather on his father's side was a veteran of the Mexican and Black Hawk wars. Mrs. Puntenney had uncles on both sides in the Civil war, while Mr. Puntenney's uncle, Munson Hamlin, fought in that awful struggle also.

ERICK HENDRICKSON. This loyal and intelligent citizen is one of the men whose labors have resulted in the development of the county and he has done good work in the vicinity of Lewiston for some time. At the present time he is in charge of Mr. Slasher's farm and fruit ranch five miles east from Lewiston.

Mr. Hendrickson was born in Sweden, on September 22, 1864, being the son of Hendrick Hendrickson, who was born in Sweden on March 12, 1830, and is still a farmer in his native land. The mother was born in 1829 and died in 1876, while Erick was but a small lad. He labored diligently on the farm with his father and secured his education from the schools of his native place and when he was twenty-two, he was determined, from the information he had read of the United States and its opportunities, to come hither. Accordingly, he severed the ties that bound him to home and native land, bade his kindred and friends farewell and came to New York. Thence he made his way to Pomeroy, Washington. He harvested the first year and then leased a saw mill, which he operated one year in the Blue Mountains, after which he came to Lewiston and went to work for Mr. Porter. He operated the engine in his saw mill and attended to the fruit in its season. He continued in this for five years and made some money. Next we see him operating Mr. Isaman's fruit ranch, and in 1901, he took charge of Mr. Slasher's fruit farm, where he is at the present time. Mr. Hendrickson is skilled in the care of orchards and makes a fine success of the same.

Mr. Hendrickson has the following brothers and sisters, Carl, in Minnesota; Anders, in Sweden; Marie in Minnesota. He is a member of the W. of W., at Lewiston. In political matters, Mr. Hendrickson is a Republican and always takes the proper interest in these matters. He owned some land near Porter, but sold it to Mr. Isaman. Mr. Hendrickson is an intelligent and industrious man and enjoys the confidence of all who know him.

ELMER WEEKS. Among the younger men of the reservation country whose labors have been worthy and wisely bestowed, we should mention the subject of this article, and it is with pleasure that we grant him space in the county history.

Elmer Weeks was born in Nebraska on June 27, 1874, being the son of George and Gertrude (Tetly) Weeks, natives of Norway, but immigrants to the United States when young. The family went to Clay county, South Dakota, in the seventies and in the Centennial year they all journeyed to Moscow, where the parents are still living. They have had eight children: Mrs. Nellie Madison, deceased; Elmer; Joseph; Mrs. Clara Clark; Granford, deceased; George; Emma M.; Alma G. In 1895 Mr. Weeks came among the very first and secured his present claim on the reservation. It lies less than a mile southeast from Dublin and is well improved, thus manifesting the industry and wisdom of the owner.

On October 23, 1898, Mr. Weeks was married to Miss Elva, daughter of James and Lucetta Crawford. The father was born in Daviess county, Indiana, on January 30, 1841, and the mother was born in Carroll county, Indiana, on October 2, 1843. He was raised in Madison county, Iowa, and she was raised in Guthrie county, Iowa. In 1865 they both crossed the plains with ox teams and on this trip, being in the same train, they became acquainted and were married in Marion county, Oregon, after the trip. The journey was attended with considerable danger from the Indians, and many fights with them occurred on the way, some of the immigrants being wounded. They removed to Dayton, Washington, in 1873, and there in 1878, March 1, Mrs. Weeks was born. In 1891 the family removed to Latah county. Ten children were in this family,—Samuel M., William L., Mary B., deceased, Mrs. Anna L. Haroke, James N., Mrs. Elva Weeks, Abner A., Joseph F., John E., Celia Flo. Mrs. Crawford died on April 26, 1898. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Weeks,—Lester E., born July 29, 1900; Franklin E., born March 14, 1902.

NATHANIEL WILSON. Among the very first ones who settled on the reservation, our subject has the place of the real pioneer in this section and as such we accord him space in the history of Nez Perces county. On November 19, 1895, Mr. Wilson filed on his present place, two miles east from Ilo, where he has done commendable labor in developing the country.

Nathaniel Wilson was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, on October 11, 1867, being the son of Enos and Martha (Norton) Wilson. The father was born in Ohio in 1824 and now lives in Elgin, Oregon. He fought in the Civil war, was a pioneer in Red Cloud, Nebraska, when there was not a house in sight of his dwelling. The mother was born in Tennessee in 1835 and died in 1894. The family removed from Missouri to Webster county, Nebraska, where the father took land and farmed, Nathaniel then being seven years old. Our subject grew to young manhood, received his education in the common schools and they all went to Rollins county, Kansas. After that he went to do for himself and was in that state and in Nebraska until 1889, when in company with his brother Albert he crossed the plains with wagons and settled on the big Potlatch, in Nez Perces county. Later he went to Genesee and then spent a year in the Gem mine in the Coeur d'Alene country. Then Mr. Wilson visited California, after which we see him in Nez Perces county, again living near Genesee. In the fall of 1895, as stated above, he came to the opening of the reservation and selected his present place. He has done diversified farming business since that time, and also devotes much attention to raising stock. He has some excellent draft horses, the lightest one weighing fourteen hundred pounds. Mr. Wilson also has some fine hogs.

His brothers and sisters are named as follows: Malhalia, Esther, James M., Albert, Harvey, Minnie and Edith A. Mr. Wilson is a member of the I. O. O. F., at Ilo. He is a Democrat and is always at the conventions and caucuses. The convention at Lewiston honored him with the nomination of county commissioner in the second district. He has often been desired to take the position of school trustee, but refuses. He has labored for good schools and has donated much for them. Mr. Wilson has never left the ranks of bachelordom, but is still enjoying its quietness. He is a man of excellent standing and has both the good will and confidence of the people.

EDWARD F. ANDERSON was born on February 17, 1851, in Union county, Georgia, being the son of Andy and Adaline (Dicken) Anderson, natives of Tennessee. They removed to Union county, Georgia, thence to Benton county, Arkansas, and in 1862 to Dade county, Missouri. In August, 1863, Mr. Anderson enlisted in Company F, Second Arkansas Cavalry, and continued in service until the close of the war. He fought in many battles and skirmishes. When he left Arkansas he had a fine farm well improved and stocked. Returning at the close of the war, he found all improvements destroyed and all stock stolen. Our subject grew to manhood in Arkansas and there, on April 10, 1871, he married Miss Emma Bozarth. In 1877 the father with all of his family, three sons and one daughter married, started across the plains with teams. They all, with the exception of our subject, who stopped at Walla Walla, came direct to Latah, Washington. A year later our subject came to Latah, took land and farmed. He had five children by his first wife: John Oliver, married to Cora Wright; Clarence H., married to Grace L. Denny; Benton A., married to Grace B. Haggett; Minnie, wife of Robert Dunham; Emma L., at home. All the others are near Nezperce. On April 13, 1886, Mrs. Anderson died. In the fall of 1887 Mr. Anderson returned to Arkansas and married Mrs. Keturah Cox, on March 25, 1888. They immediately came to Latah county, and in 1894 removed to Camas prairie and when the reservation opened up Mr. Anderson located his present place, six miles west from Nezperce. He was one of the first settlers and now has a fine place well improved. Good buildings, a thrifty young orchard and other evidences of industry and good management are to be seen. To Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have been born seven children: Francis A., Zoe, Irene, Edna F., Ethel V., Edward L., Thomas A., deceased. Mrs. Anderson has one son by her former marriage, Charles H. Cox. Mrs. Anderson's parents were Hathaway and Nancy (Hawkins) Masterson, natives of Kentucky, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are devout members of the Christian church. His father died at Tekoa, Washington, in August, 1900, aged seventy-seven and the mother aged the same is living with her children. The father was a member of the G. A. R., and was buried by that order. He was also an elder in the Christian church for many years. Mrs. Anderson's mother is a sister of Senator Hawkins, of Alabama, from which family the town of Hawkinsville, Alabama, was named. Mrs. Anderson was born in Benton county, Arkansas, on October 27, 1866, and there remained until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are exemplary citizens and have the esteem and good will of all who know them and have done much for the material and moral upbuilding of the country.

JOHN D. GRAHAM. This gentleman is one of the heaviest property owners in the town of Nezperce, a man of substantial qualities, dominated with wisdom and integrity and a leader among his fellows.

John D. Graham was born in Missouri, on September 27, 1847, being the son of William and Harriet L. (Duncan) Graham, natives of Holmes county, Ohio. The paternal grandfather of our subject came from Ireland and died in February, 1894, aged seventy-eight, while his maternal grandparents came from Pennsylvania and died in 1892. When John was five years old he crossed the plains with his parents with ox teams and they located in Benton county, Oregon, seven miles from Corvallis. Later the family came to The Dalles and built a toll bridge across the Des Chutes. John was educated in the public schools and when twenty-five he went to Klickitat county and raised stock for twenty-nine years. It was 1887 that he came to Grangeville, Idaho. He purchased two hundred and forty acres and raised stock until the reservation opened and then located a homestead two miles from Nezperce. Mr. Graham owned a livery barn here until recently, has a fine residence in the town, has much real estate, and half interest in the mercantile business conducted by Mr. Schultz; he also owns the Nezperce hotel building and considerable other property.

Mr. Graham has the following brothers and sisters; Robert M., in Bickleton, Washington; Thomas B., in Dayton, Washington; Maria L., widow of H. South, in Prosser, Washington; Frankie, widow of B. F. Morris, at Lewiston; Della, wife of Alec O'Dell, in Dayton, Washington; Georgia, wife of Logan Mulkey; and Mrs. Mary Bailey. Mr. Graham is a member of the W. W., Nezperce Camp, No. 445. He is a good, strong Democrat in politics and has held school offices for twenty years. Mr. Graham and his wife are members of the Christian church, while his children affiliate with the Baptist.

On November 4, 1877, Mr. Graham married Miss Phoebe A., daughter of David and Phoebe (Pugh) Story. She was born in Hancock county, Illinois, on January 12, 1858, and came with her parents across the plains with ox teams in 1864. Her mother died in 1869, and was born in 1826, being a native of Indiana. Mrs. Graham's father was born in Alabama and is still living, aged eighty-four. Mrs. Graham has two brothers and three sisters, Caleb, a farmer in Goldendale, Washington; David M., a school teacher in Grangeville; Sarah, wife of D. Jordan, in Columbus, Washington; Mary, wife of T. L. Masters, at Goldendale, Washington; Patsey E., wife of A. Carlyle, at Republic, Washington. Eight children have been born to Mr. Graham and his estimable wife: William F., Bessie D., wife of Ollie Waechter, Everett, Washington; Edna L., wife of B. L. Schultz, a merchant of Nezperce; five deceased. Mr. Graham is a genial and affable gentleman and has the good will of all who know him; he and his wife are leading members of society.

FRANCIS F. POMEROY. Kamiah's list of business men was materially strengthened when the subject of this sketch located there in 1899. He opened a hotel which is one of the excellent places for entertainment in the county, and which Mr. Pomeroy conducts with skill and wisdom that have brought him a good patronage.

Francis F. Pomeroy was born in Oregon, on April 24, 1849, being the son of Francis F. and Mary (Kitchen) Pomeroy, natives of New York and Missouri, respectively. The father came to Oregon in 1845. In 1848, while packing to Feather river camps in California, he was murdered by two men who joined his train to travel with it. The murderers killed Mr. Pomeroy and two helpers, robbed their bodies and the train and made off, but owing to the vigilance of officers, they were caught and executed. The place of their execution was called Hangtown on account of this episode. The mother of our subject came to Oregon overland with her husband. When Francis was six years old his mother died and he went to live with his uncle, Benjamin Kitchen. When fourteen he went to Douglas county to mine and spent four years in that labor, after which he returned to Washington county. He bought his father's old donation claim from the other heirs and farmed it until 1899, then sold out and came to his present place. Mr. Pomeroy is a member of the Native Sons of Oregon, also of the Maccabees, being chaplain of Tent No. 10, in Kamiah. Mr. Pomeroy has two sisters, Lydia, wife of Kenyon Crandall, in the real estate business in Portland; Welthea, wife of Edwin Ford, operating a cannery at Astoria.

On September 2, 1867, Mr. Pomeroy married Miss Rebecca, daughter of Noa and Lydia (Garwood) Jobe, pioneers from Missouri. They made the trip to Oregon with ox teams overland and Mr. Jobe fought in the Cayuse Indian war nearly two years. He is still living but his wife is dead. Mrs. Pomeroy was married in Hillsboro, and to this union there have been born six children: Ida, wife of William Ryan, a grocer in Portland; Lulu, wife of William Politz, a grocer in Portland; Edgar, at Lapwai; John, a merchant at Kamiah; Nellie, at school; Charles, in Nezperce. Politically, Mr. Pomeroy is a Democrat and has frequently been delegate to the conventions. He believes in excellent schools and labors hard for them. Mr. Pomeroy gave each of his children a good education and he is one of the progressive and enterprising men of the town.

JOHN G. LENZ, M. D. This popular and talented young physician is a graduate of the Chicago Homeopathic College, having taken an exceptionally thorough course, since he studied for this end some years previous, and also having shown his erudition and ability both in the state examination of Idaho as well as in his extensive and constantly increasing practice since coming to Ilo. He is now one of the substantial men of the town and is operating a nice drug business in addition to his practice.

John G. Lenz was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, on July 17, 1875, being the son of Nicholas and Cynthia A. (Strubble) Lenz. The father was born in Germany in 1845 and died in 1893. He came to the United States with his parents in 1857. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1849 and is now living in Nez Perces county, having come here in an early day. Our subject lived in Illinois until fifteen, when the family went to Nodaway county, Missouri, settling near Marysville. A year and one half later the mother came west, settling in this county. John G. went to a business college and then took a course preparatory to his medical course in the state university of Iowa. We next see him in the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College, whence he graduated with honors. He came west and selected Ilo as the point for settlement. Ilo was then only thought of, but the aggressiveness and farsightedness of the Doctor was put into play and he, with Mr. Leggett, who is mentioned in the work elsewhere, established the town. They erected the building where Mr. Leggett is now and then the Doctor built his drug store and the town was launched and has shown itself a worthy child.

In Iowa City, on June 8, 1897, Doctor Lenz married Miss Ada M., daughter of William T. and Lydia F. (Heil) Scheib. The name used to be Scheibel. Mr. Scheib was born in Pennsylvania in 1840, was a merchant and farmer and had devoted many years to the work of the educator. He served in the Civil war, in Company H, Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. He was wounded in the wrist at the battle of Shiloh and also in the head at Island No. Ten. Following this he was discharged and now draws a pension. Mrs. Scheib was born in Iowa, in October, 1854. Both are living. Mrs. Lenz was born in Jackson county, Iowa, on July 12, 1875. She received a good education from the state university and also took a course of training as nurse. She has the following brothers and sisters:

Jennie, deceased; Bessie; Bernice, deceased; Harry; Nellie; Lersy; and Herman, deceased. Dr. Lenz has the following brothers and sisters: Mary, deceased; Elizabeth; Elmer. Dr. Lenz is a member of the I. O. O. F., the M. W. A. and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and is examiner for the last two orders. Politically, he is a Democrat. He is also a member of the Central Congregational church in Chicago. He is deeply interested in educational progress and has always been a liberal contributor for general improvement. To Mr. and Mrs. Lenz there has been born one child, Camilla B. C. She was born on September 7, 1901, and died on September 21, 1901.

JAMES TURNER. This worthy and stanch pioneer of many sections of the west is now one of the successful business men of Kamiah, handling a fruit, confectionery and refreshment establishment which is the recipient of a good patronage.

James Turner was born in Iowa, on November 4, 1837, being the son of John and Elizabeth (Pennington) Turner, natives of Kentucky. In 1852 the entire family came across the plains to Linn county, Oregon, and in February, 1854, our subject started in life for himself. He mined in Shasta county, California, and in Jackson county, Oregon, until 1865, also taking a trip to Idaho in 1862. He visited Florence City, in 1863 came to Idaho City and for three years he was numbered with the successful placer miners of that city. Then he returned to Linn county and in 1875 he moved to Whitman county, Washington. Ten years in that region and then three and one-half were spent in Spokane. He returned to Whitman and railroaded for a time and later went at his labor of mining in the Pierce City district. Seven years were spent in that labor and in 1900 Mr. Turner came to his present place. He has one brother, Henry I., a miner in Shoshone county, and three sisters, Melinda; Mary, wife of William Rett, a stockman of Montana; Margaret, wife of Harry Titman, residing at Yaquina bay, Oregon.

In February, 1866, Mr. Turner married Miss Jane, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Gohlson) Naught. Mrs. Turner was born in Iowa in 1846 and came to Polk county across the plains with her parents in 1853. She is a member of the Christian church and is a woman of excellent virtues. To this union there have been born four children, William A., with his parents; Cora D., wife of Henry B. Webber; Charles E. and Ella M., with parents.

ROBERT H. RENSHAW. Among the leading merchants of eastern Nez Perces county we mention R. H. Renshaw, who is one of the partners of the firm of Renshaw Brothers & Johnson, which does a general merchandise business in Kamiah, also handling a livery stable in the same town. In both lines of business they are reaping the reward of industry and wise business methods, being favored with a very lucrative patronage, which is handled in a commendable manner.

Robert H. Renshaw was born in Lane county, Oregon, on October 23, 1853, being the son of Robert H. and Nancy J. (Stowell) Renshaw. The father was born in Tennessee, on September 6, 1818, near Knoxville. He crossed the plains in 1851, locating six miles south from Eugene, where he farmed until his death, on April 4, 1883. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee, on July 27, 1824 and is now living with her son in Spokane. Her parents were natives of Virginia and descended from an old English family of note. Robert was raised and educated in Oregon, completing his training at Forest Grove University, where he paid his expenses by his own efforts. Three years were then spent in Washington, three more in Oregon and four in Modoc county, California, various employments engaging him. Then a trip was taken to Montana and mining was his labor until 1889. Thence he went to Washington and filed on a homestead in Stevens county, where he farmed and did dairying until 1900, at that time selling twenty-five cows and three hundred and sixty acres of land. He came to Kamiah and bought the interest of C. J. Lester in the mercantile establishment of Renshaw & Lester. The firm style changed to Renshaw Brothers & Johnson. Mr. Renshaw has five brothers and one sister, Baxter, a paint and oil man in Spokane; Moses A., a dairyman in Spokane; John D., a large stockman in Stevens county, Washington; Henry, partner of our subject; Harvey H., farmer on Camas prairie; Bell, wife of E. Kinnear, a merchant in Rossland, British Columbia. Mr. Renshaw is a member of the I. O. O. F., Clearwater Lodge, No. 68, at Kamiah; and of the Maccabees, Kamiah Tent, No. 10. He is a Democrat and interested in good government.

On February 28, 1884, in Modoc county, California, Mr. Renshaw married Miss Laura, daughter of M. and Harriet (Briggs) Thacker, natives of Spain and New York, respectively. The father is deceased and the mother lives with her son, Stephen D., fruit grower at Payette, Idaho. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Renshaw, John H., George W., Winnie W., Emera H. and Helen.

GODFREY JARBO. This enterprising gentleman is operating a successful and popular livery stable in Kamiah in connection with Renshaw Brothers & Johnson. The barn is a commodious structure, is fitted with all the conveniences, is stocked with excellent horses and fine new vehicles, and the entire business is one of the largest on the reservation. Mr. Jarbo gives his personal attention to its management and is a skillful horseman.

Godfrey Jarbo was born in Canada on November 19, 1868, being the son of Layon and Eliza (Bushaw) Jarbo. The father is now a retired farmer in North Dakota, but the mother is deceased. Godfrey came to North Dakota with his parents when a small boy and was there reared and educated. He learned the butcher business when young and before he was twenty-one he was in business with his brother, and they conducted a first class butcher shop in Ardoch, North Dakota, until 1900. Then he sold out and came to Kamiah and opened a livery stable which, however, he soon sold and then entered his present partnership.

Mr. Jarbo is a member of the M. W. A. Camp No. 61, at Kamiah, and also affiliates with the I. O. O. F. at Kamiah. Politically, Mr. Jarbo is a Democrat.

WILLIAM P. HOLLIDAY. In at least three distinct lines of endeavor has the subject of this article been a successful laborer and in them all he has demonstrated his adaptability and also his integrity and worthy manhood.

William P. Holliday was born in Pike county, Missouri, on August 4, 1833, being the son of Dr. George R. and Sarah T. (McMahill) Holliday, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively. The father was born in 1815 and died in 1898. He went to Pike county in 1825 and was a pioneer in Monroe county, Iowa, when it was a territory. Mrs. Holliday was born in 1819 and died in 1902. Her parents settled among the very first white people in Warren county, Illinois. Our subject was taken by his parents to Warren county when he was two years old, then to Monroe county, Iowa, when he was nine years old. There he grew to manhood and received his literary education and then attended the medical college in Keokuk, Iowa. In 1856 he commenced the practice of medicine in Iowa, continuing there until 1861. Then came a move to Warren county, where he continued for two years. There he was enrolled in the militia, but was never called into action. He moved to Jasper county and then Atchison county, Missouri. In 1880 he moved to Gordon, Texas, one hundred miles west from Dallas. He followed his profession there and in 1881 he was ordained a minister of the Church of Christ. He preached and practiced medicine and the following year went to the Choctow Indians and did evangelistic labor for five years. He visited in his old home in Illinois after this and then came to Garfield county, Washington. He had continued his profession all the time and was also active in the ministry. 1880 marks the date of the western trip and later he dwelt on Bear ridge, Latah county, in Douglas county, Oregon, then again on the Bear ridge, and in 1896, Dr. Holliday came to his present place, two miles southwest from Kippen. Since coming here he has been active as a physician, has handled his farm and also proclaimed the gospel continuously. He is now the pastor of the church at Ilo and is regularly heard in the gospel each week.

In Pike county, in November, 1855, Dr. Holliday married Miss Mildred, daughter of Bennett Nalley, a school teacher and native of Virginia. He was a soldier in the Mexican war. Mrs. Holliday was born in Pike county in 1833 and her brother, John Nalley, still lives there. Dr. Holliday has brothers and sisters named as follows: Americus C., and Benton A., both in Sullivan county, Missouri; Dr. Samuel N., in Oklahoma; Dr. Milton J., in Taney county, Missouri; Joseph M., in Kansas; Susan R. Garnett, in Leavenworth, Kansas. The following named children have been born to the Doctor and his worthy companion: George T., in this county; James B., in Yakima; William P., in Moscow; Richard M., in Moscow; Martha J. Richardson, at Lookout; Mildred A. Perry, in California. Dr. Holliday is a member of the Masonic order. He is an active Democrat and is an influential figure in the campaigns, being an enthusiastic and powerful orator. He has always labored for his friends' promotion in office but has steadily refused this for himself. He was a member of the first state convention in Idaho and has always been in the county convention, being now committeeman. He was the first president of the Nez Perces county Pioneer Association, and has recently been again elected to that position.

JOHN F. POMEROY. No list of the business men of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county would be complete without a prominent mention of the esteemed gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph. Mr. Pomeroy was proprietor and operator of the livery stable in Kamiah which he recently sold out and is now proprietor of a general store where he has displayed good ability in handling his business, both in securing a fine patronage and in conducting it in such a manner that it is a financial success. In addition to this Mr. Pomeroy has a fine ranch of eighty acres adjoining the town, which is principally devoted to raising hay. It is a very valuable piece of land and was secured by him through homestead right when the reservation opened. He has refused three thousand dollars for the eighty.

John F. Pomeroy was born in Washington county, Oregon, on June 2, 1873, being the son of Frank F. and Rebecca (Jobe) Pomeroy, natives of the same county. The father was born in 1850. His parents crossed the plains from Illinois in 1849, locating in Washington county. Shortly afterwards they went to California and there were murdered in a mining camp. The mother of our subject was a descendant of early pioneers from Missouri, and her father, Noah Jobe, is still living, aged seventy-seven. Our subject was educated in Hillsboro, Oregon, and remained in Washington county until twenty, at which time he went to Idaho. He operated a ferry on the Clearwater for a few months and then repaired to Grangeville, where he entered the lumber business. This continued to occupy him until the reservation opened and then he went to the homestead spoken of and in 1902 to his present business in Kamiah. Mr. Pomeroy has two brothers and three sisters, Edgar, in Lapwai; Charles, in Oklahoma; Ida, wife of James Ryan, at Portland; Lulu, wife of William Pulitz, also in Portland; Nellie, attending the University at Moscow.

On April 18, 1900, Mr. Pomeroy married Miss Emma F., daughter of Frank and Dora (Spooner) Harning, natives of Oregon and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mrs. Pomeroy was born in Camas prairie, on April 29, 1882. She has one brother, Edward, a rancher on Camas prairie. Mr. Pomeroy is a member of the I. O. O. F., Clearwater Lodge. No. 68, at Kamiah, and is past noble grand. He is a Democrat in political matters, though not especially active; is justice of the peace, registrar of votes and has been a delegate to the convention. Mr. Pomeroy is a descendant from a worthy pioneer family and his ancestors on both sides did much for the opening up of the western countries. He is a creditable descendant and has had his share in this same work and now is one of the substantial, reliable, and respected men of the community.

JAMES S. TYLER is one of the careful and enterprising merchants of Nez Perces county, having his store at this time at Dublin, where he is the recipient a very gratifying patronage. He is postmaster at that place also and is a man of good standing, capable and genial, and has won the esteem and confidence of the people.

James S. Tyler was born in Johnson county, Missouri, on June 8, 1868, being the son of James K. and Jane (Hocker) Tyler. The family is one of the old and established ones of Kentucky and they have always been prominent and influential people. Edward Tyler, the great-grandfather of our subject, kept a tavern on the site of Louisville before a town was thought of and he laid out the first plat there. The grandson of that gentleman is at the present time mayor of that thriving city. Henry S. Tyler, another one of the family, was one of the wealthiest and most popular men in Louisville. The father of our subject was born in 1831 in Jefferson county, Kentucky, his father being born in the same county. His grandfather was the man who came to Kentucky with General Roger Clark and thirteen other families from Virginia and settled, and later he laid out the town of Louisville. The mother of our subject was a native of Missouri, being now deceased, and her ancestors were natives of Kentucky and Virginia for generations back, but pioneers to Missouri in the time of the early settlement of that state. The Tyler genealogy and history have been compiled and the work is in press to be issued in two volumes. This gives the lineage back to 1604. Mr. Tyler spent most of six years aiding in this work. The father of James took up land in Johnson county, Missouri, when a young man and there his son was reared and received his education, the rudiments from the district school; but later being elected county treasurer, the father moved to the county seat, Warrensburg, and then James graduated from the State Normal situated there. Immediately following his graduation James gave himself to the study of telegraphy and for fifteen years he was station agent on the Northern Pacific, mostly in Montana. Soon after the opening of the reservation he came to Fletcher and opened a general store. In August, 1901, he came to his present place and here he has done a fine business since.

On December 22, 1891, Mr. Tyler married Miss Olive, daughter of Philetus and Esteline (Mattoon) Campbell, natives of Missouri. She was born near St. Louis and when fourteen entered the normal at Warrensburg, from which institution she graduated. She was married at St. Louis. Mr. Tyler has three brothers and one sister: Sterling P., in Warrensburg; Larkin, M., in Kansas City; Elmer H., in Oklahoma; Mallie, wife of W. H. Hickman, a prominent merchant in Warrensburg. Mrs. Tyler has the following brothers and sisters: Clarence, in St. Louis; Lucien and Joseph, in Missouri; William, in Idaho; Mattie, wife of Edward Webber, in Missouri; Elma, wife of John H. Wilson, a merchant in Warrensburg; and Kate, wife of Perry Hanna, a merchant in Brookfield, Missouri. Mr. Tyler is a member of the W. W., Finney Camp, No. 492, having filled the chairs. He is a Democrat in political matters but is not so active here, although in Montana he was a regular attendant upon the conventions. To Mr. and Mrs. Tyler there have been born four children, Arlee, Moses, Robert and James.

ABRAHAM L. STALEY. A man with courage enough to leap the narrow bounds of partyism and choose for himself the man and vote for him, a successful farmer and a thoroughgoing and upright man in every respect, of whom his neighbors speak well and who is respected wherever he is known, such is the gentleman of whom, with pleasure, we incorporate an epitome.

Abraham L. Staley was born in Shelby county, Ohio, on April 4, 1861, being the son of William and Julia A. (Babcock) Staley. The father was a farmer and sawmill man, was born in Ohio, in 1841, came to Spokane county in 1884 and died there in 1896. The mother was born in Virginia, in 1835, and lives in Spokane county. The family went to St. Joseph county, Indiana, when our subject was nine years of age and the father operated a sawmill there. Three years later they came to Richardson county, Nebraska, and farmed for seven years. Abraham here grew to young manhood and received his education. When fourteen he went to do for himself and when eighteen came to Lehmi county, where he wrought on the farms as he had done previously. In 1887 he returned to Kansas, settling in Sheridan county, and one year after that he came again to Lemhi county and took a ranch and spent one year there. In the spring of 1896 we find Mr. Staley on the reservation and he secured one of the finest pieces of government land, and it lies about two miles east from Chesley. This has been tilled to diversified crops, is well improved and the family home now. Between the times of his labor in Lemhi county and the date of his settlement here, Mr. Staley was in Whitman county farming. He did well there as he is doing in this county.

In 1882 Mr. Staley married Miss Clara B., daughter of John and Mary C. Yearian, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. The father was a railroad man and a farmer and pioneer in Lemhi county. Mrs. Staley was born in Illinois, in 1863, and has one brother and two sisters, Alpha, in Lemhi county, Idaho; Flora, in Spokane county; Sarah, in Lemhi county. Mr. Staley has the following named brothers and sisters: Reuben, in Smith county, Kansas; Ezekiel and Jacob, in Spokane county; Lydia, in Kansas; Martha, in Philips county, Kansas; Lillian, in Nebraska. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Staley: Elmer, Wilber, Ira, Alpha, Minnie B., Jennie, and an infant still unnamed. Mr. Staley is a member of the M. W. A. at Kippen. He is a warm advocate of substantial development, progress and good educational facilities.

CHARLES J. SHEPPARD. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant a review of the career of this substantial and industrious citizen of Nez Perces county. He was born in Fergus Falls, Minnesota, on April 21, 1872, being the son of Deastang and Louisa (McDonald) Sheppard, natives respectively of New York and Minnesota. The father enlisted in the Civil war under General McClellan and fought in the battles of Waterloo, Yorktown, Bull Run and many skirmishes. He suffered a wound in the foot from a shell, languished in Libby for a time and endured all the hardships known to the soldier's life. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged and returned to his home, going thence to Minnesota. In 1878 the family removed to Portland and the father went to carpentering. Then they moved to Beaverton, later to Yaquinna bay and lived in Salem, Albany, Ashland, and other places. We next see our subject riding the range out from Prineville; he has also ridden all over Grant, Harney, Crook and Wasco counties. In 1895 he went across the country to California and three years later, having mined and prospected there, he came to Ashland, Oregon, by horse and wagon. In August, 1898, he came to Nezperce and engaged in farming. Here on October 21, 1901, Mr. Sheppard married Mrs. Nannie Siler, widow of the late Granville Siler and daughter of Fielding and Elizabeth Fuller. Mrs. Sheppard was born in Knox county, Kentucky, and came with her parents to Rosalia in 1888. She married Mr. Siler and to them were born three children, Martha Washington, Mary Pearl and William Lloyd. Mr. Siler located his present home in 1895 and brought the family here in 1896. The farm is a fertile one, has a good six-room house, orchard and other improvements and is now handled in a first-class manner. Mr. Siler died on November 3, 1899. To Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard has been born one child, Thresie Marie. Mrs. Sheppard's prents are living near her home. She and Mr. Sheppard are active members of the Christian church and are highly respected people and of excellent standing in the community.

DANIEL BAKER. The enterprising farmer, fruit and stock raiser of whom we now speak is one of the substantial men of the vicinity of Chesley, and has a good farm, well improved, two miles east from that village. He took the land from the wildness of nature's regions and made it, by his labors, a good farm.

Daniel Baker was born in St. Joseph county, Indiana, on June 5, 1866, being the son of Samuel and Barnara (Coble) Baker. The father was born in Virginia, in 1819 and died in 1884. He was a pioneer in Indiana, practiced medicine there and was a member of the Dunkard church. The mother was born in Pennsylvania, in 1824 and is still living. Daniel grew to the age of fifteen in his native place and received there his education. Then the family removed to Gage county, Nebraska, where they lived for fourteen years. When seventeen, he went to work for himself and the next year rented land and soon thereafter bought land for himself. In 1887 he went to Oregon and lived for two years, traveling all over the state in exploration. Then he returned to Nebraska and lived there until 1895, in which year he journeyed to the west again, this time to Vancouver, Washington. The next year he came to the reservation and on May 27, 1897, he selected and settled upon his present place. Here has been the family home and the scene of Mr. Baker's labors since that time.

On November 3, 1892, in Nebraska, Mr. Baker married Flora Knoedler, daughter of George and Albina Pitts, natives of Ohio, and born in 1844 and 1845, respectively. Mr. Baker has the following brothers and sisters: Sollis, a physician in Denver; Cora Coleman, in Nebraska; Walter, in Nez Perces county; Arthur, in Lincoln, Nebraska; Eva, at home. The following named persons are brothers and sisters of Mr. Baker: Jane Morse, in Nebraska; Susan Cripe, in Indiana; Abram, in Nebraska; Jacob, in Wisconsin; Sarah Chenemann and Elizabeth Wendall, both in Nebraska; Nevada Brant, in British Columbia. Five children have been born to this union, Alma, Elsie, Mabel, Scott and Edith. Mrs. Baker has one son, Alfred, by her former marriage. They are members of the Baptist church at Lookout. Mr. Baker is a Republican and an intelligent advocate of those principles. He is forward in all endeavors for general development and progress and especially for good schools and good roads.

CURTIS MILLER. No mention of the business men of Nezperce would be complete without the subject of this article having a prominent place in it. He is a man of integrity and excellent practical judgment and possessed of sufficient executive force to give exemplification to his good business ability, which have resulted in his being at the head of one of the most prosperous and up-to-date establishments in the county. We refer to the model livery barns that are operated by our subject and his brother.

Curtis Miller was born in Linn county, Oregon, on June 3, 1872, being the son of John and Amanda (Redman) Miller, natives, respectively, of Illinois and Iowa. Our subject was educated in the public schools of Sprague, Washington, where he resided for twenty-two years, all told. When fourteen he, in company with his two brothers, Norton and Perry, rode the range for five years. They handled the I. R. band of horses and other stock. Then in company with Norton Mr. Miller rented six hundred acres of good farm land six miles north from Sprague, Washington. They farmed until 1893, when they lost all, and then our subject bought a small stock ranch thirteen miles northeast from Sprague. He continued in the handling of that until 1901, when he sold out and embarked in the livery business in Nezperce, in company with his brother Norton. They bought the barn, doubled its capacity and placed in it all the modern conveniences to the business. Twenty head of horses are not too many to handle their now increasing patronage, and their horses are well selected and excellent specimens, while all the rigs are new and fully up to date, and the management of the business under the skillful hands of our subject has grown in a most gratifying manner, making it favorably known among the traveling public. Mr. Miller also makes a specialty of boarding domestic stock and his stable is patronized in a liberal manner in this line. We can hardly speak too commendably of the excellent equipment and skillful manner of handling their business. There is no better barn in the northern part of the state and in Lewiston only is there anything that equals it in size. They have a large excursion rig, the finest in the Clearwater valley, that finds popular favor among the people of the town.

On November 28, 1892, Mr. Miller married Miss Paulina McGlade, who came from the east in 1887 with her widowed mother. She was born in Iowa, on April 29, 1873. Mr. Miller has two brothers, Norton B., his partner; Perry E., a furniture dealer in the town, and one sister, Lettie, wife of Charles Bartlett, at Fairfield, Washington. Mr. Miller is a member of the W. W., Nezperce Camp, No. 447. He is a prominent citizen of excellent standing, whose wisdom, integrity and reliability have gained for him a very enviable prestige.

NORTON B. MILLER. This enterprising and well known business man of Nezperce is a member of the firm of Miller & Miller, which operates a first-class livery stable in Nezperce. Mr. Miller is also the owner of a fine farm, some twelve miles east from town, and also has other property. He is a man of fine business qualifications, has demonstrated his ability to gain success in worthy endeavor and is now a man of influence and weight in the town and community.

Norton B. Miller was born in Scio, Oregon, May 18, 1870, being the son of John and Amanda (Redman) Miller, natives of Illinois and Iowa, respectively. The father was born in 1841, came across the plains with his parents in 1849, who took a section of donation land in Linn county and there he was brought up. He died in 1878, near the old home place. The mother of our subject was born in 1846, and is now the wife of P. J. Wycoff, at Freeman, Washington. Norton was brought up in the native place and when manhood's estate arrived he undertook different enterprises with his brothers and in the course of time he was farming with his brother, Curtis, in the vicinity of Sprague, Washington. In 1894 he came to Little Camas prairie, thence went to Spokane, Washington, until the reservation opened up and then he selected his present place of one quarter section, which is one of the finest pieces of land on the reservation. It produces now wheat and oats principally. In 1901 Mr. Miller embarked in the livery business in Nezperce with his brother Curtis, and they have one of the finest stables in the country. What makes their business so popular is their untiring care that all details will be satisfactory for both the comfort and safety of their patrons. They have fine horses, excellent turnouts, and everything is handled with praiseworthy skill and wisdom.

At Sprague, Washington, Mr. Miller married Miss Bertha, daughter of William and Orilla Frink, in 1900, and to this happy union there have been born three boys, Lester, Claude and Clayton. Mr. Miller is a member of the W. W., Nezperce Camp. He is a Democrat in political matters, is quite active and always takes part in the conventions, being frequently delegate. Mrs. Miller is a member of the Circle of the Woodmen and also of the Baptist church.

MARTIN D. DeMOUDE. The capable and enterprising business man whose name is at the head of this article is well known in Nezperce, where, in company with his son, he conducts a first-class drug business. He is a man of energy and affability and stands at the head of the thriving business that his skill and push has made.

Martin D. DeMoude was born in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on November 13, 1851, being the son of Richard and Jane (Edmunds) DeMoude. The father was a shipbuilder, native of Buffalo, New York, and he wrought at his trade in the lake country and in New York. About 1836 he went to Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, and later to Minnesota, where he died in Wabasha county in 1882. His father was a ship-rigger and a native of France. The mother of our subject was a native of Rochester, New York, of French descent. Her father died about 1855 and she had two brothers, John and Martin, who were noted fur traders. Our subject was educated in his native place and when fourteen he went to work in a drug store. Later he was variously engaged until thirty, when he embarked in the commercial world in Ogden, Utah, but this was not a successful venture and we see him next in Wyoming, where he bought a saw-mill on credit and in two years paid out and made good success of it. Then he railroaded some and on account of failing health came to Boise, Idaho. A few years were spent there and then some time in Moscow, after which Mr. DeMoude started a drug store in Beeman. Later he was in the same business in Fletcher, but perceiving the advantages of Nezperce, he came hither in 1899 and in 1901 he built a store, which he has occupied since. He handles a good business, is the possessor of a first-class patronage and stands well with his fellows.

Mr. DeMoude married Miss Emma I. Bradstreet, daughter of John and Emmeline (Campbell) Bradstreet, both deceased, being natives of New York. This wedding occurred in Ogden, on May 16, 1867. One son, Ora D., was born to this happy union. He was educated in the high school at Boise and in the university at Moscow, taking also the pharmaceutical course. He received his state diploma on October 1, 1897, passing well. Ora D. is also a first-class musician, being able to skillfully handle any instrument in the range of band music and is now the leader of the Nezperce band. He is also a member of the Maccabees, being record keeper of Sunrise Tent, No. 17. Mr. DeMoude has two brothers and one sister, Edwin H., in Kansas, and a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in Company D, Third Wisconsin, and serving the entire war under Joe Hooker and being in the principal battles of the conflict, never wounded, but once terribly hurt in an accident; Richard R., in Minnesota, and also a veteran of the Rebellion, serving under General Washburn in the Twenty-third Wisconsin; Nettie, wife of D. C. Clark, an attorney in Minnesota. Mr. DeMoude is a Republican, strong in his principles, and he is always ready to take the part of the good citizen. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Morning Star Lodge, No. 56, in Nezperce, being vice grand; also of the Maccabees, Tent No. 17; also of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, Cedwick Homestead, No. 428, being deputy organizer. The family affiliates with the Episcopal church.

LAFAYETTE STARCHER. Three miles east from Lookout is the home of the subject of this article, who was one of the pioneers of this reservation country. Mr. Starcher owns forty acres in this place and also one hundred and sixty acres in Shoshone county. He handles his land to fruit and has it well improved.

Lafayette Starcher was born in Spencer, West Virginia, on June 25, 1858, being the son of Alfred and Nancy (Nutter) Starcher, natives of West Virginia. They were pioneers in West Virginia and in Washington county, Kansas. The father was a Confederate soldier and was captured near Wheeling. He was born in 1835 and died in 1867. His wife died in 1897. The family went to Atchison county, Missouri, in 1865, and the next year to Washington county, Kansas, where the father died. The mother later married a Mr. Ware. Our subject remained with his mother until he was twenty, gaining his education in those days. Then he went to do for himself. In 1888 he migrated to Rawlins county and took land, but afterwards left the country on account of drouth, and so forth. Two years were spent in Nemaha county and in 1892 he came to Farmington, Washington. Two years were spent on the farm there and some time in town, and in 1896 he made his way to the reservation and located his present place. He has since devoted himself to the improvement of his land.

On May 22, 1877, in Washington county, Kansas, Mr. Starcher married Miss Sarah, daughter of Rowdy and Jane (Covis) Breckinridge. Mr. Breckinridge was born in Ohio, and was a pioneer in Illinois, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and in Kansas. Mrs. Starcher was born in Ohio and has two sisters, Bell Henry and Rachel McCullough, both in Kansas. Mr. Starcher has the following brothers and sisters: Jacob, Artimacia Stonebraker and Indiana Groh, all in Kansas. Six children have been the fruit of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Starcher: Lenna Sargent, near Spokane; Otis, Carl, Veva, Roy and Oral, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Starcher are members of the Baptist church at Lookout and they are exemplary people. Mr. Starcher has always been an ardent and faithful laborer for the advancement of the schools and general improvement.

ABRAHAM J. MARSHALL. Our subject has been a traveler in various portions of the west and has gained a vast fund of practical knowledge in various lines, while also he is well informed as to the country, and his selection of a farm in the reservation portion of Nez Perces county speaks volumes for the advantages of the county.

Abraham J. Marshall was born in Millville, Clayton county, Iowa, on July 23, 1864, being the son of Michael and Alice (Scoggy) Marshall, natives of Ohio. The father was born in 1825 and died on March 28, 1890. He was a carpenter and a pioneer in Clayton county, where he remained until his death. He was a popular man of the county, having been sheriff, and also was in other public positions. The mother of our subject was born in 1824 and still lives in Dakota. Her parents were also pioneers in Iowa. Abraham attended public school until he was thirteeen and then went out into life for himself. He located at Fort Pierre, Dakota, and went to work on the range, which avocation he followed for nine years. Then a year was spent in Buffalo Gap, Wyoming, and later he was occupied for six years with a stockman in Deadwood. Subsequent to that he came to Spokane and worked one year near Reardan, after which he was engaged in a brick yard in Medical Lake. In 1895 he came to Moscow and spent several years there. Then a winter was spent in Salubria valley, southern Idaho, and thence he went to Walla Walla, then returned to Moscow. In January, 1901, he came to the reservation country and bought his present farm, one mile east and three miles south from Lookout. It is a valuable place and well handled and produces excellent returns.

On May 16, 1897, in Moscow, Mr. Marshall married Miss Henrietta, daughter of Stephen and Jennie (Erickson) Timmons. The father was born in Jasper county, Indiana, in 1843. He enlisted in the Civil war, in 1861, being in the Twelfth Iowa, and now lives in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Timmons was born in Minnesota. Mrs. Marshall was born in Rock county, Minnesota, on November 8, 1877, and has one brother and one sister, Henry, in this county; May, in Luverne, Minnesota. Mr. Marshall has the following named brothers and sisters: James and Charles, in Iowa; Lizzie Moore, in South Dakota; Sophia Graham, deceased; Scott, Colesburg, Iowa; Firmon, in Greeley, Iowa; Wesley, in Millville, Iowa. Mr. Marshall is a Republican and capable of defending his principles.

Mr. Marshall has considerable stock and his hogs, Berkshire and Poland China, are among the finest in the county.

CHARLES F. STELLMON. About seven miles northeast from Nezperce we find the home of the gentleman whose name is mentioned above. He is classed with the prosperous and progressive farmers of the section and has wrought here with a display of wisdom and skill which have given him the meed of a goodly portion of property, while he came here with very little property of any kind except a good stock of courage and determination.

Charles F. Stellmon was born in Greene county, Tennessee, on December 20, 1868, being the son of Henry and Elizabeth Stellmon, natives, respectively, of North Carolina and Tennessee. When Charles was nine the family removed to Washington county, Arkansas, and soon went to Benton county, where the mother died when he was twelve years old. When our subject was sixteen he went to the Cherokee nation and later went to Bates county, Missouri, working on a farm. Later he went to various places, visited his father, and in 1887 he came to Genesee, Idaho. There and at Juliaetta and Lewiston he spent the time until the nineteenth of November, when he filed on a piece of land near Nezperce, which, however, he sold in February, 1902, and purchased his present place. In 1900 he made a visit to his father in Arkansas and in June, 1901, he went to Benton county, Arkansas, and there married Miss Jennie, daughter of William and Meekie Burrow. This wedding occurred on September 24, 1901, and in October they came to the home near Nezperce. In February, 1902, as mentioned above, Mr. Stellmon came with his family to his present abode. This farm is a valuable piece of land, doubtless as good as any in the locality, and is handled with great skill and thrift. Mr. Stellmon has a good list of improvements, including buildings, fences, orchards, and much other valuable property. Mr. and Mrs. Stellmon are highly respected people, are intelligent and progressive and have demonstrated their qualities of worth here, which has given them numerous friends from every quarter.

SAMUEL PHINNEY. It is especially gratifying to have the opportunity to chronicle the salient points in the career of this worthy pioneer, as he has been through all the vicissitudes and hardships of the frontiersman in most of the important western places in early days and has for nearly forty years been identified with the northern part of Idaho, having always been a foremost figure in its progress and upbuilding. He is a man of sound principles, and now, in the golden days of his career, he is surrounded with friends and is honored and esteemed by all.

Samuel Phinney was born in Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, on August 2, 1830, being the son of William and Lydia (Belknap) Phinney, natives of Connecticut and New York, respectively. The father was of Scotch extraction, migrated to New York, where he was married, and then to Pennsylvania and thence to Iowa. He enlisted to fight in the Black Hawk war and was one of the enterprising farmers of Iowa until his death in 1876. The mother of our subject came from ancestors who were settlers in New York for generations back. Our subject went with the family to Iowa when he was eight years of age and there was educated in the district schools. In 1851 he went to seek gold in California and after mining near Sacramento for a time he was taken sick and returned via the Isthmus to his home. Six months later he made the trip across the plains with ox teams to Portland. Soon he was in Astoria, and after two years in a saw-mill he spent three years or so in rafting on the Columbia. Then a move was made to Walla Walla and stock raising occupied Mr. Phinney until he came to Lapwai in 1866. While in the Portland country he enlisted to fight the Yakimas. At Lapwai Mr. Phinney settled on land leased from the Indians and continued there until the reservation opened, when he took his present place, a portion of which is devoted to the town site of Fletcher. He has given his attention to raising the cereals and improvement of his farm and he is one of the substantial residents of this vicinity.

Mr. Phinney married Adeline, daughter of Colonel William Craig, at Walla Walla, in 1864, and to them have been born three sons, Fitch, Lee and William, farmers near Culdesac. Mrs. Phinney has two sisters: Annie, wife of Charles Fairfield, a farmer near Culdesac; Martha, widow of H. Vaughn. The subject of this article has traveled all over the northwest, especially the panhandle portion of Idaho, and is familiar with its early history, it growth, and has always striven for substantial improvement and development.

STEPHEN JOHNSON. President Roosevelt said recently in eulogy of a man, "He has done things." And in speaking of the highly respected gentleman whose name appears above, we can say nothing more eulogistic than to recount somewhat the achievements of his life. They speak in no uncertain terms.

Stephen Johnson was born in Greene county, Pennsylvania, on July 20, 1839, being the son of Zephaniah and Rachel (Ulery) Johnson. The father was born in Pennsylvania, on December 21, 1812, and farmed in Greene county, and his death occurred on July 12, 1895. His parents were Zenias and Sarah (Crane) Johnson, both of German descent. The mother of our subject, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, about 1818, being of German extraction, is now deceased. Our subject received the beginnings of his education in his native place, but since that time Mr. Johnson has improved his time in a most commendable manner and stands today a well educated man, with a ready reference library at his hands with which he is very familiar. When the budding years of twenty came he started out and in Ohio and Iowa he worked at his trade of builder and contractor for sixteen years. Soon after the war he purchased land in Benton county, Iowa, aggregating seven hundred acres. While doing a contract business here, he had charge of the following churches: Garrison church, Benton county; Grundy, Grundy county; Iowa River and State Center churches, Marshall county; and Waterloo, in Blackhawk county, in joint charge with Elder Miller. A sad experience in Mr. Johnson's career was the loss of his eyesight at the age of forty-five, but, using his own words, "Through skillful treatment and the blessings of the Lord, I am able to say, 'Whereas I was blind, now I can see', and I give all the praise and glory to His name." In 1883 he retired from the field of business and for twelve years devoted himself entirely to preaching, being thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the gospel. In 1897 Mr. Johnson came to the reservation and took land, which is now adjoining the town of Nezperce. He has improved his land in a becoming manner and is now retired from the more active calls of business. Mr. Johnson is still very active in preaching and for five years he proclaimed the gospel in this vicinity and George W. Thomas, whose heart and soul was in the work, was an able assistant in this worthy labor. Mr. Johnson is now presiding elder for the congregation at Nezperce and the one at Moscow also. He was the moving spirit in organizing the church here and has done much to foster and build it up. One beautiful characteristic of our subject that we must not omit is that spoken of by the apostle that those in authority should be of good repute with those who are without. Thus shall the faith for which the church stands not be brought into disgrace. And it is with pleasure that we are able to state that in this particular Mr. Johnson is of exceptional standing with all who know him, being highly respected and esteemed.

On March 7, 1865, in Knox county, Ohio, Mr. Johnson married Elizabeth, daughter of Philip and Saloma (Rice) Hardinger, natives of Knox county, where also Mrs. Johnson was raised. To this happy union there have been born eight children, named as follows: Elma A., Zephaniah A., Zenas C., William F., Sarah O., George P., Mary E., James M. After preaching the gospel for thirty-five years he, accompanied by his wife, went to Lordsbury, California, in quest of health. Mrs. Johnson has been a constant and faithful helpmeet of her husband and it is gratifying to see them in this, the golden time of their life, stanch testimonies to the truth and deserving of the enconium, "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if found in the way of righteousness."

Mr. Johnson has three brothers and two sisters: Silas, near town; George, in Iowa; Daniel, on the old home place in Pennsylvania; Phoebe, wife of Isaac Kemp, in Greene county, Pennsylvania; Sarah, residing with her brother, Daniel. Mrs. Johnson has three brothers: Jacob, in Sullivan county; Frederick, there also; Philip, in Benton county, Iowa. Jacob and Frederick served three years in the Forty-third Ohio Infantry in the Civil war. George, another brother, died on a gunboat on the Mississippi. Frederick was wounded in the hand. George, the brother of Mr. Johnson, was also three years in that awful conflict, as was his brother, Zenas, now deceased.

DANIEL S. STARNER. This gentleman is a sturdy representative of the pioneers who have opened the reservation country for settlement and made it one of the finest portions of the state. At the present time Mr. Starner lives one and one-half miles northeast from Lookout, where he owns a good farm and has devoted his attentions since filing on it to improvement and production of the fruits of the field.

Daniel S. Starner was born in Holmes county, Ohio, on October 18, 1848, being the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Byers) Starner, natives of Pennsylvania, and born on September 18, 1803, and December 6, 1813, respectively. They died on December 13, 1882, and August 23, 1881, respectively. Our subject grew to manhood and gained his education in his native place and always manifested skill with tools, early learning the carpenter trade. When twenty-three he went to Wisconsin, settling in Richland county for two years. Then came a move to Stevenson county, Illinois, and two years later he went to Crawford county, Wisconsin, where he wrought for five years. In that place Mr. Starner married Miss Phoebe J., daughter of William and Isabelle Duell, natives of New York and Germany, respectively. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Starner, all deceased. In the spring of 1883 Mr. Starner migrated to Oregon and thence to Dayton, Washington. In this last place his brother John resided and was probate judge. For eight years Mr. Starner farmed in that vicinity and in 1891 went to Moscow. There and in the vicinity of Garfield he farmed until May 17, 1898, when he came to his present place. This has been the scene of his labors since that time. Mr. Starner also carried the mail from Beeman to Rosetta, continuing on to Lookout when Beeman was discontinued. Mr. Starner has two brothers and one sister, John A., a merchant at Freese, Idaho; Julia A. Bolley, in Mansfield, Ohio; Frederick, in Lynxville, Wisconsin. Mr. Starner has been a member of the K. of P. for years. He is a Republican in politics, but is an independent thinker. Mr. Starner is a strong advocate of good schools, good roads and all general improvement, being a man of broad views and of public mind.

NATHANIEL T. WRIGHT. Among the stirring and practical business men of Mohler, whose skill and ability are bringing success to them, we are constrained to mention N. T. Wright, who is one of the enterprising men who conduct the Mohler Implement Company.

Nathaniel T. Wright was born in Iowa, on June 27, 1866, being the son of William W. and Elizabeth (Gibson) Wright, natives of Indiana. His father was probate judge in Indianapolis fifteen years before his death. Our subject remained with his parents in Iowa and in Latah county, Idaho, until he was twenty-one, having acquired his education from the common schools. Then he took a preemption on Bear Creek ridge, and in tilling this and rented land as well he was engaged until 1896, when he came to the reservation and took land. He was steadily engaged to open this and improve it until three years since, when he rented it and entered the employ of an implement firm in Spalding and later another in Grangeville. In January, 1900, in company with Messrs. Giles and Grass, Mr. Wright opened the recent business and since that time he has bent his energies and devoted his skill and business experience to the successful upbuilding of this trade. He has succeeded in a very gratifying manner and the company has already a large trade and a very flattering outlook.

On June 15, 1890, Mr. Wright married Miss Margaret V., daughter of Urban E. and Hannah (Bullis) Elliott, natives of Pennsylvania and New York, respectively, and now residents of Kendrick. Mrs. Wright received her education from the district schools and she has five brothers: Newman, in Kansas; Charles, William, Eugene, Frank, the last four residing in Kendrick. Mr. Wright has two brothers and one sister: Samuel A., at Lookout; William W., at Slickpoo; Goldie M., wife of Robert L. Ralston. Mr. Wright is a Republican and takes part in the duties of the patriotic citizen. He is a member of the K. of P., Magnolia Lodge, No. 51, at Culdesac; of the I. O. O. F., Echo Lodge, No. 60, at Mohler; of the W. W., Camp No. 612, in Mohler; and of the auxiliaries of the I. O. O. F. and the W. W.

Mr. and Mrs. Wright have been blessed by the advent of two children, Arthur L. and Nathaniel T. Mr. Wright is one of the solid and reliable business men of Mohler, who devotes his attention carefully to the prosecution of his business and brings to bear a wealth of skill and experience, together with fine judgment and keen foresight, which are telling in building it up in a commendable manner.

JOHN BRASCH is one of the substantial and enterprising farmers of the vicinity of Nezperce, having taken his present farm, two miles northeast from town, in the fall of 1895. He came with two cayuses and plenty of courage and determination and this has won the day, for he now has a choice farm, well improved, with good buildings, orchard, fences, and so forth, and is a prosperous and well-to-do citizen. He also has a nice bunch of cattle and some hogs and horses.

John Brasch was born in Prussia, Germany, on February 25, 1842, being the son of Christ and Christina Brasch, also natives of the same place. When our subject was a child the family came to the United States and settled in Wisconsin, where John grew to manhood. On August 15, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, Twenty-eighth Volunteer Infantry of Wisconsin, and was attached to the western army under Sherman. He fought in the battles of Helena, where he was wounded; Little Rock, Saline River, Spanish Fort, Blakely, and was in the siege of Vicksburg. Later he was sent to Texas and on August 23, 1865, he was honorably discharged, having seen plenty of hard service. Returning to his home in Wisconsin, he was married in Winnebago county, on March 3, 1867, Henrietta Koch becoming his wife. In 1880 they went to Thayer county, Nebraska, and in 1890 he came to Fairfield, Washington, and in November, 1895, Mr. Brasch made his present location, where he had pretty difficult toiling for a time, but now he is enjoying the fruits of his wisely bestowed industry. Four children have been born to Mr. Brasch: Christina, wife of Lewis Nisson, in Adams county, Washington; Frederick W., who has a quarter section adjoining his father's; Theodore L., at Fairfield, Washington; Bertha, wife of B. Ohlson, at Rockford, Washington. On January 18, 1899, Mrs. Brasch was called hence by death.

On June 7, 1899, Mr. Brasch married Mrs. Martha J. Stewart, daughter of George W. and Caroline V. Jackson. Mr. Jackson crossed the plains in 1845 and recrossed them five times. He was an intrepid pioneer and followed his profession of teaching school and music in various places of the west, especially in the vicinity of Spokane. He settled first in Clackamas county, Oregon, where Mrs. Brasch was born on March 13, 1856. She married Richard R. Stewart, by whom she had four children: Lynda V., wife of A. Pradella, near Spokane; Margaret G., wife of W. Redjovich, of Republic, Washington; Olive C., wife of E. C. Quincy, of Nezperce; Andrew C. Mr. Stewart died in 1898. Mrs. Brasch's father, well known as Professor Jackson, taught school and gave instruction in music for the last fifty-seven years of his life. He was born on May 10, 1819, and died on October 25, 1894, the last event occurring in Spokane, where he was widely known and beloved. Mrs. Brasch carries a diploma as a skilled nurse and an expert obstetrician and has practiced for twenty-seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Brasch are among the most substantial and prosperous people of this vicinity and have the esteem and confidence of all.

LEE J. ROWE. It is like a fairy tale to recount the facts of the prosperity of the subject of this article. In the fall of 1895 he came to the reservation and selected a raw piece of land, about three miles northeast from Nezperce, and in the following spring he brought his family to the land he had filed on. He had a team, one cow and seven dollars in cash when he landed here and now Mr. Rowe has one hundred and sixty acres of as fine farm land as one could wish to see, all fenced and under cultivation, a lovely eight-room house, commodious barns and outbuildings, a large amount of farming machinery, excellent orchards and good berry gardens, besides considerable stock, and his crops are a source of large revenue each year. Of course, he had the hardships and arduous labors to endure incident to opening a farm here and his family were to be provided for, but he and his faithful wife labored along and the result has been this excellent showing mentioned above, and now they are among the leading and most substantial people of this vicinity. Mr. Rowe and his wife are devout members of the Christian church, as is also their child, Carroll, and their example has been for good all the time they have resided here.

Lee J. Rowe was born in Catawba county, North Carolina, on February 16, 1862, being the son of Noah I. and Camilie (Smith) Rowe, also natives of the same place. They reside in the old homestead house, where they have been for fifty years, and are aged seventy-four and seventy, respectively. The father served all through the awful conflict of the Civil war on the Confederate side. Our subject was liberally educated in Catawba College, attending that institution from fifteen to nineteen.

On November 9, 1881, Mr. Rowe married Miss Fannie B., daughter of Marcus and Mahalia (Yunt) Smith, natives also of Catawba county, where they now live, aged eighty-five and seventy-five, respectively. Mr. Smith served in a portion of the war. Mrs. Rowe was born in Catawba county, on March 1, 1866. In the spring of 1892 Mr. Rowe and has family came to the Palouse country, settling near Steptoe Butte, and in the fall of 1895 he came, as related above, to his present place. Six children have been born to this worthy couple: Arthur W., Claude E., Carroll L., Annie P., Floyd S. and Blanche E.

CHARLES GILES. This pleasing and popular gentleman is a leading member of the well known business firm of the Mohler Implement Company, which does a thriving business in Mohler, being the leading house dealing in hardware and all kinds of farm inplements and vehicles.

Charles Giles was born in Cocke county, Tennessee, on February 28, 1865, being the son of Perrin and Rebecca (McGaughey) Giles. The father was a native of Tennessee, as also were his parents. He served in the Confederate army and died in 1895, aged seventy-two. The mother of our subject was also a native of Tennessee, as were her parents and grandparents, and several of her brothers served in the Union army. Our subject was reared in his native place and educated in the public schools. When he reached man's estate he went to western North Carolina and embarked in tobacco raising. Three years there and then we find him pressing his way westward, landing finally in Columbia county, Washington. There he operated in a saw-mill, logged and farmed until 1896. The next year he came to the reservation, took a claim one and one-half miles west from Mohler and settled to its improvement and culture until 1900. Then Mr. Giles rented his farm and embarked in the hardware business with Mr. Boozer. In January, 1902, he sold his interest to his partner. About the same time Mr. Giles associated himself with N. T. Wright and A. G. Gross, and under the style of the Mohler Implement Company, they opened a fine establishment of hardware, implements and vehicles. They erected a large two-story building, the upper portion of which is devoted to lodge rooms and hall, while the lower apartments are the quarters where they conduct their business. Since March last this firm has disposed of seven car loads of machinery, besides its trade in vehicles and hardware.

Mr. Giles is an active Democrat and well informed on the questions of the day. At present he is acting as central committeeman for his precinct and he is a frequent figure at the conventions. He is a member of Echo Lodge, No. 60, I. O. O. F., at Mohler, being treasurer; also of the Mohler Camp, No. 612, and the Mohler Valley Circle of the W. W. Mr. Giles has one brother, Henry Giles, and five sisters, named as follows: Margaret E., widow of Henry Wright; Matilda, wife of John Odell; Charlotte, wife of Robert Crumb; Hester, wife of Andrew Mantooth; Elizabeth, wife of Matt Crumb, all in Cocke county, Tennessee.

On December 25, 1901, Mr. Giles married Nellie M. Coolidge, daughter of James and Rebecca Dennis, natives of Ohio and Iowa, respectively, now living near Mohler. Mr. Giles is a popular and well liked resident of our county and he is deserving because of his uprightness and integrity.

WILLIAM E. CRUMPACKER. When victory crowns a great general in slaying men, the world bows; how much more in the great battle of life should we acknowledge credit to the man who has won in spite of adverse circumstances, gaining his success by his wisdom, thrift and hard labor, as has the subject of this article, aided by his estimable wife. An account of how he labored and won will fittingly form a part of this history.

William E. Crumpacker was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, on August 21, 1869, being the son of Henry D. and Rachel (Frazier) Crumpacker. The father was born in April, 1840, came west to Missouri when a small boy, grew up on a farm, served in the Civil war and came west to Oregon. The family came to Washington, after the birth of William, then went to Yamhill county, Oregon, then removed to Columbia county, Washington. Our subject gained his education in the various places where he was brought up, and when seventeen started out for himself. He worked on various ranches and in 1890 went to Moscow and ranched in the vicinity for two years. Next we see him in Kendrick as night clerk. In November, 1896, he filed on the land where his family home now is, two miles east from Nezperce. In 1897, he got in seven acres of wheat for hay. That fall he worked harvesting and lost all his wages, his employer becoming bankrupt. Mr. Crumpacker freighted that winter and in 1898 he sowed twenty acres of crop. He worked that fall three months harvesting and that gave him a good start. But when he came home the house had been burglarized, everything of value being stolen. Again, he took up for another winter the trying labor of freighting and in 1899 he was fortunate enough to get in eighty acres of crop, but market was forty miles away. The next year saw one hundred acres bearing a fine crop, and as the railroad came to Kamiah, the bright sky on his financial horizon began to show through. Mr. Crumpacker has since rented his farm, removed to Nezperce where he is now operating a first class hotel. He has a good patronage, his farm is well stocked, having some excellent blooded cattle and he is enjoying the success that labor and wisdom have gained for him, in spite of set backs.

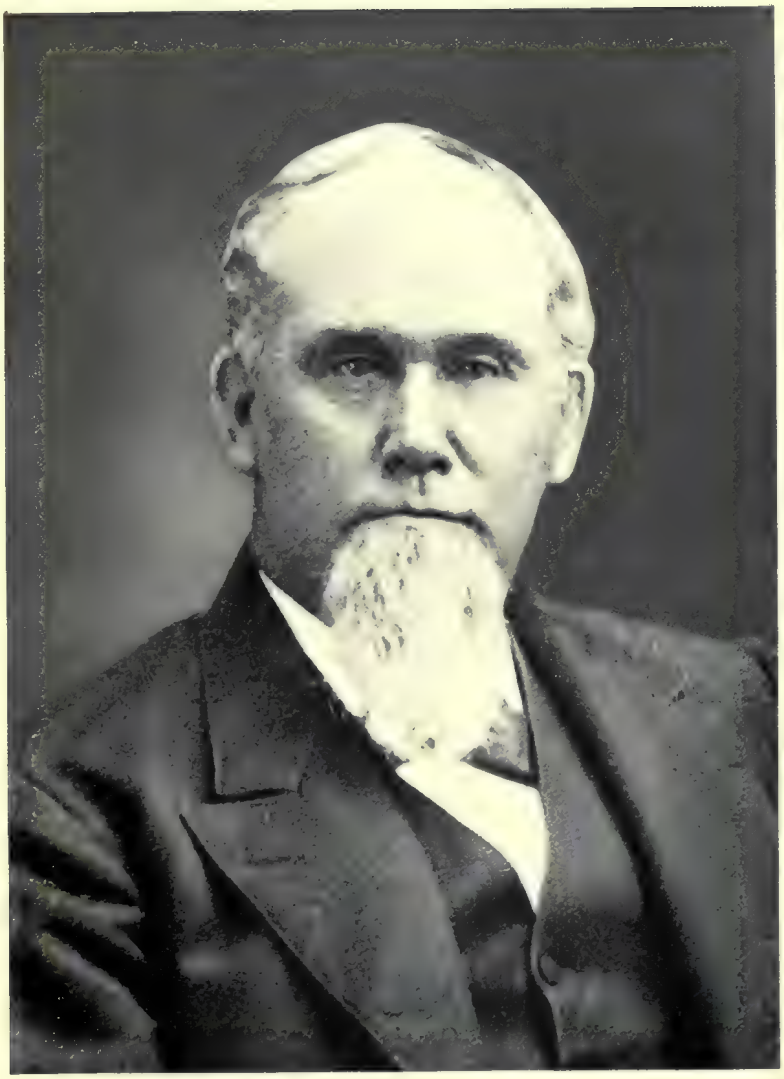
In Kendrick Mr. Crumpacker married Miss Anna, daughter of Michael and Lizzie (Normoyle) Sweeney, natives of Limerick, Ireland, and Cornwall, Pennsylvania, respectively. Mrs. Crumpacker was born in Kansas. To this happy union there have been born four children, Elva O., Mary E., Orville, and one infant, unnamed. Mr. and Mrs. Crumpacker are highly respected people, stand well in the community and are citizens of worth and honor.

CHARLES E. FAUNCE. A real pioneer of the pioneers, leading the way for the early seekers for gold into this country and also doing the same in many other localities, always conducting himself with the same sagacity, uprightness, courage, fortitude, and affability that now characterizes him, and always doing a noble part in the worthy undertakings of the pioneers, it is very fitting that the subject of this article should occupy a prominent position in the history of Nez Perces county, since also he has done much here to advance and build it up, and is now one of the highly esteemed and substantial men of the county.



Charles E. Faunce has the distinction of being born in the old Miles Standish house, in Duxbury, Massachusetts, which was built in the seventeenth century. His birth occurred on August 17, 1832, being the son of George and Sallie (Chase) Faunce. The father was a seafaring man, born in Vermont, and died at the age of eighty-three. The mother was born in 1791 and died in 1881, aged ninety. New Hampshire was her native state. Our subject remained at home securing his education and a training in seafaring life until he was twenty and then he went, via Cape Horn, to San Francisco, consuming one hundred and twenty days on the trip. He went to the mines at Auburn, California, at once joining his brothers John and William, who had gone thither in 1849. A little later he went to Michigan Bluffs, having learned the art of mining in Auburn. He mined there for nine years and did well. Then he came to Idaho and went into the Florence and Warrens districts. He took a pack train in and found ten thousand men there. He worked that summer, took claims in the fall, then went to the Clearwater and assisted in rafting logs to build the Lapwai agency. Returning to Florence and Warrens the next spring, he did not meet with success, so came back to Lewiston and took charge of the wood business of Allen, Piercy & Company. He mined on the Snake river and at Warrens, and always wintered in Lewiston. At one time he had a summer's work in the flume and one night parties cleaned it up and stole the entire amount, leaving him in the fall penniless. He went to Lewiston, having sold out his claims and quit the mining business. He was appointed deputy sheriff under Ephraim Bunker and was in this capacity when the noted criminal, Peter Walker, was hung by a mob. He then went into the dray and transfer business with Dyer, where he labored until 1874, then sold out and returned to Massachusetts, where he visited one winter. Returning, he mined, acted as night watchman, and in 1882, he built a hotel at Lake Waha. By his skill in handling it and making the place attractive as a summer resort, he soon had an enormous trade, almost the entire town of Lewiston being visitors to that attractive spot. In 1892 Mr. Faunce sold this property and removed to his homestead, two miles west. His wife, who had been postmistress at the lake, was also appointed the same in this new place, and here Mr. Faunce and his wife built up a fine resort. This was operated until 1901, when he sold it and removed to Lewiston where he now lives.

On September 28, 1881, Mr. Faunce married Mrs. Alida J. (Lappeus) Anderson, daughter of William W. and Elizabeth (Lewis) Lappeus, natives of New York, now dead. Mrs. Faunce was born in Albany, New York, in 1840, and she has two sisters, Mrs. Rachel Morris and Mrs. Mary Giffin. Mr. Faunce has the following brothers and sisters, George, John and Sallie. Mrs. Faunce has two sons by her former marriage, William and Absolum Anderson, both in Lewiston. Mr. Faunce is a Republican and is always interested in politics.

It is of note that the father of our subject was captured by the English in 1812, taken to England and there detained until he was stricken with the brain fever which nearly cost him his life. Mr. Faunce is a member of the Pioneer Association in the county and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

WILLIAM D. HARDWICK. Holding the responsible position of postmaster at Nezperce, where he is in every respect popular and efficient, the subject of this article is also the owner of fine real estate, which he took as a homestead, and now rents.

William D. Hardwick was born in Missouri, on March 15, 1844, being the son of Noah J. and Catherine (Rhoades) Hardwick, natives of Kentucky and Marion county, Missouri, respectively. The father was born in 1818, migrated to Missouri and at the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Forty-fourth Missouri

CHARLES E. FAUNCE

Infantry. At the battle of Nashville, under Thomas, he was taken sick and died in St. Louis, on January 13, 1865, having served almost through the entire struggle. The mother died when our subject was thirteen. Her parents were natives of South Carolina, her mother dying at the age of one hundred and two years. This aged lady was named Barbara Cochran Rhoades, was of Irish descent and married a descendant of the Dutch in Pennsylvania. Our subject remembers but little of his father's relatives, except the brothers were men of prominence in Missouri. He received a common school education, stepped from the parental roof when fourteen, and when barely seventeen, he enlisted in Company A, Twenty-third Missouri Infantry, under Captain J. T. Dunlap and Colonel J. T. Tindall. He served four years and one month, participating in the battle of Shiloh, where he was captured and suffered terribly in the awful war prisons of that time, being mostly at Macon, Georgia. After that, he was exchanged and went with Sherman to the sea, participating in the conflicts there encountered. He went into the war as a private, was promoted to corporal, then to sergeant, and later was elected captain, but the war closed before he was able to act in that capacity. Following the war, Mr. Hardwick attended high school in Iowa for one year and then turned his attention to teaching, having taught in Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Washington. From 1870 to 1892 Mr. Hardwick was in Kansas, being occupied as an educator, farmer and merchant. Then he came to Pullman, Washington, operated a boarding house and taught school. His children were educated in the college at Pullman. The day of the opening of the reservation, Mr. Hardwick filed on his present farm, it being one of the best in the vicinity of Nezperce. He was without capital then and he gave his attention to farming, freighting and so forth until he has accumulated a fine holding. He was appointed postmaster on June 4, 1902, and took the office on July 1, and he has made a commendable record.

On April 19, 1867, Mr. Hardwick married Miss Joanna Smith, a native of Scotland, the nuptials occurring in Mercer county, Missouri. On May 24, 1868, she died from the dread disease, consumption. On May 9, 1869, Mr. Hardwick married Martha H., daughter of Zachariah and Martha (Hutchison) Rhoades. The father was born in Kentucky, in 1811, and died in 1856, having been a farmer. The mother is a native of Tennessee, and now lives in Fontana, Kansas. Mrs. Hardwick was born on October 3, 1846, in Illinois. She has two brothers, Andrew J. and Elijah B., residing in Miami county, Kansas; also one sister, wife of Horatio H. Quincy, in the same county. Mr. Hardwick has two brothers, George E., residing in Idaho county; Thomas J., a preacher for the United Brethren church in Whitman county, Washington. Mr. Hardwick has five sisters, Emily J., widow of E. L. Garriott, residing in Idaho county; Barbara C., wife of David M. Sanders, in Whitman county; Sarah E., wife of John Rhodes, in Indian Territory; Rebecca A., wife of Alfred R. Williams, in Gray county, Kansas; Sina A., wife of William J. Brittain, in Neodesha, Kansas. To Mr. and Hardwick and his faithful and estimable wife there have been born four children, Andrew B., about to enter Leland Stanford University; Thomas J., a truck farmer near Wallace, Idaho; William N., now assistant postmaster at Nezperce, about to enter the law department of Leland Stanford; Emma J., wife of Henry H. Pogue, the county surveyor of Idaho county, with residence at Grangeville.

WILLIAM M. BLACKINTON. Among the pioneers of Nez Perces county we are constrained to mention the subject of this sketch, who has wrought in different capacities in this section for years and is a well known business man, capable and industrious.

William M. Blackinton was born in Winnebago county, Illinois, on October 5, 1851, being the son of Marcus R. and Ann (Trumble) Blackinton. The father died in 1895, aged eighty-one, being hale and hearty and possessed of all his faculties. Subject's paternal grandfather lived to be over fourscore years old. William grew up on a farm, received a common school education, in 1881 went to Minnesota, and in 1883 came to Lewiston. A short time was spent there and then a move was made to the Potlatch country on his father's farm, he having come to the coast in 1884. Five years were spent on that farm and about 1895 Mr. Blackinton homesteaded land east of Southwick. Three years later he sold his improvements and then rented until 1901, when he removed to Leland and rented the hotel which he ran until January, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Blackinton handled a fine house and became very popular with the traveling public.

On October 17, 1883, Mr. Blackinton married Miss Nellie Fletcher who died in 1885, leaving one child, Grace. On December 4, 1890, Mr. Blackinton married Frances, daughter of Henry and Huldah (Harrington) Jones. It was the first marriage ever solemnized in Leland. Mr. Jones was a blacksmith and wagon maker. His father and his three brothers were all blacksmiths and were natives of Ohio. Mrs. Blackinton's grandmother was born in Wales and her mother was a native of Ohio. Mrs. Blackinton was born in Van Buren county, on December 4, 1861, and has one brother and two sisters living, George, in Kansas; Amira, wife of Sam Pennel, of Jonesburg, Kansas; Mary, wife of Frank Thompson, of Leland. Mr. Blackinton has two brothers, George, a carpenter in Vineland; Emmett, at Leland. To Mr. and Mrs. Blackinton one child has been born, Florence, aged eleven years. Mr. Blackinton is fraternally affiliated with the I. O. O. F., Leland Lodge, No. 90. He owns a farm of 120 acres one mile west of Leland which he rents; it has a good orchard and is farmed to grain.

WILLIAM LE BARON is one of the earliest of the hardy men who invaded nature's domain in the interests of civilization in what is now Nez Perces county. He has labored with assiduity and wisdom all the intervening years for the advancement and progress of the country and has gained the good will, high esteem and confidence of all who may have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

William Le Baron was born in Saline, Washtenaw county, Michigan, August 20, 1838, being the son of Uriah and Lois (Sephard) Le Baron, natives of New York, and among the first settlers in that section of Michigan. Our subject grew up on a farm and gained a good education from the public schools and the Ypsilanti Normal school. When nineteen, our subject came to Missouri on a sightseeing trip, then made his way to Nebraska and thence drove a freight team of oxen to Salt Lake. Soon he was in California and devoted himself to mining there until 1861. Next we see him in Applegate, Josephine county, Oregon, where he mined one year. In the early part of 1862 Mr. Le Baron came to Lewiston and thence he went to the famous camps of Florence, Warren, Orifino and others, settling in 1863 on a preemption four miles east from Lewiston, now known as the Porter ranch which was his abode until 1880. In that year Mr. Le Baron sold his property and engaged in rafting timber down the Clearwater, being the first in that business. He was assisted in these labors by his partner, Charles Carlton. In 1890 Mr. Le Baron came to his present place adjoining Cavendish. He bought half of a saw-mill from A. E. Snell and in 1895 filed on one hundred and twenty acres of land on the reservation. He also purchased a quarter section and all of this land is outside of the reservation. About 1898, Mr. Le Baron bought out Mr. Snell. He now has a fine mill and is turning out all kinds of timber products, having a first class patronage.

Mr. Le Baron has two brothers living, Charles and Marshall. The former is a real estate agent in Los Angeles, California, while the latter is a railroad official in Colorado. Mr. Le Baron is a Democrat in politics and has been a delegate to the conventions many times but never pressed forward for preferment. He is one of the substantial and leading men of this section and stands secure in the good opinions of his neighbors. He is a man of ability and wisdom and has displayed his integrity and sound principles always.

JAMES H. EVANS. Many are the worthy pioneers whose faithful and well directed labors have given to us this famous western country for enjoyment and wealth, but not least among them were the parents of our subject, who crossed the plains with ox teams in 1852 and ended the weary and dangerous journey when they settled in western Oregon. The father went the next year to Yreka, California, and gained good mining interests and then went to Boise, Idaho, and there operated in the mines. Between these two points and his home in Oregon he spent much of the early years and also did much development work on the home place in Oregon, in addition to the arduous labors of mining.

James H. Evans was born in Linn county, Oregon, on January 28, 1862, his parents being Berry and Ann E. (Cunningham) Evans. When James was ten years of age the family came to Washington and settled near where Dayton is now, it being then but one little red store and a blacksmith shop. There he obtained his education from the public schools and in 1883 he decided to start in the walks of life on his own responsibility and accordingly went to Garfield and rented a farm. One year later he went to Alpowa and took a preemption, which he tilled for three years. Thence he removed to his present residence, three miles south from Juliaetta, took a homestead and began the commendable labors of improvement and development. Mr. Evans cut the first road through this section to the famous Camas prairie region, the same being the first one there since the early one from Caldwell. He built and maintained a ferry at the Clearwater crossing known then as Big Eddy, but now named by the Northern Pacific, Agatha, from the given name of Mrs. Evans.

On March 18, 1884, Mr. Evans married Miss Agatha, daughter of Thomas Reynolds, mention of whom is made elsewhere in this volume. To this happy union there have been born six children: Thomas W., at home; Joseph, May, Esther, Vera and Mary. Mr. Evans has three brothers and four sisters, William M., a merchant and farmer at Willola, who also runs the ferry; Berry, at Lake Chelan, Washington, in the stock business; Granville, residing at Riverside, Okanogan county, Washington; Mary C., wife of Bud King, residing near Dayton; Angonetta, wife of D. Flemming, residing near Lake Chelan; Anna, single. Mr. Evans is a Republican. He and his estimable wife are highly respected people and are deserving of much credit for the worthy labors they have done for the opening of this country and they are possessed of rare virtues of integrity, enterprise and wisdom, while geniality and good will abound on every hand in their happy home.

LEON M. THORNTON. Among those who have settled in Nez Perces county recently is to be mentioned the energetic and successful young business man whose name initiates this paragraph and who is at the present time operating a general merchandise establishment in Southwick. He has a good stock of well assorted commodities used in the surrounding country and because of strict business methods, his geniality and his wisdom in selecting goods for the needs of the people he has won and is rapidly gaining a lucrative patronage.

Leon M. Thornton was born in Delaware county, New York, on October 15, 1870, being the son of Anson W. and Martha G. (Tiffany) Thornton. The family came to Seward county, Nebraska, when Leon was three years old and two years later removed thence to Furnas county in the same state. There they all remained until 1901, when the parents, our subject, four brothers and two sisters came to this country and settled in various sections of the county. At that time Mr. Thornton opened his mercantile establishment and has continued steadily in this line. He is well respected and stands high in the esteem and confidence of all who know him. Mr. Thornton is a member of the Reformed Dunkard church and is a consistant supporter of his faith.

GEORGE W. STEVENS resides at Star Mills, two miles southeast from Lookout and while he is largely retired from the more active participation in business he is still interested with his sons in the mill. He was born in Washington county, Tennessee, on July 23, 1831, being the son of John and Margaret (Dunsworth) Stevens, natives respectively of Washington county and Illinois. They were descended from the Pennsylvania Dutch and pioneers in the then western country. Our subject grew to manhood amid the environments of the farm and during the conscription in his native place he was caught in the Confederate army, though he took a musket in those ranks much against his will. He was in Company D, First Tennessee Heavy Artillery. He fought through the trying times until the surrender of Vicksburg, being in Pemberton's command. His two brothers were more fortunate than he and escaped the conscription.

Mr. Stevens went to Illinois in 1865, where he remained for six years. The next move was to Kansas, in which place he lived sixteen years, whence he came to Moscow in 1889. In the same year he came to the reservation, settling where we now find him.

In 1856, in North Carolina, Mr. Stevens married Miss Lydia A. Dillingham, and to them four sons and one daughter were born: James F., in Oregon; Dewitt S.; John D., living at the mill; Semaramis, wife of William F. Gill, in Kansas, and George G., at the mill.

Mr. Stevens is one of the highly respected citizens of our county and is beloved by all. He is now passing the golden years of his life in retirement, being cheered by the associations of his sons and sustained by the competence which his faithful labors conserved for himself and his wife.

SAMUEL J. MARKHAM resides at Gifford and is one of the promoters of the town, being also a progressive and public minded man of wisdom and energy whose assiduous labors have placed him as one of the substantial developers of the country. Mr. Markham has also donated much land for the benefit of the town and labors hard to build it up.

S. J. Markham was born in Marion county, Oregon, on November 2, 1867, being the son of Cyrus and Ann (Bowman) Markham, natives of Missouri and Iowa. Our subject was educated in the public schools and when seventeen his father died. Just previous to that the family had come to Idaho, near Genesee. The mother proved up on the homestead the father had taken and Samuel continued with her and working for the neighbors until he was twenty-three. Then he and his brother traded stock for a quarter section on the rim rock, out from Genesee. Later they sold and rented in different places until the reservation opened and the first day he and his brother filed. He has a fine piece of land and, as said above, has sold and given away considerable to foster the town. Mr. Markham has one brother, Fred, and three half-sisters, Carrie, wife of George Wayne at Mason's Butte; Minnie, wife of Charles Sampson at Lewiston; Margaret, wife of Alfred Sampson, in Lawyer's canyon.

On May 25, 1890, Mr. Markham married Mary C., daughter of William W. and Minerva C. (Ingle) Loper, natives respectively of Mississippi and Tennessee. Mrs. Markham was born in Benton county, Arkansas, on January 3, 1874. She has two brothers: James T. and William. She has the following sisters: Nancy D., wife of George A. Smith; Margaret, wife of Oscar Rogers, of Gifford. Her parents now reside in Lewiston. To Mr. and Mrs. Markham have been born three children: Mabel C., Alta and Harlond C. Mr. and Mrs. Markham are members of the Methodist church and he is one of the trustees of the church. Mr. Markham is a school director and is independent in politics. Among the other things which Mr. Markham has donated is a lot for a parsonage and two thousand feet of lumber, which he hauled, half of a lot for a church, and other items as well. Mrs. Markham's brother, James T. is a preacher in the Methodist church. Her father served in the Civil war. Mr. Markham is a man of reliability and is one of the substantial factors of the communtiy.

CHARLES C. SAMPSON is one of the real pioneers of this western country, having lived in different sections, while his parents were among the very first ones who braved the dangers of an ox team trip across the plains to enter the Willamette wilderness.

Charles C. Sampson was born in Lane county, Oregon, on October 15, 1855, being the son of Ephraim A. and Eunice (Warner) Sampson, natives resectively of Missouri and Indiana. The father came to western Oregon in 1849, having also been in California in that year and the mother came to the Willamette valley in 1853, both crossing the plains with ox teams. They were married in the valley. The father was well known as one who did much hunting for emigrants who were coming in and who needed help. He would organize parties and go to meet the unfortunates who were beset with Indians or who had lost food and were starving or who had wandered out of the way and were unable to find the proper trail. Many such trips did the elder Sampson take and many pathetic and deeply touching tales could he tell of the sad sights that met his eyes and the suffering that he relieved. About 1852 Mr. Sampson went east on a business trip, crossing the Isthmus on a cayuse. Our subject gained some schooling in the native place and when the family came to the vicinity of Dayton, Wahington, he studied there also. It was 1870, that they came thither and in 1874 Charles went from the homestead near Dayton to Baker City and worked in a quartz mill for three years on Conner creek. In 1877 he came to Lewiston and that has been his headquarters since. He went into the stock business and followed raising cattle and horses for a long time and the last six years he has devoted his energies principally to sheep, of which he has four thousand. He has fine Oxfords and many of them are entitled to registration. Mr. Sampson has seven living brothers: Horace J., merchant at Harrison, Idaho; Alfred E., at Kamiah, Idaho; Thomas J., sheepman near Lewiston; David, living near Southwick; Norman, in Wallowa county, Oregon; Virgil, farmer near Genesee; Glenn with Virgil in the stock business.

In 1881 Mr. Sampson married Miss Minnie C. Miner. Mrs. Sampson's mother's maiden name was Bowman, and her parents were pioneers of the Willamette valley while some of the family live near Genesee. Mrs. Sampson has two half brothers, Samuel Markham, a prominent citizen of Gifford and part owner of the townsite; Fred, at Cold Springs, Idaho. Mrs. Sampson has two sisters, Carrie, wife of George Wayne; Maggie, wife of Alfred Sampson, brother of our subject. To Mr. and Mrs. Sampson there have been born five children: Myrtle, Ivy, Jettie, Bessie and Clifford. Mr. Sampson is a member of the W. of W. at Lewiston. He is a Democrat in political matters but he is not at all desirous of personal preferment although he is frequently selected to attend the conventions. He is a man of wide experience, good training, and has demonstrated both his integrity and ability in an upright life and a successful business career.

WALTER E. DAGGETT. The enterprising young man whose name is at the head of this article, is one of the stable and successful business men of Southwick, engaged in the mercantile business and also postmaster, in which capacities he displays ability and faithfulness.

Walter E. Daggett was born in Shabonier, Fayette county, Illinois, on May 23, 1866, being the son of Louis N. and Charlotte (Wilkins) Daggett. The father is now living with the son but the mother died when Walter was four months old. After this sad event he went to live with distant relatives, Reuben E. Wetmore, at Nokomis, Illinois. When fifteen he went with the family to South Dakota, and two years later Mrs. Wetmore died. Walter remained with them until twenty-two and then married Miss Louisa A., daughter of Simon and Maria (Thode) Sievers, of German extraction. The wedding occurred in Huron, and a few months later we find the young couple in Sioux City, whence they went to St. Louis, where he remained seven years in the employ of the Edison General Electric Company of St. Louis. Three children were born to them there: Dora G., Adaline M., and Walter N. In May, 1897, Mr. Daggett came to Idaho to join his father who was postmaster at Southwick. In 1889 the office was transferred to our subject and with that and the duties of his commercial business he has been occupied since. In political matters he is a Republican and is now justice of the peace. He has been delegate to the county conventions and is now a delegate to the state convention. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Kendrick Lodge, No. 26; with the W. W., at Leland and the M. W. A., LeBaron Camp, No. 9383, at Cavendish, Idaho. Mrs. Daggett has three brothers and four sisters: G. W., at home with the old people, who are prosperous and prominent farmers; Henry, in Westbend, Washington county, Wisconsin, is justice of the peace and a prominent man and promoter of factory interests; William, a capitalist in Huron, South Dakota; Dora, wife of Fred Schoenleber, in South Dakota; Amelia, wife of Gustave Thode, a farmer in Bazile Mills, Nebraska; Mary, wife of Isaac Van Winkle, in Huron, in the real estate business; Helen, wife of Edward Van Dyke, at Southwick, Idaho. In addition to other business transacted, Mr. Daggett learned to set type and is skilled in that line. As a man he is of good standing and an attractive personality, while he numbers his friends by scores.

WILFRED L. GIFFORD. Although the subject of this sketch has not been so long a resident of Nez Perces county as some, still his worthy labors and real worth entitle him to representation in the annals of its history, while also on the reservation portion of the county he has been one of the real pioneers.

Wilfred L. Gifford was born in Cedar county, Iowa, on June 19, 1870, being the son of Seth and Anna A. (Buckman) Gifford. The father resides at Gifford and the mother is long since deceased. Our subject received his education from the various places where he lived with his father, who is mentioned in this volume. He remained at home until 1890, and then entered the employ of the F. E. & M. V. R. R. in Nebraska, continuing there for four years. After that he turned his attention to developing mining properties in the Black Hills, South Dakota, until 1898, the date of his advent to this county, his father having preceded him. He homesteaded his present place of one hundred and twenty acres three and one-half miles northeast from Gifford. The land is adapted to fruit and stock and in these lines he is starting. During the summer of 1890 Mr. Gifford was a forest ranger for the government in the Bitter Root forest reserve. He was deputy sheriff under his father in Fall River county and had thrilling experiences among the outlaws who knew the terror of the law when our subject and his father administered it. One noted criminal, Ed Lehman, was apprehended and executed at this time.

On June 23, 1891, at Hot Springs, South Dakota, Mr. Gifford married Miss Tillie, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Bellew) Craven, natives of Illinois and Kentucky, respectively. The father was a prominent stockman and also a pioneer across the plains in 1863, having made much money in the placer mines in Montana. Mrs. Gifford has the following brothers and sisters: John B., Woodson B., both residents of South Dakota and the latter county commissioner of Fall River county for four years; Lydia, twin sister to Mrs. Gifford; Jimmie, assistant principal and disciplinarian of the Gaylord Institute at Platte City, Missouri, yet her home is in Dakota with her other sister. Mrs. Gifford was born in Clay county, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Gifford have one child, Bessie L., aged ten. Mr. Gifford is a member of the Tin Centre Lodge, of the K. of P., No. 44; also of the M. W. A., Camp No. 5545. Mr. Gifford is a Republican and takes an active and intelligent part in political matters. He stands well among his fellows and is one of the leading citizens of the community. He was nominated on the Republican ticket for assessor and ex-officio tax collector of the N. P. Company and was elected by a majority of four hundred and sixty-one votes, and will begin the duties of the office January 1, 1902.

JOHN D. STEVENS is a leading merchant of the reservation region of Nez Perces county, and at present is doing business at the Star Mills, two miles south from Lookout postoffice. He is a representative business man and public minded citizen and an enterprising factor in the progress of the county.

John D. Stevens was born in Washington county, Tennessee, on January 30, 1862, being the son of George W. and Lydia E. (Dillingham) Stevens, natives of Washington county, Tennessee, and North Carolina, respectively. In 1865 they removed to McDonough county, Illinois, and our subject grew up on the farm and gained his education from the common schools. In 1871 the family came to Kansas and the father took a claim. It was 1890 that our subject left the parental roof and started for himself. His first journey was to Polk county, Oregon, where he was engaged in a flouring mill. He learned the trade of the engineer and the arts of the miller, becoming a practical operator in both these important lines. He later bought an interest in a general merchandise establishment. He wrought there until 1899, and then made a move to Willola postoffice on the reservation, where he was postmaster for a time and in October, 1901, he came to his present location and here he is doing a good business. He is a business man in every sense of the word and his affability and genial ways, added to his talent, are making for him a fine trade.

At Independence, Oregon, in 1892, Mr. Stevens married Miss Nettie, daughter of James and Philadelphia (Fry) Ferguson, natives respectively of Canada and England. Mrs. Ferguson saw Queen Victoria crowned before leaving the old country. Mr. Stevens has three brothers: James F., living in Oregon; DeWitt S., George G., also one sister, Semarimas, wife of William F. Gill, in Kansas. To Mr. and Mrs. Stevens there have been born three children, Raymond A., John D. and Robert N. In political matters Mr. Stevens is allied with the Republicans and while he does not press for personal preferment in that realm, he always takes the interest in governmental affairs that becomes the good citizen.

HENRY JOHNSON is one of the industrious and substantial men who live in the vicinity of Gifford, his estate of one hundred and twenty acres being about one mile east of town and he is entitled to representation in the history of his county as he has done much toward the development and upbuilding of the county and is now one of the thrifty and progressive farmers. He handles his land to the cereals, raising also cattle, horses and hogs, while the entire premises manifest the neatness, thrift and good management of the proprietor.

Henry Johnson was born in Denmark, on October 1, 1870, being the son of John and Cecil (Samson) Johnson, farmers of that country. Henry grew up on the farm and attended private school. When eight he was called to mourn the death of his mother and in 1887 he came to this country, joining an uncle in Shelby county, Iowa. His only brother, John Johnson, now lives in Spokane. For two years our subject wrought in Iowa and then came to Whitman county, Washington. He worked on the railroad construction for a year and then went into the mines in Shoshone county, where he remained until the strike. Returning to Colfax he remained one year and then came across the river from the reservation, in order to be handy when the land was opened. He was there the first day and filed on November 30, 1895. Since that time Mr. Johnson has given his time to the improvement of his land and he has one hundred and twenty acres of the excellent land of this section. In political matters he is a Democrat, but does not ever press for personal preferment. Mr. Johnson is still on the ground of the celibatarian, having never embarked on the uncertain sea of matrimony. He is respected and well thought of by all and is one of the up-to-date men and public minded citizens.

HUGH PORTER is one of the substantial and prosperous farmers and stock raisers of the vicinity of Summit, his estate of eighty acres being one and one-half miles south from that place. His birth was on August 2, 1853, in Prince Edward county, Ontario, and his parents were James and Jane (Law) Porter, natives of England and Ireland, respectively. The mother's mother, Ann Law, lived to be one hundred and four years of age and was one of the most celebrated midwives of the country where she lived. She officiated at eight hundred births and lost only six cases, one case being tripletts. She was hale and hearty up until the time of her death. At ninety she plaited a straw hat that took the premium in their county fair. Our subject's parents were among the leading and most wealthy people of their section. Hugh remained at home, working summers and attending school winters until seventeen and then he went to Santa Clara county, California, where he operated on a farm and in the mercantile realm until 1875, when he removed to Nevada county and took a position as car builder on the Southern Pacific. While there, the town being Truckee, he married in 1879, August 9, Miss Cora, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Kelleher) Tomkins, natives of Baltimore and Ireland, respectively. The father died in Boston when Mrs. Porter, his only child, was four years old. The mother married Hugh Newell later and they went to California. Mr. Porter has one brother, James, in Sacramento, and three sisters: Martha, wife of Reuben Lewis; Charlotte, wife of Timothy Lewis; Margaret, wife of James Haggerty, all living in Canada.

In 1888 Mr. Porter removed with his family to Sprague, Washington, and entered the employ of the Northern Pacific. In 1891 he went to Hope, Idaho, in the train service, later to Helena, and in June, 1896, he went to Kendrick. In 1897 he came to the reservation and found a piece of land, where he now lives, that had been overlooked, every one supposing it to be Indian land. He raises hay and the cereals and rents a quarter section each year. Mr. and Mrs. Porter are members of the Methodist church; she is a fine musician and has taught the art considerably in earlier days. Mr. Porter has been a member of the Red Cross Lodge of the K. of P., No. 28, of Spokane since 1879 and has passed all but the highest chair and would have held that but for removal. Mr. Newell, brother of Mrs. Porter's step-father, was a prominent educator in Baltimore and gained a national reputation as author of some of the well known school books. He was a native of Ireland and a graduate of the Royal College of Belfast and also of Trinity College, Dublin. He held the position of principal of the state normal school in Baltimore and held the chair of natural sciences in Baltimore College, while at the time of his death he was state superintendent of public instruction in Maryland. To Mr. and Mrs. Porter there have been born one son, Harold E., living, and two children deceased; Winnie M. and Joseph G., both swept away by diphtheria while the parents lived in California.

PITTS ELLIS. It is not often that one finds in the rural districts of the country a man of the genius and ability of the subject of this article. Mr. Ellis is not only an agriculturist, but he is a mechanic and a first-class millwright, while also he holds the distinction of being one of the inventors of much improved mill machinery. At present the family home is two and one-half miles west from Summit on the farm, while the mill that Mr. Ellis owns is near Summit. With the help of his son Raymond, who is also a clever mill man, Mr. Ellis built not only the mill, but also the entire machinery in it. This was in 1901 and the mill is a fifty barrel capacity. It is a model plant of the northwest. The rolls are different from others and his own invention, while the bolter and sifter he constructed from models which he evolved from his own brain. The mill does most excellent work and is a triumph of the ability and skill of our subject.

Pitts Ellis was born in Posey couny, Indiana, on January 23, 1852, being the son of Ebenezer and Theodosia (Phillips) Ellis, natives of Cayuga county, New York. When our subject was six, the family went to Waukasha county, Wisconsin, where the father did a general merchandise and milling business. Pitts was educated there in the high school and at the age of nineteen went to teaching. It was 1872 that he went to Nebraska, where he taught until 1881; he then taught in Denver for two years. In 1883 he went to Arkansas City, Arkansas, and built his first mill. Sixteen years were spent in operating it and then Mr. Ellis came to Nez Perces county and built the first flour mill on the reservation. He traded it for his present place and later the mill burned. Then the mill we first mentioned was built and this is being operated now. Mr. Ellis also handles considerable grain from his farm, raises good graded Poland China hogs and Jersey cows.

On July 7, 1880, Mr. Ellis married Miss Olive, daughter of William and Lenora (Hubbard) Rose, natives of New York. Mrs. Ellis was born in Sauk county, Wisconsin, and was a pupil of Mr. Ellis in Vernon county. Her family went to Iowa and there her wedding occurred. She has one sister and four brothers: Henry, Hubert, Daniel, George, Laura, wife of W. A. Simmons, living in Denver, Colorado. The others live in Colorado, except George, who is a Congregational minister in Idaho. Mrs. Ellis is now candidate on the Prohibition ticket for state superintendent of public instruction and is active in W. C. T. U. circles. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have two children: Raymond and Harold, both at home. Mr. Ellis is justice of the peace, elected on the Democratic ticket in 1900, running ahead of his ticket. Mrs. Ellis' father, her brother and three brothers-in-law were all in the Civil war and came through many years of service without a wound. Mr. Ellis has one brother and four sisters: Edwin; Julia, wife of John H. Mocket, who was in Company K, Twenty-eighth Wisconsin Volunteers; Sophronia, wife of Richard Mocket, who was in the Forty-third Wisconsin Volunteers; Hattie, wife of Andrew W. Dean; Mary, wife of Frank Clark, who served four years in the Civil war, one of which was in Andersonville prison.

FRANK MAYNARD, Jr. In matters of advancement and development, this gentleman is always in the vanguard. In labors to build up beter educational advantages, he is an enthusiastic worker and in the walks of a patriotic citizen and good neighbor he is second to none.

Frank Maynard was born in Guthrie county, Iowa, on August 16, 1861, being the son of Frank and Mary J. (Costel) Maynard. The father was born in Delaware county, Indiana, in 1839, served in the Civil war under General Siegel and was a pioneer in Oregon and in Washington. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1844 and her father was a native of Maryland. The family went from Iowa to Oregon in 1862, crossing the plains with teams. They settled in Multnomah county and also lived in Washington county and Yamhill county and the father did ranching and worked at saw-milling. Frank was educated in Portland, spending five years there. In 1874 they came to Dayton, Washington, and the father wrought in a planing mill and there our subject learned both the trade of the carpenter and that of the engineer. He built bridges on the Northern Pacific for three years, then farmed a while and after that was engineer for six years in a sawmill. At the time of the Nez Perces war, he was in Dayton and enlisted, but before action he was sent back on account of his youth. In 1895 Mr. Maynard located a claim on the middle fork in Idaho county and in 1898 he came to Nez Perces county, where he now resides, one mile east from Summit.

On July 27, 1891, Mr. Maynard married Mamie, daughter of James A. and Martha Ellen (Crumley) Berry, natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Maynard was born in Tennessee in 1860 and came west in 1898. She has five brothers and five sisters. Mr. Maynard has six brothers and three sisters: Mary A. Boyles, whose husband is a banker and landowner in Colton, Washington; James M., in the Philippines; Daniel O., a stockman in this county; John W., deceased; Lulu Hawker, in Colton, Washington; Meade N., stock owner in this county; Mollie, deceased; Burt, in Nez Perces county; Chester, in Whitman county. By her former marriage Mrs. Maynard has three children: Vincent E., Bulah E., and Mary B. To Mr. and Mrs. Maynard there has been born one child, Jaunita. Mr. Maynard is a member of the A. O. U. W. and his wife of the Presbyterian church. Politically, our subject is a warm Republican and a member of the club of the county. He gives his attention to raising fruit and is one of the respected and substantial men of his section.

OLE OLSEN. Norway has sent to the coasts of America many of her stalwart sons, whose brain and brawn have materially assisted in making this one of the grandest countries on the face of the earth today. One among this worthy number is named at the head of this article and it is with pleasure that we grant to him consideration in the volume that chronicles the history of his county.

Ole Olsen was born in northern Norway on December 6, 1859, being the son of Ole and Karl Evensen, natives of Norway. Our subject grew to manhood on a farm, received his education in the common schools and then served three years in the regular army. In April, 1885, he came to Hull, England, across the North Sea and thence by rail to Liverpool, whence he sailed in steamship to Quebec. On the coast of Newfoundland they had much trouble in the ice floes and great danger of demolition threatened them. From Quebec, Mr. Olsen came to Union county, South Dakota and there farmed for four years. On July 6, 1889, he landed in Moscow and there he wrought for wages on a farm for four years. Then he rented a farm in Whitman county and in 1895 he selected his present place and filed on it. The next year he moved here and this has been the arena of his labors and successes since that time. Mr. Olesen has a good place and it is skillfully handled and produces fine annual returns. This year he had the gratification of harvesting over four thousand bushels of grain. He has a good house and other improvements also a good orchard and plenty of smaller fruits. Mr. Olsen handles some stock and also owns an interest in a threshing machine with the Hadford brothers. He is a man of uprightness and is well respected by his fellows.

ISAAC N. LOUGH. Descended from an old and honorable family whose members are noted for temperance, integrity and honor, and from whose ranks many were found to fight for the cause of the government and principles of rectitude, one of whom, the grandfather of our subject, drummed for the marshalling of the soldiers in the war of 1812, beat the roll call for the Mexican conflict and was on hand with drum and steady and active hand to call out the supporters of the Union when dark clouds of strife rent the land in 1861. He was hoary headed then, but his vigor and patriotism was no whit behind its flow of youthful days.

Isaac N. Lough was born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, on February 27, 1851, being the son of Samuel M. and Delilah (Stolcup) Lough, mention of whom is made in another portion of this work. When five years old, Isaac came with the balance of the family to Grayson county, Texas, where the father farmed and raised stock. Nine years were spent there and during this time the father and one son, John, were conscripted in the Confederate army. The mother died in Texas and the father had married a second time. Our subject and his brother, Aaron, two years his senior, remained at home and cared for the family. Here Isaac learned to spin and weave, his stepmother being unable to do so. He kept the family in clothes and also made for his brother, father and uncle in the war. At the close of the war came the happy time of reunion of the family and they all moved to Barry county, Missouri. There Isaac was educated and at the age of twenty-nine, he was united in the holy bonds of matrimony with Anna, daughter of Uriah and Elizabeth (Ellmore) Humphreys, natives of Missouri. The mother's cousin was the noted preacher, Alfred Ellmore, of Indiana. Mrs. Lough was born in northern Missouri in 1862, and died March 7, 1889. She was an active and devout member of the Church of Christ and a beautiful singer of gospel songs. She died firm in the faith and surely went to the reward of the Christian. She has two brothers and two sisters: George, Isaac, Gertrude Marshall, and Eva. Subsequent to his marriage Mr. Lough moved to White river and farmed, doing well. In August, 1887, he came thence, on account of poor health, to Latah county and rented land there until 1896, when he came to his present place, making a filing two miles northeast from Gifford. The next April, 1897, he settled with his family. He had rented from one man in Latah county for eleven consecutive years without a line of writing. Mr. Lough has a fine farm, good barn and other improvements and is about to erect a beautiful residence. Mr. Lough has the following named brothers and sisters: John T., George W., Sallie Marshall, Lee, Alice Mason, Granville J., Bell Stevens, Amelia and David. All but the first two were offsprings of the stepmother. Mr. Lough is a member of the Church of Christ and has been for many years an active and conscientious worker in it, being now a deacon in the Gifford congregation. He votes for the man rather than the party and in school matters he is well known as one of its best supporters. He is one of the committee on the fine school building being erected in Gifford now and it is due to his efforts largely that it is being materialized now.

JAY W. STROUSE is at the present time one of the leading business men of Peck, being proprietor with Mr. Gaylord of the hardware establishment where they are doing a first class business and are well liked among their many patrons, whose number is daily increasing.

Jay W. Strouse was born in Ogle county, Illinois, on September 10, 1855, being the son of Peter and Rosina A. (Page) Strouse. The father was a carpenter, born in Pennsylvania in 1837 and died in 1897. He was a pioneer in northern Illinois and a soldier in Company E, Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, under General A. J. Smith, and did service in the battles of Blakely, Dalton, Island No. 10 and Mobile, being a faithful and brave soldier. The mother was born in Brattleborough, Vermont, in 1830 and lives in Wyoming. Our subject grew to young manhood in Illinois, serving with his father and gaining the education to be had from the public schools. When nineteen, he came with the family to Creston, Union county, Iowa, and then attended Drake University, at Des Moines. He remained at Creston working at his trade of carpentering which he had learned from his father and did well for fourteen years. It was 1886, that he came to Fall River county, South Dakota. He took a homestead, worked at his trade, connected with the Oelrichs Times for five years and for five years was its editor and was also justice of the peace. In 1897 he sold his possessions there and came west to the reservation, settling first at Leland. Later he removed to Beeman, operating a store and acting as postmaster for one year. Then he came to Peck, and in 1899 he went to work for the M. W. A. as district deputy head consul, organizing camps. Before the year was out he was operating a saw mill and in this business he is still engaged, having also taken up the hardware business as we mentioned above.

On November 19, 1888, while in Dakota, Mr. Strouse warried Miss Ella M., daughter of S. S. and Mary (McCallister) Pfautz, natives of Pennsylvania and Canada. The father's ancestors were French Huguenots. Mrs. Strouse was born in Iowa and has one brother and four sisters, John, Anna, Maggie, Lou, and Alice. Mr. Strouse has the following brothers and sisters: Arthur, Jacob, Amelia Robb, Minnie Bone, Effie Campbell and Dora Lumen. To our subject and his wife have been born the following named children: Vera, Byron. Mr. Strouse is a member of the M. W. A. and in political affiliation he is a Republican. He is especially active in this realm and is a well known figure of influence in the conventions. Mr. Strouse and his wife are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Strouse is a public spirited man of broad views and a good substantial citizen of wisdom and prestige.

THOMAS KIRBY. A more enterprising, energetic man, with ability commensurate therewith, than the subject of this sketch is hard to find in the state of Idaho. Mr. Kirby, while maintaining a reputation untarnished and unquestioned, has always been at the head in any line of enterprise that was for the general welfare and the upbuilding of his county and state.

A more detailed account will furnish interesting reading for the history of our county and therefore we append a life's review of Mr. Kirby. He was born in Canada, on January 23, 1847, being the son of William and Mary (Metcalf) Kirby, natives of England. The father was a farmer and a squire, born in 1833 and died in 1895. His wife was born in 1833, also, and died in 1897. Our subject remained at home in Canada, receiving a fine education which fortified him for the affairs of life until he was of age. He learned the tanner's art there. When his majority arrived, he came to the United States and settled at Ottawa, Kansas. Two years later, he shipped a car of furniture and drugs to Juliaetta and did business there for one year. Then he sold out and started the town of Kendrick. Mr. Kirby was eminently successful here and made twenty thousand dollars, but in the panic of 1893, he lost heavily. He then operated in grain there and built two of the largest warehouses in the town. In 1895, Mr. Kirby came to the Nez Perces reservation, settling at Peck. In 1898, he started the town and is now one of the large property owners of the site.

On November 8, 1874, Mr. Kirby married Miss May, daughter of Smieron and Agnes Hall, natives of England and Scotland, respectively. The nuptials occurred in Longton, Kansas. Mrs. Kirby was born in Canada in 1850 and has two brothers and three sisters. Mr. Kirby has one brother, John, in Canada. To Mr. and Mrs. Kirby there have been born three children, Rollie, a furniture dealer in Peck; Eller, deceased; Lulu Herres in Peck. Mr. Kirby deals in real estate, is the postmaster of the town, and does notary work. He is an active Republican and a potent factor in the field of politics. Since 1897, Mr. Kirby has been manager of the exhibit from Kendrick, and from Nez Perces county in 1899, 1900, for the interstate exposition at Spokane, and has won the silver cup twice above all competitors. One of the cups is worth one hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Kirby is especially talented in this line and is able to handle things as they should be. Recognizing this ability, he was appointed as one of the World's Fair commissioners from Nez Perces county, while he has been appointed by the Idaho state commissioners to superintend the exhibit at St. Louis, and in addition to this, the governor of Idaho has appointed Mr. Kirby to collect specimens from the state of Idaho to be exhibited at the Lewis Clark exposition in Portland in 1905. He has already a goodly showing and is prosecuting this work with vigor and intelligence. Mr. Kirby is full of the right kind of energy and all know that when he takes hold of a thing, it will go. He is held in high esteem by his fellow townsmen and is worthy of the respect and prestige which he generously enjoys. He is a man of integrity and very much credit is due him for the excellent labors he has done to bring this section of the country to the front.

DAVID S. WILLIAMS is one of the important factors in the industrial realm of Latah and Nez Perces counties, although at the present time he is located on a farm four miles west from Ahsahka, which is the family residence. He has been a man of energy and talent and many places have been built up by his labors and skill. In addition to farming, Mr. Williams is a skilled contractor and builder.

David S. Williams was born in Clearmont county, Ohio, on October 17, 1848, being the son of Alexander and Lydia A. (Smith) Williams, natives of Ohio. The father was born in 1818, settled as a pioneer in Adams county, Illinois in 1849, and died in 1898. The mother was born in 1825 and died in 1895. David labored with his father and attended school until twenty-two and then in 1871, he took a trip to the plains and spent seven months shooting buffalo. Returning to Illinois, he settled to farming for two years and then went to Cass county, Missouri and took up farming and raising mules. Three years later, he went to Labette county, Kansas, and two years after that he was in Arkansas. One year there and we find Mr. Williams in Chautauqua county, Kansas, where he took land, farmed and raised stock. Two years later he went to Indian Territory and leased land from the Cherokees and farmed. We next see Mr. Williams in Coffeyville, Kansas, where he contracted and did bridge building. In 1887, he came west to Pomeroy, Washington, and for one year he contracted building in that town. Next he came to Genesee and built many of the edifices there. Taking a homestead on Cedar creek, Nez Perces county, he commuted four years later and sold. He bought a ranch near Juliaetta and farmed for nine years. It was 1901, when he came to his present place and he has a first class place and good buildings.

On November 4, 1873, in Illinois, Mr. Williams married Miss Mary E., daughter of Cornelius and Jane (Byers) Humphrey, natives of Illinois and Tennessee. The father was a pioneer in Morgan county. Mrs. Williams was born in Brown county, Illinois, in 1855 and has one brother, John, in Colorado, and one sister, Jennie Thyre, at Bartlettsville, Indian Territory. Mr. Williams has the following named brothers and sisters: Amos and Stephan, who were in the Civil war, Harvey, Abigail, Rachel, Martha, and Laura. To our worthy subject and his estimable wife, there have been born six children, Martha D. Craig, Cornelia O'Keiffe, Anna, Allen A., Cora, and Nora. The family affiliate with the Baptist church. In Chautauqua county, Mr. Williams was school treasurer, being elected on the Democratic ticket. He has served on school boards for fifteen years and has done much for the cause of education.

GEORGE W. BASHOR is one of the leading business farmers on the reservation. He handles his whole affairs with a wisdom and execution that have made him especially successful, while his standing among his fellows is of the very best and his popularity wherever he is known makes him hosts of friends.

George W. Bashor was born in Washington county, West Tennessee, on September 6, 1856, being the son of Michael M. and Susan (Garst) Bashor. The parents were born in Rockingham county, Virginia. George remained with his parents until twenty-one, gaining a good education. When he was sixteen the family went to Colorado, and in Apishapa, Mr. Bashor made his first venture in purchasing a general merchandise establishment. Two years were spent there and during this time, July 18, 1878, being the date, Mr. Bashor married Miss Mary A., daughter of James K. and Mary A. (Whistler) Gwin, natives of Virginia. The father is deceased but the mother lives with her son, James F., three miles southwest from Summit. Mrs. Bashor has the following sisters and brothers: Jacob M., deputy assessor at Lewiston; Joseph A., in Walla Walla county farming; James F.; Phoebe I., widow of Robert G. Sipe, in Colorado; Emma, wife of William H. Whitney, in Boston, Massachusetts. Mr. Bashor's mother's brothers are William Garst, killed in the Civil war, John Garst, both of them in the Union army. Mr. Bashor's brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. To Mr. and Mrs. Bashor there have been born the following children: Lester W., Oscar E., Archie A., Horace, Ernest G., Charles, Clara E. Mr. Bashor is a member of the German Baptist church and his wife belongs to the Methodist denomination.

In the spring of 1883, Mr. Bashor and his family came to Garfield county, Washington, and there he preempted a claim near Pomeroy and for seven years he was numbered with the leading agriculturists of the section. In 1891 he came to Latah county, bought a quarter near Kendrick and tilled it until 1898. In that year he came to his present place. Miss Alma Camp had filed on it and before proving up, she married and her husband was holding a claim. Therefore Al Rockwell contested her right, but as Mr. Bashor held possession and had made the improvements, he contested the latter and the secretary of the interior gave him the decision. Mr. Bashor has a fine claim, is improving it in excellent shape and will make it a beautiful rural home as well as a good dividend producer. He does general farming and handles hogs, good graded cows and does dairying. Politically, Mr. Bashor is a Republican and has been a delegate to all the county and some of the state conventions.

CLARA J. THOMPSON. The ones who have the enterprise and wisdom to handle the resources of the fertile regions of the reservation country are the ones who deserve mention in the history that chronicles the annals of the country and surely then, the worthy lady mentioned above is entitled to this place.

Mrs. Clara J. Thompson was born in Lee county, Iowa, on February 9, 1860, and her parents were Enos and Mary A. (Marshall) Puckett. The father was born in Ohio, in 1834, and now lives in Lawrence, Kansas. He has labored long and faithfully in the gospel in the Quaker church. The mother of our subject was born in Indiana, in 1833, and died on January 31, 1900. When Mrs. Thompson was seven years old the family went to Adair county, Missouri, and three years later returned to Iowa. After three years of residence in Mills county a move was made to Plattsmouth, Nebraska, whence one year later, they returned to Iowa. Two years more in the Hawkeye state and they all went to Jewell county, Kansas.

On March 15, 1885, our subject was married to Robert Thompson and three sons were born to this union, Harry W., Benjamin R., and William H., all with their mother. One year after the marriage, Mrs. Thompson came to the vicinity of Guy, Washington, and remained there sixteen years. In the spring of 1902 she came to her present place, three and one-half miles northeast from Gifford. She bought a fine farm, and with her sons she is handling it in a very skillful manner. The estate is provided with seven springs of fine water, is improved with good buildings and lies in a commanding position. Annually this land produces excellent returns of grains, fruits and vegetables. Mrs. Thompson has taken a divorce from Mr. Thompson. When thirteen, Mrs. Thompson united with the Methodist church and now is a member of the United Brethren church. She takes an interest in the affairs of the county and votes the Prohibition ticket. She is preparing to send her boys to college as soon as their age will warrant, and in every respect Mrs. Thompson is a progressive and wise woman and is secure in the esteem of all who know her.

JASPER N. MOUNCE. An estate of eight hundred acres, well tilled, fenced and cared for, embellished with a first class orchard, an imposing ten-room house of modern architectural design, commodious barn and all out buildings needed on such an estate,—such is the attractive and valuable home place of the subject of this sketch. It is situated sixteen miles southeast from Lewiston and is one of the most valuable places in the county. On September 30, 1879, Mr. Mounce came to Nez Perces county and took a portion of this place as homestead and preemption, paying the former settler well for this right. Thus he is one of the old pioneers. He came with four hundred and fifty dollars and the first winter spent it all through sickness. Since that time he has labored steadily and wisely here and the grand showing he has made demonstrates his ability and skill.

It will be pleasant to note the details of the domestic life of our subject. We see that he was born in Linn county, Iowa, on June 12, 1855, being the son of Joseph W. and Christiana (Shoe) Mounce. The father was a farmer, born in Ohio, in 1818 and died in 1864. His grandmother lived to be over eighty but his grandfather died aged sixty, they both being early pioneers to Iowa. The mother of our subject was born in Germany, in 1827, came to America when five years of age and died in 1874. Jasper N. started out in life for himself when thirteen. He worked for an uncle for two years and when sixteen went to Utah. He freighted ore, logged and worked in a saw mill, drove cattle, and then mined in the Hidden Treasure. Two years in this latter place and then he went to Nevada, returning to the same mine and later he went to Iowa. Two years later he came to Nez Perces county, as mentioned above, and the unbounded success that he has achieved here stamps him as a capable and wise man.

In Linn county, Iowa, May 22, 1878, Mr. Mounce married Emma, daughter of John W. and Elizabeth S. (Newman) McLeod. The father was a farmer, born in North Carolina, on February 24, 1829, and died in 1883. The mother was born in Kentucky, on March 18, 1835, and died in 1883. Mrs. Mounce was born in Linn county, Iowa, on September 13, 1860, and has the following brothers and sisters, Nancy J., David A., deceased, William T., Amanda E., deceased, James N., Micha J., and Eunice N. Among her ancestors was Norman McLeod of Scotland, a minister, whose sermons were so favored by the Queen of England. On her mother's side of the house, a descendant of Thomas Benton, the state senator and father of Jessie Fremont Benton, the noted writer. Mr. Mounce was one of the following named children, Malan D., killed in the Civil war at Springfield, Missouri, when seventeen; Francis M., Artensa J., Margaret C., Arthalinda, deceased, Christopher C., deceased, Adusta, deceased, Nancy M., Vesta A., Americus V., Goldsbery, and Joseph W. To Mr. and Mrs. Mounce, there have been born the following named children, Earl, Nyda, Owen, mention of whom is made farther on in this article; Wayne, attending State Normal school; Mabel, who has excelled in music; Blanche, at home. Mr. Mounce is a member of the Masonic fraternity. He is an active Democrat and a potent influence in political matters, but he has never accepted preferment for himself. Mr. and Mrs. Mounce each had uncles in the Civil war.

We wish to mention in this connection the remarkable career of the son Owen. He has achieved a success at the age of eighteen that few have gained even after a life long effort. Last year he gained fifteen thousand dollars for his services in riding race horses. He stands at the head in this line. He has even surpassed Todd Sloane, and there is but one rider in the world who can in any way claim to be in the lead. Owen rode for August Belmont last year and the California Jockey Club presented him with a beautiful and costly whip. He won last year more stakes than all eastern riders and all other American boys that ride in England. He won in actual count, one hundred and thirty-one races in the winter of 1900 and 1901. At this present writing, he is visiting at home and he has earned his success in meritorious and hard labor. Nez Perces county is to be congratulated upon having this successful young man in her precincts.

Our subject has built a ten-room house in Lewiston and will move his family there, for the benefit of schools.

JOHN M. NELSON. A man in the vanguard of progress in Nez Perces county, a skillful and enterprising agriculturist, and withal a man of sound principles and good capabilities, it is with pleasure that we accord to John M. Nelson representation in the volume of his county's history. He was born in Adams county, Illinois, near Quincy, on May 28, 1867, being the son of James R. and Mary C. (Ruddell) Nelson, both born near Quincy, also, the father in 1842, his parents being dead, and the mother's parents are dead also. They were pioneers of the section of Illinois adjacent to Quincy. The parents of our subject removed from Adams county to Marion county, Iowa, when he was seven years of age. Two years later they removed to the vincinity of Walla Walla, going by way of San Francisco and consuming twenty-one days on the trip. The father took a homestead and farmed there for four years and then went to Tammany hollow, settled on a homestead and there resides now. Until he arrived at the age of majority, John M. labored with his father when he started in the world for himself. He farmed in this county two years and then went to Lincoln county, Washington, and farmed for seven years. During this time he spent one year prospecting in British Columbia. Then he returned to Nez Perces county and prospected in Thunder Mountain district, with the gratifying result that of locating with others the properties that made the camp famous. At the close of a year he returned to the farm where he now lives, ten miles southeast from Lewiston and to this he has given his attention, also handling a threshing machine and two headers. He is very enterprising and is a leader in his section. He has a half section of land all under cultivation and has enough crops in addition to make fourteen hundred acres all told; he owns nearly five hundred head of cattle.

On August 5, 1899, Mr. Nelson married Clara M. (Flickinger) Robertson, daughter of George W. and Sarah A. (Kuntz) Flickinger, natives of Pennsylvania, born in 1830 and 1832, respectively. Mrs. Nelson is a native of Illinois, born February 25, 1868, and has the following named brothers and sisters, Flora E. Morey, Susanna Webb, Amos E., and Alice Noel. Mr. Nelson has brothers and sisters named as follows, Commodore, Sarah Whitcomb, Frank, Horace, Riley, George, Martha McCoy, Joseph, and Ernest. Mr. Nelson is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Lewiston. He is a Democrat and active in political matters. Mrs. Nelson is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Nelson had three uncles, John, Dee, and George Ruddle, who fought in the Civil war. Mrs. Nelson's father was a soldier in the same war and marched with Sherman to the sea. He died in 1892 but his widow still lives in Kansas.

FRED DIETERLE. The honest industry and merit of the subject of this article have given him an unquestioned standing of influence and esteem among the people of Peck and vicinity. Mr. Dieterle owns and operates a first-class blacksmith shop in Peck and is one of the substantial and worthy citizens who have manifested enterprise and energy in the upbuilding of that progressive town.

Like so many of the most industrious and thrifty people of this country, our subject was born in Germany, on April 9, 1862. The father died in 1864. The mother was born in 1829 and died in 1897. Fred left home at the age of twelve, having completed his education in the six years previous to that time, and he went to work for the neighboring farmers. At fifteen he began his apprenticeship in the wagon making trade. Three full years were served and at eighteen he determined to seek other and newer fields and accordingly, in 1880, he came to America. We find him next in Lafayette, Indiana, and then two years were spent in Brookston, that state, mastering the intricacies of the blacksmith's art. In 1882 he removed to Iowa and five years were spent in traveling about and viewing the country. Then he settled in Iowa county and wrought until 1890. Again he went to Brookston, Indiana, and there handled implements extensively until 1897. At this time a move was made to Buyrus, Kansas, and in 1898 Mr. Dieterle came west and operated a shop for two years. Then he took land near Peck and opened a shop in that town. His family occupy the homestead and he is now, in partnership with J. F. Phar, conducting a first-class blacksmith and wagon shop.

In 1886, in Iowa, Mr. Dieterle married Miss I. C., daughter of Isaac and Rebecca (Hostler) Merchant, natives of Ohio. Mr. Merchant was a school teacher. Mrs. Dieterle was born in Ohio, in 1868. She has five brothers, Clem, Robert, Isaac, Luther, and Frank. Mr. Dieterle has the following brothers and sisters, Bernhard, Chris, Andrew, Godford, Anna, and George. To Mr. and Mrs. Dieterle there have been born the following named children, Eva, Irene, Glen, Almon, Pierre, Lorries. Mr. Dieterle is a member of the M. W. A. in Peck. He is also a director of the schools and labors incessantly for good schools. In addition to his business, which is prosperous, Mr. Dieterle has a fine farm, supplied with good buildings, orchard, and so forth, and this is the family home.

ORIN EVANS is one of the substantial men of the vicinity of Gifford and has a fine farm adjoining town, where he raises all the cereals and is making a good success of corn. He is a man of excellent standing in the community, has always manifested integrity and uprightness and is one of the reliable, intelligent, enterprising and up to date men of the county.

Orin Evans was born in Jefferson county, New York, on October 20, 1844, being the son of Albert and Maryette (Carnegie) Evans, natives of New Hampshire. Our subject grew up on a farm and was eduated in public and private schools and in the beginning of the Civil war he enlisted in Company F, Ninety-fourth New York Volunteers, Second Corps, under Pope. The date of this was January, 1862. On August 29 he was wounded at the second Bull Run, by a gunshot in the thigh. Forty-eight hours he lay on the field, and seven days on the road before he got to the hospital in Washington. One year was spent in languishing in this hospital and then he returned home. He had previously been in the battle of Cedar Mountain and in the Shenandoah valley conflict. His brother Gilman enlisted in the same corps, Thirty-fifth New York, Company I, and two years later he enlisted in Company L, Eighteenth Cavalry. Mr. Evans has three brothers, Gilman, James and Warren, all in Jasper county, Missouri. He also has one sister, who lives in Iowa.

In Jefferson county, New York, Mr. Evans married Miss Fanny, daughter of Lewis and Delia (Lyman) Barrett, and one child was born to them, Fred B., now a practicing physician in Pineville, Missouri. Mr. Evans farmed in New York until 1882 and then came to Missouri on account of failing health of his wife. But March 17, 1886, she was called away, in Jasper county, Missouri. In December, 1887, Mr. Evans married a second time, the nuptials occurred at Golden City, Missouri, and Miss Cardie Cleveland, became his wife. Her father, Larkin, is mentioned fully in this work. To this marriage three children have been born, Bessie, Alma Bell, deceased, and Orin, the latter being aged six. In 1892 Mr. Evans came to Kendrick and there started a small orchard adjoining Kendrick. He still owns the same and when the reservation opened he came, in 1896, and filed a contest on the place he now occupies. It being decided in his favor, gave him a fine farm and he devotes his attention to its improvement and culture. Mr. Evans is a Republican and went one thousand miles to vote for Abraham Lincoln in time of war. He is not especially active but takes an intelligent part in political matters. Mr. Evans is one of the men whose influence and life have been for progress and upbuilding and he is the recipient of great respect and full confidence from his fellows.

WILLIAM O. TUMELSON. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant consideration to this young and substantial citizen of Nez Perces county, who has displayed such commendable zeal in bringing about improvement and progress in the county. His present home is on the ranch which he took as wild land from the government, five miles west from Peck.

William O. Tumelson was born in Cowley county, Kansas, on December 12, 1875, being a son of William C. and Sarah E. Tumelson, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. William lived at home until he was nineteen, gained a good education and learned the art of the engineer. When nineteen he came to Latah county and wrought in handling a hydraulic in the mines at Cold Hill. He did well there for three years and in 1897 came to the reservation and located his present ranch. In addition to handling this ranch, he has operated a steam thresher for a portion of each year. These years, with the time in the east, make a total of ten years which he has devoted to this important industry and he is very skillful in it.

On February 26, 1899, Mr. Tumelson married Miss Etta M., daughter of John T. and Rosa (Duston) Springston. The nuptials occurred in this county. Mrs. Tumelson was born in Garnett, Kansas, on April 18, 1881. Two children have been born to this happy union, Gladys and Edna. Mr. Tumelson is a Republican and takes a progressive part in the advancement of educational facilities. He has a good farm, handles it skillfully and is gaining a fine bunch of stock, while his land is adapted to raising all kinds of cereals, including corn. He stands well in the community and is a man of reliability.

DAVID BLACK. It is gratifying to have the pleasure to grant space to an esteemed gentleman, such as we now speak of, in the volume of the annals of Nez Perces county, since he is a man of ability and influence and has done a commendable part in the substantial upbuilding of the newly opened reservation.

David Black was born in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, on October 3, 1849, being a son of James and Mary (Carter) Black. The father was born in 1808, being one of a family of five children, Jeremiah, William, Mary and Elizabeth, besides James. Jeremiah was for years supreme judge in Pennsylvania. William was a large farmer in Michigan. James passed away when he was eighty-two. Our subject's father was educated for a lawyer and a Catholic priest. Not liking the priesthood, he then turned his attention to medicine and graduated from the leading colleges of his time. His trend was rather for quiet retirement and therefore he did not press for personal recognition, but he was a man of deep erudition, with a masterful mind, well cultured and refined and he could have easily won professional distinction, had his taste been in that direction. He compiled, but did not publish, two large volumes on the forecasts of the weather, which covered a period of sixty years and was a work of great labor and worth. Our subject's paternal grandfather, John Black, ran away from Ireland when fifteen and came to America. He married a Scotch girl in Pennsylvania and settled down to shoemaking .

Our subject grew up on a farm and was well educated both by the constant training of his father as well as in the schools of the day. He remained with his parents until he was thirty-three and then went to Missouri. His marriage occurred on September 10, 1883, Miss Eliza M., daughter of Larkin and Minerva (Parker) Cleveland, mention of whom is specially made in this volume, then becoming his wife. The following children have been born to them: Corda G., Robert, William A., George O., Ralph E. and Orval C. Mrs. Black was born on July 4, 1862, in Monroe county, Tennessee. Mr. Black has one brother, William, living in Missouri, and one brother, who died in infancy. His sister, Mary Ann, who was born March 7, 1855, died March 20, 1888, in Barton county, Missouri, was the wife of Samuel Heverling, a prominent farmer. He was a member of the United Brethren church and a good man. Mr. Black's brother, William, enlisted in Company I, Illinois Light Artillery, and was transferred to Battery F, Heavy Artillery, of the Fifteenth Corps. He served the entire war without a scratch, was in many battles and saw much hardship.

Mr. Black came to Colfax, Washington, in 1891 and for four years he tilled the soil there and then came, in 1895, to the reservation and the day following his arrival he filed on his present place. Politically he is a Populist, but is not active at the present time. His estimable wife is a member of the Baptist church and they are among the most substantial and worthy people of the community. Mr. Black is a generous man, well liked by his neighbors and is always ready to give the helping hand to one in need, while his integrity, uprightness and sound principles are manifest to all.

WILLIAM H. KING. In addition to being one of the most extensive farmers of the reservation, Mr. King is also a successful operator of a threshing machine outfit which he owns. In conjunction with his cousin, William A. King, he has invented and patented a threshing machine which experts pronounce a wonderful improvement on the present methods, and doubtless in proper time, Mr. King will put out his machine. He has a fine farm two miles east from Gifford and among other improvements he has a ten-acre orchard which will rank well with anything on the reservation. He has always handled about five hundred acres each year to grain, but this year he has rented his land and pays all of his attention to his threshing machine.

William H. King was born in Vernon county, Wisconsin, on October 22, 1868, being the son of James M. and Adelia (Joseph) King, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively, the former being born in Oswego and the latter in Zanesville. The father is of French extraction and the mother of American and German. The father, with his older brothers, fought in the Civil war with the Wisconsin volunteers. He was twice discharged on account of disability. The parents live in Blaine, Washington, as also two brothers, Thomas E. and James H. Our subject grew up on a farm and was educated in the public schools. The family removed to South Dakota, where the father took a preemption and later they all went to Josephine county, Oregon, living in Grants Pass. There William completed his education in the college of that city. In 1889 they all went to Blaine, Washington, and for three years our subject worked in the saw mills of the place. Then he embarked in the hotel business and then came to the reservation. He secured a good piece of land and his mother also took a claim as head of the family on account of the blindness of her husband. It was contested, but after three decisions, Mrs. King will now prove up. The father, after being totally blind for one year, has been relieved by an operation so he can see a little with one eye. Our subject's brother also took a claim, but as his little girl burned to death, and his house also burned up, he determined to leave the reservation and so went back to Blaine.

On July 2, 1894, Mr. King married Miss Anna, daughter of Clawson F. and E. M. Dahl, natives of Germany. The father died in 1900. To Mr. and Mrs. King there have been born three children, Mabel D., Elmer J. and Violet. Mr. King is a member of the W. of W., Lookout Camp, No. 607. His estate is a valuable one as he has refused four thousand five hundred dollars for it.

BEN D. CLEVELAND. About one-half mile south from Gifford one comes to the beautiful estate of Mr. Cleveland. He has one of the finest quarter sections in this part of the county and his industry and skill have improved it in a very creditable manner. In addition to other improvements and buildings and so forth, Mr. Cleveland has erected a palatial residence of nine rooms. It is of Queen Ann architectural designs, all finished in costly oils and arranged in excellent manner for comfort and convenience. This residence is doubtless the finest one in this section of Nez Perces county and Mr. Cleveland is to be heartily commended for his enterprise, taste and wisdom.

Ben D. Cleveland was born in Monroe county,

Tennessee, on December 14, 1867, being the son of David H. and Elizabeth E. (Johnson) Cleveland. He was reared on a farm and gained a fine education from the adjacent schools and also the high school. At twenty-one he started for himself, going to California, where he spent two years. Later he returned home for eighteen months. Then came a trip to Whitman county, Washington, and for five years he was numbered with the thrifty farmers near Colfax. He then went to Kendrick and wrought in a warehouse until the reservation opened and then in the fall of 1895 he came and filed on his present land, being one of the persons whose energy and wisdom were rewarded by securing a fine tract of land from Uncle Sam's domains. Mr. Cleveland devotes his attention to general farming, producing large quantities of wheat, barley and flax. He handles some stock and is expecting to engage more extensively in this profitable industry.

On November 2, 1897, Mr. Cleveland married Miss Maud M., daughter of S. C. and Mary (Dickinson) Douglas, natives of West Virginia, their ancestors also being residents there for some time back. Mrs. Cleveland was born in Barbour county, on October 30, 1866. She came west in 1895 to reside with relatives near Genesee. Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland are members of the Methodist church and are highly respected people. Mr. Cleveland is a Democrat but is not partisan nor does he desire political advancement.

ALBERT E. TUMELSON. A wide awake, energetic, and well liked young man, whose faithful labors in the improvement of his farm, four and one-half miles southeast from Lenore, are manifest in his valuable place, and it is but due that an epitome of the career of this successful citizen be incorporated in the history of Nez Perces county.

Albert E. Tumelson was born in Jasper county, Illinois, on January 29, 1869, being the son of William C. and Sarah E. (Grove) Tumelson, natives of Illinois. They are now retired and living in Cedarvale, Kansas. The father served in the Civil war and was one of the unfortunates who languished in Andersonville, that den of suffering. When Albert was two years old the family went to Chautauqua county, Kansas, and later they moved across the line into Cowley county. Our subject grew to the age of sixteen with his parents and then started in the battle of life for himself. He gained his education in the common schools and worked at various places on the farms and in the coal mines until nineteen and then came to the west. For five or six years he toiled in the agricultural region of Whitman county adjacent to Palouse. Then he bought a claim in Garden Gulch in Latah county and when the water was plenty in the spring he used the hydraulic and did well. In the summer time he would harvest and in the fall worked with the threshers. One winter was spent in trapping and hunting at the forks of the Saint Marys river in Idaho, and in this undertaking, as in his other labors, Mr. Tumelson was blessed with success. In 1897 he came to the reservation and took his present place and this has been the scene of his labors since. Having a little capital, he at once bought a team and wagon, fenced the land and built a good house. He has now a fine bunch of stock, cattle, hogs and horses, and is doing a general farming business. He has manifested great wisdom and discrimination in his business affairs and this coupled with his native force and energy have given him abundant success. Mr. Tumelson has also operated a binder and a thresher much of the time. He is a man of excellent standing and is the recipient of the good will of all the neighbors and in fact of all who know him. On February 18, 1903, Mr. Tumelson was married to Miss Telva Ross, daughter of Mr. Dick Ross, of Kansas. Mr. Tumelson has given of his time for the work of clerk of the school board and he is heartily in sympathy with all advancement in education and betterment of the people in all lines.

JAMES S. JACKS. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to this gentleman a representation in the volume of his county's history, since he is one of the men whose labors have transformed the Nez Perces reservation from wilds to fine farms, and also because he is a man of intrinsic worth and intelligence and is the recipient of the confidence and esteem of his fellows.

James S. Jacks was born on October 9, 1868, near Winterset, Madison county, Iowa, being the son of Benjamin R. and Mary M. (Rhodes) Jacks, mention of whom is made in another portion of this work. James received a good education from the common schools and remained with his parents until 1889. Then he went to eastern Oregon, working at printing for a year at Athena, having learned this trade in Des Moines, Iowa. Later he worked at this trade in Tacoma and in 1891 he came to the Potlatch country. When the reservation opened up he at once filed on his present place, one and one-half miles east from Gifford. The date of his filing was November 19, 1895, the next day after the reservation opened. In addition to doing a general farming business, Mr. Jacks is devoting considerable attention to fruit raising. He has now over five thousand trees, many bearing, making an area of about sixty-five acres to orchard. The varieties that Mr. Jacks finds best for this section are the Gano, Jonathan and the Black Ben Davis, all hardy winter apples. Mrs. Eva J. Miller, a widowed sister, keeps house for Mr. Jacks, he being one of the happy bachelors of the community.

On June 25, 1898, our subject enlisted in Company C, Independent Battalion of Washington, enrolling at Pomeroy, being under Captain Harry St. George. He was mustered out on October 26, 1898. The following winter was spent at home and on August 14, 1899, he enlisted again, this time at Lewiston. He was sent to Vancouver barracks and attached to Company I, Thirty-fifth United States Volunteers, commanded by Colonel Plummer, who got his commission a little later. The captain of the company was C. D. Roberts. Mr.

Jacks was in service from August 14, 1899, to March 15, 1901. He fought in the battle of Balobad Hill and later served as a non-commissioned officer in Company A on detached service in scouting. His regiment was stationed in the province of Bulacan. Mr. Jacks did faithful and efficient service and since the war he has been paying especial attention to the development of his farm and is one of the highly esteemed and intelligent citizens of the county.

AMOS MAEL is deserving of mention in the history of Nez Perces county since he is a man of good standing, is possessed of sound principles and integrity, has labored for the improvement and substantial progress of the county and is now making a fine fruit and stock ranch, three miles southeast from Lenore, where his home is.

Amos Mael was born in Marion county, Oregon, on March 7, 1867, and his parents are Robert and Mary E. (House) Mael. The father was born in Iowa, in 1826, and died in 1889. He was a pioneer in Oregon and crossed the plains with ox teams. The mother of our subject was born in Missouri, in 1842, and is now living in Washington. Her parents were also pioneers in Oregon and she crossed the plains in the same train with her husband and they were married in Oregon. Amos grew up on a farm and received his education from the district schools. The family removed from Oregon to Washington, immediately north from The Dalles, when he was a child and he remained on the Washington farm until he was twenty-three. Then farmed for himself for five years and in 1899 came to the reservation and took a place, which he sold later and bought his present farm of one hundred and twenty acres. He has a fine barn and is improving the place rapidly.

On August 3, 1892, Mr. Mael married Miss May, daughter of John and Emma (Bowman) Buford. Mrs. Mael was born in Oregon, in 1872, and has two brothers and two sisters. Mr. Mael has the following brothers and sisters, Frances E., Rachel Darland, Ella Adams, Daisy Dykes, Adam, Andy, Martin, John, Harvey. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mael, Earl, Lee, Lloyd and Len. Mr. Mael and his estimable wife are members of the United Brethren church. Mr. Mael is a Republican and always is allied on the side of order and good government.

JESSE E. TUMELSON. This intelligent and bright young agriculturist of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county is a man whose labors have been bestowed with sagacity and enterprise, and he has as a result a goodly showing in the fine farm of one quarter section where he resides, five miles west from Peck, and also in the other property that he holds.

Jesse E. Tumelson was born in Cowley county, Kansas, on September 14, 1873, being the son of William C. and Sarah E. (Groves) Tumelson, natives of Illinois and born in 1846 and 1845, respectively. They now live in Cedarvale, Kansas. The father was a soldier in the Civil war for three years and languished in Andersonville for three months. Jesse grew to young manhood in Kansas and when seventeen joined his brother, Albert, who was in Latah county, Idaho. They mined with hydraulic in Garden Gulch and did well. In 1896 they came to Nez Perces county and settled on their present places. Our subject has since that time devoted his energies assiduously to the improvement of his farm and has a fine property.

On December 23, 1898, Mr. Tumelson married Miss Cora E., daughter of Thomas and Rosa (Duston) Springston, the wedding occurring at Gifford. Mr. Springston is a farmer and thresher in this county and was born in 1857. His father, Samuel A., was a soldier in the Civil war. The mother of Mrs. Tumelson was born in 1858. Mrs. Tumelson has the following brothers and sisters, Grace Henderson, Harry, Maggie Henderson, Etta Tumelson, Lota Allen, Howard, Katie, Floyd, Loren. Mrs. Tumelson was born near Garnett, Kansas, on February 12, 1882. Mr. Tumelson has the following brothers and sisters, Lydia A. Strode, Albert E., Emma B., deceased, Bessie Witt, William O., Lucy Wilson, Lura. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Tumelson, Bessie R., Lena M. Mr. Tumelson is a staunch Republican and an advocate of excellent schools. His farm supports a goodly number of hogs, cattle and horses, and he gathers annually good harvests of grain and fruits from the entire place.

ALBERT D. WHALEY is one of the industrious and enterprising men whose hands have brought the excellent products from the reservation lands that make Nez Perces county one of the best in the state of Idaho. He resides on a farm immediately north from Summit and gives his attention largely to truck farming and raising hogs and poultry. Mr. Whaley is making a fine success of his labors and has this year one of the finest onion patches of one acre to be found in the entire county.

Albert D. Whaley was born in Lake county, Illinois, on March 22, 1852, being the son of David and Prudence (Corser) Whaley, natives of New York and Vermont, respectively. The mother went to Illinois in an early day with her parents in a wagon. Mr. Whaley had two brothers, Charles A. and Cyrus C., in the Civil war, both being privates in the Twelfth Michigan. Charles lives in Oakesdale, Washington, and Cyrus lives in Kansas. His other brothers are Marcus, in Kansas, and Marlow, in Oakesdale.

Mr. Whaley married Miss Irene, daughter of John W. and Elizabeth (Smith) Dinwiddie. After the war the parents of our subject came to Douglas county, Kansas, and there and in his native place, Albert was reared on a farm and educated in the common schools. When he was twenty-one he went for himself and worked on the railroad and followed other occupations, also purchasing eighty acres which he rented. In 1888 he came from Kansas to Oakesdale, Washington, and farmed for three years and then went to Chehalis, where he was engaged in timber work for seven years. In 1898 Mr. Whaley filed on his present place and since that time he has devoted his energies to its improvement and development. He has a comfortable home and is one of the thrifty residents of the community. To Mr. and Mrs. Whaley there have been born the following children, Charles J., Maude L., Lester Z., Lizzie I., Floyd W. Mr. Whaley is a Prohibitionist in politics, while he and his wife are soldiers in the Salvation Army, holding their enrollment at Chehalis. While there, Mrs. Whaley was sergeant major, having charge of the children's branch. Our subject and his wife are highly respected and are valuable acquisitions to the community.

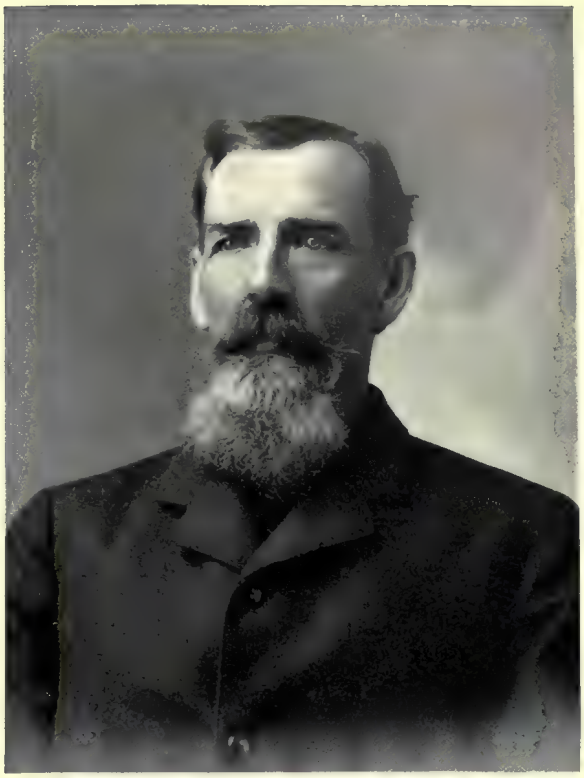
HENRY F. BLACK. In February, 1864, Mr. Black enlisted in Battery D, Second Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and did service in the army of the Potomac. He was in the battles of Rapidan, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor and Petersburgh, being wounded in the last conflict on July 30, by a piece of shell. The wound was in his left arm and that member is crippled to this day. He languished in the hospital for six months and then returned to his regiment and did duty until the end of the war but was not discharged until February, 1866. He participated in some of the fiercest conflicts that were ever fought between contending armies and his was a brilliant military record.

Noting details, we see that Henry F. Black was born in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, on October 31, 1847, being the son of James and Margaret C. (Norton) Black, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was a miller and they soon removed to Sullivan county after the birth of Henry. There the mother died when he was six and the father died in 1862. After the war Mr. Black returned to Hancock county, Illinois, and two years later went to Hannibal, Missouri. In 1870 he came to Silver City, Utah, where he mined and prospected. There he was married on April 4, 1873, to Melvina, daughter of Madison D. and Clarinda (Green) Hambelton. Mrs. Black was born in Carson Valley, Nevada, on December 4, 1856. Mr. Black was constable and also deputy sheriff in Utah. In 1881 he mined at Wood river, Idaho, and 1890 found him in Pullman and 1893 he leased Indian land, where he remained until the reservation was opened. Then he took his present place, about two miles southwest from Mohler, which he has improved in an excellent manner. He has a fine windmill, tank and many other excellent results of his skill and industry. Mr. and Mrs. Black are both members of the Christian church. They have one son, James F., who married Miss Pearl Departy, came and took a quarter section adjoining his father's farm on the east. Mr. and Mrs. Black are exemplary people and stand high in the esteem and good will of the members of the community. His uncle, H. F. Black, a banker of Ness City, Kansas, died recently.



HON. THOMAS O. HANLON. A prominent man in the political questions of his state, a potent factor in the upbuilding of Nez Perces county, a cultured gentleman, a patriotic citizen, a loyal friend and an esteemed member of society, the subject of this sketch is properly entitled to representation in the history of his county.

Thomas O. Hanlon was born in Dublin, Ireland, on July 18, 1846, being the son of Francis and Ann (Bradley) Hanlon, natives of Dublin, Ireland. The father was thirty years warden of the Mount Joy prison in Dublin, but is now deceased. Our subject received his education in a private academy in Dublin and when fifteen came to the United States. Landing in Brooklyn, he at once set to finish the trade of carpenter, which he commenced in his native land. He continued in this until the breaking out of the Civil war, and then enlisted promptly in the Thirteenth New York Cavalry, in May, 1863. He joined his command at Fallschurch, Virginia, and then transferred to Battery E, First Artillery. Frank E. French was first lieutenant. Our subject acted as artificer for three years. He participated in the battles of Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania and Cold Harbor, also in the Shenandoah campaign, including the battles at Frederick City, Fisher's Hill, Opack creek and then the battery operated with an independant brigade until the close of the war. At one time his command was ordered to Camp Barry to recruit. He was wounded at Fairfax Court House, by dirt thrown from a bursting shell, which cost him the sight of his left eye. Following the war, Mr. Hanlon returned to Brooklyn and followed his trade and contracting until 1867, when he went to Sioux City, Iowa, thence to Manistee, Michigan, and there spent seven years contracting. Also he served as county clerk one term and county superintendent of schools one term. Next we see him in in Medford, Wisconsin, and four years he contracted there. In 1889 he went to Tacoma, and in that city and its suburbs he spent seven years. He was town clerk at Orting six years and built the Soldiers' Home there. In 1895 Mr. Hanlon came to the reservation and secured a claim, the date of filing being November 18, 1895. In the spring of 1901 Mr. Hanlon platted ten acres in the northeast corner of section twenty-one, of township thirty-four, in range one, and in honor of President Mohler, of the O. R. & N., who has endeavored to bring railroad facilities to this county, Mr. Hanlon named the town Mohler. He has several buildings, as general merchandise, drug store, dwellings, and so forth. He himself is occupied in operating a furniture store, is postmaster, notary public, justice of the peace and insurance agent. Mr. Hanlon is a man of good business qualifications and his efforts are praiseworthy in promoting the town.

In the fifth session of the Idaho legislature Mr.

MRS. HENRY F. BLACK.

HENRY F. BLACK.

THOMAS O. HANLON.

HON. S. G. ISAMAN.

Hanlon was a potent factor, having been elected by the Republicans of this district, as he is a stanch representative of Republicanism, and in this house he was a strong candidate for speaker, but the fusionists overcame his party. The act granting attorney's fees in suits for debt, the free home bill and the amendment to the school laws were all bills introduced by our subject. He did efficient service and won many plaudits. Mr. Hanlon is a member of the G. A. R., and has always been active in that capacity, having been deputy inspector for Washington and Alaska, as well as aide-de-camp on the staff of the commander in chief of the G. A. R., having rank of colonel.

On September 4, 1876, Mr. Hanlon married Miss Ella, daughter of George and Sallie (Hoogaboom) Bolles, natives of New York. Two children have been born to them, Cora E., wife of Wallace Masterson, a farmer on the reservation; Nellie, single. Mrs. Hanlon has one brother, Nelson, and one sister, Mrs. R. Smith. Mr. Bolles enlisted in the Seventh Wisconsin in 1861, and served four years, being in the battle of Gettysburg. Mr. Hanlon is a member of the Echo Lodge, No. 60, of the I. O. O. F., at Mohler. He has held a membership in this order since 1863, is past noble grand and also chief patriarch of the encampment.

HON. SAMUEL G. ISAMAN. This gentleman is one of the successful men of Nez Perces county. He is an influential factor in the political world and has done commendable work in this line. In 1882 he was elected city treasurer of Lewiston, and did creditable service for three years. In 1884 the people chose him for the territorial senate and there he succeeded in connection with Mr. Moody in getting a memorial to congress for the annexation of the Panhandle in Idaho to Washington. In 1888 Mr. Isaman was chosen county superintendent of public instruction. In 1890 he was chosen to this office and also that of probate judge. At the expiration of these terms, he retired from politics for a time, but his fellows would have him brought forward and accordingly in 1898 he was called to the important office of county commissioner. He has served several times as chairman of the central committee. In all this long and responsible service, Mr. Isaman has so conducted himself that he has ever increased in popularity with the people and is held in high esteem.

Reverting to the early life of our subject, we note that he was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, on August 26, 1849, being the son of Samuel and Mary (Grim) Isaman. The father was a shoemaker, born in Pennsylvania in 1812 and is still living in Iowa, aged ninety. The mother was born in Greensburg, Pennsylvania, in 1814 and died in 1895. The family came to Ohio in 1853 and thence they went to Iowa, bought land and settled in Henry county. The father worked at this trade and the boys handled the farm. Our subject went to the common schools and when the war broke out, the two older boys enlisted to save the nation while Samuel and a brother fourteen years old were left to handle the farm and consequently they had hard work. At the age of nineteen, our subject went to work for himself and earned money to atted a private school in Mount Pleasant; he then took a course at the Agricultural College at Ames. When twenty-two he met with an accident that crippled him. While attending school, Mr. Isaman taught and soon he became a first-class educator, and in this line he has had brilliant success. He holds a life certificate from the state of California. When twenty-four, he went to Butte county and taught school there and in other portions of the state for five years. Then he came to Rosalia, Washington, and took land. In 1880 he came to Lewiston and in 1889 he purchased his present place, three and one-half miles east from Lewiston. He has thirty acres of fruit and his farm is one of the many fine ones of the county.

In the spring of 1887, in Oregon, Mr. Isaman married Miss Emma Reynolds, daughter of A. V. and Harriett Reynolds, natives of New York. The father was a contractor and builder. Mrs. Isaman was born in the vicinity of Fort Wayne, Indiana, in 1855, and had a good high school education. She has seven brothers, R. P., Lemuel, Justus, George, Almos, Charles and Robert. Mr. Isaman has the following named brothers and sisters: Benjamin, Franklin, Lafayette, David, Kate Deeds, Leah Beach and Vina Ferree. Mr. and Mrs. Isaman have been blessed by the advent of the following children: George, Harry F., Kate, Roy and Charlie, all at home. Mr. Isaman is a member of the I. O. O. F., and the A. O. U. W. His wife is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Isaman had two great uncles killed in the Revolution. It is with pleasure that we are enabled to record that Mr. Isaman has always been an advocate of good schools and has done a great deal to promote such here.

WILLIAM WHITE. A man of energy and excellent practical ability, who demonstrated his patriotism by serving in the Civil war from March, 1865, to November 20, 1865, in the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, Company E, under General George H. Thomas, who has wrought in a worthy manner since and is now one of the substantial men of the reservation,—to such an one we with pleasure grant space in the history of the county.

William White was born in Jefferson county, New York, on December 1, 1845, being the son of William and Elvira (Freeman) White, natives of New York. Hiram Freeman, great-grandfather of our subject, enlisted in the Revolutionary war at the age of seventeen. William came with his parents to Jo Daviess county, Illinois, where he grew up and received his education. During the war period of his life he was in several skirmishes and had bullets graze his face. He was in Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee and other places during this time. Mr. White is a member of the G. A. R. in Ames, Iowa. Subsequent to his discharge in Nashville, Tennessee, he returned home and farmed. On February 20, 1868, Mr. White married Miss Susan L., daughter of Henry and Jemima (Dow) Trevits. Eight children have been born to this union. Frank E., married to Marion Burton, is now living in this county, having been a successful teacher in Iowa; Wilna S. Keltner, of Chamberlain, North Dakota, formerly a teacher; Alice A. Keltner, also a teacher, now in the reservation; William H., deceased; Mary L. Melliken, in Spokane; Florence P. died a few days after coming to the reservation, aged seventeen, she was a fine musician; Willis Herbert, owner of eighty acres and, although but eighteen, is doing for himself; Mary L., a graduate of the high school and a good musician. Mr. Trevits was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, and his wife in Chautauqua county, New York. He enlisted in Company A, in Illinois, and was transferred to the Third Missouri, where he served until he was taken sick and then discharged, having been in the ranks nearly two years. He never fully recovered from this stroke and the last seventeen years of his life were spent in physical helplessness. He died in 1897, in Contra Costa county, California. His wife died in 1888. They were married in Wyandotte county, Pennsylvania, and there Mrs. White was born on August 6, 1849. The family came to Jo Daviess county when she was a child. In 1872 Mr. White moved his family to Boone county, Iowa, and there farmed as he had done in Illinois, and there he remained until 1899, when he came and took his present place, one mile southwest from Nezperce. It is a fine farm, well improved, with elegant modern residence, fitted with all conveniences, a first-class barn, and other accessories, as well as a good orchard and so forth. Mrs. White secured her first certificate and taught her first school when she was sixteen years old and for twenty-four years she has held high rank among educators. They are both members of the Methodist church and Mrs. White has been superintendent of the Sunday school for three years. Mr. White is a deacon in the church and has been trustee.

RUFUS W. UTT. It is very fitting that among the young men of Nez Perces county, Mr. Utt should be mentioned as one of the capable, enterprising and progressive ones, whose labors have done much to assist in the upbuilding of the county.

Rufus W. Utt was born in Jersey county, Illinois, on January 15, 1872, being the son of John H. and Mary (Armstrong) Utt, natives of Illinois. The father was born May 2, 1841, and his father was a pioneer of Illinois. The mother of our subject died in 1877. The family removed to Kansas when Rufus was eleven years old, settling in Chautauqua county. The father bought land and farmed. Rufus was educated and grew to manhood in that western home and at the age of twenty-three he came to Latah county and mined in Garden Gulch and on Gold Hill with varying success for two years. Then he came to Nez Perces county and took up farming and stock raising. He leased land and broke it for two years' use and in this business he has done well. He owns a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Latah county, near Princeton, which is well improved and which he intends to make his home when his leases expire in this county.

In Latah county, on January 1, 1899, Mr. Utt married Miss Lulu I., daughter of Robert and Louise (Hendricks) Mowlds. The father was born in Illinois in 1852 and the mother was born there in 1862. They are both now living in Latah county. Mr. Mowlds was a pioneer in Lincoln county, Washington, and is a first-class carpenter and builder. Mrs. Utt was born in Lincoln county, Washington, on January 31, 1882, and she has the following brothers and sisters, Mattie, Cecil, Virgie, Itha, Lloyd and Pearl. Mr. Utt has two sisters and one brother, Nancy J. Bontwell, in Little Rock, Arkansas; John M., in Nez Perces county; Mary M., who has not been heard from since the Johnstown flood, she being there. Two children have come to bless the household of our subject, Ethel M. and Rufus Ed. Mr. Utt is a member of the M. W. A. at Peck. He is a Democrat but does not press for personal preferment. Mrs. Utt is a member of the Christian church and Mr. Utt is a wise advocate of good schools and general progress.

CLARENCE E. LEEPER. The industrious and enterprising gentleman of whom we now have the pleasure of speaking is one of the men who came to this county with but little of this world's goods, but by his wise management of the resources of the place has put himself in a first-class financial position, being one of the prosperous and substantial farmers of the place. He remarks that when he came here he was enabled to carry all his goods on his back and had but a few dollars in his pocket. True grit, pluck and sagacity have been displayed and now the fruit of this effort is in abundant evidence in his holdings.

Clarence E. Leeper was born in Greene county, Missouri, on September 5, 1872, being the son of James and Mary C. (West) Leeper, natives of Missouri, and born in 1846 and 1856, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Missouri and served four years in the Confederate army. The mother died in 1888. When Clarence was two years old the family migrated to Oregon and settled in Douglas county and later went to Josephine county. There they farmed and raised stock. Our subject grew up on a farm and was educated in the public schools. He remained with his father until twenty-four. In 1896 he came to his present place, two and one-half miles north from Melrose, and secured a quarter section by homestead right. This has been the home since that time and is one of the valuable places in this vicinity.

On November 29, 1899, Mr. Leeper married Miss Mary I., daughter of William P. and Mary (Harness) Garner, the wedding occurring in Nez Perces county. Mr. Garner and his wife were born in Missouri and their daughter was born in Doniphan county, Kansas, on April 18, 1876. She has two brothers and two sisters, Vinal, Naomi, May, Neri. Mr. Leeper has one sister and two brothers, Albert E., Ava M. and Hugh, all in Nez Perces county. One child, Villa M., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Leeper. Mrs. Leeper is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Leeper is a stanch Republican and labors for practical results and is dominated by wisdom and sound principles. He has always been a zealous advocate of first-class educational facilities and believes in paying the price to obtain them. Mr. Leeper is not content with handling his land, but leases considerable in addition, which he cultivates.

JOSEPH HARR is one of the most substantial and capable men in the vicinity of Summit and is one of the worthy men whose labors have made Nez Perces county what it is at the present time, one of the leading counties in the state. He is a man of integrity, uprightness, and is held in esteem and highly respected by all who know him.

Joseph Harr was born in Butter county, Ohio, on May 18, 1853, being the son of Joseph and Margaret (Curry) Harr, farmers of that state. Joseph received a common schooling and made the best of his opportunities to gain knowledge. He has always been a studious man and very observing and the result is that he is well posted and an influential and leading citizen. In 1875 he left home and migrated to Coles county, Illinois, where he rented land for eight years. Then a move was made to Minor county, South Dakota, where a brother had preceded him and five years were spent there on a homestead. For one year he resided in Nebraska and then he came to Moscow and when the reservation opened he sold the property that he had acquired in Moscow and settled on his present place, one and one-half miles west from Summit. He has a good farm of one quarter section and he rents as much more, raising the cereals and also handling considerable stock. In 1900 he sold nine hundred and thirty dollars' worth of hogs and in 1902 he sold nearly as many. Thus it will be seen that from this single product of the farm that Mr. Harr is a thrifty and capable farmer. He was one of the two first settlers in his section and he directed the building of the first school house in his district, No. 3. He is chairman of the board now and has always taken a great interest in educational matters.

On April 11, 1877, Mr. Harr married Miss Lavina, daughter of James Q. and Lucinda (Wright) Sair, natives of Ohio, and of German descent. Mrs. Harr was born in Vinton county, Ohio. To this happy marriage were born six children: Charles, Hattie B., Harry, Mabel, Elmer and Walter. Mrs. Harr has since been called away from her pleasant home and loving family by the cold hand of death.

Mr. Harr has the following brothers: John W., William H., Jackson. He has two half-brothers, Charles and G. W. Smith. Also Mr. Harr has two half-sisters: Laura, wife of Eli Gerard; Lizzie, wife of Butler Gerard, a cousin of Eli. Mr. Harr is a Democrat in politics but never is desirous of personal preferment, always allowing the emoluments of office to be given to another and is contented with the quiet of private life. He is a man of excellent qualities and has the good will of all.

DAVID FISH. A farmer whose labors have accumulated a fine holding in this favored region of the reservation and who is in excellent standing among the people, has done a comendable part in the good work of improving and building up the country, it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant the subject of this article representation in the county history.

David Fish was born in the province of Quebec, on May 10, 1857. He grew up and was educated in his native place and in 1877 came to New Hampshire, where he wrought in the lumber business until 1880. Then he went to Bay City, Michigan, and worked in the lumber business one year, then sailed on the lakes, and in 1888 came as far west as Marysville, Montana, and wrought as a miner and also as a machinist. In 1890 Mr. Fish returned to Michigan and later came to Elkhorn, Montana, and in 1896 to his present place, a snug and well kept farm about one-half mile southwest from Nezperce. He had but little when he located this land and so he was forced to endure the hardships and arduous labor of pioneer life; he has faithfully labored on until he has a good farm, well improved, and is one of the prosperous men of this section. Mr. Fish is a member of the M. W. A.

The marriage of Mr. Fish and Miss Emma Hart, a native of Calumet, Michigan, was solemnized on April 18, 1887, and four children have been born to gladden the home: Laura, Arlie, Rehomode and Mardiez E. Mrs. Fish was born on May 28, 1871. Mr. Fish and his family all affiliate with the Catholic church and are faithful supporters of the faith.

JOHN T. LOUGH. The apostle Paul ministered to his own and to the needs of those with him through the work of his own hands and thus preached the gospel free to all. Such has been the career of the estimable gentleman whose name is at the head of this article and he is now preaching regularly at Gifford and other points, while he also handles his farm, which is located one and one-half miles east from Lookout. On March 17, 1878, in Barry county, Missouri, John T. Lough was ordained to preach in the church of Christ and since that time he has been active in the spread of the faith.

Mr. Lough was born near Waveland, Indiana, on October 12, 1846, being the son of Samuel M. and Delilah J. (Stalcup) Lough. The father was born in Cumberland county, Kentucky, on January 25, 1823, and died February 5, 1902. His father, Thomas W., was born March 12, 1788, in Virginia; the great-grandfather of our subject was a pioneer in Kentucky and enlisted in the Revolution under General Washington, but on account of his youth was detailed as a servant of the General, and afterward married a niece of George Washington's mother. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee, in 1822, and died in August, 1857. Her parents were pioneers in Tennessee. When John T. was ten months of age the family went to the father's old home in Kentucky and when John was ten years old they all went to Texas. Grayson county was the home place and in the time of the Civil war he and his father were conscripted for the Confederate army. In the spring of 1865 Mr. Lough went to Barry county, Missouri, and farmed and followed saw-milling. As stated before, it was there that he began preaching for the church of Christ, being the first county evangelist. In 1892 he sold out and came to Latah county, where he resided until the spring of 1896, when he come and took his present place. This he has farmed in good shape and it is one of the fine farms of the county.

On December 23, 1867, Mr. Lough married Miss Nancy C., daughter of Josiah and Lodusky (Smith) Daugherty, natives of Tennessee. Mr. Daugherty was a pioneer of southwestern Missouri and served in the Confederate army. Mrs. Lough was born in Barry county, in 1841, and died on August 2, 1897. Three children were born to this marriage: Delilah L. Kelly, at Gifford, Idaho; Margaret E. Nelson, in California; Lona A., at home. Mr. Lough is a stanch Democrat and in Latah and this county he refused the nomination for the state legislature, when his nomination meant his election. He has always been an advocate of first-class schools, and has labored faithfully for the welfare of all, both temporally and spiritually, and he is highly respected and beloved by all.

FRANK WESLEY WOODIN. The esteemed gentleman whose name forms the caption of this article is one of the younger men who are making of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county one of the most valuable farming regions in the state of Idaho. His estate of one-quarter section is situated three miles west from Peck. He has devoted himself with industry and skill to its improvement and culture since taking it in the year of the opening of the reservation.

Frank W. Woodin was born in Osceola county, Michigan, on May 8, 1876, being the son of Professor Frank E. and Urena V. (Benscootter) Woodin. Professor Woodin is a man of considerable note, being an expert artist and lecturer. Especially has he gained prestige in Michigan, his home state. He handles the caricatures of the Toledo Blade and other journals. He was born in Wayne county, Michigan, in August, 1853. The mother of our subject was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on November 10, 1853, and died in 1892. Her father was one of the sturdy pioneers of the early days. Frank W. grew to manhood and gained his education in Detroit, Michigan. In 1892 he graduated from the high school in that city and then devoted himself to the mastery of the tinner's art. This being accomplished, he came to southern Minnesota, after traveling around considerably in other portions of the country, and in Minnesota he engaged in firing on the railroad for a time. In 1895, on account of the sickness of his brother, Charles, who died in September, 1898, he came west and remained with him on American Ridge for a time. In 1895, at the opening of the reservation, Mr. Woodin took a claim near Nezperce, but becoming involved in a contest, he abandoned the claim and came to the vicinity of Peck. Here he found a settler on his present place who was willing to abandon for a horse and saddle that Mr. Woodin had, and the trade was soon was consumated. Mr. Woodin then went to work to get a little start, for he had scanty capital at that date, and for two years he worked in the neighborhood. He has steadily devoted himself to the improvement of his farm and now has a good place. Mr. Woodin has brothers and sisters as follows: Bessie Pearl, is one of the successful educators of the county and keeps house for our subject; Charles E., deceased; Bertha L., in Toledo, Ohio, holding the position of stenographer for the Cressor Company, ladies furnishers; William M. S., in this county with our subject; Elizabeth M. E., in Toledo, Ohio, with her father. Mr. Woodin is a member of the M. W. A., at Peck, and a Republican in politics and is a good citizen possessed of many friends. His uncle, Captain Ira Ennis, was a volunteer from Michigan in the Civil war, and is now superintending a railroad in Cuba. His uncle, Al Beorry, was in the Civil war and languished a year in Libby prison.

EDWARD E. WATTS, M. D., is one of the leading professional men of Nez Perces county. Naturally endowed with the talent and ability requisite for the medical profession—and in this profession it must be understood that an enlightened public require integrity, talent, skill, erudition and thoroughness in keeping abreast of the rapidly advancing science of medicine,—being naturally endowed, we remark, in a generous manner and aided by a careful and thorough course in general and technical education, also skilled by a long and thorough practice, Dr. Watts is eminently fitted to handle the large and ever increasing practice that his skill and worth are daily bringing him.

Edward E. Watts was born in Columbia City, Louisa county, Iowa, on February 22, 1854, being the son of John M. and Sarah (Gunn) Watts, natives of Ohio and of Scotch extraction. The father was a pioneer of the territory of Iowa from Indiana and was a faithful preacher for the Christian church for twenty-five years, and also did farming. When Edward was eleven his parents both died and he was thus early left to try the hardships of a cold world. He worked for farmers and gained schooling in the winters and his industry is manifest in that he joined the ranks of the educators when he was but seventeen, and for five years he taught, studied medicine and perfected himself in higher education. In 1875, by dint of hard labor and careful study he had been enabled to pay his own way through the American University at Philadelphia and with credit to himself he graduated there in that year. The next year he located in Unionville, Missouri, and for five years he enjoyed a good practice. Then he located at Bigelow, Kansas, and for seven years he practiced there. It was 1888 that he came to Juliaetta and in 1891 Dr. Watts determined to enjoy and bring to the west the results of a thorough post graduate course and accordingly he spent one year in the Eclectic Medical Institute in Cincinnati, Ohio, receiving additional diplomas from that institution, which is the very father of eclecticism in the entire world. After this excellent course, in which as in other investigations and training the Doctor had paid especial attention to surgery, he came to Southwick, Idaho, and established himself there. In April, 1901, discerning the excellent location of Gifford, he came hither and has since his coming enjoyed an exceptionally good practice, his skill and success having already preceded him hither.

Dr. Watts has two brothers and two sisters: James M., Edwin O., Elizabeth M., widow of David Griffiths; Mary A., wife of James M. Osborne. James lives in Pullman and the others live in Kansas and Iowa. Dr. Watts takes the proper interest in politics and is allied with the Democratic party and has been a delegate to nearly all the county conventions. He is examining physician for the W. of W.

Dr. Watts was married and has three children: Victor, in Kansas; Charles E. and William A., at Southwick, Idaho. His brothers James M. and Jonathan W., were in the Union army under Sherman. Jonathan was killed in Georgia while he was assisting to build breastworks. They were both privates. Dr. Watts has hosts of friends wherever he is known and is a man of sterling worth and commanding ability.

DEXTER D. MERRITT. A man of wide experience in the ways of life and who has wrought with wisdom and energy in the occupations of his hand and is now one of the substantial and respected citizens of Melrose, it is consistent with the province of this work to incorporate the salient points of his career in its pages.

Dexter D. Merritt was born in Warren county, Pennsylvania, on June 10, 1848, being the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Jewett) Merritt. The father was born in Connecticut in 1787, settled in western New York in 1807 and died in 1870. The mother of our subject was born in New York in 1814 and died in 1851. When eleven years old Dexter went from the parental roof for the stern duties of life. He was educated in New York after this and then came to Iowa when he was fifteen. He settled in Clayton county, and farmed until 1873, then came a migratory journey to Colorado and for ten years he delved in the mines of that state, working in Clear Creek, Lake, and Boulder counties, where also he did carpentering work. Then he journeyed to Idaho and wrought at his trade for a year or more, after which he came again to Colorado and farmed in Rio Grande county. In 1891 he came to Cassia and Freeman counties, in Idaho, and wrought for a couple of years, also operated a general merchandise store there for a time, at Rock Creek. In 1899 Mr. Merritt came to Lewiston and wrought for Small and Emory in the lumber business, and in September, 1902, he came to Melrose and took the position of bookkeeper in the concern of Snyder & Company, where he is engaged at the present time. Mr. Merritt is a man of excellent qualities and has won the approbation and confidence of all. He has ten brothers and sisters and nine half brothers and half sisters. Politically Mr. Merritt is allied with the Republicans. His brother, Charles C., was a captain in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Regiment in the Civil war and for nine months languished in a war prison of the enemy. Another brother, Barton M., who died at Folly Island before Charleston, was in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth New York Regiment.

AARON BRADBURY. Our subject early learned the exciting "way of the west" and is a typical frontiersman, having done his part in opening for settlement California, Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

Aaron Bradbury was born in New York City on April 9, 1831, being the son of Lewis and Maria (Smith) Bradbury. The father, who came to Illinois in 1836, was born in Ulster county, New York, on June 6, 1804, and died in 1838. His grandfather, Amirhuhama, was born in Maine on March 11, 1762, and served two years and eight months in the Revolution, enlisting in July, 1781, in a Massachusetts regiment under Captain Leonorde and Colonel William Shepard and was in the siege of Yorktown and at the surrender of Cornwallis. His ancestors settled in Biddeford, Maine, in 1638. The mother of our subject was born in New Jersey in 1807 and died in 1898. Her ancestors were of the Holland Dutch stock and were very early settlers among the colonists. Our subject's parents removed to Ogle county, Illinois, when he was a lad, in 1836, and they were among the very first settlers there. There he grew to young manhood and received his education in the district school. He was a studious youth and gleaned much information from reading outside of the school course. He also learned the carpenter trade and studied law. He also gained good training in the postoffice at Oregon, Illinois. He was at home much of the time, but really independent action for him began at the age of fifteen. In 1850 he was taken with a severe attack of the gold fever and no cure was found but a trip across the plains and years of delving for the precious metal in the mines in different parts of California. Ten years were spent in this way and he then came to The Dalles and joined an expedition for exploration into central and eastern Oregon under Captain Smith. Many encounters with the Indians were participated in and then he returned to the Willamette valley and taught school and followed other vocations until 1878, in which year a journey was made to Whitman county.

He took lieu land below Pullman and lived on it until 1897, when he made his way to the reservation and secured his present claim, five miles southeast from Melrose. Mr. Bradbury married in 1866 and three sons were born to him: John W., in the Lewiston National Bank; Edward G., a school teacher in New York City; Lewis, at Walla Walla. Mr. Bradbury has one brother living, Lewis, of New York, and one sister, Mary Mitchell, also in New York. Mr. Bradbury was justice of the peace in Whitman county for fifteen years and is a stanch and active Democrat. He was made a Mason in California in 1855 and has a dimissory letter dated 1857 from his home lodge. A typical pioneer, a genial companion, a well informed man, a sturdy and patriotic supporter of the government and withal one esteemed and highly respected by his fellows, Mr. Bradbury is justly worthy of the encomiums he enjoys and the prestige granted him.

JACOB NOSBISCH. The success that has attended the subject of this sketch is evidence sufficient of his ability, thrift, industry and energy. He owns a fine farm about three miles southwest from Nezperce, and here he has shown excellent qualifications to handle the resources of the country in a winning manner.

Jacob Nosbisch was born in Huttingen, the vicinity of Trier, in Prussia, Germany, on April 3, 1868, being the son of Nicholas and Mary Nosbisch, also natives of the same country. The mother died in January, 1898, but the father is still living on the old home place, leading a retired life and being well-to-do. Our subject is the eldest of a family of seven children and the only one in the United States. From the age of six to fourteen he attended public school in his native land, and at the age of seventeen started from Bremen on the steamer Nurenberge. The date of his voyage was October 28 and the landing in Baltimore was November 13, 1885. He came direct to Eagle Grove, Iowa, and attended school the first winter to learn English. He worked in different places in Iowa and in 1893 went to Chicago and worked in a garden and also attended the World's Fair. That winter was spent in St. Joseph College, at Teutopolis, Illinois. In 1894 he returned to Iowa and farmed for himself until 1897. In September of that year he came to Uniontown, Washington, and in October to his present place. Here he has lived and labored since. His flax crop alone this year was nearly one thousand bushels, and he has other crops in proportion. Mr. Nosbisch also has stock and his is a fine and well kept farm. He has maintained a clean record here and is well thought of by his neighbors and all who know him, being a man of excellent qualities and sound principles. He is a consistent member of the Catholic church.

ROBERT M. CLEVELAND. One of the popular and esteemed citizens of Gifford is named at the head of this article and his geniality and public spirit have won for him hosts of friends in all sections where he is known.

Robert M. Cleveland was born in Monroe county, Tennessee, on March 6, 1866, being the son of Larkin J. and Minerva (Parker) Cleveland. He was educated in the public schools at Golden City, Missouri, and then took a complete course in civil engineering. Three years were spent after he was twenty in railroad work, and then he was engaged in buying poultry and in the nursery business for a year. In 1889 Mr. Cleveland came west to Colfax, Washington. Then he operated as baggageman, express messenger, brakeman, fireman, and so forth for three years and after this returned to Whitman county and rented land for a time. We next see him in the Potlatch country, and there he bought a quarter and when the reservation opened Mr. Cleveland came to his present place, one-half mile south from Gifford, and on October 19, 1895, filed on it. He has made a fine farm which is very valuable and a good dividend producer. Mr. Cleveland is one of the substantial and leading men of the community.

On March 11, 1890, Mr. Cleveland married Miss Minnie C., daughter of Jacob E. and Myra (Baldwin) Brake, the wedding occurring in Colfax. Mrs. Cleveland was born in Newton county, Missouri, on March 3, 1869. Her father was a native of Ohio and her mother of Canada. She has one sister: Ella, wife of Harvey W. Doolen, of Missouri. Mr. Cleveland is a member of the M. W. A. and of the I. O. O. F., while his wife is a member of the Methodist church. To Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland there have been born four children: Clarence C., Alfred H., Harry B., and Minnie C. Mr. Cleveland is one of the men whose labors have made the beautiful Beeman Flat country prosperous and productive of great wealth, and he is a leader in excellent farming and is a man of ability and stands well with his fellows.

ROBERT E. MOSER. The reservation country has been the scene of the labors of this gentleman for some years, and here he has shown his ability to handle the resources of the country in a winning manner, for he has increased his holding from a very meager showing at the time of his immigration here to those of a substantial and prosperous, thrifty farmer.

Robert E. Moser was born in Catawba county, North Carolina, on February 7, 1866, being the son of John P. and Catherine M. (Roseman) Moser. The father was born and reared in Tennessee and served through the Civil war. The mother of our subject was a native of Catawba county. Robert was the fourth of a family of six children, and when a child they all removed to Monroe county, Tennessee, and when he was twelve they returned to North Carolina. He was educated in Concordia College, in Catawba county, and afterwards taught school for a few terms and held a first grade certificate. In 1889 he came to Oakesdale, Washington, and there took up farming.

On October 30, 1894, Mr. Moser married Miss

Florence M., daughter of Frank M. and Eleanor S. (Bellinger) Brown, natives of St. Lawrence county, New York, where also Mrs. Moser was born. They came to Whitman county in an early day. Mrs. Moser is a niece of Jacob Bellinger, of Colfax. Soon after his marriage Mr. Moser went to the Potlatch country, and in the spring of 1896 he came to his present place, one-half mile southwest from Nezperce. He has a first-class farm, well improved, having a two-story, eight-room residence, a commodious barn, out buildings, and other improvements as orchard, fences, implements and so forth. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Moser: Marion L., Eleanor C., Maggie M., Ollie I. Mr. Moser is a member of the K. O. T. M., of Nezperce. He is a reliable and upright man, who has hosts of friends and has done a worthy part in the development of the reservation country.

JACOB ALTMILLAR. Among the sturdy sons of the fatherland who have become stanch and pariotic citizens of the free land, we notice the subject of this article as one of the best of them and a man of sterling worth and integrity.

Jacob Altmillar was born in Germany in 1840, being the son of Joseph and Conna (Constantier) Altmillar, born in Germany in 1806 and 1811 and died there in 1896 and 1882, respectively. Jacob grew to manhood and received his education in his native place and wrought at the charcoal burner's trade until he was twenty-six, when he used the capital he had accumulated to start in the mercantile business. He was a careful buyer and a good salesman and attended to the details of the business with such care and wisdom that he had a splendid trade and success in every way crowned his endeavors. In 1884 he desired to see the new world and accordingly sold his property and business and came to Juliaetta. He took land on American ridge, one mile from town, and went to producing the fruits of the field and raising stock. Eight years later we find him selling this property and another move was made. This time to the Potlatch country and there he bought school land. Five years covered the period of his labors in that place and Mr. Altmillar then came to his present place, three miles north from Melrose. He filed in 1898 and since that time has devoted himself to its improvement and culture. He has good buildings and the place shows the labors of a master hand in the art of agriculture. Eighty acres are under the plow and the balance of the property is devoted to pasture and wood lots. Fruit and stock, with general farm products, are the market dividends produced and Mr. Altmillar is one of the substantial men of the community.

While in Germany Mr. Altmillar married in 1866, Miss Tafara Constantia becoming his wife. Her parents were natives of Germany and she was born there in 1830. She has no brothers and sisters. Mr. Altmillar has two brothers and two sisters in Germany. Two children have been born to gladden the household: Constantia and Frank, both at home. Mr. Altmillar and family are members of the Catholic church and are ardent supporters of that faith. He was a public official in Germany and has served as justice of the peace here for three years. Politically Mr. Altmillar is independent, reserving for his own judgment the qualifications of the man. He has educated his children well in the English branches and is a warm champion of good schools.

ALVAH T. ROGERS. The enterprising and industrious gentleman, whose name is at the head of this article, has made from the wild land that he took as a homestead in 1895, a model farm and one of the finest home places and productive farms in the vicinity of Gifford. It lies about one mile north from town and is a tasty and beautiful rural abode. Mr. Rogers devotes his attention to general farming, and also to raising stock. He has a fine orchard, good buildings and is prosperous and a substantial citizen.

Reverting to the personal details of his life, we note that Mr. Rogers was born in Minnesota, on May 22, 1858, being the son of Samuel D. and Mary J. (Kerns) Rogers. The parents removed to Scott county, Iowa, when our subject was an infant and later went to Iowa county. For sixteen years Alvah remained there, working on the farm and gaining his education from the schools in winter. After leaving home he rentel land there and farmed until 1890, when he decided to try the west, and accordingly came to the vicinity of Garfield, Washington, and there farmed successfully for five years. The next move was to his present place, described above. Mr. Rogers and his wife are members of the Methodist church, while in political matters he is allied with the Republican party. He is not desirous of preferment in this line, although he has given his time on the school board for the promotion of good schools.

On July 3, ——,Mr. Rogers married Miss Mary B. Lewis, daughter of William R. and Nancy A. (Branson) Lewis. Mrs. Rogers has two brothers: Benton and Joseph, living in Columbia county, Colorado. Her father was a captain in the Civil war. Mr. Rogers has one brother who is still living in Iowa. Mr. Rogers' father was a soldier for two years and one-half in the Civil war and received a wound in his head from which he is still suffering. He was reported lost, but afterward made his way home, having suffered greatly. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have been blessed by the advent of six children: Oscar W., Mary P., Roy S., Walter A., Arthur L., and Milton C.

PEARL C. LACEY is a man of energy and integrity and has demonstrated these worthy qualities with no uncertainty in his labors and achievements, which have placed him in the catalogue of the prosperous and successful agriculturists in Nez Perces county.

Mr. Lacey was born in Adair county, Iowa, on August 15, 1871, being the son of Warnik S. and Martha (Chaney) Lacey, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively. The former was born in 1831, was a pioneer in Ohio and now lives in Wisconsin, having passed an active life as a carpenter, while the latter was born in 1839 and died in 1886. Our subject's parents removed to Sauk county, Wisconsin, when he was six years of age. In Reedburg, that county, he grew up and was educated and when he had reached the age of eighteen he began the labors of life for himself. About that time he came to Washington, settling in the vicinity of Sprague, where he worked on a farm for two years. After that period he went to the Potlatch country and purchased a piece of land, devoting himself to its improvement for a number of years. It was in 1894 that he came to the reservation and leased land from the Indians and farmed it. He was engaged in this occupation when the reservation opened up and immediately secured a quarter section for himself. He has improved it in a good shape, has a good house, a fine orchard and raises flax, barley and timothy. The estate lies six miles north from Melrose.

In 1894 Mr. Lacey married Miss Martha, daughter of L. D. and Mary Porter. The father is a farmer and a native of Tennessee. Mrs. Lacey was born in Missouri in 1875 and has three sisters and one brother. Mr. Lacey has one brother and one sister: Edwin, in Buffalo, New York; Nettie Adams, in Wisconsin. To our subject and his faithful companion there have been born the following children: Claude, Ernest, Nettie, Edgar. Mr. Lacey and his wife are members of the Baptist church and are devout supporters of the faith. He is a member of the school board and is always striving for the betterment of educational facilities. Mr. Lacey had one uncle in the Civil war and Mrs. Lacey's father fought on the southern side. Our subject and his worthy wife are highly respected people and are the recipients of the confidence and esteem of their fellows.

OLIVER L. FAIRLEY. This enterprising and well known agriculturist and business man is at the present time handling the Monroe house, one of the leading hotels in the reservation portion of the county of Nez Perces. It is situated in Peck, adjoining which town Mr. Fairley owns a first-class ranch.

Oliver L. Fairley was born in Cherokee county, Kansas, on October 16, 1869, being the son of Edward and Martha (Sailing) Fairley, natives of Iowa and born in 1848. The father was a farmer and carpenter and pioneer to California in an early day. The father and mother are still living on the reservation. Our subject grew to the age of fourteen in Kansas and then the family removed to Salem, Oregon, and thence to Grant county, in the same state. Soon they removed to Montgomery county, California, and one year later journeyed to the Grande Ronde country in Oregon. After failing to get a filing on some land they came to the Palouse country, settling near Viola. The next year they went to Douglas county, Washington, it being 1887, and there they raised stock on a large scale. Our subject commenced to drive stage from Coulee City to Waterville and Wenatchee and continued for eight years. All the time he was interested with his father in the stock business. In 1896 they left that country and the following year they came to their present place adjoining Peck and settled, the land being then unsurveyed. They filed in June, 1898. Mr. Fairley has a nice lot of stock, cattle, hogs and so forth. He also raises much poultry and does a general farming business. Good buildings adorn the premises.

At Peshastin, Washington, Mr. Fairley married Miss Martha G., daughter of Morgan and Mary E. (Adams) Lacey. The nuptials occurred on December 17, 1895. Mr. Lacey was born in Virginia and his wife in Iowa. Her father died when she was nine months old and her mother when she was seven years of age. Mrs. Fairley was born in Indiana, in 1866, and is an only child. Mr. Fairley has one brother: Earl E., at Peck. Mr. Fairley is a Democrat but not aggressive. He labors zealously for the promotion of good educational facilities and is a stirring business man.

ROBERT H. STEELE. An honorable and upright man, a patriotic citizen, a first-class farmer and an enterprising business man, the subject of this sketch is eminently fitted for representation in the history of this county.

Robert H. Steele was born in Randolph county, Missouri, on April 16, 1858, being the son of William M. and Nancy H. (Wallace) Steele, natives respectively of Kentucky and North Carolina. Robert grew up on a farm, obtained a common schooling, and in 1878 went to Colorado Springs, where he teamed and railroaded until 1881. In that year he came to southern Idaho and there wrought on the Oregon Shortline and in 1883 we find him in the same labor between Colfax and Pullman. In 1884 Mr. Steele went to the Coeur d'Alenes and packed for Charlie Smith for a time, then worked in a sawmill in Palouse. In the winter of 1884-5 he went, via Portland, to San Francisco, Old Mexico, Texas, and so forth, to his home in Missouri, to visit his father, his mother having died in 1871. While crossing the Cascade mountains they were snowed in and were twenty-three days cooped up and finally had to walk out, almost perishing, as three days were spent without food under these trying circumstances. Two years were spent in the east and then Mr. Steele came to the vicinity of Troy, Latah county, and there took a preemption. This was the arena of his labors in the stock business until the spring of 1896, when he came to his present place at Steele postoffice, and took a homestead. This has been improved in a good manner, has produced abundant returns of crops, is a valuable piece of land and shows in every point the skill and thrift of Mr. Steele. His means were limited when he opened this place but now he has gained a good competence. In April, 1902, Mr. Steele was appointed postmaster of Steele postoffice and since that time has discharged the duties of the office in an acceptable manner. In addition to the postoffice and farm, Mr. Steele has opened a general merchandise establishment and is constantly increasing his stock as the demands of trade indicate. He is a good, substantial man, well respected by all who know him and is an influential factor in the upbuilding of the country. He is a member of the W. W.

On February 17, 1895, Mr. Steele married Miss Nettie B., daughter of Allen and Susan Summers, who were pioneers to Bates county, Missouri, and also to Latah county and in 1896 to the reservation country near Nezperce, where the father died on February 21, 1902. The mother still lives on the old home place. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Steele: William A., Victor H., and Susan F. Mr. Steele enlisted in the National Guards in 1890 and served three years, being there soon after the Frisco mine was blown up. Mr. and Mrs. Steele are members of the church and are in hearty sympathy with this branch of labor as in all worthy endeavors for the amelioration of the condition of all.

SAMUEL E. LOWARY is an enterprising farmer and stockman, two miles southwest from Melrose, where he took the raw land and has made worthy improvements and also placed himself as one of the substantial men of the community. He handles stock and raises the cereals and his place is a model of excellent cultivation and thrift. Mr. Lowary also has a fine orchard and intends making his place one of the finest that skill and labor can accomplish.

Samuel E. Lowary was born in Chautauqua county, Kansas, on November 16, 1871, being the son of James and Mary A. (Hawkins) Lowary. The father was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, on March 20, 1833, served as teamster in the Civil war, came as a pioneer to the big bend country in Washington in April, 1883, and died there July 10, 1901, aged sixty-eight years, three months and twenty days. The mother was born in Missouri, on January 1, 1839, and died March 5, 1886. Our subject grew up in the various places the family lived and was favored with a public school education. In September, 1879, the family came to the Grande Ronde valley, Oregon, crossing the plains with wagons. Then came the move to Washington, as mentioned above, and our subject remained at home until twenty-one, at which time he bought land, and farmed until 1895. In that year he came to the Potlatch country, tilling the soil there until the reservation opened, in 1896, when he came and settled on his present place, and here he has devoted his labors assiduously since with the happy result that his estate is one of the best improved and most excellent ones in the community.

In the spring of 1896 in Latah county, Mr. Lowary married Miss Harriett E. Timmons, daughter of William and Mary Timmons, natives of Iowa and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father was a farmer. Mrs. Lowary was born in Floyd county, Iowa, on July 26, 1877. She has four sisters and three brothers living. Mr. Lowary has the following named brothers and sisters, Frank and George, in Lincoln county, Washington; Lorenzo, in Nez Perces county; Minnie B. Richardson, in this county. To Mr. and Mrs. Lowary there have been born four children, Annie B., Bertha E., George and Dora. Mr. Lowary affiliates with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A., at Melrose. He is a Republican in politics and is a stanch advocate of good schools and churches. Mrs. Lowary had one uncle in the Civil war. It is with pleasure that we can record that Mr. Lowary stands well with the people and is one of the leading and responsible men of this section.

GEORGE W. BELOIT. Among those whose labors have developed the reservation in Nez Perces county must be mentioned the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. He has a nice farm and good improvements, one mile west from Summit, where the family home is now.

George W. Beloit was born in Flint City, Michigan, on July 19, 1864, being the son of Charles W. and Sarah J. (Martin) Beloit. In 1870 the family removed to Missouri, the father taking a homestead in Texas county. The parents remain there yet. Our subject left the parental roof at the age of fifteen and worked on the farms of the state for two years. Then he went to Montana, being engaged on the stock ranches and teaming for the government. Later he purchased a team and freighted, gaining sufficient means to enable him to spend a season in the Salt Lake Seminary, which made up for the lack of educational training he was deprived of in his earlier days. Later he took a course in the Helena Business College and canvassed for a Chicago house in that section successfully for a time and then returned to Missouri to get married. Bringing his bride with him, he came to Helena and canvassed for a couple of years. Later he rented a farm and then squatted on unsurveyed land, but the excessive drought spoiled three crops and, becoming discouraged, he sold out and removed to Deerlodge, where he gained employment for three years. He dealt some in town property there. In 1894 Mr. Beloit came with teams, via Boise valley, to the Potlatch country, where he harvested and dealt in horses, and in 1895 he filed on his present place. He raises cattle and hogs and uses the entire production of the farm to feed his stock. Mr. Beloit has been especially successful in breeding hogs. He handles the Berkshires exclusively, and has some fine premium winners and also a good many animals that are registered and eligible for registration. His success in this line has placed him in the lead in this entire section.

Politically Mr. Beloit is a Prohibitionist and has acted as delegate to the state convention. He was nominated for the legislature and was defeated, as he expected. He has two brothers, Virgil and Fred, both in Colorado, and he also has three sisters: Cora N., wife of Mr. Leslie: Carrie, wife of Elmer McClelland, of Mackey, Idaho; Clara, wife of Mr. Gray. The last named sisters are twins. Mr. Beloit's wife was born in Washington county, Missouri, on August 16, 1863. To Mr. and Mrs. Beloit there have been born seven children, Jesse J., Heman H., Mabel V., Wayne M., Florence N., Ray and Elden. Mr. Beloit and his estimable wife are members of the Methodist church.

PRESLEY P. CLEVELAND. Men, like the subject of this article, are the ones who have made the west so thrifty and wealthy. Mr. Cleveland is one of the leading agriculturists of Nez Perces county. We make that statement guardedly and the reasons are, that he has in the first place a well selected farm, which he took from the wilds when the reservation was opened. It is laid out with wisdom and the buildings are erected with an outlook both for convenience and beauty. He has a well selected orchard that is a model in every respect. His land is handled in a skillful manner, being rotated to a variety of crops as hay, oats, wheat, barley, flax and the vegetables. Mr. Cleveland has a number of excellent graded cattle and some thoroughbred hogs. His barns are commodious and his residence is comfortable and tasty. The entire appearance of the farm is one of thrift, industry and skill and because of the points mentioned it is evident that it is one of the model farms in the west, not given to extremes in any line, but manifesting a beautiful symmetry and proportion in all points.

Reverting more to his personal history, we note that Presley P. Cleveland was born in Monroe county, Tennessee, on August 19, 1851, being the son of Larkin J. and Minerva (Parker) Cleveland. The father was born in Tennessee and his father was one of the pioneers of that country from North Carolina. The mother of our subject was a native of Tennessee and her father came from Virginia to her native state. Presley grew up on a farm and gained his education from the public schools and from Croton Academy. He remained at home until of age and then farmed for a widowed cousin for four years. After this, he operated a farm for a great-uncle for four years, during which time he was married and in the fall of 1879 he came to northwestern Missouri. The next spring he went to the southern part of that state and nine years later he came to the vicinity of Garfield, Washington, where he rented land and also near Steptoe Butte for a year and then came to the Potlatch country, settling near Juliaetta in the fall of 1891. In the spring of 1892 he purchased a ranch near Kendrick and to the tilling of that he gave his attention until the reservation opened up and then he located on the place described above. In addition to the items mentioned we should relate that the two hundred shade trees that Mr. Cleveland has arranged in an artistic manner about his grounds add great comfort, beauty and value to the property. In addition to his own land he leases eighty acres from Mr. Gifford. Mr. Cleveland has three brothers, Alfred A., Harvey H. and Robert M. Also he has two sisters, Cordie, wife of Orin Evans, near Gifford; Eliza, wife of David Black, south of Gifford. Mrs. Cleveland's maiden name was Nannie J. Rausin. She was born in Monroe county, Tennessee. He had three uncles in the Confederate army and one in the Union army. The last one was a lieutenant, who was wounded at the battle of Nashville.

To Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland there have been born ten children, Charles F., Robert B., Ben J., Ira, Satie L., Minerva E., Larkin P., Hattie M., Grace E., Lona H. Mr. Cleveland is one of the leading men of the community and is always alert for the furthering of those measures that tend to advance the welfare of all. He was formerly a Republican in politics but is now a Populist.

Mrs. Cleveland, whose parents were natives of North Carolina and Tennessee, respectively, but now deceased, had three uncles in the Union army; one on the mother's side, and two on the father's side.

PHILANDER H. CLARK. Although Mr. Clark has not been in Nez Perces county as long as some of the pioneers, still he has been in different sections of the west for a long time and has wrought with energy and skill and thrift in these various places for their upbuilding and advancement, and during the time of his stay here he has made a good record for himself and is one of the established business men of Gifford. He operates a feed and livery stable and does a good business.

Philander H. Clark was born in Blount county, Tennessee, on June 4, 1863, being the son of Philander H. and Margaret J. (Dearmond) Clark, natives of Tennessee, where they now reside. The ancestors came from Scotland and England and were of French descent. Our subject remained at home until twenty, gaining a good education from the common schools and from Marysville College. Then he came alone to Polk county, Oregon, purchased land and settled to farming. He remained there until 1890, when he sold out and came to Colfax, Washington, and selected land eight miles north from that town. He tilled the soil in a becoming manner there for a decade and then sold again and on this occasion he made a visit to his home place in Tennessee, renewing old acquaintances and having a pleasant time with his aged parents and the other members of the family. But the pleasant associations of the east were not able to allure one whose spirit had tasted the freedom and stir of the occident, and accordingly we see Mr. Clark back in the west and soon settled in Gifford, the date being October, 1901. He opened a feed stable, which he has been improving, and during the months in which he has labored here he has gained a good trade and is fast becoming popular with the people of his section and the traveling public who require rigs. He is known as a reliable and accommodating man and one who exerts himself for the safety and welfare of his patrons.

Mr. Clark has three brothers, James R., a farmer about two miles northeast from Gifford; Robert and Thomas E., both living with the parents in Tennessee. Also Mr. Clark has one sister, Mary, who resides with her parents. Mr. Clark had one uncle and two nephews in the Confederate army, while his father was a strong Union man. Our subject is a member of the W. of W., at Lookout. Mr. Clark owns his own property and stables here and is one of the thrifty and respected men of the community.

CHARLES W. LITTLE was born in Elgin, Illinois, on November 29, 1860, being the son of Edward V. and Lannie Ann (Keach) Little. The father was a cabinet maker and was born in Montreal, Canada, and the mother was born in New York. Our subject was reared in his native place and received a common school education. He came to the coast in 1882 and for one year he was engaged with the street car company in San Francisco. He next spent two years in fishing for salmon on the Columbia river. After this he purchased a farm in Linn county, Oregon, and gave his attention to raising poultry. This was in 1884 and at that time he also married and continued to live on the farm until 1887. In that year he removed to Lincoln county, Washington, and there took a government claim, which later he abandoned. In 1892 Mr. Little went east and remained two years. It was 1897 that he came to his present location and is now farming a portion of the land of Mr. Butler, his brother-in-law. To Mr. and Mrs. Little there have been born three children, Jessie E., Minnie E. and Marion W.

Mr. and Mrs. Little are members of the Reorganized church of Latter Day Saints, better known as Josephites. This organization has repudiated some of the practices of the body from which they split and they are entirely free from the practice of polygamy as sustained by Brigham Young. It is but right to say that this reorganized denomination has so far cut off all those things that were objectionable to the body politic of the country that they stand as one of the evangelical organizations of the country. Mrs. Little's father is a priest in this church. Mr. and Mrs. Little are respected citizens of the county and are esteemed by all who know them.

SETH GIFFORD. Not only has the subject of this article taken a leading and influential part in the affairs of the county of Nez Perces since he has been here, but in his career formerly, he has held prominent positions and has achieved brilliant success in the face of great odds. A more detailed account will be interesting reading for the people of our county and accordingly we append an epitome of his life.

Seth Gifford was born in Morgan county, Ohio, on November 23, 1847, being the son of Burton and Rebecca (Worrall) Gifford. His father was born in Kennebec, Maine, and for forty years sailed the ocean. Our subject's mother was born in Ohio, being descended from Holland Dutch and her ancestors were early settlers in Pennsylvania. Mr. Gifford's paternal ancestors were English Quakers and the sturdy blood of that race is manifest in the life of our subject. They were among the earliest settlers at Roxbury, Massachusetts, and the family is known there to this day. Mr. Gifford's present wife was formerly Miss Cannie Crewdson, born in Iowa in 1866, her parents being William W. and Eliza Crewdson. She has two brothers, Ezekiel, treasurer of Crook county, Wyoming, and Monroe, a farmer in Iowa; she has also two sisters, Carrie, wife of John Haney; Eva, wife of Israel Lake. Mr. Gifford has two brothers living, John and Charles; George died in the south during the Civil war; and six sisters, Harriet, wife of Jesse H. Swart; Ann, wife of Thomas Gray; Ruth, wife of John Malone; Martha, wife of James Pierce; Maria, wife of Joseph Walker; Eliza, wife of Cass S. Swart. By a former marriage Mr. Gifford has two children, Wilford L., now assessor and tax collector of Nez Perces county, and Lenna M., who is now assistant superintendent of the city hospital at Sioux City, Iowa. This former wife of Mr. Gifford used to be Anna Buckman. From the present marriage there have been four children, Burton, Lora, Lucy and Ruth.

Mr. Gifford spent his boyhood on a farm in Cedar county, Iowa, coming there when four years of age. At twenty, there he married his first wife and settled on a farm which his father gave him. In 1864 he enlisted in Company G, Forty-seventh Iowa, under Colonel Sanford, being most of the time at Helena, Arkansas. He went to Dakota in 1870, taking a pre-emption and then came back to Montgomery county, Iowa. Later he sold out and removed to Audubon county, purchased a farm and also engaged in mercantile labors for one year, and the next five years were spent in traveling about in the government secret service. He came as far west as the Pacific coast and did commendable work in capturing law breakers. In 1882 he was engaged in the Apache Indian war as a scout and had many narrow escapes and much thrilling experience. In 1885 he went to the Black Hills, representing five leading companies in detective work as well as being in the government service. In 1887 he was elected sheriff of Fall River county, and served six years. He was the only Republican that has ever served in that county. In 1890, under the state law, it was his duty to protect the interests of the people, as the Sioux Indians at Pine Ridge and Rosebud agency were on the war path. He did a great deal of fighting and while not at the battle of Wounded Knee, he was there just after the battle. It was at a time of great trouble, as the outlaws of the world had flocked there; but soon it was apparent that in Mr. Gifford, a man was on the scene who was a match and during two terms he was instrumental in sending to the pen nineteen terrorizing criminals. During his term of service the territory was made a state and under the state constitution he could hold only two terms or doubtless he would have been called to still conserve the interests of the county in peaceful government. He then retired to his stock farm on the Cheyenne river, remaining in that retreat, taking the long needed rest from constant strain for years, until May, 1895, when he went to Little Bitter Root Falls, Montana, with teams, taking his family and there settled on unsurveyed land. On account of the exposure of his family to hostile Indians who were fighting for that land, he vacated and came to Nez Perces county and settled on land that now adjoins Gifford. He broke twenty acres the first fall and now it is all farmed to wheat. He bought land where the town stands, and was instrumental in starting it. He owns a large interest in the site and is one of the prominent men of this section. Mr. Gifford is engaged in conducting a first class hotel, operating a general merchandise establishment and is postmaster for the town. In all these relations he has manifested great ability, excellent wisdom and integrity to the satisfaction of the patrons of the office and to the enlargement of a fine business.

He served as justice of the peace from 1895 to 1900 and in politics he has always been active. He is a Republican and has not scratched the ticket for twenty-five years. For two years, Mr. Gifford was in charge of the postoffice and the stage station at Beeman. He has a brother who was connected with the famous Brown in operating an underground railroad in 1859. Mr. Gifford is unsectarian but his wife is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Gifford stands well among the people of this section and has gained a prestige that is deserving and enviable. He has many friends from all quarters and his past services in the interests of peace and good government entitle him to the emoluments that are now his to enjoys.

SAMUEL PORTER. Among the leading stockmen and farmers of the vicinity of Peck the name of our subject holds a prominent position, which is well merited by his excellent endeavors and personal worth.

Samuel Porter was born in Northampton, Massachusetts, on September 8, 1867, being the son of William J. and Ellen (Foley) Porter. The father was born in county Antrim, Ireland, in 1830, and came to the United States in 1846. He now lives in Nez Perces county with this son. He was county supervisor in Hancock county, Iowa. The paternal grandfather of Samuel was born in America. The mother of our subject was born in county Cork, Ireland, in 1812, and died in 1897. The family came to Mitchell county, Iowa, when Samuel was two years old, and then went to Hancock county, where they remained until 1893. There Mr. Porter grew to manhood and received his education in the public schools. He wrought with his father in the stock business, which the latter was extensively engaged in. During this time he traveled to various portions of the country, Florida, all over the south and to the leading markets. In 1893 they came to Kendrick and bought a ranch, which the father owns now. In the fall of 1895 Mr. Porter came to his present place, about one mile northeast from Peck, and there took land. He has a half section of fine land, well improved and productive of good returns annually. Mr. Porter has a fine seven-room house, a capacious barn and all improvements needed. He raises cattle extensively, being associated with his father, as he has always been since boyhood.

On May 10, 1899, Mr. Porter married Miss Isabella Holt, daughter of James and Mary Holt. The wedding occurred in this county. Mr. Holt is a stockman and farmer in this county and was born in Kentucky, but crossed the plains in a very early day, having been one of the sturdy pioneers who opened up California, Oregon and Idaho; and was married at The Dalles. His wife was born on the Pacific slope. Mrs. Porter was born near Marengo, Washington, in 1872. She has five brothers and eight sisters. Mr. Porter has the following named brothers and sisters, John, deceased; Joseph D., William, Ella, Cusic, Maggie, deceased. Our subject and his wife are devout members of the Catholic church. In political matters Mr. Porter is a Democrat and sometimes is at the conventions. He is a hearty supporter of good schools and is a progressive citizen. Mr. Porter has some excellent Shorthorn cattle and takes great interest in breeding fine stock. His farm is well supplied with water from springs which he has piped down, and his estate is a place of value and displays commendable thrift.

WILLIAM S. CLAYTON. This enterprising and well known business man of Gifford is one of the representative citizens and public minded men who have built the town of Gifford to what it is and have the energy and push and skill to make of it a prosperous and influential municipality. It is very fitting therefore that the history of Nez Perces county should grant space for the life of Mr. Clayton. He was born in Jackson county, Arkansas, on October 14, 1863, being the son of John M. and Cynthia (Damron) Clayton. The father was a Methodist minister and a chaplain in the Confederate army during the entire war. His wife's brother, John Damron, was a soldier in the conflict on the southern side. The father still lives on the old homestead at Pea Ridge, where our subject was reared. The place is the spot of the battle and made famous by Sigel and others. William S. was educated in the common schools and in Pea Ridge Academy. In 1884 he came to Wyoming and there spent three years herding stock. Then two years were happily passed in visiting his home place and vicinity. After that, Mr. Clayton came to Klickitat county, Washington, and learned the blacksmith trade in Centerville, in that county. He wrought there and in Sherman county, Oregon, for eight years and in 1899 came to Culdesac. In 1900, he came to Gifford and started a blacksmith shop. G. M. Lindsay started a general merchandise establishment at about the same time and this was the nucleus of the town. In June, 1901, Mr. Clayton started a small hardware store in connection with his blacksmith shop and as business increased he erected a building especially for it and put in a good stock. He went into partnership with his brother, George D. Clayton, and by fair treatment of customers, and good business methods, they have built up a good business, have cleared the house from all indebtedness and are rapidly building themselves up as prosperous and substantial merchants.

In 1898 Mr. Clayton married Miss Ella E., daughter of Anthony and Maggie (Bishop) Tozier. She was born in Kansas, on June 8, 1874, and has two brothers, James and Robert. Mr. and Mrs. Clayton have one child, Lloyd Alvin. Mr. Clayton has three brothers, George D., John M., and Walter P.; he has also five sisters, Mary C., wife of Dr. T. A. Coffelt; Annie L., wife of Charles B. Lewis; Fanny L., wife of Lemuel Keith; Hattie J. and Nellie. Mr. and Mrs. Clayton are members of the Methodist church and are highly respected people. Mr. Clayton came to this country not possessed of great capital and his ability and enterprise with his genial way and skill have placed him in the front ranks of business men of this section.

ENOCH S. REEVES. A worthy member of the large class of farmers and stockmen who have builded Nez Perces county, it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to the subject of this article a consideration in the history of his county. Enoch S. Reeves was born in Woodson county, Kansas, on December 11, 1868, being the son of Newton and Matilda (Gordy) Reeves. The father was born in Iowa in 1843 and died in 1879, having been a pioneer in Kansas. His wife was born in Ohio in 1849, and she still lives near Palouse, in Idaho. Her father was a pioneer in Kansas and her two brothers fought for the flag during the Civil war. Enoch grew up on a farm and gained an education by studying during the winters. He was but twelve when the father died and being the eldest boy, he had the burden to carry, which early gave him to know the hardships of life and the responsibilities of providing for dependent ones. In 1883 they sold out in Kansas and migrated to Palouse, where the mother bought a farm and he managed it until 1890. In that year he bought a farm for himself and, in addition to general farming, he devoted himself to raising hogs, which was the means of tiding him over the awful panic from 1893-6. He still owns the farm, which is a great proof of his ability and wisdom, for the most able of the farmers were called upon to give up their possessions.

In 1899 Mr. Reeves came to the reservation and settled on his present place adjoining Peck on the east. Here he has devoted himself to raising fruit and general farming; he has excellent buildings and his place is one of the neat and comfortable ones of the county.

On December 24, 1891, Mr. Reeves married Miss Laura B., daughter of George H. and Itha J. (Gaut) Sawyer. Mr. Sawyer was born in Oregon in 1847 and is now one of the prosperous farmers and stockmen of Latah county. His wife was also born in Oregon, the date being October 14, 1852, and her parents settled in that state in 1845. Mrs. Reeves was born in Oregon, on June 17, 1872. She was educated at Philomath College and has two brothers, Elmer, deceased; Charles, at home near Palouse. Mr. Reeves has two sisters and one brother,—Bell Anderson, near Palouse; Anna Rudd, deceased; Orletus, in Latah county. To Mr. and Mrs. Reeves there have been born four children, Milly, Pearl, Rubena and Enoch L. In national politics Mr. Reeves is a Republican but in all other matters of government he selects the man from the intrinsic worth of the candidates. Mr. Reeves has spent his odd moments in perfecting himself in the taxidermist's art and had some fine specimens on exhibition at the fairs in Lewiston and Peck.

CASSIUS M. COLE. At the present time Mr. Cole is one of the prosperous and well-to-do citizens of Nez Perces county. His family home is situated on his estate of two hundred and forty acres about three miles north from Culdesac. He has a fine farm, is getting it well improved and is raising stock in addition to a general farming business and fruit culture. He has between one and two acres of fine strawberries, owns some excellent specimens of Poland China hogs, has a good Percheron stallion and is beginning to launch out in stock more extensively. His buildings consist of comfortable house and outbuildings, the former being situated in a naturally sheltered spot and when Mr. Cole gets his plans carried out and his estate improved he will have one of the best rural abodes in the county.

Cassius M. Cole was born in Knoxville, Knox county, Illinois, on March 17, 1852, being the son of Asa V. and Lucy (Doty) Cole. They were farmers and in 1856 the family went to Santa Clara county, California. There our subject received his education in the public schools and in Gates Business College in San Jose. When twenty he started in the retail liquor buiness in Tulare county and five years were spent there. He also continued in other places in the state and at the time of the Coeur d'Alene excitement, he took in the first sawmill and also a stock of general merchandise to that section and thirteen years were spent in industrial efforts there. He built the first sawmill on Eagle creek, built the first jail in Shoshone county, Pierce City being the county seat. Next we see him in Palouse where he loaned money for eight years and then repaired to Harrison and built the Hotel Harrison, which he operated for two years. A time was spent in Portland and later we see him in Astoria, but on account of the fishermen's strike there which stagnated business he moved to Lewiston and did business for five years. Later he settled on his present land and is now turning his attention to the industrial life again.

Mr. Cole married Miss Emma Fairbank, a native of Iowa, in 1886, and to them have been born five children, Clarence, Herbert, May, Edith, and Cassius Dell. May is the wife of Frank Lehmicke in Kendrick. Mrs. Cole has the following brothers and sisters: Robert, Thomas, James, Minnie, wife of Mr. Morris; Grace, wife of Ward Allen; Jane, wife of Henry Erickson, a photographer in Moscow; Eva, wife of Mr. Turnbow. Mrs. Cole's father was a veteran of the Mexican war, and is now deceased. Mr. Cole is a member of the I. O. R. M., at Lewiston, Idaho. In political matters he is a Democrat and was deputy sheriff under John Costillo, in Kootenai county in 1894. At the same time he was deputy United States marshal under Joe Pinkham. He was nominated by acclamation for delegate to the legislature in 1894, but resigned in favor of Judge Hogan of Kootenai county. Mr. Cole has always taken an active part in political matters and is a leader in his party, yet has never pressed himself for preferment, being willing to give the offices to others. Mr. Cole has also been active in prospecting in different sections and is now interested with W. Kittenbaugh, of the Lewiston National Bank, in some promising properties. He is skilled in minerals and in prospecting as well as in the methods of the developing of properties and Mr. Cole is one of the leaders in pushing forward this important industry.

LAWSON W. WARLICK. In the persons of this gentleman and his estimable wife we have the exemplification of the true spirit of the pioneer and a demonstration of genuine stability and courage, for they came to the reservation country carrying a rake and a hoe and making the trip on foot. Their fine ranch is situated about one mile northeast from Peck and is embellished with substantial improvements and bears annually abundant crops of all the cereals, including corn, the place being one of a half a dozen on the reservation that will produce that fine grain. Mr. Warlick has shown commendable pluck and skill and has now the reward of his labors in this goodly home and estate.

Lawson W. Warlick was born in Calhoun county, Alabama, on May 5, 1860, being the son of Lawson and Polly (McGinnis) Warlick, natives of North Carolina. The father was born in North Carolina in 1826, was impressed by General Lee into Confederate service although a strong Republican. He died in 1873. The mother was born in 1827 and died in 1862, being of Scotch extraction. When Lawson was two years old his parents removed to Dallas, Gaston county, North Carolina, that being the old home place of the father. There he grew to manhood and received his education. Later he learned the art of the engineer and also the business of operating a planing mill. When seventeen he went to western Kansas and wrought in the round house on the Kansas Pacific at Wallace. Then he fired some time and at the age of twenty-three he took his first orders on the Denver, Texas & Fort Worth. When twenty-six he returned to North Carolina and remained two years. On April 16, 1889, Mr. Warlick came to Lagrange, Oregon, and thence to Long valley, Idaho, where he took a piece of government land. Proving up on it in two years, he returned to Lagrange and labored in the sawmills for six years. It was 1898 that he came to the reservation country and settled on his present place. Fifty dollars was the sum of the earthly possessions, with the rake and hoe mentioned above, of Mr. Warlick and his wife when they footed it to their land. They are now well-to-do.

On October 9, 1887, Mr. Warlick married Miss Lanie, daughter of John and Barbara (Kiser) Smith, the wedding occurring in North Carolina. Mr. Smith was born in North Carolina and his ancestors for generations back were pioneers and land owners there. Mrs. Smith was also born there and came from an honorable pioneer family. Her father was impressed in the Confederate army although he was a stanch Republican. Mrs. Warlick was born on January 13, 1872, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Maggie, Thomas, Luther, Lizzie, Charles. Mr. Warlick has the following brothers and sisters: Rubertus, Abraham, Mary C., deceased, and one half-sister, Martha Candis. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Warlick, Bessie. Mr. Warlick formerly belonged to the Firemen's Brotherhood. He is a stanch Republican and votes the ticket straight and is a zealous supporter of Republican principles. He is a zealous worker for good roads and schools and does much labor for these worthy ends.

CHARLES R. TIEDE. An old adage says that where there is a will there is a way, and it seems that this was fully exemplified in the life of our subject in his struggles to get to the reservation country. He was working on a squater's right at Gray's harbor and was practically without means and when he saw that this land was not to come into market for some time, he determined to see the reservation, and accordingly he and his father set out on foot to make the journey from that place to Nez Perces county. He sold a horse to gain money enough for the necessaries of the journey and they started. While crossing the Cascades they were lost and wandered four days without food. One month was consumed before they saw the land they sought and then on June 20, 1896, he filed on his present place, three miles southeast from Gifford. Since that time, Mr. Tiede has given himself to improvement and tilling his ranch and he is now possessed of a good holding in worldly goods. His ranch is valuable and well improved and he has made a commendable showing.

Charles R. Tiede was born in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, on March 11, 1873, being the son of Herman L. and Louisa (Youst) Tiede. The father was a native of northern Germany and came to the United States when he was twenty. Charles was the youngest of seven children and his mother died when he was a child. In 1878 he went with his father to Hamilton county, Nebraska, and in 1885 they removed to Seward county, the same state. There the father owned and operated a grist mill for five years. On October 1, 1889, our subject came to Portland and labored as a longshoreman for a time, then went to Grays harbor and engaged to run a planer, also settling on a piece of land. Later, he heard of the reservation country and came hither as we have described.

On March 19, 1901, Mr. Tiede married Mrs. Mary Herider, daughter of John and Marguerette Gertje, natives of Germany. They migrated to Minnesota where Mrs. Tiede was born and they now live in the Potlatch country. Mrs. Tiede had one child by her former marriage, John Herider, born May 23, 1897. To Mr. and Mrs. Tiede there has been born one child, Louisa.

GEORGE A. ROBERTS is entrusted with the responsibilities and intricacies of the postoffice at Culdesac, while he also oversees his farm, which lies two and one-half miles northeast from the town. He is a man of uprightness and integrity and stands well in the community, has had considerable experience in this western country and has wrought with a strong hand and manifestation of sagacity in the development of the resources of the country.

George A. Roberts was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on September 17, 1861, being the son of Joseph and Sarah (Unangst) Roberts. The father was a carpenter, born in Ohio, in 1833, a pioneer to Iowa, and now lives in Missouri. His father was born in Vermont. The mother of our subject was born in Pennsylvania in 1839 and still lives. Her parents were natives of Pennsylvania also. When George was three years old the family came to Jackson county, Iowa, and there he grew to young manhood. He attended the schools of his native place, and worked between times. At the age of twenty he decided to try the issues of fortune for himself and so came west to Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. For fifteen months he resided in the Willamette valley and then came to Walla Walla. He married there and went to Whitman county, taking a preemption and timber culture. He did well, then sold out and railroaded for a couple of years, after which he repaired to Lincoln county and raised stock until the Nez Perce reservation opened up. It was in 1896 that he took his present place which he improved in good shape. He has fine orchard, buildings, and so forth. In 1901 he was appointed postmaster at Culdesac and he has discharged the duties incumbent upon him there in a becoming manner and with credit to himself and the community.

On September 4, 1884, Mr. Roberts married Miss Mattie, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Spear) Leaming. The father of Mrs. Roberts is a stockman, born in Indiana, in 1822. The mother was born in Ohio in 1836 and died in 1895. Mrs. Roberts was born in Thayer county, Nebraska, in 1863, being the first white child born in the county. She has the following brothers and sisters: Carrie Hamlin, in Culdesac; Frances Logsdon, at Endicott, Washington; Wesley, in the Colville reservation, Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have been born three children, Montie, deceased; Blanche, and Evertie. Mr. Roberts has brothers and sisters named as follows: Park, Minnie Latshaw, Minor, Earl, and Bertrand. Mr. Roberts is a member of the I. O. O. F., while his wife is a member of the Presbyterian church. In political matters he is allied with the Republicans and takes an active hand in this realm, always attending the conventions and primaries. He labors incessantly for good schools and is clerk of the board at the present time.

AUSTIN D. GREGORY is manager of the largest warehouses in Culdesac, and they are owned by the Vollmer-Clearwater Company, and do the most extensive business in the county.

Mr. Gregory was born in Monroe, Michigan, on January 17, 1872, being the son of John S. and Elizabeth Mary (White) Gregory. The father was an attorney for the Union Pacific Railroad for many years and now lives in Galveston, Texas. Austin D. was educated in the common schools and came to Lewiston in 1896. He was engaged by the Clearwater Grain Company and soon had charge of a warehouse at Spalding and later assumed his present position.

GEORGE M. HENDERSON. A leading and successful business man in Culdesac, a man of excellent capabilities, and withal a pioneer of the west and one who has wrought with faithfulness in many places and avocations, the subject of this article is eminently fitted for representation in the history of his county.

George M. Henderson was born in Appanoose county, Iowa, on August 10, 1857, being the son of John A. and Matilda J. (York) Henderson. The mother died in 1863. Our subject remained on the farm until eighteen years old, having been educated in the public schools. He then learned the trade of the engineer and several years later came across the plains with his father and brother. They wintered in Boise valley where their cattle died and they traded one cart for a sack of flour. In the spring they went to Idaho City and there the father did well on the purchase of some mining property. A few years later they came to Walla Walla and there the father was sick for some time. He made several trips to the east and on July 28, 1897, he died. Our subject followed engineering in Walla Walla and later bought a farm near Dayton. He sold a couple of years later and went to Walla Walla, later returned to Dayton and was deputy sheriff under J. H. Hosler. When the Nez Perces war broke out he participated in quelling the savages. After that he went to Whitman county and remained there until 1900, when he came to Clarkston, Washington, and for one year operated a bus and feed stable. Then in July, 1901, he came to Culdesac, opened a furniture store, where we find him at the present time doing a good business.

Mr. Henderson married Miss Mattie E. Benge, who was born in Davis county, Iowa, on January 14, 1859. Her parents were Dr. Louis W. and Cynthia Ann (Sheffer) Benge. The family came to the Walla Walla valley in September, 1862, settling on the Oregon side. The father operated a farm and practiced medicine and was county commissioner several terms. There were three boys and three girls in the family besides Mrs. Henderson. Mr. Henderson is a Democrat and active in political matters. He is a member of the W. W., Camp No. 230 of Johnson, Washington, while his wife is a member of the Ladies Circle of this order, at the same place. To Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have born three children: Eva L., Charles B. and Claude R.

HAZEN SQUIER. This well known business man and representative pioneer of the county of Nez Perces, as also of other sections of the west, is among the leading and prominent men of our country and although formerly one of the most active business men of Lewiston, is now retired from the arena and is enjoying the competence which his industry has accumulated. Mr. Squier was born in Weathersfield, Vermont, on May 9, 1835, being the son of John and Louisa A. (Kendall) Squier. The father was a marble worker and engraver, born in Vermont, on March 18, 1807, being of English extraction. He died on May 15, 1885. The mother was born January 31, 1811, and died July 5, 1890, in Vermont. The subject of this sketch received a good common school and seminary education and at the age of seventeen was employed as clerk in a country store in Vermont. Two years later, led by an adventurous spirit to the west, he went to St. Clair, Michigan, and thence to Lexington, clerking two years in each place. It was 1858 when he determined to try San Francisco, and came there via Panama. He went thence to Oroville, Butte county, and engaged in placer mining for two years. Failing of success in that venture, he then came, in 1862, overland to Portland, and in July enlisted in the Washington Territory Volunteer Infantry, understanding the regiment was to go east. He was taken to Vancouver instead, and was detailed as clerk in the quartermaster's department. In December, the company was ordered to The Dalles, to relieve Company A, of the Ninth Infantry, which was sent east. Mr. Squier remained in the quartermaster's department until his term of service expired in July, 1865. He had charge of the quartermaster and commissary department during his time of service and after his discharge he was appointed quartermaster's clerk at The Dalles. In November, 1865, he was sent to Fort Lapwai, Idaho, where he remained until the abandonment of that post. He then came to Lewiston, traveled some, and in 1869 settled here permanently. He was appointed United States district clerk for the first judicial district of Idaho territory, in May, 1871, under the territorial government, and for sixteen years, or until 1887, he served in that capacity. He was one year in the United States land office, was county treasurer for two years and has held various municipal offices. During the Indian war in 1877, he was quartermaster's clerk for the depot at Lewiston. Since that time Mr. Squier has been in various lines of business until 1896, when he had a partial stroke of paralysis and then he retired from active business. He owns considerable city property, one business house, and ranches in various quarters.

The marriage of Mr. Squier and Louise Beck was solemnized in Lewiston, in November, 1876. Mr. Squier has brothers and sisters as follows: Delos K., in Newark, New Jersey; Frances L., deceased; Stella A., wife of Albert M. Whitelow, living in Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Squier have become the parents of two children, Leslie E., attending the dental department of the University of Pennsylvania; Elton K., in Lewiston. Mr. Squier is a member of the A. O. U. W., the I. O. O. F., and the A. F. and A. M., blue lodge and chapter, having been allied with the latter order since 1868. Politically, he is a Republican. Mr. Squire is an affable and genial gentleman, has seen much of the frontier life and has done much for the advancement and upbuilding of this county.

WILLIAM THATCHER. In the town of Culdesac, this enterprising business man conducts a well kept and thrifty meat market and he is doing a good business, while he ever manifests those capabilities of success and industry that are commendable.

William Thatcher was born in Adams county, Ohio, on October 4, 1870, being the son of Samuel and Martha (Wilmoth) Thatcher. William grew up on a farm and was educted in the public schools. When eighteen he went to Montana and for nine years he was engaged in various occupations there. Three of those years were spent in the regular army and he had the rank of corporal and also sergeant. Following this he came to Harrison, Idaho, and for eighteen months wrought there and then numbered himself with the citizens of Culdesac. In November, 1901, he opened a meat market here and since that time he has been doing a good business. He displays good business ability, is a genial companion, a loyal friend, a patriotic and substantial citizen, and withal a well respected man and of excellent standing. Politically Mr. Thatcher is allied with the Republicans and takes an intelligent interest in this realm. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 65; also of the M. W. A., Spalding Camp, of Culdesac. Mr. Thatcher is also an enthusiastic member of the Sons of Veterans, Buena Vista Camp, No. 69, of Buena Vista, Ohio, and in this order he has held every office except captain. The father of our subject is a prominent G. A. R. man and has an exceptionally brilliant war record, having served throughout the entire conflict with great credit and manifestation of bravery and courage. He was a sergeant in the Seventieth Ohio Volunteers, Company C, under Captain R. F. Hughes. Thomas Brown, an uncle of Mrs. Thatcher, also served in the Civil war.

In 1892 Mr. Thatcher married Miss Mamie E.

HAZEN SQUIER.

Phillips, who was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on June 7, 1874. They have one son, William Warren Thatcher, who was born on April 26, 1894, in Miles City, Montana.

WILLIAM H. SIMMONS is one of the substantial and respected citizens of Central ridge, a man of uprightness and governed by sound principles, thoroughly alive to the welfare of the community and an enterprising and industrious agriculturist. He was born in Randolph county, Indiana, on January 31, 1861, his parents being John and Martha (Woodin) Simmons. At the age of seven, he went with his parents to Douglas county, Kansas, and there grew up and received his education. His mother died in 1873, but the father lives still in Douglas county. In 1891 Mr. Simmons came to Moscow, and there engaged for wages in farm work. At the opening of the reservation for settlement, on November 18, 1895, he was among the first to locate and so secured a choice piece of land. It is situated about twelve miles southeast from Peck and is a model farm in every respect of care and husbandry. Mr. Simmons has comfortable buildings and has made his farm to produce abundantly. One cannot realize fully the hardships, the deprivations and arduousness of the pioneer's labors, until on the ground for himself. But we may say that Mr. Simmons has endured his share and also has done his full part in the improvement and advancement of the country. He has taken hold with willing hands, shows wise plans and has accomplished results worthy of his efforts and commendable in every respect. Mr. Simmons is a devout and zealous member of the United Brethren church and is steward of the organization on Central ridge. His standing with the people of the community is of the best and he is one of the foremost and leading citizens. Mr. Simmons is also still a participator of the quiet joys of the celibatarian.

THEODORE CURRY. The record of Mr. Curry from the time he landed in the reservation country until the present is like a tale of fairyland, looking at it from the point of the observer. He landed here in the spring of 1896, with a couple of poor horses, and a wagon, seven sacks of flour and nothing else, not even a penny; and to-day he is proprietor of a fine quarter, all paid for, all the tools necessary for its cultivation, owns a thresher, considerable stock, good improvements on the farm, and harvested about twenty-five hundred bushels of grain this year. This is a fine record and we cannot credit it all to the fertile country, for we observe the enterprise, the keen foresight, careful management and energy of our subject and that accounts for the success.

Theodore Curry was born in Ashland county, Ohio, on November 18, 1866, being the son of Matthew and Elise E. (Walker) Curry. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1825, went to Kansas in 1872, where he still lives. The mother of our subject was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1846 and came to the United States with her parents when she was eight. Our subject went to Kansas with his parents when he was five and settlement was made in Coffey county, where they farmed for nine years and did well. Then a move was made to Leadville, Colorado, where the father freighted and when Theodore had finished his education he went to work in the mines and continued for four years. On October 18, 1890, he came to Spokane and worked one year and then went to Stevens county and farmed and later we see him mining in the Kootenai country. In the early spring of 1896 he came with his brother William and each took land as mentioned above.

In November, 1898, Mr. Curry married Jennie M., daughter of James and Aggeness (Noltia) Walker, natives of Ashland county, Ohio, and Scotland, respectively. Mrs. Curry was born in Ashland county in 1878, and she has the following named brothers and sisters: Agnes, Edith, Grace, Florence, Len, Everett, all in Washington. Mr. Curry has the following brothers and sisters: Mary A. Scow, in Nez Perces county; Maggie A. Marion, of Boise; William, Elise, Matthew and Earl, all in this county. Three children have come to bless and gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. Curry, Ray, Hughue, and an infant unnamed. The family are members of the Methodist church and Mr. Curry is a man of independence in politics. In educational matters he is greatly interested for improvement and that the country should be provided with the best schools.

WILLIAM BRAMMER. It is seldom, indeed, that one has the pleasure of chronicling the events in the life of one who fought in the recent struggle for the freedom of the Boers. Such is the case, however, with the gentlemen whose life's career we now assay to outline.

William Brammer was born in Germany, on December 16, 1864, being the son of William and Sophia (Hiestermann) Brammer. The father was born in Germany in 1840, acted as forester there for a nobleman until 1892, when he came to this country. The mother of our subject was also born in Germany, the date being 1841, and died in 1899. William was educated in his native place, and when nineteen he determined to go to south Africa. His cousin was to accompany him, but at the last moment he backed out and our subject was left to try it alone. He was of the metal that goes through and so as a British immigrant he went to the colony and wrought as a stock raiser. At the opening of the gold fields, he imbibed the fever and continued to search for the treasures of the soil from 1885 until 1893, when a different fever seized him, the malarial fever, and he was obliged to seek a higher altitude. He learned the bricklayer's trade in the Transvaal and worked at it from 1895 to 1899, at Standerton; when the war broke out he at once took up the cause of the Boers. While he could have gone to the field, he believed he could render better service for the country in acting as fireman on a locomotive that carried munitions of war and there he served until the English took him and all the officials of the road prisoners of war and he was deported to Germany. His stay was seventeen years in Africa and was a citizen of the Transvaal. In 1901 Mr. Brammer came to America and at the present time he is operating his father's and brother George's farms, three miles east from Lookout.

On August 6, 1894, Mr. Brammer married Miss Mary, daughter of Frederick and Christine (Eggers) Renner, the wedding occurring in the Transvaal. Mr. Renner was a native of Germany and went to south Africa in 1892, there working at his trade of brick-mason. Mrs. Brammer was born in Germany, in 1867. She has three brothers in Germany, one brother and one sister in the Transvaal, and one sister in America. Mr. Brammer has two brothers, George, county commissioner of Nez Perces county; Henry, a farmer in the county. The following children have been born to our subject and his faithful wife, William and Frieda, born in the Transvaal, and Henry, born in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Brammer are members of the German Lutheran church.

SOLOMON J. POOL is now a prosperous farmer, residing six miles northeast from Mohler, but he informs us that when he came here in February, 1896, he had seventy-five cents and three horses. The fine holding of property that he now has was all secured by his faithful and enterprising labors in the intervening years. His farm is one of the best in the country, is well improved and produces abundantly. Mr. Pool had to endure many hardships in getting a start, having to go to the Palouse country for three successive years to work for wages and then would bring supplies back. He hauled his grain at first clear to Spalding and five days were consumed in a trip. Now he is close to market and the returns of his skillfully handled farm are bringing him a gratifying competency in this world's goods.

Solomon J. Pool was born in White county, Indiana, on August 17, 1855, being the son of Jeremiah and Almira (Hilderbrand) Pool, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. They were married in White county, Indiana. Solomon was reared on a farm and remained with his parents until the father's death in 1872. The mother is now living in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Solomon went to Fremont county, Iowa, in 1875 and there lived until 1889. During this time he spent two years in western Colorado in the mines and timber. In 1889 he fitted out a mule team and wagon and made the trip to Seattle, Washington. He wintered in Saratoga springs and completed the trip the next spring. Mr. Pool logged a time on the Sound and then returned to Yakima, and later went to Dayton, Washington. In 1893 he was in the Pierce City country, mining, and then repaired to the Potlatch country. On February 27, 1896, he came to his present location, and this has been his home and the scene of his labors since that time. He has a first class orchard, a large barn, a good house and many other improvements that make the estate valuable and attractive. It was tough work at the beginning, for Mr. Pool tells us that many times he was forced to sleep on the snow and he labored hard and long hours, but success has rewarded his industry and he is one of the substantial men of the community. Mr. Pool is a man of good principles, stands well with the people, as he has always done in all the places where he has lived, and he is always allied on the side of progress.

JOHN W. THOMAS is a progressive and capable young man, whose labors have been crowned with abundant success in the acquisition of the goods of this world, while also he has been one of the foremost ones in the upbuilding and material welfare of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, where he has labored faithfully since taking his present place, ten miles southeast from Peck, in 1896. From the wild land, it has been transformed to a valuable and fertile farm that is placed under tribute by his skillful husbandry to return annual dividends of bounteous crops. A large orchard of bearing trees, a modern and tasty six-room house, a commodious barn and many other improvements testify to the labor and wisdom manifested.

John W. Thomas was born in Howell county, Missouri, on September 14, 1870, being the son of Nathan and Obelia (Forbes) Thomas, natives of Yancey county, North Carolina, and Lee county, Virginia, respectively. They were married in North Carolina and came to Howell county, Missouri, where the father farmed until January 21, 1881, the date of his death. The mother died in September, 1891. In the spring of 1893, Mr. Thomas came to Juliaetta, and went to work for his brother. He had five dollars cash then and all his goodly holdings have been wrought out by his industry since that time. Just previous to the opening of the reservation, Mr. Thomas spent some time traveling over it and when the opportunity presented itself to file he was in position to locate the ground he desired. Time has shown his judgment to have been good.

On May 20, 1894, Mr. Thomas married Miss Jennie Jayne, who had lived in Howell county, Missouri. Two children have come to gladden the union, Howard, born January 14, 1895; Benjamin Martin, born April 21, 1901. Mr. Thomas' father was a soldier in the Confederate army and participated in the following notable battles, Fair Oaks, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, besides others and many skirmishes. Our subject is a zealous disciple of Nimrod and has made four different trips to the Salmon river country to hunt deer. In these he has taken as his trophies thirty-six of the fleet footed creatures and he is a skillful man with a rifle in the chase.

ALBERT C. HARDMAN. Ten miles southeast from Peck is the fine estate of Mr. Hardman. When he took this land under the homestead right, in February, 1896, the country was very different in its appearance from the present time, as is also his farm. Then no roads crossed the country, nor fences, no families, except two in remote places, and everything was wild as from the hands of nature. Mr. Hardman displayed good judgment in selecting a fine piece of land and in April following his location, his family came to take up the pioneer's life with him. They were victims of the panic in the years just previous to that and so came with very little of this world's goods. At once they set to labor and so well have they wrought that now the farm is one of the finest about. Four hundred bearing trees, the farm is all fenced, good buildings are in evidence and the annual returns of bounteous crops are the due reward of the industry and thrift bestowed.

A more detailed account of Mr. Hardman's life is desirable. We note that he was born in Davis county, Iowa, on February 18, 1860, being the son of George and Jane (Calvert) Hardman, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and New Brunswick. They were married in Iowa and the father died in 1860. In 1864, with his mother and her parents, our subject was brought across the plains to Walla Walla. The trip was made by ox teams and consumed six months. Albert lived on a farm near Walla Walla with his mother until he was seventeen and then went to Adams, in Umatilla county, and settled on lieu land. There, on October 13, 1881, Mr. Hardman married Miss Lucy, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Kees) Gallaher. Mr. Gallaher came across the plains in 1848 to western Oregon, from Iowa. His wife came with her parents from Missouri and they were married in Linn county, Oregon; later they removed to Umatilla county, where Mrs. Hardman was born December 7, 1864. In 1889 Mr. Hardman brought his family to Fairfield, Washington, where he farmed until the time when he came to the reservation, as mentioned above. The mother of Mr. Hardman is now living in Adams, Umatilla county. Mrs. Hardman's parents are living near Kamiah. To Mr. and Mrs. Hardman there have been born four children: Royden L., born June 19, 1883; Carroll P., born July 23, 1885; William A., born November 15, 1887; Owen M., born March 21, 1890. Mr. Hardman and his faithful wife are devout members of the United Brethren church and are worthy citizens who exert a good influence in the community where they are highly respected.

JOHN W. HAWTHORN is one of the well known and prosperous business men of Culdesac, at the present time operating a livery stable in partnership with John Whalen. He is a man of uprightness and integrity and is the recipient of the confidence and esteem of the people. In addition to the livery business they handle a hundred and eighty acres of land that is rented from the Indians, and which they farm to flax, oats and barley. Mr. Hawthorn has a good business and the untiring care and attention bestowed for the comfort, accommodation and safety of his guests has built it to its present lucrative dimensions.

John W. Hawthorn was born in Jefferson county, Iowa, on July 1, 1854, being the son of Jesse and Hannah (Barnett) Hawthorn. He grew up on a farm and was educated in the schools of his native place. When twenty-four he started into the battle of life on his own responsibility and his first ventures were to rent land and farm and then to operate on different railroads and in livery work. About 1891 Mr. Hawthorn came to Washington, landing first at Pomeroy. Then he worked on ranches in Asotin county about three years. It was 1894 when he came to the reservation in the vicinity of Lapwai. Here he was engaged for wages on different farms until the reservation opened and then he took a quarter section and proved up on it in 1901. In the same year he opened the livery and since has divided his time between it and the prosecution of the farming industry. Mr. Hawthorn had but little of this world's goods when he filed on the land but by his industry and wisdom in management he has accumulated gratifying holding. Mr. Hawthorn was married in 1872.

One daughter was born to him, Josephine, wife of Arthur Haskins, a farmer on Snell gluch, in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Hawthorn was called away by death.

Mr. Hawthorn has four sisters and no brothers, and the other members of the family, besides himself, all live in Iowa. In his career here, it is with pleasure that we are enabled to state that Mr. Hawthorn has so conducted himself that he has won the hearty good will and approval of all who know him and he is one of the prosperous and substantial citizens of good standing.

CHARLES A. WANN. Among the quota of Mohler's successful business men we must needs mention the estimable gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph, as he is conducting a general merchandise establishment there which his skill, good ability, and geniality have made a success in every sense of the word, and at the present time, his patronage is rapidly increasing.

Charles A. Wann was born in Misouri, on January 22, 1871, being the son of James H. and Sarah F. (Neil) Wann, mention of whom is made in this work elsewhere. Until ten, our subject was at the native place in Missouri, and then came with the family to Pataha City, Garfield county, Washington, and there and in Dayton he received the completion of his education. At seventeen he started in life for himself. Two years were spent in the store of Weiler & Wax, which his father managed at Cottonwood, Idaho. At nineteen he went east with a band of horses, consuming seven months in the trip. Returning to Cottonwood he embarked in the sheep and horse business with his father, which engaged their attention until 1897. Then Charles spent one year mining and railroading. Then a time was spent as bookkeeper of E. T. Brandon's general merchandise establishment at Culdesac. It was 1900 that Mr. Wann opened a small store at a postoffice named Howard, near where Mohler is now situated. When Mohler was started, he removed to his present location and as the business has built up, he has increased his stock and is now one of the leading merchants of this part of the reservation.

On April 22, 1893, Mr. Wann married Miss Hattie, daughter of William J. Wilburn, a native of Missouri. Mrs. Wann was born in California. Mr. Wann has three brothers, William D., residing at Spalding; Loren B., with J. G. Wright, at Culdesac; Norman J., residing with parents. Mr. Wann associated himself with George S. Martin in his merchandising efforts and together these gentlemen conduct their rapidly increasing business. Mr. Wann is a member of the I. O. O. F., Mohler Lodge, No. 60; of the Mohler Encampment, No. 20, being scribe; of the Mohler Camp, No. 612, W. W., being past consul; while he and his wife belong to the Jewel Lodge of Rebekahs, and the Mohler Circle of the W. W. Mrs. Wann is treasurer of the Rebekahs and past guardian of the later. Mr. Wann is a Democrat in political ideas; he is a familiar figure in the conventions and is a very successful and powerful personage in these affairs, although he has never pressed for personal preferment. He served as deputy assessor in Idaho county in 1892. Mr. Wann is a popular man and stands well among all who know him. He is managing his business with commendable wisdom, and is doing his part for substantial upbuilding and progress of the county.

HOLLIS W. KEITH. The reservation portion of our county has been the place where many have won the smiles of fortune and have come from the depleted resources of hard times to have plenty and be prospered abundantly. Among that number is the enterprising and industrious young farmer whom we mention at the head of this article.

Hollis W. Keith was born in Boone county, Missouri, on April 4, 1872, being the son of George G. and Ann Maria (Willis) Keith. The father was born in Kentucky, in 1828 and died in 1901, having been a pioneer in Missouri and also in Washington. The mother was born in New Jersey, in 1830 and still lives in Idaho. Her father, John Willis, was a forty-niner in California. Hollis grew to manhood in Missouri and was educated in the public schools. When seventeen he came west to Colfax, Washington, The father joined him in a few months and together they farmed near St. John, that state. In 1893, they explored the Salmon river country and soon returned to the vicinity of Pullman where they farmed until 1897, when the reservation lands attracted them and our subject took his present place, two miles southeast from Lenore. He owns one hundred and thirty-nine acres, raises domestic stock, does general farming and has good improvements, being prospered. Mr. Keith also handles a threshing outfit and he is a leading man and stands well. His two brothers, Jesse G. and Allen, took land also, and the father came to the reservation with them.

In January, 1892, Mr. Keith married Miss Nora McArty. The wedding occurred at St. John. Her father, Adam McArty, married Miss St. John, whose father started and named the town of St. John. Mr. St. John was a merchant and an old soldier. His death occurred in 1895. Mrs. Keith was born in Kansas in 1878 and died April 11, 1902, having borne four children, Albert J., Arthur C., Alice B. and Georgia M., who are all at home with their father. Mr. Keith has the following named brothers and sisters: John W., in this county; William M., in Missouri; Allen B. and Jesse G., both in the reservation country; Catherine Boyer, Mary E. Barnett, both at Odessa, Washington; Anna M. Hitchings, near Sunset, Washington. Mr. Keith is a Democrat but is sufficiently independent to reserve his vote for the man rather than the party. He is a zealous supporter of good schools and is wide awake for the betterment of the country and its advancement.

HERMAN L. TIEDE. A stanch and sturdy son of the Fatherland, whose labors have been bestowed with wisdom in the development and upbuilding of this western country for a term of years, and who is now one of the industrious farmers of Nez Perces county, the subject of this sketch is deserving of special mention in the history of his county.

Herman L. Tiede was born in Prussia on May 10, 1841, being the son of Samuel F. and Caroline C. (Streitz) Tiede, natives of Prussia and died in 1877 and 1880, respectively. Herman was educated in his native land and learned the trade of the miller from his father. Working at this and serving in the army, he passed the time in Germany until he was twenty-four and then came to Chicago. Thence he made his way to Watertown, Wisconsin, and farmed for six years. After this he went to Hamilton county, Nebraska, and after a brief period of farming, he purchased a flouring mill in Seward county. After five years of this, he was financially on the debit side and so sold and came to Lewis county, Washington, in 1888. In 1895 he migrated thence to Cameron, Idaho, and there was his home until 1897, when he came and secured his present place, two miles northeast from Lookout. He owns eighty acres, does a general farming business and raises some stock, having comfortable improvements.

In 1866, Mr. Tiede married Miss Louise Tesch and five children were born to this union, but in 1876 Mrs. Tiede was called away by death. In 1878, January 12, Mr. Tiede married a second time, the lady becoming his wife was Bertha Arndt. Her parents, August and Amelia (Newman) Arndt, were born in Germany and her father was a soldier in his native land and wrought also at farming and blacksmithing. Mrs. Tiede was born in Germany in 1861 and came to the United States in 1870. Mr. Tiede has two brothers and two sisters in Germany. The following named children have been born to the household, August, Sidoni, Alfred, Herman, Mary, Emil, Paul, Otto, Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Tiede are devout members of the Lutheran church; while in politics, Mr. Tiede is a Democrat and is a zealous advocate of good schools.

EUGENE F. GOFFINET. Much credit is due those whose labors and energy have built up the reservation country, and one deserving of especial mention in this connection is the gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph. Eugene F. Goffinet was born in Perry county, Indiana, on March 20, 1869, being the son of Charles and Mary (Collin) Goffinet. The mother died in Indiana in 1891, and the following year the father came to dwell with our subject and is now in his seventy-eighth year. In 1874 the family left Indiana and migrated to San Francisco, thence to Sonora and there the father engaged in mining and carpentering until 1884, when they all returned to Indiana. Eugene attended the common schools in the various places where he resided in his boyhood days, and in 1887 went to Daviess county, Kentucky, and there wrought for the Cincinnati Cooperage Company, getting out staves. This was then one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world. In 1892 he came to Fairfield, Washington, and there labored for a salary until 1896 when he came to the reservation and took his present place, ten miles southeast from Peck. He has good land and has shown skillful husbandry and industry in the improvement and tilling of it since that time. He has a good orchard and other improvements and the annual returns of his land are very gratifying. The country was sparsely settled when Mr. Goffinet came here and he had the hardships that are the lot of the pioneer to endure, and especially was it hard with him as his means were very limited. But he labored on with courage and determination, using the best of wisdom in all his endeavors, until he has achieved a success that is the proper crown of such worthy endeavors. Mr. Goffinet is one of the highly respected men of this section, and he is an influential citizen. His father has a homestead near and has taken great interest in the improvement of the country and the days of the golden years of his life are being spent in the good labors of bringing fruitful returns from the fertile soil of this favored region.

WILLIAM M. BLAIR. This well known and enterprising young business man of Ilo is esteemed not only for the ability and energy displayed in his business career, but also because he is a man of integrity and withal of a genial and affable nature and possessed of sound principles.

William M. Blair was born in Lee county, Iowa, on May 14, 1870, being the son of Charles F. and Elizabeth A. (Lyen) Blair. His father was a merchant, born in Cattaraugus county, New York, on August 14, 1836. He was a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting in Company B, Thirteenth Iowa Infantry, under Colonel Rankin. The paternal grandparents of our subject were pioneers in Jefferson county, Iowa, in 1840. The mother of William M. was born in Washington county, Iowa, in 1839, her parents being pioneers there in 1837. The family remained in Iowa until our subject was fourteen and there he attended school. Then they removed to Wellington and later to Pratt county, Kansas, where the father took land and farmed. William remained there four years and then returned to his old Iowa home and worked for Carson & Rand, lumbermen of Keokuk, where two years were spent. Then two years were spent in Pratt county, Kansas. In 1893 he went to the Cherokee strip and gained land as it opened. Two years later he went to Hope, Kansas, and there operated a short order house for two years. He then spent two years driving teams for stock companies in different portions of that country, then returned to Pratt county and later went to the opening of the Arrapahoe and Cheyenne lands, but failing to get lands that suited him, he came thence to Ilo, and here erected a house and livery barn. He has devoted his attention to this business since and is having a good trade. He has a good stable and is an accommodating man, ever looking for the comfort and safety of his patrons.

Mr. Blair has the following named brothers and sisters: George R., in Pratt county, Kansas; Mary S. Miller, in Kansas City, Missouri; Annie B. Balner, in Pontiac, Illinois; John R., in Sawyer, Kansas. He is a member of the M. W. A., and in political matters he is active and interested, always supporting the principles of the Republican party. Mr. Blair is a bachelor, preferring the quiet of the celibatarian's life to the cares of the connubial relation. His mother is living with him at the present time.

HENRY RIGGERS. The prevailing conditions of hardship for the laboring men in Germany have sent many of the sturdy sons of that land to seek their fortunes in the resourceful territory of this land of the free. Among this number is the worthy young gentleman of whom we now have the privilege of speaking. He is a man of industry, thrift and energy, and has labored in such a way that he has gained a goodly competence since locating here. His farm of one hundred and sixty acres is located three miles southeast from Gifford and was taken by him under the homestead right in 1896. He has bestowed his labor here since and it has produced such fine improvements, as house, barn, fences, orchard, and so forth, and the products of the soil have made Mr. Riggers a prosperous and well-to-do farmer. He raises cattle and hogs and feeds most of his grain to them. He raises flax for the market.

Henry Riggers was born in Germany in 1872, being the son of Henry and Mary Riggers, natives also of the fatherland. The father as born in 1829 and came to America in 1892. The mother was born in 1841. Henry was educated in his native land and came in his early manhood alone to Washington county, Kansas, where he labored until 1892, when he migrated to the vicinity of Genesee. There he wrought on the farms until the reservation opened and then he took the land as mentioned above.

On January 10, 1899, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Riggers married Miss Mary Kothe, who was born in Germany in October, 1879, and came to the United States when she was four years of age. Two children have been born to this union, Henry and Herman. Mr. Riggers has two brothers, William and Dietrich, both in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Riggers are members of the German Lutheran church. In political matters Mr. Riggers votes for a Republican president but as to others, he selects according to the man. He and his faithful wife are respected and worthy people and are among the most substantial citizens of our county.

JOHN HENRY BRAMMER. Without peradventure it is admitted that some of the most thrifty and substantial citizens of America come to us from the land of Germany. As a true specimen of the thrifty and industrious and keen business men of the fatherland, we note the young and well-to-do stockman and farmer, whose name initiates this paragraph. A brief review of his career will be interseting reading in the history of Nez Perces county and therefore we append it.

John H. Brammer was born in Germany, on June 5, 1869, being the son of William and Sophia (Heisterman) Brammer, also natives of the same country. The father was born in 1839 and came to the United States in 1893. He was a forester for Lord Von Rehden for many years previous to coming to America, and is now dwelling near Melrose. The mother of our subject was born in 1840 and died in 1900. John Henry was educated in his native land and often he and his father talked over the advantages of this country and together studied the financial condition here; finally in 1893 determined to try the venture of citizenship in the United States. They landed in New York on April 1, 1893, and at once came to Idaho, where settlement was made at Cameron and there they lived until February, 1896, when our subject filed on his present place, about two miles west from Melrose. He has bestowed with wisdom his labor in raising stock, general farming and so forth, and has been rewarded with the due meed of the industrious and capable, and is well possessed of the goods of this world. Mr. Brammer has recently sold the home place but is buying another and also contemplates starting in business in Melrose.

On December 7, 1900, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Brammer married Miss Lena, daughter of John and Mary (Gertje) Eihlers, natives of Germany, and now living in Cameron. Mrs. Brammer has two brothers and one sister, Herman, George and Emma, all at home. Mr. Brammer has the following brothers, William, who was a soldier in the South African war, now residing in this country; George, a farmer here, who was also in this country before our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Brammer are members of the German Lutheran church and staunch supporters of their faith. He is a man of his convictions and not only favors the Populist ticket, but votes it also. While in Germany, he was during the last years a soldier in the army and is well trained in military tactics.

OAKY W. LEGGETT. The little village of Ilo owes its birth to the efforts of the subject of this sketch. Through his efforts the postoffice was established and he named the place Ilo from his little daughter's name. He is a public minded man, takes liberal views of the questions of life, is always laboring for advancement and stands well among the people. Mr. Leggett operates a general merchandise establishment and has a good trade.

An outline of his career will be of interest to the readers of this volume and therefore we append the same. Oaky W. was born in Adair county, Iowa, on May 30, 1873, being the son of John L. and Emma (Johnson) Leggett. His father was born in Illinois in 1839. He was a merchant and farmer, was postmaster at Lathrop, Iowa, for twenty-five years, was railroad agent also, and county commissioner for six years. He fought the battles of the country in the Ninth Illinois Cavalry for three years in the Rebellion. He was a pioneer of Adair county and lives there still. His parents were natives of Illinois. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio, in 1849, her parents being natives of the same state. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa and there received his education. At the age of fifteen he took charge of a station at Rock Island, having learned telegraphy and the business from his father. Three years were spent there, next he operated as express agent from Des Moines for a time and then engaged with the Great Western for a time. After this, he returned to the farm and labored for four years. Next he opened a general merchandise establishment in Dana, Iowa, and did a good business until the store burned down. It was 1898 that he came to the coast and later to Lewiston. He engaged with the Small & Emory Lumber Company for a time and then came to Ilo, where he opened a general merchandise establishment, and as stated above, he succeeded in getting the postoffice established, of which he is postmaster, in addition attending to his mercantile business.

On March 7, 1894, Mr. Leggett married Miss Lillie M., daughter of Oscar and Elizabeth (Armstrong) Allen, natives of Ohio. The father was a blacksmith; both parents died when Mrs. Leggett was young. Mrs. Leggett was born in Iowa in 1874, graduated from the high school and taught for three years. She has two brothers and one sister, Charles H., Oscar F. and Hattie, all in Iowa. Mr. Leggett has the following named brothers and sisters: Anna, Bert L., Stella M., all in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Leggett have two children, Ilo and Dorothy. Mr. Leggett is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. He is a Republican in politics and labors for good government. He owns a farm near town and other property. Mr. Leggett takes great interest in good schools and in churches and at the present time he is assisting liberally to build the Presbyterian church at Ilo, although he is not a member of that denomination. Mr. Leggett's father, grandfather, and two uncles, Thomas J. Armstrong and John Spellman, all fought for the Union in the Rebellion. The two uncles were killed.

WARREN CLUGSTON is a man of varied and many experiences in the industries of this world, has traveled over the western portion of the United States, especially in the northwest, and is well satisfied that the reservation portion of Nez Perces county is one of the best sections in the west. He has a fine home and a good farm nine miles southeast from Peck, being a well-to-do and thrifty farmer. Warren Clugston was born in the vicinity of Salem, Ohio, on March 4, 1840, the son of James and Catherine Clugston, natives of Franklin county, Pennsylvania, where also they were married. An uncle of James Clugston, Captain John Clugston, was killed in the Revolution. In 1835 the parents of Warren moved to Ohio and in 1851 they came to McDonough county, Illinois, where he grew up and was educated. In 1862 he enlisted in Company H, Second Illinois Cavalry, and served under General Grant. He was in the battle of Holly Springs and many skirmishes but on account of disability was discharged some time before his enlistment of three years had run its course. In 1864 Mr. Clugston joined the Bozeman train of eighty wagons and four hundred men and started for the west, coming via the Bozeman cut off from the Platte. At Virginia City Mr. Clugston left the train and came to Idaho City, Idaho, where he mined. In the fall of 1865 he returned home, having three companions, The trip was made on horseback and one horse sufficed to carry the pack for the entire company.

On February 1, 1876, in McDonough county, Illinois, Mr. Clugston married Miss Ann E. Johnson and in 1879 they removed to Crawford county, Kansas, and farmed. Two children were born to this marriage, John C., near Peck; James L., in McDonough county, Illinois. Mrs. Clugston died on September 4, 1881. Mr. Clugston had purchased a farm in Carroll county, Missouri, and there, on July 2, 1883, he married Sena A., daughter of John and Grazelda (Barrier) Parker. Mrs. Clugston was born on July 8, 1860, in Richmond, Missouri. Two children were the fruit of this union, an infant that died on August 8, 1884, and Grazelda Ann, born in Carrollton, Missouri, on October 12, 1885. Mr. Parker is a business man in Carrollton and is now aged seventy-one, and his wife died in February, 1896. In the fall of 1888 Mr. Clugston came with his family to Colfax, thence to Moscow, and in 1889 he settled near Southwick, and later we see him near Linden, where he preempted a quarter. On the seventh of June, 1896, Mr. Clugston came and took his present place, which was a wild piece of land and is now a fertile and valuable farm, well provided with buildings and other improvements. He and his family endured the hardships incident to pioneer life, which were rendered more rigorous on account of the panic having just swept over the country before that. Mr. Clugston is a member of the G. A. R., at Kendrick. Mrs. Clugston was a graduate of the high school at Carrollton, Missouri, and has taught much both in the east and also since coming west. She held the principalship of the Juliaetta schools in 1895-6, and also has taught in other positions both in Latah and Nez Perces counties. Mr. Clugston is an old and skillful hand with threshing machines. He has followed the business for thirty-two successive years and is now using his sixth machine.

ALLEN J. SHORTLIDGE. A pioneer of the Central ridge country and one, too, who has made his labor manifest in the achievements in improving his farm, our subject deserves first rank among the worthy men whose labors have made this county a fertile and wealthy country.

Allen J. Shortlidge was born in Delaware, New Castle county, on December 31, 1861, whence the family removed to Philadelphia. His parents were Allen and Mary A. (Plumley) Shortlidge. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and enlisted in the Civil war, going in as a private but coming out as a captain. He fought in many battles and skirmishes and was severely wounded through his hips at Antietam. He carried this ball to his death in 1899. In the early 'seventies the father came to the Black Hills, South Dakota, and in 1877 our subject joined him there. They freighted and in 1878 went to Wyoming, working in the Sweetwater mines. In 1879 they went to New Mexico and there freighted until 1882 in which year they came to Pendleton and engaged in farming. In 1890 another move was made, this time Fairfield, Washington, being the objective point. Three years later they visited the Big Bend country and later our subject traveled in Alberta, Canada, but did not take land, not liking the country. In April, 1896, we find Mr. Shortlidge on the reservation and as soon as he saw the country he determined to locate. A search soon found for him his present place, a fertile quarter ten miles southeast from Peck, where he has bestowed his labors with telling effect, making his farm one of the best in this section of the county. Few people were here and Mr. Shortlidge was forced to endure the hardships and deprivations of the pioneer and although he came with very limited capital, he is now one of the well-to-do men of the community.

On November 10, 1899, Mr. Shortlidge married Miss Carrie M. Wheat, who was born in Clay county, Illinois, on March 20, 1874. She graduated from the Flora high school and took up teaching which she followed until her marriage. She came west and taught at Moscow some also before her marriage. One child has been born to this union, Florence Lucile, who celebrates November 6, 1900, as her birthday. Mr. and Mrs. Shortlidge are consistent members of the Christian church and they are leading and influential citizens in their community.

OWEN NUGENT. The famous little Emerald Isle has furnished a worthy quota of staunch men to build up American institutions and among the large number of substantial and patriotic citizens of this blood we mention the subject of this article, as both a typical specimen of the native land, and a patriotic, loyal and deserving citizen of this free land.

Owen Nugent was born in county Tyrone, Ireland, in 1864, being the son of High and Bridget Nugent, natives of Ireland and dying in 1899 and 1895, respectively. Owen worked on his father's farm, embracing the rather meager opportunities to gain an education, and when twenty determined to try his fortune in America. He landed in Philadelphia and for two years he wrought in the foundries and lumber yards of the Quaker city. Then he came on to Minnesota and farmed for two years. The next vocation was railroading, which he followed in all the states from Minnesota west and when the reservation opened, he came hither and secured the place where he now lives. It lies six miles east from Chesley and has been well improved and made valuable by the wisely bestowed labors of Mr. Nugent. He has forty head of stock, has seven acres of ochard and other improvements equally excellent. Mr. Nugent has one brother in America and four brothers and three sisters in his native land. He has never seen fit as yet to abandon the quiet joys and composure of the bachelor life for the matrimonial sea, but Mr. Nugent is a jovial and affable man, a good business operator and stands well in the community.

GUST HADFORD. It is especially interesting to note with what zeal and interest those who come to the United States from the north lands of Sweden and Norway enter into the spirit of American citizenship. As a veritable leader in this worthy undertaking, we are constrained to mention Gust Hadford, who has manifested such loyalty and patriotism in his new found home that one is kindled to admiration of his manly and public spirited ways. In addition to this, Mr. Hadford determined when he came to become a thorough American and so at once set with a will to learn the language and he is now master of the English in a gratifying degree and speaks it fluently.

Gust Hadford was born in Sweden, on January 10, 1870, being the son of Lars and Catherine (Vesterlund) Hadford, natives of Sweden. The father is a farmer, was born in 1837 and is still living in his native place. The mother died in 1885. Gust was educated in his native place and on August 20, 1885, he came to the United States. As said before, he came with the full determination of making this his home and settled to the spirit of the subject with an apitude and zeal that have made him a worthy and leading citizen. He had three older brothers, Peter, in this country, who toiled in McPherson county, Kansas, two years and a half and then came to Washington and worked at railroading for a time, after which he farmed in Spokane county until 1896, at which time he came to the reservation country and selected his present place, three miles southeast from Lookout postoffice. He has a good farm, well improved with comfortable buildings and beautified with a fine orchard. Mr. Hadford does a general farming business and raises cattle, horses and hogs.

At Spokane, in July, 1896, Mr. Hadford married Miss Hannah E., daughter of Hans Halverson. Mr. Halverson was born in Norway and his widow now lives near Medical Lake, Washington, on a farm. Mrs. Hadford was born in Iowa, in 1880 and has two sisters and two brothers, Mary Wick, Anna Hadford, Holver, and John. Mr. Hadford has two brothers on the reservation, Lewis and John, and two sisters in Sweden, Christine and Caroline. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hadford, Celeste, Glady G. and Claude A. Mr. Hadford is a Republican and takes an intelligent interest in political maters. In addition to his other labors, Mr. Hadford has operated a threshing machine during much of the harvest times and is a skillful hand in this line.

WARREN P. HUNT. This well known pioneer has made a good record for himself and wrought with energy and sagacity for the development of the country since the early sixties, being one of the first who settled in Lewiston. He was born in Erie county, New York, near Buffalo, being the son of Isaac and Diantha (Allbee) Hunt. The father was a farmer, born in Massachusetts, in 1812, and died in New York in 1896. while the mother was also a native of the Bay state, born in 1814, and died in 1892. Our subject was educated in the common schools, and went to California, via Panama, arriving at Sonora the day he became of age. He mined for eight years with indifferent success and then went to Monterey county and farmed for two years, when he came to Idaho, landing in Lewiston in June, 1862. He was soon in Warren at the mines, where he secured some claims for himself and then bought the stage and express line from Lewiston, which he operated for about seven years. Selling then, he was elected recorder and auditor of the county, and was also given a second term, as his service was faithful and efficient. He was then appointed postmaster for five years, then resigned the office and took preemption and timber claims and engaged in raising stock. He was thus employed until 1891, when he sold one claim and took up the butcher business in Lewiston and Lapwai, also buying and selling stock. Mr. Hunt continued in this until 1898, when he retired from active business to enjoy the fruits of his industry, wisdom, and thrift. He owns the claim he took in an early day and also some valuable town property.

WARREN P. HUNT.

The marriage of Mr. Hunt and Miss Olive C., daughter of J. D. and Caroline (Stiles) Martin, was solemnized in 1870, and they had two children, Irene, deceased, and an infant, unnamed. Mr. Martin was a miner, born in New York, in 1823, came to California in 1850, and was assessor of Marysville. His wife was born in New York in 1828. Mrs. Hunt was born in New York on February 22, 1850, and came to California in 1858; she has one brother and one sister, Mortimer S.; Hellens A. Leland. Mr. Hunt has one brother and one sister, Clara Washburn, and Frank. Mr. Hunt is a Republican and zealous for good government. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, in California. Mrs. Hunt is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Hunt is a member of the Pioneers' Association, and is one of the worthy pioneers of the county and a reliable, upright and highly esteemed man.

SMITH RUPE. Perhaps no man in the vicinity of Chesley is better acquainted with the country in Nez Perces and adjacent counties than the subject of this sketch, who is a man of integrity and substantial qualities and has made a good home on the land acquired from the wilds of nature.

Smith Rupe was born in Montgomrey county, Virginia, on April 5, 1853, being the son of William and Catherine (Carl) Rupe. The father was born in Germany in 1795 and died in 1886. He was a pioneer in Virginia and the mountain districts of Kentucky. He was a carpenter and farmer. The mother was born in Virginia in 1814, and died in 1879. The family came to the mountain districts of Kentucky, when Smith was a small boy and there he grew to manhood and received his educational training. In 1882 he moved to Livingston county, Missouri, and there farmed for ten years, doing well. His next move was to Farmington, Washington, where he did a thriving garden business until the reservation opened, when he made settlement on his present place, two miles northeast from Chesley. He has a well improved place and a fine bunch of cattle.

On August 30, 1877, in Kentucky, Mr. Rupe married Miss Lizzie, daughter of David and Frances (Montgomery) Traylor, natives of Kentucky. The father enlisted in the Mexican war, but it closed before he got into action. He is now deceased, but the mother is still living. Mrs. Rupe was born in Menifee county, Kentucky, in 1861 and has three brothers, James R., George R. and Wiliam A. Mr. Rupe has the following brothers and sisters: Mary M., F. Marion, Oscar H. and John M. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rupe: Sarah F. Simmons, in Chesley; Louise J. McBride, at Farmington; Ida M. Herman, at Chesley, Idaho; Eva, Marion, Lloyd, and an infant unnamed, all at home. Mr. Rupe is a member of the M. W. A., at Melrose, and his wife is a member of the Methodist church. He is a Democrat in politics and is intelligent in the questions of the day. Mr. Rupe does a general farming business, raises the cereals and stock and is prosperous. He is an advocate of good schools and a progressive and good citizen.

Mr. Rupe's maternal grandmother was captured by the Indians and held a prisoner until she made her escape.

JAMES M. TABER. Any compilation that has to do with the pioneers of Nez Perces county and adjacent country cannot fail to make mention of the genial and affable gentleman whose name appears above, since he is one of the earliest settlers; his father was one of the stanch men who came across the plains with ox teams and opened the west for the abode of man.

It will be interesting to note the details of this career and we will briefly outline them. James M. Taber was born in Sullivan county, Missouri, on April 6, 1860, being the son of John and Catherine (Whetstone) Taber. The father was born in Indiana in 1829 and died in Washington in 1871. The mother was born in Illinois in 1838 and lives at Latah county. In 1864 the family crossed the plains with ox teams and the father bought land on the Touchet river, near Walla Walla. He went to work improving the property and was one of the enterprising men there until his death. Our subject and his brother continued to handle the farm until 1878, and then they sold out and the family went to the Potlatch country. Mrs. Taber had married E. Fix in the meantime. She was the first white woman in the Potlatch country and they have labored faithfully in the upbuilding of the country. James M. took land and farmed there until 1892, doing well. Then he sold out and rented land on the Nez Perces reservation. He continued there until 1896, then removed to Lewiston for a year to educate his children. He returned to the reservation and engaged as engineer at Mill No. 1; he passed the civil service examination and could have remained indefinitely. He determined, however, to purchase a mill for himself and accordingly bought his present property, three miles southwest from Kippen. He has operated this mill for four years and does well. He is a good sawmill man and has a fine plant.

On May 21, 1882, in Nez Perces county, Mr. Taber married Miss Addie, daughter of Perry and Nancy (Sumpter) Thomas. The father was a freighter and packer in Oregon, being an early pioneer. He came first to Washington and Idaho in 1852. He and his wife were born in Missouri. Mrs. Taber was born in Walla Walla county, Washington, in 1866, and has one brother and one sister, Thomas T. and Dora Taber. Mr. Taber has two brothers, Lewis C., Samuel S., and Lillie Hall and Ira Fix, a half-brother and sister. Mr. and Mrs. Taber have the following named children: Lucy M. Bailey, of Nez Perces county; John, Clarence, Lester, Dorcas, and Samuel, at home. Mr. Taber is a member of the M. W. A. and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Taber has been justice of the peace; is a Republican in politics and always labors for good schools. He is a substantial man and stands well in the community.

OSCAR NELSON. Although Mr. Nelson has had plenty of opportunities to secure land in other places, still after a long travel over the country in various portions, he has never found any place that is quite equal to the reservation portion of Nez Perces county. He owns a valuable farm about nine miles southeast from Peck, which he secured from the wilds by homestead right and has improved in a fine manner, thus manifesting not only his industry but wisdom and skill also. Oscar Nelson was born in the southern part of Sweden, on July 21, 1874, being the son of Peter and Kate Nelson. The father was a jeweler and a musician. This son was reared on the farm and in town, securing a good education. In 1891, he started for himself, and at once embarked for America. He had inherited his father's talent for music and at that youthful period had mastered seven instruments. His best instruments are the fife, violin and accordion. When he landed in New York, he had only one five cent piece. The passengers who had been entertained by his music on the voyage made up a purse and so he started out for the future. Coming to Fargo, North Dakota, he at once found a position where he could earn his board and tuition by his instruments and so went industriously at it, gaining also a good knowledge of the English. In 1892 he was in Lagrande, Oregon, then cut wood in the Palouse and so traveled around and sought land. Finally he came to the reservation in March, 1896, having a pack horse. He footed it over the county and finally selected the homestead where he is now dwelling. He has improved it in good shape, has a fine spring and his farm produces abundance of grain and general crops. Mr. Nelson had the first contract of carrying the mail from Peck to Steele. This was before the road was graded up the hill or bridges put across the creeks. It was an arduous undertaking and some times he was obliged to pack on his own back eighty pounds up the hill. These were trying times, but Mr. Nelson stood the test and to-day he has one of the most valuable pieces of land on the reservation, owes no debts, and is enjoying the rewards of his worthy labor. During the closing of 1902 and the beginning of 1903, Mr. Nelson is contemplating a trip to Sweden to visit his aged mother and doubtless much joy will be his to renew old acquaintances and live over again the happy days of youth. He is highly esteemed by all in this community and has hosts of warm friends who wish him well.

RENNY J. BOFFERDING. It is our pleasure to now have the privilege to write concerning the estimable gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph and who has wrought with a strong hand and enterprising ways in the development of the reservation country and who now has a fine farm, two and one-half miles south from Melrose.

Renny J. Bofferding was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on November 1, 1864, being the son of John and Willemena (Knapper) Bofferding. The father was a carpenter, born in Luxemburg, Germany, came to America in 1856 and died in 1869. He was a soldier in Germany, and was married and had one child before coming to the United States. His wife was also born in Germany and is still living. When Renny was one year old, his parents went to Wisconsin and there his father died when this son was five years of age. The older children bore the expenses of the family until all were able to go for themselves. In 1881 our subject went to Iowa and Nebraska and engaged in railroading. The next year he migrated to Idaho and continued railroading on the O. R. & N., with headquarters in Boise. Then he mined in eastern Oregon, doing well. Then he followed saw milling until 1896, the date when he settled on his present place. His farm is well improved and has an orchard of three acres, while he devotes himself to general farming and raising hogs and horses.

Mr. Bofferding has the following brothers and sisters: Anna Dell, Emuel, Louise Weigle, Lucy, and Terese, all in La Crosse, Wisconsin. Mr. Bofferding was reared in the Catholic faith. In the fall of 1902 he received the nomination for county commissioner on the Socialistic ticket. He is an enthusiastic member of that party and active in promulgating the principles which he believes applicable to the questions of the day. Mr. Bofferding has never seen fit to retire from the pleasant and quiet life of the bachelor and is a man who receives the respect and esteem of all who know him.

FREDERICK M. MINERT. As a substantial and loyal citizen, an upright and intelligent man, a successful operator in the sawmill business and a good farmer and stockman, the subject of this article is deserving of representation in the history of his county and we accord him such with pleasure.

F. M. Minert was born in Montgomery county, Iowa, on January 29, 1862, being the son of James and Nancy J. (McClure) Minert. The father was born in Vermillion, Indiana, in 1830 and died in 1898. He was a pioneer to Wisconsin in 1837 and to Iowa in 1855. The mother was born in Johnson county, Indiana, in 1840. Her father, Thomas McClure, was born in Kentucky and her mother, Mary A. Waggoner, was born in Virginia in 1820 and died in Spokane, October 3, 1902. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa, also gaining there his educational training. When he was twenty-five, he determined to see the west and accordingly he came to Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wyoming, Montana, working in all these places and finally, in 1890, he came to Latah county and settled. He went into the timber industry and soon acquired skill and mastered the sawmilling industry. In the spring of 1896 he came to the Nez Perces country and took his present place, three miles southwest from Kippen. He bought an interest in the mill now owned by him and Mr. Taber, mention of whom is made in this volume. Since that time he has given his attention to the improving of his estate and operating the mill. He assisted in erecting the first mill put up by white men on the reservation.

On September 3, 1899, Mr. Minert married Miss Brunettie, daughter of Selby H. and Margaret (Thompson) Kreisher, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively, and pioneers of Indiana. Mrs. Minert was born in Clinton county, Indiana, on July 3, 1875, and has the following brothers and sisters: Lydia M., Zeningles, William A., Minnie M., deceased, George, Rosa M., Annie E., Selby D., Zelma L., and Louie, Mr. Minert has brothers and sisters named as follows: Henry T., deceased, Anna E., Martha and Mary, twins, Louie, deceased, Hattie, deceased, Horace, twin to Hattie, Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Minert are members of the Methodist church. He is a Republican. Mr. Minert's uncles, Virgil and Miner McClure and John and William Minert fought for their country in the Civil war. Mrs. Minert's father was also in the Civil war. Mr. Minert is an advocate of thorough and extended educational facilities and has been on the school board since the organization of the district, being a moving spirit in the organization.

STAAS SPEKKER. This patriotic citizen and leading business man was born in Hanover, Germany, on March 4, 1841, being the son of Peter and Annie (Dresman) Spekker. The father was a farmer, born in Bingusta, Germany, in 1800, and died in 1876, having been a prominent man and the incumbent of a number of public offices of honor. The mother was born at Eppingavcht, Germany, in 1810; her father was an officer in Germany and died in 1852. Our subject was educated in his native country and also learned the English language there, attending the agricultural college. He had practical experience on a farm and at the time of his majority he assumed charge of a nobleman's estate, which occupied him until the time of the retirement of the nobility and then he determined to come to free America. This journey was taken at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, in 1871. He landed in Ackley, Iowa and was employed for some time on a farm and then came to Linn county, Oregon, taking charge of Judge Geary's farm, where he remained eight years. Prosperity attended his industry and thrift and then came the black rust which destroyed his crops. This led him to eastern Oregon, where he established a country hotel and stage on Butter creek. After two years of prosperity he came to Uniontown in Washington, taking up a homestead, which he sold in 1886 for four thousand dollars. Then he came to Nez Perces county and bought his present estate of two hundred and eighty acres, three and one-half miles north from Leland.

While in Iowa, in 1871, occurred the marriage of Mr. Spekker and Miss Mary, daughter of Gottlieb and Henriette (Jacobs) Latzsch, who were natives of Saxony, the father being a contractor. Mrs. Spekker was born in Pennsylvania in 1852. Mr. Spekker has brothers and sisters as follows: Temmens, Amos, Anna, Heansman, and Ida Mansholt. To Mr. and Mrs. Spekker have been born the following children: Edwin, twenty-eight years of age and well educated, now acting as deputy county assessor; Peter, at home, road supervisor and well educated, now acting as member of school board; Clay, at home; Amos, in Colorado; Arthur, sixteen and at home; Manon, fourteen and at home; Ida, twelve, at home; Clara, married to Hogo Valdman, a merchant in Lewiston: Minnie, Emma, and Clarence, at home. Mr. Spekker was elected county assessor for 1899 and 1900 on the Republican ticket and then refused to take office any more. He was an active worker in his party and a champion of good government and good schools. He was a member of the Masons in Pendleton until his death, which occurred November 6, 1902, of paralysis. The farm now comprises about four hundred acres, all told, including fine buildings, orchards and so forth. Mr. Spekker's brother Amos was in the Franco-Prussian war and his health was broken. Also two nephews fought in that war.

WALTER E. YAGER. The success achieved by this stirring young man is evidence of his worth and ability in the agricultural lines; while his excellence in the sawmilling business is equally as signal, having made himself an expert sawyer in following it for a number of years.

Walter E. Yager was born in Hancock county, Illinois, on November 2, 1870, being the son of Cornelius J. and Elizabeth (Pullian) Yager. The father was a farmer, born in 1844, in Illinois, and served under General Sigel in the cavalry of the Civil war. His wife was born in Illinois and did in 1875. Her parents were Kentuckians and pioneers in Illinois. Walter remained in Illinois, where he gained his education, until fifteen, when he came to Union county, Oregon, his father having come in 1882. He at once took up sawmilling and became expert as a sawyer. He followed this steadily until the reservation opened and in 1896 he selected a quarter section near Melrose, and proved up on it on December 7, 1901, having lived steadily there during the intervening time.

On December 31, 1901, Mr. Yager married Miss Lillian, daughter of Jacob and Lucy (Palmer) Goble, the wedding occurring at Lewiston. Mr. Goble was a wagonmaker, born in Pennsylvania in 1822. He settled in Kansas in 1857, and his daughter, Naoma, was the first white child born in Marysville, Kansas. In 1862 they came to Walla Walla and took land, and Mr. Goble and his wife are still living. Mrs. Goble was born in New York in 1830. Mrs. Yager was born in Lehigh, Utah, in 1872 and was educated in Marshall county, Kansas. She has the following sisters and brothers: William, in Kansas; Ophelia, in Oregon; Sarah, in Oklahoma: Don, in Lewiston; Anna, in Mount Idaho. Mr. Yager has two half sisters and one half brother.

On January 14, 1898, Mrs. Yager took a claim four miles northwest from Culdesac, where they now live. Mr. Yager handles both this and his own claim. He does a general farming business and raises stock also. He is thrifty, industrious and capable, and is one of the men who has done much for the general upbuilding and progress of the country.

ALEXIS PICART. Like many of the well-to-do inhabitants of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county, our subject came here with very limited capital and the fine possessions that are now his have been gained by his skill in manipulating the resources of the county and his industry in prosecuting the enterprises of farming and stock raising. His farm is eight miles southeast from Peck, is good land and produces under his wise husbandry bounteous returns. Comfortable and commodious buildings are a part of the improvements and the farm has an air of thrift and contentment that betoken the personality of the proprietor.

Alexis Picart was born in Belgium, on April 21, 1852, and there remained with his parents on the farm, attending school until he was twenty, when he enlisted in the regular army and served as corporal one year and as sergeant for two years, being personally acquainted in this time with every town of importance in Belgium. Following his military career, Mr. Picart returned to the native place and on March 9, 1879, he married Miss Adle Thomson, a native of Belgium and a dressmaker. In 1884, they took passage on the steamer Paris, and went via Bordeaux, France, to New Orleans, being eighteen days on the ocean. Thence they made their way to San Antonio, Texas, and later settled in Seguin, where they remained until 1888. Then a journey was made to Los Angeles, whence they went to Kern county, California, and in 1890 we find them in San Francisco, following which they were in numerous places in the northwest country. In the spring of 1896 Mr. Picart came to his present place, filed a homestead right and has dwelt here since. Four children have been born to Mr. Picart and his faithful wife, Virginia, wife of Charles Hutchins: Mary; Augusta, born in Texas; August, born in Kern county, California. The two oldest children were born in Belgium. Mr. Picart is a man of excellent judgment and business ability, while his walk manifests integrity and uprightness, which have commended him to the good will and esteem of his fellows.

MAJOR J. STEELE. The subject of this article was one of the first settlers on the Central ridge and now he is the possessor of one of the finest ranches in the county. He owns two hundred and forty acres of well tilled and fertile land, all improved in good shape with fences, orchard, commodious barns and out buildings, while the modern ten-room residence is a structure of beauty and one of the best in the county. Much credit is due Mr. Steele for the energy and push manifested in developing the country and he is a leading citizen to-day. His parents, William M. and Nancy (Wallis) Steele, were early pioneers of Missouri and the father is living in Moberly now, aged eighty-four. He has been in the state seventy-two years and for thirty-four farmed near Moberly. He was born December 30, 1819, near Lexington, Kentucky. The mother of our subject was born in 1822, in the Blue mountains and came to Howard county, Missouri, with her parents in 1830. She was married in 1840 and in 1853 they removed to Randolph county, where our subject was born on January 13, 1856. His mother died on August 28, 1873, having been the mother of nine children, five of whom are living. Our subject grew to be twenty in the native place, having received a common schooling and then he entered Mount Pleasant College and one year later began teaching. Following a period at this, he entered the State Normal School, taking a two years' course. This was at Kirksville, Missouri. He followed the calling of the educator for a number of years, then took the management of a wholesale lumber company in Kansas City. On account of failing health in subsequent years, he was forced to abandon this labor and in 1892 came west. He bought the paper afterward known as the Times-Democrat, which he operated in Moscow for a time and then sold. Then farming occupied Mr. Steele until 1895. The year previous to this he was nominated by the fusionist party as state superintendent of instruction, but suffered defeat with the rest, although he was ahead of the ticket. In March, 1896, Mr. Steele located the present estate, which has been increased by purchase to two hundred and forty acres.

On April 10, 1890, Mr. Steele married Miss Cora B., daughter of Josephus and Jennie Lentz, in Richmond, Missouri. Two children were born to this happy union, but both died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Lentz were early pioneers in Ray county, Missouri. Mr. Steele has done a commendable labor in upbuilding and developing this section of the country and he is marked by a progressive energy and a public spirit that stamp him a real leader.

WILLIAM FORD. In the industrial world, Mr. Ford has gained a good success, having a fine saw mill one half mile west from Kippen, where he does a good business. In addition to this he has a quarter section of fertile land and does a general farming business and in connection with his son, who owns a quarter of land also, raises cattle, having good success in all these undertakings, because of his thrift, skill and sagacity.

William Ford was born in Carroll, Penobscot county, Maine, on September 28, 1850, being the son of Charles and Philoma (McKinny) Ford. The father, who was a blacksmith and farmer, was born in Maine in 1810. He was a pioneer in Minnesota and died there in 1876. The mother was born in Maine also, in 1815 and in 1889 she passed from this earth. The family came to Minnesota when William was two years old. They settled in Minneapolis and the father wrought at his trade. Three years later they removed to Anoka, where the father took land and there wrought at his trade also. Our subject worked with his father, attended school and by the time of his majority had mastered in a skillful manner the king of all trades. Then he went to do for himself and in addition to working at blacksmithing took up lumbering and became thoroughly acquainted with this business throughout. He remained in Minnesota until 1891, then he came west and sought out a place. He located near Tyler, in Washington, and his family came to him. Three years were spent there and when the Nez Perces reservation opened up he came hither and took up his present farm as a homestead. Between the time of his residence at Tyler and his coming to Nez Perces county he had spent two years near Colfax.

On July 27, 1876, Mr. Ford married Miss Elizabeth J., daughter of Thomas and Angeline (Carothers) Hull. The father, a farmer, was born in Ohio in 1834. The mother was born in Indiana, in 1840, and died in October, 1891. Mrs. Ford was born in Richland county, Wisconsin, in October, 1858. Her parents were pioneers to that county and her grandfather Carothers was one of the first settlers in Wisconsin. Mrs. Ford has the following named brothers and sisters: John R., in Minnesota; James E., in Washington; Lillie, now Mrs. Z. M. Powell; Della Gilispie; Gertrude; Eugene. Mr. Ford has brothers and sisters as follows: Philoma Varney, at Coquille, Oregon; Ruth Demorest, in Kippen; Charles, at Grand Junction, Colorado, and was wounded in the Civil war, where he served; Frank, in Minnesota. To Mr. and Mrs. Ford there have been born five children, Bernard M., living adjoining his father's farm and interested in the mill business with his father; Effie, Clair H., Hugh and Cecil, all at home. Mr. Ford is a Republican and takes a great interest in having good government and good schools. Mrs. Ford's father was a soldier in the Civil war, being in the Eleventh Wisconsin.

JOHN W. HELT. Two miles south from Melrose is the home place of Mr. Helt. It consists of a fine quarter of land that he secured from the government by his homestead right and which he has transformed from the wilderness of nature to a fertile and productive farm, supplied with comfortable buildings and a good orchard. Mr. Helt is personally a man of good qualities, industrious and progressive. He was born in Dubuque, Iowa, on July 2, 1869, being the son of John and Margaret (Cahill) Helt. The father was a cooper, born in Germany and came to the United States in an early day. The mother died when John was four years old. He then went to live with John J. McNamara, in Jones county, Iowa. This man was a brother to the well known Bill McNamara, who built one of the finest blocks in Butte, Montana. Mr. Helt was one of the family and received equally good treatment from his foster parents as did their own children and he remained contented with them until he was twenty-one. Then he began doing for himself and in 1896 he made his way to the reservation and took his present place. He has devoted himself to its culture and improvement and the result is that he is prosperous.

On January 1, 1896, in Sioux City, Iowa, Mr. Helt married Miss Georgianna, daughter of George and Celia (Brown) Pitts. Mr. Pitts was born in Otisco, New York, in 1838 and died in 1888. He was a soldier, serving in Company F, First Michigan of Engineers and Mechanics, where he enlisted under Sherman and went to the sea. Captain Bilton and Colonel Evans were his immediate commanders. His wife was born in Cortland county, New York, her folks being pioneers from Massachusetts. Mrs. Helt was born in Flowerfield, Michigan, in 1876, gained a good education in the University of Sioux City, Iowa, and taught for a few years previous to her marriage. She was an only child. Mrs. Helt has the distinction of carrying the first mail in the Melrose section, handling a pony route twice a week from Beeman, before there was any Melrose. At first they went twenty-five miles to Juliaetta for mail. Mr. Helt has the following brothers and sisters: Edward, Mary E., Fannie, Rosa and Jessie. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Helt, Mary Ellen and John E. Mr. Helt is a member of the M. W. A., also of the Masonic order. He is a Republican in politics, has been director in the school matters and is zealous in his endeavors for good schools. He is a man of stanch character and stands for the development and progress of the country.

THOMAS J. BURNS. This prominent citizen of Nez Perces county is the vice president of the Pioneer's Association and is one of the substantial and prosperou farmers and stockmen three and one-half miles south from Kippen, in this county. When the great excitement of the gold discovery in California spread like wild fire over the land in the memorable year of forty-nine, our subject was an infant, having been born on May 6 of that year, being the son of Francis and Mary (Clarcey) Burns, natives of Ireland, the father being born in 1815 and dying in 1899. The mother was taken from this life in 1853. Thomas J. was born in Livingston county, New York, and in 1852 the parents came to Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, being pioneers there. Our subject received his education there and labored with his father until he was twenty-four, at which time he got married and started for himself. He farmed for six years, then came to the west, taking a position as car foreman for the O., R. & N. He wrought at The Dalles, Tekoa, Albino, and Riparia, being with this company for seventeen years. Upon the opening of the Nez Perces reservation, he came and secured the place where he now lives. It is a fine piece of land and contains one hundred and twenty acres, is well tilled and improved in a becoming manner. Mr. Burns raises stock, cattle, hogs and horses, and does a general farming business.

On September 23, 1873, Mr. Burns married Miss Annie, daughter of Lewis and Mary (Ader) Fillers, natives of Belgium and Germany, respectively. Mrs. Burns was born in Pnnsylvania, in 1855, and has five sisters and two brothers. Mr. Burns has one brother, John, living at Pomeroy, Washington. To this worthy couple there have been born eight children, named as follows: William, Frank, Rosella, Emma, Charles, Mark, Monica and John, all at home. Mr. Burns and his family affiliate with the Catholic church. In political matters, he holds with the Democrats and takes a deep interest in politics, and is frequently a potent factor in the conventions. Mr. Burns always labors for good schools and is a director in his district.

THOMAS B. BEALL. No compilation which endeavors to outline the careers of the pioneers would be complete were there omission of the gentleman whose name heads this article; therefore we accord him representation in this place as one of the real builders of the west, being especially conversant with its history, and a participant in the leading actions that form the chief items of its history. Personally, Mr. Beall is a man of fine intellectual powers, well educated, conversant with the affairs of the day and dominated by integrity and principles of uprightness, being highly esteemed by all and his name deserves to be among the very leaders of this northwestern country.

Thomas B. Beall was born in Washington, D. C., on December 28, 1834, being the son of Colonel Benjamin L. and Elizabeth (Taylor) Beall. His father was a commander in the United States army, and was born in Washington, D. C., in 1802. He was a graduate of the military academy at West Point, acted as lieutenant in the Florida war and a major in the Mexican war. During the Civil war he acted as mustering officer until his death in September, 1863. The mother was born in Alexandria, Virginia, in 1802 and died December 25, 1899, being the daughter of George Taylor, a merchant in Alexandria. Our subject remained with his parents until he was nineteen years of age and was finely educated in William Jewell's College in Missouri, at the Chapel Hill College in Lafayette county, Missouri, at the State University of Missouri, and at the University of the state of Illinois. His father was commander at Fort Leavenworth for many years, being there from 1846 to 1854. He built Fort Tejon, in Los Angeles county, California, and commanded at Vancouver in the department of the Columbia. Our subject came to California in 1854 and was in the employ of the goernment, being but nineteen. He built Lapwai under A. J. Cain, agent, in 1860, and remained with the government until 1861. He owned a ferry at the mouth of the Potlatch and on the Clearwater for years. He mined in British Columbia and in Montana and took up his present place in 1900. His brothers and sisters are Lloyd, in the regular army for years; George, born at St. Louis, and in the medical department of the army; Alexander, deceased; Alfred, county surveyor of Nez Perces county, also civil engineer on N. P. and U. P. railroads for years, now dead; Virginia, deceased; Elizabeth, wife of Theodrick Porter, a brother of Admiral David Porter, but she is now dead; Fanny, died at Port Point. Mr. Beall is a Democrat and has been justice of the peace for years and is active in politics. He is affiliated with the K. of P. in Dayton, Washington.

It is of great interest that Mr. Beall was in the famous battle of Steptoe Butte and a few reminiscences are quite in place. The government was sending a party to locate a north parallel at that time and Colonel Steptoe was ordered to look out a site for a fort near the line. The expedition left Walla Walla on May 3, 1858, crossed the Snake river and got to about where the town of Spangle is now located and the Indians called them to halt. Colonel Steptoe seeing the odds so great against him, determined to return to Walla Walla, and they had gotten as far back as the vicinity of Rosalia, when Chief Saltese came for a conference and Father Joset was interpreter for the Indians. A Nez Perce Indian struck Saltese with a club in this interview and it ceased. The Indians fired on the detachment and as our subject was in charge of the pack train and in a gulch, the work of getting away was difficult. But he succeeded with some others in getting with Chief Timothy of the Nez Perces, and so escaped. Mr. Beall declares that Saltese was not of as good intentions as is supposed, as he was seen to fire and afterwards was found with Lieutenant Gaston's clothes on. Chief Timothy, however, who was guide to the whites, he believes to have been actuated by genuine friendship.

The paternal grandfather of our subject, Colonel Lloyd Beall, was in command of Fort McHenry, in the war of 1812 when the British fired on the fort. It was this incident that inspired Francis S. Key to write the famous Star Spangled Banner.

ANDREW SETLOW. Among the industrious and thrifty men who are laboring to develop the reservation country we are constrained to mention the subject of this article. Mr. Setlow is a man of good habits and principles, has shown skill and wisdom in his labors and has won the esteem of his fellows. His farm is located five miles southeast from Peck, consists of a quarter section, provided with good buildings, a seven room residence and a good orchard. He and his wife are members of the Seventh-day Adventist church and he is a stanch supporter of his faith.

Andrew Setlow was born in the central part of Sweden, on February 24, 1856, being the son of Erick and Anna B. Setlow, also natives of that country. He was educated there, learned the carpenter trade, and also received training in the regular army of Sweden. In 1881 he determined to try the United States and soon was in New York, whence he went to Pepin county, Wisconsin, and then to St. Paul, Minneapolis and Brainard, Minnesota, where he labored for two years and then returned to Sweden with the intention of settling there. But two years in this country spoiled life there and so he returned to Minnesota and wrought at his trade in different places. In the fall of 1886, at St. Paul, he married Miss Bertha Bolander, a native of Sweden, but an immigrant to the United States in 1882. To this happy union there have been born five children, Mabel R., Albert B., Nellie G., John C. and Charles R. In 1891 Mr. Setlow came with his family to Moscow and there followed his trade and built him a home. In 1894 he went to Boulder creek and four years later he came to his present place, which he purchased. Since that time Mr. Setlow has been known as one of the substantial men and public minded citizens of this section and he stands well today.

JOHN M. McGEE is an enterprising and thrifty farmer and stockman in the vicinity of Steele, in Nez Perces county. He selected a fine piece of land in 1896 and since that time has bestowed his labors in a commendable manner, making it now one of the best farms of the section. He was one of the real pioneers in this region, his wife being the first white woman on Central ridge for a number of months. Mr. McGee makes a specialty of good stock, cattle, hogs and horses and feeds all his farm products to them.

Mr. McGee was born in Taney county, Missouri, on January 18, 1867, being the son of John O. and Samantha (Friend) McGee. The father was a farmer, born in Tennessee in 1837, and now lives in Oklahoma. He was a soldier in the Union army for four years and received a wound at the battle of Pea Ridge. The mother was born in Missouri and is still living. The family came to Iowa when John M. was small, and thence they went to Nodaway county, Missouri. There the subject of this article was educated and remained until thirteen. The family then went to Cloud county, Kansas, where the father bought land. When fifteen John M. started on life's pilgrimage for himself. First he went to Solomon City and worked at various callings and next we see him in Beatrice, Nebraska, railroading. From this he went on a trip through western Kansas and Nebraska and into Colorado. Then he returned to Nodaway county. After a visit he came to Waitsburg, in Washington, also staying in Walla Walla. He railroaded on the Hunt system, then went to the sound with an outfit of mules for Mr. Hunt. He came back to Huntsville, got married and settled down to farming and one year later removed to the Potlatch country. He remained there until February, 1896, when he came to his present place.

At Dayton, Washington, in 1891, Mr. McGee married Miss Mattie, daughter of Jackson and Lucinda (Walters) McKay. The parents are farmers at Huntsville and are both living. Mrs. McGee was born in western Kansas, in 1870 and has one brother and one sister, Ella B. Pearson, in Cottonwood, this county; Allie William. Mr. McGee has the following named brothers and sisters, Martin, in Oklahoma; Anna Green, also in Oklahoma; James, in Nez Perces county; Reason, Monroe, May, all three in Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs McGee have three children: Maria, deceased; Thelma, Ada Myers, the last one is an adopted child. Mr. McGee is an active Republican and often is committee man and holds other influential positions. He is general manager and stockholder of the Cooperative Telephone Company; being the prime mover in barb wire telephoning in this county. Mr. McGee has donated much for good roads and schools, being an advocate for these things. He has been road overseer and built the Peck grade on Central Ridge.

ALBERT MUSTOE is an enterprising young farmer and carpenter dwelling about two miles northeast from Chesley, having taken his land from the wildness of nature and improved it so that it is a pleasant and valuable place.

Albert Mustoe was born in Adair county, Missouri, on March 28, 1875, being the son of Henry and Martha (Heuett) Mustoe, mention of whom is made in another portion of this work. He grew to manhood in his native county and there received his education. In 1891 the father came to Tekoa, Washington, on account of his health, and the next year our subject and his mother came also. Albert remained in that section of the country until the spring of 1896, when he came and took as homestead the eighty acres where he now lives. He erected a house in the fall and then worked in various places and when he had gained a sufficient start, came and dwelt steadily on the farm, which he has improved in good shape. He has a fine orchard, raises cattle and also breeds excellent Poland China hogs. He is successful in this and has some good specimens.

On October 30, 1895, in Tekoa, Washington, Mr. Mustoe married Miss Anona, daughter of Alfred and Elizabeth Walker. The father, a carpenter, born in Illinois in 1852, was a pioneer in the vicinity of Topeka, Kansas, then migrated to California, and in 1882 he settled in the Palouse country. His wife was born in Sanford, Ontario. Mrs. Mustoe was born in Shawnee county, Kansas, on November 7, 1876, and was well educated. She has two brothers and one sister, Fountain, Minnettie Thompson, and Jesse. Mr. Mustoe has one brother and two sisters, Loretta Page, Dora Wilson and William, all in this county. Ruth M., a bright girl, born on May 24, 1897, is the fruit of the happy marriage of our subject. Politically Mr. Mustoe is a Democrat and is actively interested in the welfare of the community and in questions of general import. Mrs. Mustoe has been clerk of election for a number of years.

MICHAEL KOUNI. To this industrious and wise farmer have come the emoluments of honest toil and good management in financial affairs and he is one of the most prosperous men of the section where he resides. Mr. Kouni has an excellent farm, very fertile land and well tilled. It lies two miles southeast from Peck and was taken by him as a homestead.

Michael Kouni was born in Switzerland, on February 5, 1863, opening his eyes in the presence of everlasting snows of the Alps and for three years he breathed the pure air of free Switzerland. In 1866 his parents, Mathias and Mariah Kouni, came to Peoria, Illinois, and there the father wrought in the coal mines until 1869, when they all went to Marshall county, Kansas, and there the father took a homestead where he dwells at the present time. The mother died in 1892. Our subject spent the years of his childhood, gaining his education from the common schools and learning the ways of excellent farming from an industrious and thrifty father. In 1885 Michael stepped forth into the world for himself and journeyed to Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he dealt in stock, buying and shiping horses to the east. In 1887 he made his way to Moscow and engaged in the nursery business, operating the Mix nursery until 1891. Then a move was made to Kendrick and Mr. Kouni operated a nursery for himself until 1897. That was the year when he came to the reservation and bought the relinquishment of the place he now owns and here he has bestowed his labors since that time. He has the farm well under cultivation, owns a commodious barn, a good house and in addition to the general products of the farm Mr. Kouni raises hogs and horses and is operating a nursery. He is a thrifty and industrious man, well esteemed by his neighbors and a good citizen.

On December 25, 1902, Mr. Kouni was married to Miss Nancy Bell Goalder, daughter of Ward and Mary (Wilcox) Goalder, natives of Kentucky and now residents of Adams county, Washington. Mr. Goalder lives near Lind. Mrs. Goalder died March 28, 1892. Mrs. Kouni has the following named brothers and sisters: Mrs. Mary Ann Gray, Benj. W. Goalder, M. P., and Edw. G.

SWEN I. SWENSON. All honor is given to those who have done the herculean task of opening the wild countries for settlement. Among the worthy pioneers of the reservation portion of Nez Perces county we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. He came here in 1896 and took a homestead to which he could not come with a wagon. The wife and children had to walk up the hill, which is two thousand feet above the Clearwater, while Mr. Swensen pulled the cook stove on the front wheels of his wagon. He built a small log cabin, got the family settled and then went to work in the harvest fields to get bread. Mr. Swensen has been a great worker and has a fine farm, now all under cultivation, except the timber lot, while good buildings and improvements, as fences, orchard and all implements for use, testify strongly his industry and great excellence in labors.

Swen I. Swenson was born in central Norway, on August 18, 1863, and his parents, Iver and Ingri Swenson, were natives of the same place. The family came to the United States in June, 1866, and soon they were settled in LaCrosse, Wisconsin. In 1868, they went to Swift county, Minnesota, and there Swen grew to manhood, receiving his education, and there also, on November 21, 1887, he married Olive, daughter of Helge and Ingeborg Hillerud, natives of Norway, and who lived then in Kandiyohi county, Minnesota, where Mrs. Swenson was born, on May 21, 1869. In 1890 Mr. Swenson came with his family to Latah county and there worked for a salary until February, 1896, the time that he came to his present place. He was one of the very first settlers on Central ridge, and since that time has labored incessantly for progress and improvement. Seven children have been born to this home: Helmar I., born June 22, 1888; Stener, born May 31, 1890; Emil and Julius, twins, born April 8, 1893, and died December 9, 1899, and May 29, 1894, respectively; Simon O., born April 28, 1895; Julius, born May 26, 1897; Emil Joseph, born October 27, 1899. On February 22, 1901, Mr. Swenson was called to mourn the death of his wife, consumption being the dread disease that took her away. Mr. Swenson has six brothers and two sisters, he being the oldest of the family. The youngest sister, who is also the youngest member of the family, is now keeping house for Mr. Swenson. Mr. Swenson's parents are now living in Latah county.

REUBEN ROGERS. Four miles southeast from Peck, on the Central Ridge wagon road, one comes to the pleasant home place of Mr. Rogers. The estate consists of a fine quarter section of fertile land, which was taken by Mr. Rogers as a homestead from the wild country. He has bestowed his labors with such wisdom and industry that it is now one of the finest farms of the vicinity and a standing evidence of his thrift and progressiveness. The residence is a seven-room structure of modern design, while a large and substantial barn with outbuildings to match and all fences and so forth needed are other evidences of the prosperity and emoluments of industry.

Reuben Rogers was born in Allegany county, New York, on December 30, 1844, where also his parents, Orton and Jerutia (Hadsell) Rogers were born in 1815 and 1827, respectively. Reuben's grandfather, Stephen Rogers, was born in Connecticut, on May 12, 1786, and died in 1888, aged one hundred and two years, a remarkable length of life. He was a man of great powers and of considerable prominence in his place. He fought in the war of 1812 and was always a staunch supporter of the government. For sixty-seven years he dwelt on one farm, then in 1870 sold it and bought another two miles distant, where he resided until his death. He never would trust himself to the cars, and on one occasion made a trip from the old home in New York to Adams county, Wisconsin, by private conveyance rather than ride on the steam cars.

Reverting again more particularly to our subject, we note that he grew to manhood on the farm, received his education from the common schools and on October 13, 1864, he married Miss Mary L., daughter of Moses and Martha (Putney) Black, natives also of New York. Mrs. Rogers was born in Allegany county, on February 15, 1840. Mr. Rogers enlisted three different times in the war of the Rebellion, but was refused each time on account of the loss of his right index finger. In 1873 he located in Huron county, Michigan, and in 1879 came to Pawnee county, Nebraska. In 1882 he removed thence to Beadle county, South Dakota, whence he came by train to Butte, Montana, and the remainder of the journey to his present place he made with team, locating here in 1896. Five children have been born to this happy family. Melvin A., married to Lucena Roberson, living near Peck, and having two children, Edgar E. and Mary A.; Emma T., wife of Berney Powell, of Butte, Montana, and they have one child, Harold L.; Myrtle J., wife of Oscar D. Holmes, of Butte, Montana, and they have one child, Keith D.; Carrie I.; Elizabeth, who is teaching school in Peck. The three oldest daughters have taught much in Butte. Mr. Rogers is a man of good qualities and has done a real worthy labor in building up this section of the county, while he has maintained an unsullied reputation, being of first class standing.

HENRY MUSTOE. The owner of a good farm with comfortable improvements, a man of industry and good wisdom in the business enterprises to which he has devoted himself, of excellent standing among his neighbors, it will be interesting to append a review of the salient points in the career of this subject.

Henry Mustoe was born in Barbour county, West Virginia, in 1838, being the son of William and Nancy (Cash) Mustoe, natives of Bath county and Rockingham, Virginia, respectively. The father was a successful blacksmith. The mother was born in 1818. When Henry was a boy they came to Edgar county, Illinois, and four years later removed thence to Scotland county, Misouri. There our subject grew to manhood, gaining a good common school education from the winter schools and also learning the blacksmith trade. When Henry was twenty-two he started farming for himself and in 1868 went to Adair county, Missouri, and there he was one of the substantial and successful farmers until 1891. Then he determined to see the west, and accordingly came to Tekoa, Washington, and soon to Farmington, in which places he farmed until the spring of 1896. In that year he came to the opened reservation and secured his present place, three miles east and one mile north from Chesley. Improving the place, doing a general farming business, and raising horses and cattle, have occupied Mr. Mustoe since his settlement here and he has achieved a good success.

In Scotland county, Missouri, on November 22, 1860, Mr. Mustoe married Miss Martha, daughter of Hiram and Sarah (Wilson) Heuett. Mr. Heuett was born in Randolph county, Virginia, and was a pioneer to Illinois and also to Scotland county, Missouri. He had the distinction of being a captain in the Mexican and Civil wars. His wife was born in his native county from a pioneer family. Mrs. Mustoe was born in Barbour county, West Virginia, in 1841, and has five brothers, Edwin W., William H., George, Jacob and Benjamin. Mrs. Heuett is still living, aged eighty-three. Mr. Mustoe has one sister, Edna J. Yeager. Mr. and Mrs. Mustoe have four children, Loretta M. Page, Dora Wilson, William and Albert, all in Nez Perces county. Our subject and his faithful wife are devout members of the Methodist church; Mr. Mustoe is a zealous supporter of good churches and schools. He is a Democrat and is always in his place in the conventions, caucuses and at the polls. He is a man of good character, a fine neighbor and is always ready to give a hand to one in need.

JOHN H. GERTJE is one of the enterprising pioneers who are laboring to bring the country that was once embraced in the Nez Perces reservation to a good state of cultivation and make it productive of the fruits of the field. His place is situated four and one-half miles west from Ilo, and consists of one hundred and sixty acres of land, well improved, having good buildings and so forth. Mr. Gertje does a general farming business and raises stock sufficient to consume the products of his land, which makes it more profitable. He also finds time from his other duties to operate a first-class threshing outfit in the fall and does a good business in this line.

John H. was born in Oldenburg, Germany, on April 23, 1869, being the son of John and Mate (Koramer) Gertje. The father was a native of Germany, came to the United States in 1872 and now lives in Nez Perces county. He was born in 1836. The mother was born in Germany in 1836 and is still living. Our subject came with his parents to this land in 1872, being three years of age. They stopped a time in New York and two years later we find them in Waseca county, Minnesota, where the father bought land and farmed. There John H. received his education and in 1883 the family went thence to Roberts county, Dakota, where the father took a preemption, but at the end of two years he sold it and came to the Potlatch country, where he still lives. Our subject went to carpentering when he became of age, and then farmed. He did well until sickness came into his family and then he was forced to meet misfortune and hardship. He removed to Asotin county, Washington, and raised fruit for two years and when the reservation opened he took his present place as described above.

On December 31, 1891, Mr. Gertje married Miss Minnie, daughter of Andrew and Frances Jackson. Mr. Jackson was a captain in the Civil war. To Mr. and Mrs. Gertje one child was born, Ruby Fay. On November 12, 1897, Mrs. Gertje was called away by death. On July 22, 1901, Mr. Gertje married a second time, Miss Josephine, a daughter of John P. Voitte, then becoming his bride. Mr. Voitte is a barber, in Davenport, Washington. Mrs. Gertje was born in Omaha, Nebraska, on September 16, 1879, and she has three sisters, Martha, Jennie, and Sadie, deceased. Mr. Gertje has four brothers and two sisters: George, Herman, Henry, Mary Tiede, Sophia and Edwin. Mr. Gertje is an active Republican, always laboring for the principles of his party and good schools, and he is frequently found in the conventions.

BENONI PALMER. Since the opening of the Nez Perces reservation the subject of this sketch has been a resident of this county and is one of the promoters of industrial labor, while also he does a general farming business. He has a fine saw-mill on his place two and one-half miles southeast from Winchester.

Mr. Palmer was born in Sauk county, Wisconsin, on December 22, 1856, being the son of Benoni F. and Eliza J. (Denslow) Palmer. The father was a carpenter, born in Cincinnatti, Ohio, in 1822 and died in 1898. He was a pioneer in Wisconsin. The mother was born in Ohio in 1839, and died in 1897. Our subject remained at home, learning the carpenter trade and working with his father until of age. . Also during this time he received his education from the schools of his home place. Then he started in life for himself. He went to North Dakota on the Northern Pacific Railroad, built a warehouse and did a contracting business. Returning to Cincinnati, he labored for seven years in contracting business. He then came west to Spokane, Washington, went prospecting for several years, meeting with varying success and then came to Latah county and wrought at his trade. Four years were spent there and then he went to Tacoma and labored at ship building for four years. It was 1897 when Mr. Palmer came to Nez Perces county and took his present place, where he erected a fine saw mill and does a good business.

In 1887 Mr. Palmer married Miss Sarah G., daughter of Henry Marston, a native of Wisconsin. Mrs. Palmer was born in Sauk county, Wisconsin, in 1870, and her marriage occurred in Colfax, Washington. She has no brothers nor sisters. Mr. Palmer has the following named brothers and sisters: Helen Sprague, Elenor Townsend, Franklin, Orson, Rose, Grant and Lillie. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, Pearl and Claud. Mr. Palmer is an active Republican and is often at the convention, where he is an influential factor. Mrs. Palmer's father was in the Civil war and Mr. Palmer had a number of uncles in the same struggle.

THOMAS F. REYNOLD. Perhaps no man in the county of Nez Perces has had a wider experience in the northwest than the subject of this article who has traveled in many capacities and has met the incidents of the frontier in every shape, being a man of great courage and stability and having conducted himself in this long time in a worthy and commendable manner, ever manifesting courage, sagacity, endurance and ability, which has been dominated with sound principles.

Mr. Reynold was born in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, on May 10, 1829, being the son of Edwards and Clidna (Michaels) Reynold. The father was a native of Ireland, born in 1801, and died in Iowa in 1840, while the mother was born in France in 1809, and her father was a German. She died in 1871. Mr. Reynold, senior, was a farmer and distiller. The parents came to America and setled in Pennsylvania and when our subject was six years of age came to Cincinnati. Another move was made to Dayton, and then to Iowa, in which last place Thomas F. was educated. The father bought land and farmed in Iowa and in 1852 came with his family to Portland, where he worked at painting and boating. Our subject was one of a party that accompanied George B. McClellan to meet the first governor of Washington, I. I. Stevens, and after that he was in the employ of the government for a number of years, being packmaster on the expedition that surveyed the line between British Columbia and the United States. After one year in this work, he returned to Washington. In 1866 he went to farming in Columbia county, Washington, and in 1884 came to Lewiston. He operated a ferry boat there until 1892, when he came to his present home, five miles south from Juliaetta, taking the land from the Nez Perces reservation which was then opened.

Mr. Reynold married a Nez Perces woman, Polly, in 1863, in Lewiston. His brothers and sisters are named as follows: Mary Ann, in Ottumwa, Iowa; Clidna, there also; Joseph, at Oskaloosa, Iowa; Elizabeth, deceased; James M., in Iowa; Edward, deceased; Agatha, deceased; John V., deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Reynold there have been born two children, Clidna, deceased: Agatha, wife of James H. Evans, on Nez Perces reservation. Mr. Reynold has always taken an interest in the affairs of politics, being a strong Jeffersonian Democrat and is usually a delegate to the county convention. He is an adherent of the Roman Catholic church. He has a fine farm of one quarter section and well improved and owns forty head of cattle and raises much wheat and many hogs. He has a large grove of the Lanthos trees. Mr. Reynold is a man of much experience and has done much commendable work in the northwest and is entitled to the credit of a real pioneer.

PART III.

HISTORY OF IDAHO COUNTY

CHAPTER I.

CURRENT HISTORY, 1861–1879.

The earliest history of Idaho county, like that of Nez Perces and southern Shoshone, is identical with the placer mining history of the region, which has already been given place in our chapters. The discovery of gold at Oro Fino, Elk City, Florence, Newsome and Warren had other effects upon the country than simply building thriving towns at these points. Routes of travel and transportation had to be established and way stations along these provided for the comfort and convenience of gold seeker and packers. Naturally the keepers of these stations were impelled to experiment in raising different farm and garden produce, and the enormous prices received by them for whatever they harvested encouraged the extension of this form of industry. There was one serious drawback to it, however, during the first two years. Both the miners and station keepers were upon an Indian reservation. They could only remain by sufferance of the Indians and Indian authorities under protection of a treaty permitting occupancy only, and could not secure title to any land other than such as was by common consent accorded to squatters.

L. P. Brown, in a lecture before the Idaho County Pioneer Association, made the statement that the first house occupied by white man on Camas prairie was the home of Captain Francois, built on the White Bird divide during the fall or winter of 1861, and that the spring of 1862 witnessed the construction of several way stations along the different trails to the mines; one at Sweetwater, kept by James Donnelly; one at what later became known as the Mason place, by Durkee & Crampton; one at Cottonwood, by a man named Allen and one at the foot of Mount Idaho, erected, we have been informed, by Moses Milner and his partner, Francis, the men who cut the pack trail from the site of the town of Mount Idaho to Florence mining camp in the spring of 1862. However, A. I. Watson says that Arthur Chapman was keeping this station in 1862 and was understood by him to be its owner. During the summer and fall of the same year Hiram Lusk erected a log house on Three Mile creek, which, the following year, became the property of Crooks & Shumway.

These facts were no doubt given by Mr. Brown from memory and may not be absolutely correct in minor details, but they are corroborated for the most part by Seth Jones, who came to the county with Mrs. Jones in May, 1862. They found a station at what is now Cottonwood, kept by a man named Allen, and Captain Le Francois, then unmarried, at his station on White Bird divide. They found also a small station, just started, where Mount Idaho now stands, and Moses Milner at work cutting his trail to Florence. Loyal P. Brown, who came into the country a few days later than Mr. Jones, bought Mr. Milner's interest in both road and station and later laid claim to a tract of land. For many years afterward he was prominent citizen of Mount Idaho.

Mr. Jones and wife went on to Florence, where they remained until July, returning then to Mount Idaho over the Milner trail. Mrs. Jones gained the distinction of being the first woman to pass over the new route, and in recognition of this fact, she was permitted to pass without the payment of toll. About August 1st they opened a small way station at Mount Idaho. Throughout the following winter Mrs. Jones's nearest neighbor of her own race and sex was Mrs. Mary Caroline Wood, wife of John Wood, who lived on Slate creek.

During the spring of 1863, Mr. Jones selected a farm on Three Mile creek, about a mile above the Hiram Lusk station. Brown had taken a claim in the foothills near Mount Idaho and this same spring, James Odle laid claim to a ranch in the vicinity of that station. It is related that when Mr. Odle began plowing, the Indians gathered in considerable numbers, watched the operation with interest and protested mildly, saying that if much of such work should be done, they would be left without pasture for their ponies. He assured them that he wished only a small spot for a garden and they went away apparently satisfied. Mr. Odle is said to have been in partnership with Brown in the station for several years.

July 6th Mr. Jones left Mount Idaho and took up his abode on his new farm. He plowed and sowed quite extensively, planting an acre and a half of potatoes, ten acres of oats and a considerable amount of rutabagas, tomatoes, cabbage, turnips and other garden vegetables. That fall he harvested 54,000 pounds of potatoes and sold them for eight cents a pound. The oats were cut for hay, which found ready sale at $80 a ton; the cabbage brought 12½ cents a pound; the turnips four cents. John Londsberry, a Pensylvanian of seventy summers, who had taken a claim adjoining Mr. Jones, was a partner of the latter in the potato venture.

The success of the early experimenters in agriculture and the enormous prices realized by them could have no other effect than to inspire more persons with a desire to try what wealth the rich black soil of the prairie might have in store for them. A treaty was concluded with the Nez Perces Indians on the 9th of June, 1863, amendatory to that negotiated by Stevens and Palmer in 1855, by which the greater part of Camas prairie and Idaho county, along with the Wallowa valley in Oregon and other territory was ceded to the United States. The treaty was not confirmed until some years later, so that title to land could not be secured, but the foundation was laid for hope that the land would some day be the property of the settler and interest in agriculture was therefore stimulated in some measure.

Prior to the spring of 1862 the route to Florence was up Salmon river to the divide between Slate creek and John Day creek, up that to the summit of the mountains, and thence to the objective point. A station was early established at the mouth of Slate creek by one Charles Silverman, who seems to have had some kind of a partnership arrangement with the Indians through a chief known to the whites as Whistle-knocker. In the spring of 1862, John Wood purchased the station, paying Silverman and the Indian $1,000 for it. By this transaction, Mr. Wood not only secured the desired property but he laid the foundation for a lasting friendship between the red men and himself, with the result that in after years, when trouble arose between the two races, Mr. Wood and his family were not molested by the hostiles. At the time of the purchase Silverman had a small garden. Wood immediately planted some apple trees, among the first, perhaps, that ever drew their nourishment from the soil of Idaho county except a few planted by Indians, or persons unknown, at Billy's crossing. Mr. and Mrs. Wood kept this station until 1884, but ten years earlier they sold the portion of their place across Slate creek to Charles F. Cone, who also opened a way station.

In the summer of 1862, Henry Elfers and John Wessel took a claim on John Day creek. In 1863 A. Berg squatted on land on the main Salmon, two and a half miles above the mouth of the Little Salmon, and the same year J. Allison settled on a claim six or seven miles above the Berg place. The ensuing winter came James F. Alvord and Michael Storms, who established themselves on a tract adjoining Mr. Wood's home. They opened a small general store. Later came James Baker, who made his abode about a mile and a half from the mouth of White Bird creek. On all these places stock was kept and on all of them were raised grain, vegetables and everything for which there was a demand among the miners. The land was, of course, unsurveyed.

The inception of the cattle industry was practically contemporaneous with that of agriculture. No farmer, seeing the vast areas of grass-clad land and the sheltered canyons and valleys of the Salmon river, furnishing warm winter retreats for stock, could fail to realize the profit which must surely accrue from this business. In the spring of 1863, John M. Crooks and Aurora Shumway bought out Lusk's station on Three Mile creek. Later Shumway purchased the farm of John Carter, adjoining. The two, under the firm name of Crooks & Shumway, became pioneer stockmen of what is now Idaho county, bringing in a thousand head from the neighborhood of The Dalles, Oregon. They were the leaders in this industry throughout all the early days; nevertheless there were others not far behind them. Seth Jones was the second man to engage in cattle raising as a business, though undoubtedly a number of farmers on Camas prairie and Salmon river had a few head from their first settlement. Jones's start consisted of ten cows, purchased at a cost of $60 each. It was a custom among those early cattle men to drive their beef animals to the mining districts, where they sold for good prices, though beef was never high in proportion to other articles of food. Among the leading cattle men of the years prior to the outbreak of the Nez Perces war were Henry Elfers, who at one time had as many as 2,000 head, and Seth Jones, James Baker, John Wood, Charles F. and Charles P. Cone, A. Berg, Getter & Orcutt, Hickey & McLee, John Doumecq, Victor Glatigny, J. M. Crooks, John and Dan McPhearson, George Sears, Rice Brothers, Ed Byrom, Charles Redman and James Lambert, whose largest herds ranged between 300 and 1,600 head. The stock business never assumed the proportions in north Idaho that obtained in Harney county and other portions of eastern Oregon, where the larger herds ranged between fifteen and fifty thousand head, but the quality of the stock was undoubtedly better. The cattle had marked strains of Durham and Devon in their blood, though somewhat mixed with Texas stock. It is said that four-year-old steers were known to dress as high as 1,100 pounds.

In 1861 a few more settlers took homes on Camas prairie, among whom were Israel Chapman, who settled on land adjoining the Crooks place, and Francis Marion Hughes, whose home was established between Mount Idaho and the site of Granville. Joshua S. Fockler became a resident of the prairie this year, but did not take land. He and Ward Girton were employees for a time of Crooks & Shumway.

Upon his arrival on the prairie in 1865, James H. Robinson took a claim half a mile east of the J. M. Crooks ranch, and from him we learn that the settlers at that time, besides those already mentioned, were an old trapper, Green B. Profitt, on the creek above the Jones ranch, William C. Pearson, a land holder and a partner in the cattle firm of Crooks & Shumway, John McPherson, on Three Mile creek, three miles below Mount Idaho, "Whisky Bill" and A. I. Watson, on Whisky Bill creek, Edward Byrom, proprietor of the Cottonwood station, James Cearley, on Three Mile creek, below McPherson's place, Milton Cambridge, between Three Mile and Butcher creeks, William Jackson, who kept a toll bridge across the south fork of the Clearwater on the Elk City trail, and John Aram, near the home of Seth Jones, on Three Mile. Mr. Watson says that during this year, also, John Brown settled on Three Mile creek, three miles below Grangeville, and Jack Moran on Butcher creek above Odle's.

A few more settlers came in 1866, among them an ox teamster and freighter named Bush and each succeeding year brought a small augmentation to the number of settlers. The population grew from not to exceed seventy-five in 1866 to perhaps 150 or 175 in 1870. The United States census of the latter year gives Idaho county a population of 849, but these figures, like statistics based upon the assessment rolls to show the increase of wealth, are rendered valueless by the fact that the county's boundary lines have undergone important changes. In 1870, Mount Idaho and all the Camas prairie country were included in Nez Perces county, and Idaho county included only the mining country further south.

The cattle industry received a severe setback almost in its very inception by the long, cold winter of 1865-6, which caused quite serious losses. It was further discouraged by the fact that many head of cattle were driven into the mines from Oregon and Washington, making the price of beef relatively low. But all other products of the soil commanded high prices, butter a dollar a pound, eggs a dollar a dozen, vegetables five to ten cents, American horses $100 to $300 each, wild hay $15 to $40 a ton, etc. etc. The inception of fruit raising in the valley occurred in 1864, when trees were brought from Walla Walla and planted at Mount Idaho. Success attended experiment in this as in other horticultural and agricultural enterprises.

"The first stage line from Mount Idaho to Lewiston," says L. P. Brown, "was put on the route by Francis & Company in the summer of 1862. The next spring Durkee and George Crampton placed a line on the same route, which was continued until late in the fall of 1863." Then Crampton sold out and went back to his home in Boston, Durkee to Burnt river in Oregon, where for years he kept the station known as Express ranch. A station and small town on the O. R. & N. commemorates his name. Mr. Watson says that Francis & Carnish established the first stage line and he fixes the date as 1863 or 1864. Frank Shissler, he says, succeeded Durkee and Crampton. Among the earliest express riders were Denny Bacon, John Brearley, Charles Fairchild, and the Baird Brothers, Ezra and William.

Up to June 1, 1869, the county seat of Idaho county was located at Florence but by an act passed by the legislature of 1868, the honors and prestige belonging to the seat of local government were transferred to Washington, in the Warren mining district. The change, however, had no material effect upon the Camas prairie settlers, for as yet these were affiliated politically with Nez Perces county, though their interests were with the mining districts, where they marketed their products, and they earnestly desired to be identified with Idaho county. This boon was granted them six years later.

Notwithstanding the fact that the earliest years of the occupancy of the Salmon river and Camas prairie countries by farmers and stockmen were years when north Idaho was yet overrun by hordes of robbers, desperadoes and murderers, and the mining districts and the trails to them were still haunted by lawless characters, the agriculturists and stockmen seem to have enjoyed practical immunity from criminal operations. The execution of English, Scott and Peoples by Lewiston vigilantes and of the Magruder murderers by process of law caused an exodus of villianous characters from the country, and as the settlers before that date had nothing specially tempting to marauders, except, perhaps, a few horses, they never were victimized in the early carnival of crime.

But about July of the year 1869 the people of the prairie thought it necessary to take the law into their own hands and administer summary punishment to an Indian named Shumway Jim, a renegade, whose reputation as a desperate man was such that he was feared by both Indians and whites. He received his sobriquet of Shumway from his devotion to and friendship for the stockman of that name. He was credited with the commission of several murders, none of which could be proved against him, but he committed one too many. Early in the spring of 1869, several Nez Perces squaws reported to the settlers that they had found human bones under some rocks at the mouth of Three Mile creek and intimated that Shumway Jim probably knew more about them than he would care to tell. Messrs. Crooks and Shumway interviewed Jim regarding the matter, demanding that if he were guilty he should confess it. Jim ultimately acknowledged that he had killed a prospector, a Frenchman, for gain, but had only secured the man's horse, his weapons and blankets and about ten dollars in money. The citizens in general took up Jim's case and finally decided that the time had arrived when his career of crime should be brought to an end, so Jim was escorted to a spot on Ward Girton's ranch near Three Mile creek where three poles had been stood up in the form of a tripod. To the apex of this Jim was hanged, all the settlers present, constituting a majority of those on the prairie, taking part in the execution. The body of the Indian was given into the possession of his red brethren, who bore it to Jim's home at Horse Shoe bend on the Salmon, where it was interred. Whites and Indians alike seemed pleased that the country was rid of this assassin and desperado.

In the fall of 1869, also, another serious crime was perpetrated in the Camas prairie country, which led to a lynching. The author of the crime, one Peter Walters, was a young man who, by dint of energy and push, had become the proprietor of a sawmill near Mount Idaho. Joseph Yates, the victim of the tragedy, was an employee in the mill, and had been on terms of intimacy with Walters, living with him the preceding winter. It is thought that the seeds of the quarrel were sown during the continuance of this intimate association, but an open breach did not take place until some time later. Early in the fall they had some words and the relationship of employer and empoyee existing between them was abruptly terminated. It was agreed that they should meet that evening in Mount Idaho to complete their settlement. After supper Walters called Yates out. What words passed between them nobody overheard, but the conversation was brought to an end by Walters drawing his pistol and shooting Yates, mortally wounding him. Walters was taken to Lewiston, the county seat, for trial. He escaped conviction at the next term of court on a technicality. The following term he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. Preparations were made to execute the sentence, but at the last moment the young man's attorneys gave notice of an appeal to the supreme court. Becoming tired of the law's delay, a number of the citizens of the prairie, perhaps about thirteen, repaired to Lewiston, battered down the jail door at night, took the prisoner out and hanged him.

During his incarceration, Walters wrote to persons on the prairie, among them Mrs. Seth Jones, protesting his innocence of deliberate murder. He claimed that he had settled with Yates; that Yates accused him of stealing; that he drew his pistol, believing it uncapped, for the purpose of scaring Yates into a retraction of his charges and that the pistol was discharged unexpectedly. Others state that Walters had sharpened his bowie knife and carefully loaded his pistol beforehand giving evidences of premeditation and from the testimony of several pioneers it is certain that the homicide was a cold blooded and very atrocious one. Walters was a young man of ungovernable passion and somewhat disagreeable disposition. No attempt was ever made to apprehend and punish his self appointed executioners.

After the earliest settlements on Salmon river, no further increase of population took place in that part of the county until about 1870, when there was a small influx into the valley. Hiram Titman took the place now occupied by J. B. Chamberlain, just above the mouth of Skookum Chuck creek. Harry Mason, Samuel Benedict, Larry Ott, Isaac Orcutt, John Getter and Mathewson & Cristy settled at various points on the river about the same time; then immigration again ceased for several years.

The output of the placer mines had been steadily declining since about 1864, and the market for the produce of farm and garden had suffered a proportionate depression. In 1869, however, the miners voted to admit the Chinamen to Florence. Those who favored this measure argued that the best deposits were exhausted; that white men could no longer work them profitably and that the Mongolians ought to be allowed to appropriate the residue. The permission was received with eclat by the Chinese, who came into camp in a body, protected against those who were hostile to them by an abundant guard of white people. Their advent was the signal for others to come in and in 1870 there were several thousand in the different mines. They seem to have infused new life into the districts, and though it is generally considered that a Chinaman lives on a few cents a day and sends the rest of his earnings back to China, yet these Mongolians are said to have spent their money freely whenever fortune favored them, creating a good market for agricultural products. Between 1870 and 1880 they were in almost absolute control of the placer fields. They not only made what they would consider good wages in working claims, but occasionally struck rich ground that had escaped the white miners, realizing thousands therefrom.

But the fact that the number of Chinamen in the county dwindled in the decade to one-third of their original numbers was good evidence of the hopeless decline of placer mining. The effect of this was the upbuilding of stock raising and extensive agriculture in Idaho county instead of market gardening. But there were difficulties in the way of this change. Lack of transportation rendered wheat raising unprofitable; there were no factories in the county before 1870 aside from a few sawmills; and even the flour consumed by the people had to be brought from without. It is true that in 1874 Wheeler & Toothacher started the small grist mill which later became the property of L. P. Brown, but this was not sufficient to encourage the farmers to raise all their own breadstuffs. As the prairie was still in Nez Perces county and the mines had passed to the Chinese, Idaho county, as it then existed, seemed likely to be reduced to the same condition into which Shoshone had degenerated,—a county only in name, incapable of maintaining an efficient organization and in danger of dismemberment at any time.

Fortunately the year 1874 brought to the prairie the organization of a society which was destined to have much influence upon the future history of the community and of Idaho county. About this time the order known as the Patrons of Husbandry was coming into prominence in the farming sections of the United States. The farmers of the prairie had objects to accomplish requiring united effort and it occurred to some of them that perhaps this popular agricultural association was just the agency through which the desired ends might be most speedily attained. Accordingly Charity Grange was organized. Many of the leading farmers in the vicinity of Mount Idaho and on the banks of the streams joined the society, the charter membership of which numbered about twenty. Within a few months it had one hundred members and later its roll call was still further extended.

The first object proposed to itself by this grange was speedily accomplished. It desired to form a closer bond of union between the citizens of the prairie, and inasmuch as this part of the country had no affiliations with Nez Perces county but carried on practically all its business with the mining districts, it desired also union with Idaho county. An effort had been made looking toward this end in 1872, but as the petition included also a removal of the county seat from Washington, in the Warren district, the people of that town joined Nez Perces in opposing the measure so that it failed. But at the session of the legislature of 1874-5, a determined movement was inaugurated in the direction of securing this desideratum. It proved successful and an act was passed granting to Idaho county not only the Camas prairie country, but the rich strip lying east of it in which Elk City is situated. The measure created a new Idaho county with both farming and mining communities, bound together by the closest ties of trade relationship and reciprocal interests. It saved the political entity from danger of disintegration, building up a united, interdependent and stable community, while it inflicted little or no permanent damage, probably, upon Nez Perces county. While the grange was behind the measure, credit for this judicious piece of legislation is owing, as L. P. Brown informs us, to Hons. S. S. Fenn, Phil. Cleary and S. P. C. Howard, members of the legislature at the time, to C. W. Case, N. B. Willey and Bailey Chamberlain of Warren camp, to Jeff Rhoads and George Shearer, of Florence, and to D. H. Howser, James Odle, Judge Bower, James Witt, J. M. Dorman, M. H. and C. L. Rice, Crooks & Shumway, J. H. Robinson, Girton, Telcher, Pearson, B. F. Morris and others of Camas prairie. Mr. Brown himself was also an efficient worker in this cause. The bill was indited as follows:

AN ACT.

To Define the Boundaries of Idaho County and for other Purposes.

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho as follows:

Section 1. The boundaries of the county of Idaho shall hereafter be as follows: Commencing at the junction of Salmon river with Snake river; thence up the channel of Salmon river to the mouth of Maloney creek; thence easterly to the mouth of the north fork of the south fork of Clearwater; thence due east to the Lolo fork of Clearwater; thence up the Lolo fork to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence southeastwardly and southerly, following the present defined boundary line between the territories of Idaho and Montana, to the northwest corner of Lemhi county; thence south and southwest along the line between the counties of Idaho and Lemhi to Boise county; thence westerly and northwesterly along the present line dividing Idaho county and Boise county and the present line dividing the counties of Ada and Idaho to the extreme north corner of Ada county on Snake river, thence down Snake river to the place of beginning.

Sec. 2. All that part of Nez Perces county being south and east of the boundary line established by section one (1) of this act, shall hereafter be attached to and form a part of the county of Idaho.

Sec. 3. In consideration of the grant of territory hereby made by Nez Perces county, the county of Idaho shall be liable for, and shall assume and pay to the county of Nez Perces forty per cent of the indebtedness of said Nez Perces county, at the time this act shall take effect and be in force.

The amount of such indebtedness of Nez Perces county to be so assumed and paid by Idaho county shall be ascertained as follows: The auditor of Idaho county shall, within three months from the taking effect of this act, ascertain from the reports of the auditor and treasurer of Nez Perces county, or, if such reports be not complete, or be from any cause unsatisfactory, then from the books of said auditor and treasurer, the total amount of county warrants of Nez Perces county, drawn and outstanding, and shall report the same to the board of county commissioners of Idaho county; from the total sum of such indebtedness shall be deducted the amount of cash in the county treasury and the further sum of one thousand dollars assumed to be the value of county property retained by Nez Perces county. Of the net indebtedness so ascertained, the county of Idaho shall be liable for and shall pay to Nez Perces county forty per cent, upon such adjustment made and reported to the board of county commissioners, as herein provided for. The auditor of Idaho county shall be authorized to draw his warrants in sums not exceeding five hundred dollars each, payable to the treasurer of Nez Perces county, for the benefit of said county, for the purpose, and he shall deliver the same to the treasurer of Nez Perces county.

Sec 4. The county commissioners of Idaho shall at their next regular meeting, after the passage and approval of this act, and annually thereafter, so long as the same may be required, for the payments of the warrants to be drawn as provided by section three (3) of this act, set apart the whole amount of poll and eighty per cent. of the hospital taxes collected in said county, and ten per cent, derived from property taxes which shall constitute a sinking fund for the payment of warrants in favor of Nez Perces county, and the county treasurer of Idaho county shall, on the first day of July and January of each year, and oftener if directed by the county commissioners, pay to the treasurer of Nez Perces county the whole amount in said sinking fund to be by him applied to the redemption of said warrants.

Sec. 5. The board of county commissioners of Idaho county shall call a special election to be held at all the usual voting places in the whole county on the first Monday of June, 1875, at which time there shall be elected a full board of county commissioners, who shall hold their offices until the next general election, and until their successors are elected and qualified. They shall qualify and enter upon the discharge of their duties on the first Monday of July subsequent to said election; and at said election there shall be submitted to the voters of said county the permanent location of the county seat, for which purpose the three points or places, Washington, Slate creek and Mount Idaho, shall be voted for, and the point or place so designated, receiving the highest number of votes, shall be declared the county seat of Idaho county.

The special election to be held under the provisions of this act shall be canvassed and governed by the general election law of the territory.

Sec. 6. The board of county commissioners of Idaho county shall, at their first regular or special session after said election, provide for and direct the removal of all the county records, books, papers and other county property, to be removed to the said county seat, and provide county buildings, and do all things necessary to be done to carry the provisions of this act into effect.

Sec. 7. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 8. This act to take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the governor.

Approved, January 8, 1875.

At the special election, held in accordance with the provisions of this act, Mount Idaho was chosen as the county seat. Elliott's history of Idaho territory informs us that "there being no court house, rooms were fitted up for the various officers in the Idaho hotel, since which time a commodious court house and jail have been erected, where the county officers have comfortable offices, and a large hall for the district court, jury rooms, etc."

The next important direct result of the organization of this Grange society was the formation of a stock company among the grangers, capitalized at $25,000, for the purpose of erecting a flouring mill, in addition to that erected by Wheeler, Toothacher and Kelley at Mount Idaho in 1874. The mill was completed some time in 1876 at a cost of approximately $8,000. Its site was on Three Mile creek, just below the Crooks' ranch. The plant was equipped with one set of burrs, was operated by water power and had a capacity of twenty-five barrels daily. Its natural result was to help keep among the settlers the thousands of dollars heretofore expended annually for flour in other counties, and to stimulate wheat raising among the populace.

A little later the grange built a hall on a five-acre tract of land, donated to them by J. M. Crooks, south of the mill. This hall, erected under the supervision of William B. Bloomer and Frank D. Vansise, stands today in the heart of Grangeville, to which city it gave inception and name. For twenty years it was the favorite meeting place of the prairie. It was open to preacher, lecturer, teacher or anyone who had aught to contribute toward the enlightenment or entertainment of the community and it has certainly contributed not a little to the social and substantial well being of the people.

Until the early 'eighties Charity Grange was the leading combination of men in Idaho county. Whatever the order may have done or failed to do in other parts of the American Union, it must certainly be given credit for having effected much good in this community. It came at a critical period of the county's history, gathered up the scattered and divided elements of strength and cemented them together into a harmonious, energetic body, working unitedly for the common welfare. It was one of the important factors in the development of Idaho county.

The momentous year of 1877 came in with few clouds in the sky, but before it was half over, the most awful storm burst upon the county and north Idaho that has ever been experienced in this region or state. The horrible murders by which the Indian war was inaugurated and the course of that war until the surrender of Joseph at Bear Paw mountain, have been given in some detail elsewhere in this volume. Besides these horrors many homes and outbuildings were sacked and destroyed by fire and hundreds of head of cattle and horses were captured and appropriated to the uses of the hostiles. The advertising the country received, while it called attention to its undeveloped resources, was not of the right kind, as it also gave the impression that central Idaho was not a safe place in which to live, an impression which was unfortunately heightened during the next year or two by the Sheepeater outbreak. The war, however, led to the establishment of Camp Howard on the prairie, which gave assurance to all old settlers and new arrivals that they would be fully protected, also furnished an excellent market for such of the farm products of the community as were needed by the soldiers. Camp Howard was a two company post, established by Colonel Green and commanded by Major Hancock and Captains Kroutinger and McKeever during the period of its existence. When it was abandoned in 1881 an indignant and energetic though unavailing protest was raised by the people of this and Nez Perces county. It is with pleasure that we record here for permanent preservation the names of the volunteers enrolled at Mount Idaho and Grangeville for service in the war of 1877, with their commissioned and non-commissioned officers. The correctness of these muster rolls was certified to by Major James P. Canby, paymaster, United States army, in August, 1877, and by affidavits of the two captains. They are as follows:

Roll of officers, non-commissioned officers and privates enrolled at Mount Idaho, Idaho, June 15, 1877: Captain, D. B. Randall; first lieutenant, James Cearley; second lieutenant, L. P. Wilmott; sergeants, John McPherson, J. W. Rainey, F. Oliver, J. W. Eastman, Robert Nugent: corporals, George Smith, John Bower, M. S. Martin, K. W. White, George Riggins, John M. Auchinvole; privates, J. T. Aram, John Aram, John R. Adkison, R. D. Adkison, J. O. Barber, R. C. Brown, W. B. Beamer, L. Bocher, A. D. Bartley, T. J. Bunker, James Buchanman, W. Clark, John Crea, Thomas Crea, J. Chapman, H. E. Croasdale, Green Dallas, C. M. Day, J. W. Eastman, C. T. Eaton, Charles Flynn, H. A. Faxson, William Grotts, George Hall, Joseph Hemelspak, Joseph Harrison, J. C. Harris, John Hansen, D. H. Howser, M. V. Jarrett, F. E. Jerome, Peter King, F. B. King, A. B. Leland, B. F. Morris, Daniel McPherson, Cyrus Overman, Larry Ott, D. Ousterhaus, Joseph Peasley, A. F. Plummer, J. W. Poe, John Riggins, F. M. Rice, M. H. Rice, C. L. Rice, James Rice, J. N. Rice, J. G. Rowton, J. A. Swarts, F. Shissler, T. D. Swarts, F. M. St. Clair, Marion Smith, J. M. Snodgrass, George Sears, Vince Tellis, M. H. Truscott, Frank Vansise, B. R. Wilmot. W. West, A. I. Watson, T. Wall, J. A. Miller, George M. Shearer, T. W. Girton, George Woodward, Ernest Smith, Hugh Kennedy, P. Price, P. Mallick, B. Penny, P. H. Ready, D. H. Telcher, F. Noyes, T. Gano, N. Markham, E. Watkins, James Crea, A. A. Harris, Elijah Adkison, T. L. Ward, S. S. Fenn, L. P. Brown, Sidney B. Brown, William Mitchell, Walter B. Fenn, A. Talkington, H. C. Johnson, James Ragan, C. B. Woods, E. C. Sherwin, Elbert Sherwin, Perry Sherwin, Charles Johnson, James Odle, J. M. Dorman, Clyde Fountain, Thomas Surridge, John Peterson, Elias Shipley, William Gaddy, C. A. Sears, Henry Van Buren, Joseph Richards, Henry Meyers, Norman Gould, Philip Helmer, H. W. Cone, Isaac Orcutt, J. H. Getter, N. B. Mallory, Charles F. Cone, C. P. Cone, A. Van Sicle, Samuel Large, John S.

A GLIMPSE OF THE KOOTENAI NEAR BONNERS FERRY.

SOLDIERS' LOOKOUTS OVERLOOKING WHITEBIRD CANYON IN THE WAR OF 1877.

Kelley, James Carey, John Wood, M. B. Howard, William Trieblecock, John Ramsey, John Stuart, Abner Smith.

Grangeville volunteers: W. B. Bloomer, captain; A. H. Gordon, C. P. Clingan, A. Shumway, J. T. Silverwood, John Johnson, F. M. Hughes, C. M. Redman, S Weaver, W. M. Williams, James Flenne, J. M. Crooks, John Fields, J. H. Rauch, G. W. Hashagen, V. D. Remington, W. C. Pearson, W. H. Sebastian, J. Brown, J. B. Crooks, J. J. Remington, Charles Bentz, Jacob W. Crooks, Samuel Harty, S. W. Reynolds, Charles Crooks, E. S. Remington, John Byrom, D. C. Crooks, James L. Crooks, M. P. Crooks, James Spence, Robert Wilmot, John Flynn, Patk. Curtin, Frank Weichel, E. W. Robie, John Healy, John Weaver, C. H. Robinson, C. H. Brown, Albert Bensching, John Mitchell.

The return of a small remnant of Joseph's scattered band of hostiles caused a little flurry of excitement in Idaho county during the summer of 1878. This remnant consisted of perhaps half a dozen warriors and their squaws and children, but in their efforts to slip back to the reservation unobserved they appeared to be several times their real number. Whether or not they belonged to White Bird's band is not known, but it is certain that they had been driven out of southwestern Montana by a detachment of troops, and had crossed the Bitter Root range, proceeding thence westward via Elk City. Near this little mining town they stopped at a Chinaman's house early one August morning and forced him to prepare food for them. While they were engaged here they were seen by one of the white men living nearby, who hastily spread the news that a band of hostile Indians was about to attack the town. The few white men in the camp thereupon repaired hurriedly to the old fort constructed by them during the Indian war, there to await further develpoments. Two of the whites ventured to the outskirts of the town, whence they could see the little band of redskins as they passed near the place. As soon as the Indians saw that they were observed by the whites, they fled in the direction of Newsome creek. Here they plundered a Chinese store and stole a horse, after which they continued westward.

Meanwhile James B. Sloan, one of the residents of Elk City, volunteered to inform the commandant at Camp Howard of the actions of this band of Indians and through him the news reached Camas prairie. At Mount Idaho a few settlers under command of Benjamin F. Morris went in search of the renegades and soon came upon them near the Clearwater beyond Jackson's bridge. On the approach of the whites the Indians scattered and fled. They ultimately reached the reservation in safety, without committing further depredations.

Doubtless a few other members of Joseph's band reached the Sheepeater country in the southern portion of Idaho county during that same summer and the succeeding winter, and were instrumental in inciting the outbreak which occurred in that region the next year. Here they would find renegades from nearly every tribe in this section of the northwest—Nez Perces, Bannocks, Shoshones, Umatillas and a few Montana Indians and doubtless representatives of other tribes. All were outlaws, fugitives from the courts of the white man or from the wrath of their own tribesmen, joined to each other only by the bonds of fear and companionship in crime. In their mountain retreats they were safe from pursuit and capture.

What is known as the Sheepeater's country is the wildest and most impenetrable region in Idaho, if not in the entire Northwest. It is a region of indescribable ruggedness and grandeur. Hoary mountain peaks with their green mantles of forest alternate with abyssmal canyons thousands of feet in depth along whose bottoms the waters of angry mountain torrents leap and dash and writhe in their efforts to free themselves from their rocky bounds. There are no broad prairies or level tracts of any size here; nothing but precipitous mountain sides and sheer canyons for the most part. Along the crests of the highest ridges with an occasional abrupt descent into the canyons the old Indian trails wind and there are no more tortuous paths than these in all the Northwest. The forests abound in game; the streams teem with fish and these constituted the principal subsistence of the Sheepeaters. The big horn or mountain sheep were very numerous in this region until a comparatively short time ago and because of the fact that the Indians who lived here were such successful hunters of this most elusive game and to a large extent lived on their meat, they were called the "Sheepeaters."

So far as is known no serious crimes were ever laid at their door until the outbreak of 1879. They were seldom seen by the whites, but kept in their mountain fastnesses, well hidden from the curious gaze of civilized man. Occasionally two or three came into Warren with strings of fish or with game, but even these seldom stayed long. The Sheepeaters were very poor, possessing only a few guns and few if any horses,—so poor, indeed, that to many it was a mystery how they managed to exist. They were not considered Indians of good moral character, but as long as they left the whites alone the latter were content to treat them in like manner, and there was peace between them for many years. The Sheepeaters wintered on the east fork of the Salmon. During the summer they roamed throughout that part of Idaho county bounded on the north by the main Salmon, on the east by Lemhi county and on the west by the south fork. An Indian known as War Jack seemed to be their chief, while Chuck and Boyer also exercised dominion among the band James Edwards, who was a resident of Warren for many years and to whom we acknowledge indebtedness for much of our information concerning these Indians, estimates their number at nearly 150, of whom perhaps forty of fifty were men.

There seems to have been no excuse for the Sheepeaters' taking up arms against the government in 1879. The only reasonable explanation of their conduct seems to be that they were incited to the uprising by renegades who joined them after the Nez Perces war of 1877 and the Bannock campaign in 1878. But whatever may have been the cause, they commenced, early in the spring of 1879, a series of depredations and murders. In the hostilities which ensued they eluded three bodies of troops sent against them, defeating one, and resisted capture until late in the fall, when they surrendered with all the honors of war—quite a record considering the circumstances.

Along the south fork of the Salmon there were in 1879 four small farms, all on a narrow strip of land along the bed of the canyon and each isolated from the others except by round-about trails through Warren. From James P. Rain's place, just above the mouth of the south fork, to Hugh Johnson's ranch, the farthest up the stream, the distance was forty miles, while between these two places were those of Sylvester S. (better known as "Three-Fingered") Smith and A. D. Smead. Each of these places was, as just stated, reached by a trail leading from Warren. There were a few bars along the river where placer mining was carried on, though even these were for the most part then deserted. All four of the ranchmen mentioned, except Johnson, had families.

At Johnson's place the Sheepeaters opened the war—if the outbreak may with propriety be referred to as such. Sometime in April, while the snow was yet hard, they fell upon him in his lonely cabin and killed him. For what particular reason they chose him as their first victim it is not known, as he is not accused of having ever done anything to arouse their wrath. They may have been aware that he was alone and perhaps they coveted his horses. Peter Dorsey, who was staying at the ranch just below, went over to visit Johnson the latter part of April. He was greeted with death-dealing bullets and his life blotted out. As Dorsey did not return within a reasonable time, and as nothing was heard of Johnson, friends decided late in May to investigate and accordingly a party consisting of William Kelly, J. Jenkins and A. D. Smead went to the Johnson home. They failed to find anyone at the house or nearby and saw that the cabin had been entered and plundered and that the horses were gone. Fearing that the worst had happened, the party went back to Warren, secured reinforcements in the persons of George Riebold, P. Beamer, E. Brooks, C. Stark and C. Johnson; then returned for a more thorough search of the premises. They found in a nearby field the decomposed bodies of Johnson and Dorsey, bearing gunshot wounds. Indian signs were discovered and all the circumstances warranted the conclusion that the outrage had been committed by redmen.

The settlers immediately despatched a messenger to Camp Howard, requesting the commandant of that post to send a force to protect the community and capture the Indians. Lieutenant Catley, on receipt of the news, made preparations to begin a campaign against the Sheepeaters. By the first of July he set out with about sixty mounted infantrymen, members of the Second Infantry, U. S. A., and a large packtrain loaded with sufficient supplies to last several weeks. Besides the regulars, several scouts were recruited and these with the packers brought the total strength of the column up to about seventy men. The expedition reached Warren early in July and after tarrying there a short time took up the march into the Sheepeater country.

For eleven days they traveled eastward across the south and east forks of the Salmon toward the middle fork, but not a sign of the Indians did they see until the afternoon of July 28th, when one of the packers, a man named White, reported to David Monroe, one of the scouts, that he had seen Indian signs during the morning about eight miles below the camp on Big creek. This stream heads north of Thunder mountain and flowing in a northeasterly direction, empties into the middle fork of the Salmon river. For most of its length it rushes through narrow box canyons, though there are a few open and level basins along its banks. For the details of what followed,—the discovery of the Indians, the attack on the troops, the retreat, the fight on Vinegar hill and the journey back to Warren—we shall rely principally on an official report made by Lieutenant Muhlenberg, a member of the expedition, to Lieutenant C. M. Rowell, regimental adjutant of the Second Infantry. This report bears date of October 28, 1879. The copy before us belongs to Mrs. Matthew Truscott, of Mount Idaho. As far as possible the statements made in the report have been verified by reference to other authorities.

Upon receipt of White's information, Monroe communicated the news to Lieutenant Catley, who listened with impatience to the report, referring to it as a "fooiish story." However, on his return to camp an hour later, Catley had the story told a second time, then ordered the troops to camp for the night, despite Lieutenant Webster's suggestion that there was still plenty of time to send out a scouting party. The following morning between the hours of six and seven o'clock the troops broke camp and started down Big creek toward the location of the supposed Indian camp, leaving Lieutenant Webster and seven men in charge of the pack train. They marched in single file along the bed of the canyon, David Monroe and Josh. Fockler, volunteer scouts, in the lead. The Indian camp was reached about ten o'clock and found deserted, the redskins having doubtless become aware of the presence of the troops. Judging from all signs it was evident that the Indians had departed about two hours previously.

Catley destroyed what was left of any value and pushed forward without taking the customary precaution to throw out an advance guard and flankers on the ridges to his right and left. The troops had proceeded in this manner about two miles down the canyon when suddenly from the opposite side of the creek, about a hundred yards distant, a fierce volley greeted the little body of men. Following the example of Lieutenant Catley, who at the first fire leaped from his horse and sought the shelter of a large tree standing near the trail, the men dismounted and sought protection from the fire of the enemy. Some stood behind their horses, others hid behind trees, and still others went into the brush. Two of their number, Privates James Doyle and A. R. Holmes, of Company C, were severely wounded before they could get out of reach of the galling fire. Catley issued no orders, although his men were expecting at any moment to receive the command to charge or to return the fire. Lieutenant Muhlenberg hurried to his superior's side to receive orders, but none were given. First Sergeant John F. Sullivan then approached Catley and reported, but, like Muhlenberg, received no reply. The commander seemed utterly dumb with fright.

Sergeant Sullivan then reported to Lieutenant Muhlenberg, who ordered that the command prepare to retreat, pending orders from Catley. The situation was critical and Muhlenberg feared that the Indians would cut off their retrat and so completely surround them. This was the substance of his report to Catley. Instead of replying, the thoroughly demoralized commander ran from his tree down into the bushes. Muhlenberg pursued his superior, seeking to gain a reply from him. After running about sixty yards he met Dr. Pring, the medical officer with the troops. This officer, instead of attending to the wounded men, was also in the rear, and in response to Lieutenant Muhlenberg's query as to why he was not with the wounded, replied that he could get no help. Hastening onward Muhlenberg at last cornered his superior officer and again requested orders. By this time Catley had partly recovered himself and he ordered Sergeant Sullivan to detail five men to bring in the wounded, which was successfully accomplished. The command was ordered to retreat up the creek to the first clearing and, as might have been expected, Catley took his place at the head of the column, although he was in the rear while the command was going down the creek. Arriving at the clearing without further molestation, Catley decided to remain there until the next morning, while his pack train came up, and accordingly camp was pitched and a heavy picket line thrown out. Half an hour after the camp was made, Lieutenant Webster and the pack train arrived. The night passed quietly, the Indians making no further attacks.

Early the next morning the camp was astir and as soon as the troops could be fed and the wounded cared for and placed in a comfortable position for traveling, the retreat was continued. Catley decided to try to reach the summit of the high mountain on the north and issued orders for the command to move up a long, rocky ridge in that direction. The wounded were placed on horses between the main body of troops and the pack train, which, under Lieutenant Webster, brought up the rear. The head of the column had reached a point about three-quarters of a mile from the base of the ridge when the pack train in the rear was energetically attacked. By sharp fighting Webster and Muhlenberg brought the train safely within the lines.

Meanwhile, however, the Indians had attacked the head of the column, thus striking from two points at the same time and holding the troops between a cross fire. Two small detachments of skirmishers were sent forward to drive back the redskins in front, but before they could attack, were recalled by Catley. Again a spirit of indecision seems to have taken possession of the commander, for he failed to order a move either backward or forward, paralyzed apparently with fear. The Indians fired the brush and grass at the base of the ridge with the evident purpose of further demoralizing the troops, but the scheme failed. For fourteen hours the troops were kept in this position and during the whole time only five shots were fired by the soldiers, at least so says Lieutenant Muhlenberg in his report. The creek was half a mile away and there being no other water supply near at hand, both men and animals suffered the tortures of thirst, that scorching July day. Eventually, so the story is told, the men broke into a small keg of vinegar which was found in the pack train, and with its contents partly allayed their thirst. From this incident Vinegar hill received its name.

Finally, between midnight of the 30th and two o'clock on the morning of the 31st, the command moved swiftly down the precipitous hillside on their left, crossed the creek and ascended the mountain on that side. Before the troops stopped that day they had traveled, it is estimated by Muhlenberg, approximately forty miles. During the hasty flight of the troops and in the attack preceding the retreat from Vinegar hill, the greater portion of the pack train was lost. It proved a welcome addition to the Indian's supplies, furnishing them with needed provisions, equipments and ammunition. They secured two guns left behind by the two wounded soldiers. While scaling the heights across the creek, Lieutenant Muhlenberg was thrown from his horse and one of his knee caps dislocated. In this predicament he was found by Private Jackman, who placed him upon his (Jackman's) horse and himself walked.

The next morning at two o'clock the forced march was again taken up and continued until ten o'clock that night, about fifty miles being made. A short march the next morning brought the exhausted soldiers to Warren, where a brief rest was given the men before proceeding farther from the scene of hostilities. Thereupon Catley set out for Warm Springs, where he met Colonel Bernard, who, with a small force, had just arrived from Fort Boise.

Thus ended the ill-fated Catley expedition. Its members had gone forth well equipped for the fray and with high hopes of success. They were defeated in the first skirmish, then began a retreat, which, it is hoped, finds few parallels for ignominy in the annals of the American army. Catley covered, in two days and a half, a distance that it had taken him eleven days to traverse by ordinary marches. According to Muhlenberg's report, two men had been wounded, and Mr. Edwards says that one other was killed. The Indians had captured most of the pack train and thereby strengthened themselves materially for a long campaign. Lieutenant Muhlenberg says of his superior officer: "Lieutenant Catley, I think, acted as a coward and is totally unfit to take command of any body of troops." Subsequently, Catley was courtmartialed at Walla Walla on a charge of cowardice. Speaking of the other members of the expedition, Lieutenant Muhlenberg says: "As to the conduct of Lieutenant Webster, everywhere I saw him he seemed to be cool and collected. I never got to see him much, as he was always behind in charge of the pack train. Lieutenant Catley's men behaved very well and seemed willing to obey any order given to them. They did not seem excited in the least."

On Catley's arrival at Warm Springs, he was relieved of his command by Colonel Bernard, and proceeded thence to Camp Howard. Bernard at once moved with his force and a portion of Catley's troops into the Sheepeater country. At Warren he left a guard of twelve cavalrymen to reinforce the garrison, for the citizens of that place, about one hundred in number, having become alarmed after Catley's defeat, had organized a volunteer company, which they had placed under command of Captain James W. Poe, and had taken possession of the old stockade built in 1877. For some time they posted pickets around the town every night.

While Colonel Bernard and his force are engaged in their futile campaign, let us detail the second tragedy that was enacted upon the south fork of the Salmon,—a tragedy that set the whole community in a blaze of righteous indignation and fanned the flames of the country's passion to such fierceness that had the Sheepeaters been immediately captured they would probably have been summarily dealt with. The scene is laid at the ranch of James P. Rains on the south fork, about a mile and a half from its mouth. Here Mr. Rains and his family had lived for a number of years and by dint of hard work had accumulated a valuable property. In earlier times a portion of the ground along the river had been worked as placer mines and a thriving little camp had sprung up which was now, however, deserted. So far as is known Mr. Rains had never quarreled with the Indians and in that region was held in high respect by all who knew him.

Like many others he was not apprehensive of special danger, thinking that any desire the Indians might have for fighting would be fully satisfied by Lieutenant Catley. He therefore felt safe in his home, and was engaged in gathering the year's hay crop, when Catley's troops came streaming homeward after the encounters on Big creek and at Vinegar hill. The jaded troops and excited commander passed the Rains home, informed the family that they must flee as the Indians were in close pursuit, then passed hurriedly onward, leaving Rains and his wife and two little children to fight their own way into Warren unassisted, if fight they must.

Having safely sheltered his family within the stockade at Warren, Mr. Rains, inasmuch as no signs of the Indians were discoverable in the neighborhood, got ready to return to his place that he might attend to several important matters overlooked in the haste of preparation for flight. James Edwards and Harry Serrin offered to accompany Rains that he might the sooner be ready to return to town. Heavily armed and watchful for the dusky foe, the three set out for the ranch. Ten days had now elapsed since Catley's return and Bernard was well on his way into the interior. Rains, Edwards and Serrin reached their destination in safety and immediately set to work taking care of the hay crop and otherwise looking after the place. On Friday, August 15th, Albert Webber, a young brother-in-law of Rains, who lived on Camas prairie and had come to his aid, joined the party at the ranch. His companions told him that they would finish the next day and suggested that he act as cook while they completed the haying. To this plan Webber assented. The hot August sun beat down fiercely upon the bed of the deep canyon, so fiercely that the men usually took a long nooning and to make up this loss of time commenced work at daybreak and continued it, with few intermissions, until dark. Everything else had been attended to and they worked enegetically all day Friday and Saturday that they might return to Warren Sunday. From the first they had worked with their rifles by their sides. They were ever vigilant, for they were all frontiersmen and well aware of the dangers around them.

Saturday morning they carried their rifles with them into the field as usual. Toward noon they returned to the house, where they partook of the midday refreshments, then rested until about three o'clock. They discussed the advisability of carrying their weapons back to the field that afternoon and, unfortunately, decided to dispense with the usual precaution.

Faithfully they worked and at last were pressing the last bale when from the direction of the cabin a rifle ball sped swiftly by them. The gathering twilight deepened. Distant objects took a shadowy form and were rapidly becoming undiscernable. The three men were startled by the close proximity of the shot and remarked that Webber must be shooting at a grouse. Hardly had they uttered the remark when a volley greeted them, several bullets whizzing uncomfortably close to their ears. Edwards, who was on top of the press, yelled to his companions to fall behind the press, then he himself jumped from his exposed position.

There was no doubt now as to the source of those shots. The Indians were at their bloody work. It was now a fight for life with the odds greatly against the four men. Between the three in the field and the house a small creek rushed down from the steep mountain side, cutting its course through a densely wooded channel forty feet in depth to the river. To this creek the three made their way as rapidly as they could. Here they consulted as to the best course to pursue. The longer they tarried the more probable it was that they would be completely cut off from the house and the weapons and the more nearly certain they were of death. They decided to make a dash for the house at all hazards and cautiously climbing up the creek's bank, they started along the trail, Rains in advance. About half way between the creek and the cabin a low rocky point juts out from the west and over this small eminence the trail led. All were now running rapidly. "Keep down from the point!" Edwards and Serrin cried to Rains, but the latter for some reason heeded them not and kept to the trail, while his companions rounded the point. Just as Rains reached the summit a gun flashed and the brave pioneer stopped and staggered. A ball had pierced his right hip. Another shot rang out, this time from the direction of the house. Rains received the leaden missile in the chest. It tore a frightful wound in his body.

Edwards and Serrin saw him fall; they saw the flash of the gun from the direction of the cabin; they heard the shooting in many directions, especially on their right, where it was afterwards learned that Webber had been directing his fire against the Indians. The two men decided that Webber had been taken and that they had better retreat to the creek canyon. Backward they went over their former tracks and reached the creek bottom unharmed. No safety there. They must be moving, so up the creek they walked and crawled and ran until they reached a point where the stream forks, a place they had never visited theretofore. The night had now descended upon the scene and not one of nature's beacons shone brightly enough to furnish a light to their pathway—a fortunate circumstance. At the forks they again stopped and considered their situation. The Indians would doubtless discover that they had escaped to the creek and would therefore follow them, the men reasoned. Why not take the illogical course and scale the point between the two forks? The Indians would not think that they had pursued such a course and had the two whites been acquainted with the nature of the path they took, it is extremely doubtful if even they in their desperate straits would have undertaken to climb the precipice before them. But it was night and they saw not. Hour after hour they toiled upward over the sharp rocks and through the scattering pines, now falling, now slipping, always saving themselves by clutching the branches and bushes near them, steadily and cautiously moving upward until at least they reached the top of the ridge. Below them five thousand feet or thereabouts lay the creek. Soon, on each side of them, a signal fire blazed forth in the darkness and thankful then were the two hunted men that they had ascended the point instead of one of the forks. They were so exhausted that they crawled into a nearby thicket and slept for a short time, little caring what the redskins were doing, as long as they were separated from them by yawning canyons. At daybreak they awoke and readily found an old trail which they followed into Warren, arriving there about seven o'clock. A little later Webber arrived, much to the surprise of Edwards and Serrin. His escape had been almost as marvelous as that of his companions.

As soon as the Indians opened fire on the whites Webber had grasped the situation and prepared to defend the cabin to the last. He had not done much shooting, because he expected those who were in the field to arrive almost any minute. Soon after dark Rains came to the door and was let in by Webber, who laid him upon a couch and ministered as best he could to his wants. Rains called for water and after drinking a little, moaned in his extreme pain, then passed away peacefully. Webber was now confronted with a still more serious danger. The Indians lighted several bonfires around the house for the purpose of better watching the movements of the man in the cabin. Just as he was about to despair of escape the fire in the rear of the cabin became very low. Now that Rains was beyond any aid, Webber eagerly grasped the opportunity and, taking the best gun of the four, crawled away into a shallow ravine in the rear of the cabin and thence to the creek heretofore spoken of. He ascended the side of the precipitous canyon below the forks and after a hard climb finally reached the summit. From that point he saw the Indians burn the buildings on the ranch and the few old miners' cabins which also stood along the river. He estimated the number of the Indians who took part in this attack as no less than seven, though he thought there might be more.

At Warren a party of eighteen well armed men, under the leadership of N. B. Willey, at once took the field with an idea of pursuing the Indians. A messenger, Charles Bright, was despatched with the news to Colonel Bernard. The little company proceeded to the Rains ranch and there found the usual scene of desolation following an Indian attack. In the ruins of the cabin, where the Rains family had made their home and where Webber had made his stand, they found the charred bones of Rains's body, which were taken to Warren and properly interred. The damage to the ranch was estimated at $3,000, a sum which the government was asked to pay to the widow, but her claim, like all of Idaho county's Indian war claims, was thrown out by the commission. The volunteers followed the trail of the Indians for several miles into the interior, but finally gave up the chase as too precarious and uncertain a venture.

Such is the story of the famous Rains massacre as told the writer by one who was present and whose escape has been chronicled, James Edwards, now a resident of Grangeville. His home is brightened by the presence of a devoted wife, who was formerly the mistress of his murdered friend's home. Mr. Rains, an Oregonian by birth, was one of the pioneers of Idaho county and a man highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was young at the time of his death, perhaps somewhere in the early thirties.

Colonel Bernard remained in the mountains until early in September. His campaign was not successful in capturing the warring redskins, though the presence of the troops doubtless kept the Indians from committing other outrages. Upon Bernard's return to Boise, Lieutenant Farrow was ordered into the field, with instructions to commence a fall campaign against the Sheepeaters, an order which he proceeded to promptly carry out. Under his command was placed a force of forty soldiers and twenty Umatilla scouts. This force proceeded to Big creek over the same route that its two predecessors had taken. This time the Indians were located and Farrow succeeded in treating with them through his Umatilla scouts. Farrow was energetic and succeeded in impressing the hostiles with his strength and determination to capture them. It being very late in the season, the Indians, who were but poorly equipped for carrying on a long campaign, ultimately decided to surrender to Farrow. Few Indians ever surrendered to United States troops under more favorable conditions. The Sheepeaters were allowed to retain their weapons and property, were exempted from prosecution by the civil authorities and, after being kept at Fort Vancouver for a time, were placed upon the Fort Hall reservation in the southern portion of the state. Between fifty and sixty Indians were in the band, about half of whom were men. By some this number was supposed to represent their total strength, while others contend that not one-half of the Indians surrendered.

Speaking of their capture, the Warren correspondent of the Lewiston Teller, in the issue of October 8, 1879, says: "Too much praise cannot be accorded Lieutenant Farrow for his exertions in this affair. He has been thoroughly in earnest, has persevered when others weakened, has resolutely faced the inclemencies of the season, short supplies, poor and exhausted stock, and has achieved a complete success; and in these expressions of gratitude I but echo the sentiments of every one of our citizens. The large scope of country thus cleared of Indians should recommend his promotion to a colonelcy." The end of this Sheepeater war happily proved the conclusion of Indian disturbances in Idaho county.

CHAPTER II.

CURRENT HISTORY, 1879–1903.

After the close of the Nez Perces and Sheepeater hostilities, the county settled down to steady development, unhindered by opposition from the red men or other foe to progress. The first few years of the new decade were a period of rather quiet times. The old placers had become so thoroughly worked out that all but a comparatively few of the Chinamen, even, had left them, and new placer grounds the prospector failed to find. The result was no local market. The lack of cheap and speedy transportation rendered outside markets unavailable, consequently there was a local monetary stringency. The increase of population in the entire decade between 1880 and 1890 was only 964, yet at no time was there any stagnation. Cattle and horse raising increased, and slowly the rich soil of the prairie was subdued by the plow of the agriculturist, and compelled to yield bountiful harvests. A representative of W. W. Elliott & Company, publishers, writing of the prairie in 1883, says: "Six years of patient industry have rebuilt the waste places caused by the war, and made the face of the country more beautiful than ever. Not even the farms of Walla Walla show better evidences of careful agriculture than can be seen on Camas prairie at this time. Hard as were the experiences of this people during the war of 1877, the results it has brought have advanced them in the race of life and bettered their condition by giving them broader views of men and things than are usually found in communities so isolated. The scars of the war have been covered with the fruits of peace, and Camas prairie is now a garden spot, making manifest the broad difference between the elevating influences of Caucasian civilization and the enforced degradation by the Government of the Indians on the adjoining reservation."

July 20, 1885, the cattle men of Idaho county met at Mount Idaho, pursuant to call, and organized the Idaho County Stock Growers' Association, the objects of which were stated to be "to advance the interests of stock growers and dealers in live stock in said county, and for the protection of the same against frauds and swindlers and to prevent the stealing, taking or driving away of horned cattle, sheep or other stock from the rightful owners thereof, and to enforce the stock laws of Idaho territory." The first officers were: president, Loyal P. Brown; vice-president, John Coram; secretary, F. A. Fenn; treasurer, H. C. Johnson; executive committee, James Surridge, C. Overman, James Witt, James McDermott, James Odle and the president.

It appears that there had been some cattle stealing prior to this time. On the 31st of the previous May a warrant was placed in the hands of Sheriff Al. Talkington for the arrest of two men supposed to have taken a band of horses belonging to a Chinese packer in Elk City. The Chinaman was camped near Jackson's bridge at the time he sustained his loss. Talkington traced the thieves with their purloined stock to the vicinity of the agency grist mill, where one of the men, whose name was Fox, resisted arrest and was shot dead. The other was taken into custody. Both had been residents of Camas prairie but a short time. A coroner's jury acquitted the posse, including the sheriff and Parker, Sutherland and Anderson, of the agency.

Some excitement was created this year by a proposal to return Chief Joseph and his band of hostiles to the Nez Perces reservation. Citizens sent a protest through B. F. Morris of Mount Idaho to the commissioner of Indian affairs, suggesting that should the Indians be returned, quarrels were almost certain to break out between them and friends and relatives of those outraged and killed during the war. The department kindly spared the feelings of the people of north Idaho and guarded against a possible outbreak by sending the major portion of the band to the Colville reserve, though a few were returned to their Idaho home. It is said that Joseph himself was in favor of the arrangement, knowing that his return to the Nez Perces reservation would not be conservative of the best interests of his people.

By act of the legislature, approved January 21, 1885, the act passed ten years before was amended so that the boundaries should conform to the following description: "Commencing at the junction of Salmon river with Snake river; thence in a northeasterly direction to a point where the Lewiston and Mount Idaho stage road crosses Willow creek; thence down the middle of the channel of Willow creek to its junction with Lawyer's canyon; thence down the middle of the channel of Lawyer's canyon to its junction with the Clearwater river; thence up the channel of the Clearwater river to the mouth of the north fork of the south fork of said Clearwater river; thence due east to the Lolo fork of the Clearwater; thence up the Lolo fork to the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence southeastwardly and southerly, following the present defined boundary line between the territories of Idaho and Montana to the northwest corner of Lemhi county; thence south to the present line of Custer county; thence southwesterly along the present line between Idaho and Custer counties to the present line of Boise county; thence due west along the present line between Idaho and Boise counties to the present line of Washington county; thence following the present line between Idaho and Washington counties to Snake river; thence following the channel of Snake river to the place of beginning."

The year 1886 witnessed the first legal execution in Idaho county. It appears that some time during the latter part of January, a German named Theodore Warlick murdered his mining partner, Henry C. Savage, on the south fork of the Salmon river, where the men were at work. During the preceding month the men had begun quarreling and on December 16th they agreed to separate, so Savage built another cabin. Later the quarreling was renewed over the division of provisions, etc. On the fatal day, Savage came after his gun and another article or two of small value. Warlick had thrown the gun into the river and when he told Savage of this, the latter, so he says, became infuriated and ran at him with an ax. Warlick seized his gun, whereupon Savage turned and fled, but failed to effect his escape. Warlick shot him through the left leg, then through the right side and finally in the neck. He then buried the body. His crime remained concealed until the middle of March, when the remains of Savage were discovered, having been partially exhumed by some wild animal. Upon his arrest, Warlick confessed to the homicide, but claimed in extenuation that it was done in self defense. An effort was made by his attorneys to show that he was not of sound mind, a fact which seemed evident from his talk.

Warlick was tried before Judge Buck in April. The jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, but recommended the defendant to the clemency of the court. Judge Buck, however, sentenced him to the extreme penalty, designating June 9, 1886, as the date for his execution. On that day the sentence of the court was carried into effect, Sheriff Talkington officiating.

During the summer of 1886 the Alton mining district came into prominence as a promising quartz camp and elicited no little interest among mining men. The district lies about thirty miles southeast of Warren on Logan mountain near the head of Big creek. Citizens of Warren subscribed money to cut a trail from their town to the new camp by way of Elk creek, making it possible to reach the district from that point in a day's travel. A rush was precipitated which for a time left Warren almost without population. The camp had been discovered by Luther M. Johnson in the fall of 1885.

July 16, 1887, a partial organization of the Idaho County Pioneer Association was effected. On the 6th of August following, the society was placed upon a working basis by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws and the election of L. P. Brown as president, M. H. Truscott, secretary, and J. M. Dorman, treasurer. The president appointed the following board of directors: D. H. Telcher, J. R. Adkison, B. F. Morris, F. B. King and James Witt. Following were the charter members: J. H. Robinson, C. W. Case, L. P. Brown, M. H. Truscott, A. Shumway, H. C. Brown, J. N. Rice, W. C. Pearson, J. J. Manuel, J. G. Rowton, M. V. Jarrett, J. M. Domran, H. C. Johnson, Marion Smith, F. M. Hughes, B. F. Morris, T. L. Ward, John Bower, T. J. Rhodes, K. W. White, T. D. Swarts, A. I. Watson, C. Overman, J. R. Adkison, J. T. Riggins, J. Auchinvole, F. B. King, George Popham, Andrew Maguire, James Witt, D. H. Telcher, William Coram, Albert Weber, James B. Sloan, Louis Weber, Ernest Smith and John McPherson.

As giving a concise account of the mining conditions of this period and as nearly accurate a one as is obtainable, we quote here a report by N. B. Willey, then a mining man at Warren, who later became the first lieutenant governor and second governor of the state of Idaho. The report was made in the winter of 1886-7 and reads as follows:

"In the Florence district mining is principally carried on by Chinamen and the production has not differed materially from that of preceding years and may be estimated at $45,000. The Harpster and Liddle, a silver ledge four miles south of the town, which was first opened twenty years ago and abandoned, is being retimbered and worked. An average lot of ore sent to San Francisco sampled 140 ounces. Several gold bearing veins have been opened near town, two or three arastres built, and the production from the extremely rich surface has aggregated several thousand dollars.

"The Salmon river district includes gravel bars scattered here and there for sixty miles above its mouth. The leading mine is near Slate creek and is owned by Small Brothers & Company of Walla Walla. It comprises 100 acres with a depth of 30 to 100 feet. A new ditch bringing waters from Slate creek has recently been completed at a cost of $25,000. Total yield of this district may be estimated at $50,000, one-third of which is produced by one claim.

"The Elk City district produced more gold in 1886 than for several years previously. Old claims have been worked with greater vigor and improved appliances, and much new ground has been opened and worked by both white men and Chinamen. The gold production may be estimated at $75,000.

"The Warren district is situated on the south side of Salmon river and comprises the area drained by Warren creek and its tributaries. Situated at an elevation of 6,200 to 7,000 feet above sea level, the winters are severe and much snow falls, but the district is well watered during the mining season. As usual, the placer mining is in the hands of the Chinese. Nine companies have acquired by purchase about two miles of the bed of the principal creek and keep 300 men employed for seven months each year. The production is reported as $96,700. In addition to this sum small companies and single Chinamen have produced $12,500. The white placer miners produced about $26,800. The following quartz mines have produced these amounts, partly estimated and partly reported: Little Giant, $3,300; Knott, $2,000; Bulldog (silver), $523; Greenhorn, $1,250; Keystone, $1,570; Miscellaneous, $1,000: total, $9,643.

"The production of the county may therefore be recapitulated by districts as follows: Florence district, $45,000; Salmon river district, $50,000; Elk City district, $75,000; Warren district, Chinese placers, $95,700: Warren district, white miners' production, $26,800; Warren district, deep mines (quartz), $9,643; total production, $303,183.

"The principal feature of interest is the discovery of extensive ledges of argentiferous ore in the Alton district, thirty miles southeast of Warren, in the heart of the Salmon river mountains. The two principal ore veins yet discovered are named 'Cleveland' and 'Senator Beck.' A shipment of ore to Salt Lake was made from the former late in the autumn, but the result is not known. Assays of several samples have been numerous and large, and some very fine specimens of native silver have been found. Altogether the prospects of this new district are most encouraging."

Agriculturally, the year 1887 was a very prosperous one for both the farmer and the stock raiser. Crops were excellent, more grain, hay, fruit, etc. being harvested than ever before. The stock shipments were also large, aggregating $32,000 for two months in the summer. Cyrus Overman, stock inspector of the county, reported officially that the number of cattle and horses inspected by him between April 1, 1887, and January 1, 1888, and their average value were as follows: 900 cattle at $30, $27,000; 612 horses at $30, $18,360; total, $45,360. The following statistics concerning the county are from Governor Stevenson's report for the year 1887, doubtless having been compiled in part from the assessor's returns: population, 4,250; value of property, real and personal, $753,403; production, wheat, 200,000 bushels; oats, 50,000 bushels; barley, 41,000 bushels; flax seed, 5,000 bushels; potatoes, 10,000; hay, 30,000 tons; gold, $475,000; silver, $5,000; stock in the county: cattle, 15,430 head; horses, 12,000; hogs, 4,124; sheep, 9,000.

The people of Idaho county were encouraged not alone by the abundant crops and the increased volume of money in circulation, arising from large sales of cattle and horses, but by the signs of the times, which indicated that the day of railway construction in Central Idaho was soon to dawn, bringing its stimulus to industry of all kinds. In July a party of men, sent out by the Union Pacific Railway Company to examine into the resources of the country between Weiser and Lewiston, made such a favorable report that the company forthwith ordered a survey, pushing it with much energy and vigor. Hopes, however, were dashed to the ground later by the fact that the Union Pacific succeeded in effecting an amicable arrangement with the O. R. & N. Company, by which it secured a satisfactory outlet to the coast.

The summer of 1888 was a very smoky one on Camas prairie owing to the prevalence of forest fires to the southward. Much timber was destroyed by them, but the bad effect of the fires immediately felt and of most direct moment to the stockman was the destruction of the winter range. But despite this disaster the year was a prosperous one as the price of cattle was higher than it had been formerly and there was considerable activity in the Warren, Elk and Alton mining districts. The presence of O. R. & N. surveyors running lines from the Clearwater to Camas prairie was also an encouraging circumstance, giving promise that the isolation of the prairie and the county was not to last always. Stock shipments this year were officially reported to have aggregated $70,140.

In the counsels of the territorial legislation of 1888-9, Idaho county received not a little attention. By an act approved February 7th, the northwestern boundary line was changed to conform to the following description:—"Commencing at the junction of Salmon river with Snake river, thence up the center of the channel of Salmon river to the mouth of Deep creek; thence up the center of the channel of Deep creek to the mouth of the right fork of Deep creek; thence up the center of the channel of the right fork of Deep creek to the point where the township line between ranges one and two west of the Boise meridian crosses Deep creek; thence due north along said township line to a point where the said line crosses Willow creek; thence down the middle of the channel of Willow creek to its junction with Lawyer's canyon; thence down the middle of the channel of Lawyer's canyon," etc., the remainder of the boundary being the same as before.

Of more vital moment to the county was a legislative enactment providing for the construction of a road between Mount Idaho and Little Salmon meadows, and the appropriation of $50,000 therefor, but as this measure came under the head of specific legislation, the territorial bill had to be submitted to congress before it could become a law. Owing to the brevity of the time intervening between its passage in the territory and the adjournment of the national law making body, it was impossible to secure the necessary ratification at that session, but the measure was ratified in May, 1890, and the contract for the construction of the road let the ensuing September. The work was divided into four sections, the first extending from Mount Idaho to Florence; the second from Florence to Salmon river; the third from Salmon river to Warm Springs; and the fourth from there to Salmon meadows. The entire contract price was $32,240 or $7,760 less than the estimate of Captain Forse and the sum appropriated. After some long, tedious delays, the road was eventually completed, and is proving of undoubted advantage.

The year 1889 was, however, a rather gloomy one to the citizens of Idaho county. It was the second dry year and the result was great depression among the white and Chinese miners. Many of the latter were so hopelessly involved that they were compelled to quit the business entirely and seek to retrieve their fortunes in other lines of endeavor. The drouth was doubly severe upon the farmer and the stockman, diminishing crops, injuring the range and at the same time, by its effect upon the mining classes, reducing demand for such produce as could be raised. Another effect was forest fires which again raged in the surrounding mountains, sometimes threatening serious damage, especially to the range.

Speaking of the fires in one particular direction, the Idaho County Free Press, of October 4, 1889, says:

"The fire in the timber south of town has been gradually spreading and drawing near to the settlements on the foothills for the past month. On Friday last, September 27th, a stiff wind was blowing from the southwest and the settlers all day long, with the assistance of parties from Grangeville and Mount Idaho, fought the fire, which was threatening the properties of Joseph Cash and Mrs. Eastman. The fires in this neighborhood were gotten under control about nightfall Friday evening, and then commenced a fight to save the mill property of W. W. Bowman. About a dozen men from Grangeville and Mount Idaho were on the ground to assist the local settlers and all night long the war against the devouring flames was kept up. It was thought that the best way to fight fire was with fire, so back fires were started, which materially aided in checking the flames. At one time, about three o'clock Saturday morning, it looked as though the mill property was doomed. On the west side of Three Mile creek was a solid mile of fire, with the flames rising forty and fifty feet high, while the air was filled with flying cinders and blazing brands. At one time the old shop at the mill took fire from flying sparks, but one or two buckets of water extinguished the flame. Just as the morning began to dawn the advance of the fire at this point was checked and the only point in immediate danger was the property of Green Dallas. The fire was gotten under control at this point Saturday morning. The work of fighting the fire was rendered doubly hard by the stiff wind, which carried sparks distances of from one quarter to a half a mile, where they would ignite and spread. Sunday the welcome rain came and extinguished the fires.

"No houses were burned, but the timber that was destroyed will be a severe loss to the next generation if not to this."

Though mining excitements in north Idaho have never been an uncommon thing, yet that of July, 1889, was of sufficient magnitude to merit some mention in our summary of the year. The site of the reported placer find was a small creek beyond the Alton quartz district. The discoverers were McLeod, McDonald and Three-fingered Smith. Warren was depopulated as soon as the news became known there and several parties left Camas prairie for the diggings. The scene in Warren must have been very similar to those witnessed the golden days of the early 'sixties, as appears from the following description from the pen of one who was there at the time:

"Our camp is deserted; everybody is gone. Riebold's men left en masse. It looked like the excitement of war times; the streets, from end to end, occupied by horses, some being saddled; some being shod by improvised smiths all along the streets; some being loaded; then the mounting in hot haste, the brandishing of arms and loud call to start, quickly obeyed, and in double quick time, with John Crooks to the front on a charger; the ever restless pack animals jostling and moving hither and thither." The excitment proved to be "much ado about nothing," for on the 19th parties returned, reporting that scarcely a color could be found in the new diggings.

January 2, 1890, Company C, First Regiment, Idaho National Guards was organized at Grangeville with a membership of forty-seven. E. Beck was elected captain; C. M. Day, first lieutenant; S. E. Bibby, second lieutenant. Its civil officers were: president, R. F. Fulton; vice-president, T. J. Aram; recording secretary, T. M. Pearson; financial secretary, S. G. Benedict; treasurer, A. F. Parker.

The year witnessed the survey of the road between Mount Idaho and Little Salmon meadows before mentioned, the letting of the contracts for its construction and the inception of work upon it. It was also a year of great activity in railway circles. The expectation that the Northern Pacific would begin at once constructing a branch line to Lewiston caused a considerable business revival in this as well as Nez Perces county. It is stated that farm property showed a decidedly upward tendency, and that city and town lots almost doubled during the twelvemonth.

As the time approached for the convening of the first state legislature, Idaho county got its forces in battle array to contend for the location within its borders of the agricultural college and experiment station. This institution was entitled to an annuity of $25,000 from the government and an appropriation of the state's public lands. Meetings were held at Grangeville, Cottonwood, White Bird, Mount Idaho, Clearwater, Keuterville and other points to consider ways and means of securing the boon. A memorial was prepared, signed by more than five hundred persons, and forwarded to the legislature. It set forth among other things the advantages of Camas prairie as an agricultural tract, claiming that it was the largest and best body of farming land in the state. Grangeville, naturally, was a leading competitor for the institution, though several other points on the prairie held out inducements in the hope that they might secure the prize. Grangeville offered a subsidy of cash, land and other property, amounting in value to fully $12,500 in all, including the building and grounds of the Columbia River Conference Academy, which the trustees of that institution agreed to donate. But all these overtures were unavailing. The agricultural college was eventually combined with the state university, located at Moscow.

On the 28th of February, 1891, a snow storm set in on Camas prairie, which, it is claimed, eclipsed all others that have been experienced by white men in the length of time it continued without cessation. All that afternoon, all the next day and until daylight of the day following it continued to snow and snow, until the old snow was buried twenty-six inches deep under the large, feathery flakes. There was no wind. When the downfall at last ceased and the sky cleared, the temperature fell almost to zero, but stock were in excellent condition to stand the cold snap, the supply of feed for them was abundant and no damage resulted to the cattle man, while the storm was a blessing to the miner and agriculturist.

At the 1890-91 session of the legislature, the boundaries of Idaho county were again changed somewhat. The line is the same as that defined in the act of 1885 from the place of beginning at the junction of the Salmon and Snake rivers to the Lolo fork of the Clearwater, when the description is made to read: "thence up the middle of the channel of Lolo creek to the head of Lolo creek, and thence in a direct line to the Lolo pass at the summit of the Bitter Root mountains; thence southeasterly and southerly following the present lines to the east line of Washington county; thence along said line between Idaho and Washington counties to the head of the falls at the lower end of Round valley; thence due west to Snake river; thence following the middle of the channel of Snake river to the place of beginning."

Considerable attention was paid this year to the copper prospects on Rapid river. A new townsite, known as Sherman, was laid out and some other steps taken toward establishing a great copper camp and developing the rich ore. It was believed that as a copper district the Rapid river belt would some day rival or surpass the great Seven Devils country, though its inaccessability was against its speedy development.

The year 1891 was the year of the cricket scare in the farming districts of Idaho county, which is here mentioned, not because of its importance, but because it has somehow come to be an event from which dates are frequently reckoned. The crickets were present in great numbers, but they damaged the crops only in spots, failing entirely to produce the wide-spread destruction it was feared they would. The year was one of good crops, no stock losses, and much activity in the mines, especially in the Elk City district, where substantial developments were made in the opening of quartz claims.

The assessment roll of the year shows a total valuation of property of $976,610; that there were four quartz mills in the county, two flour mills, five saw mills and twenty-two mining ditches; that the number of head of stock cattle was 13,337, of beef cattle, 222, of cows, 974, 39 of which were thoroughbreds, of thoroughbred bulls, 17; of horses, 8,016, of thoroughbred stallions, 60; of hogs, 3,121; of sheep, 6,555.

Prior to this time Idaho county had never experienced the excitement of a hard fought county seat contest, but in the spring of 1892 a battle of this exciting and sometimes demoralizing kind commenced. For a number of years Mount Idaho had been declining in about inverse ratio to the growth of its sister town of Grangeville, and the citizens of the latter place at length decided that on the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number the seat of government should be changed. The first gun of the contest was fired February 26th, when the citizens of Grangeville met at Grange hall to take formal action looking toward the removal of the county seat. A committee was appointed to take charge of the matter, the personnel of which was Henry Wax, chairman; A. F. Parker, secretary; W. A. Hall, Evan Evans and R. F. Fulton. Later this committee prepared an address to the people setting forth the reasons for the removal in the following language:

"One-third of the total vote of Idaho county is cast in Grangeville precinct, and a very large proportion of the remainder find Grangeville the most convenient point for the transaction of business. Under present conditions, more than three-fourths of the population have to pass through Grangeville to get to the county seat, thus greatly and unnecessarily increasing taxation by adding to the cost of jurors' and witnesses' fees.

"Grangeville is the largest town of the county, having the largest and most permanent buildings, is the center of commercial and mining business and has more extensive hotel and restaurant accommodations than any other town in the county. * *

"The people of Grangeville will donate to Idaho county suitable and ample grounds for all county purposes, with a better court house than the one now owned by the county, together with a brick jail and a fire-proof brick vault for proper preservation of the county records. The money for this purpose is already pledged by private subscription, and bonds will be given in due time to secure the county against expense.

"Acting on the principle of the greatest good to the number, the county seat should be removed to Grangeville."

According to the provisions of the constitution, a vote on the question of county seat removal could only be had upon petition signed by a majority of the electors of the county. To succeed the proposal had to be favored by two-thirds of the electors voting at a general election and a vote on the subject could only be had once in six years.

The petition was circulated according to requirement. Five hundred and forty-six names were secured, more than the number necessary to make the ordering of the election a foregone conclusion. On the first day of the ensuing term of the district court the petition was considered, and as the papers were found to have been made out legally and signed by a majority of all the voters at the last general election, the judge signed an order providing for the vote.

A lively campaign ensued. October 31st, $6,000 was deposited in the Bank of Comas Prairie by friends of Grangeville, which sum had been subscribed for the purpose of erecting a courthouse and other county buildings, should Grangeville be chosen as the county seat. A bond for ten thousand dollars was also filed with the county commissioners conditioned upon the town of Grangeville's carrying out its promises to the voters.

But at the election ensuing, the people decided against Grangeville, the vote being 470 favoring the removal and 375 opposed. Under the law requiring a two-thirds majority, 564 votes were necessary in order that Grangeville should succeed in its ambitious designs. The question was therefore settled in Mount Idaho's favor for six years.

Another movement which enlisted the attention of Idaho county's citizens during the early days of the year 1892, was that for the establishment here of the state experiment station voted to north Idaho. As an inducement to its location here the people subscribed as a subsidy one thousand dollars cash and a quarter section of land. The land was what was known as the Hardy place, situated between Grangeville and Mount Idaho. The committee appointed to attend to the matter was composed of James Witt, W. C. Pearson, Frank Shissler, J. D. Hendren, James Surridge and L. F. Horning. These gentlemen were successful in attaining the object set before them, for on February 26th, the board of regents of the Idaho State University selected Grangeville as the site of the north Idaho station. The two stations in southern Idaho were given to Nampa and Idaho Falls. The movement for the state agricultural college during the fall of the same year was not successful, for as has been already stated, this institution was finally made a part of the state university.

The year now under review was a very prosperous one in Idaho county. Late and heavy rains in the spring were favorable both to the farmer and miner, but before results could be known in either of these industries, real estate had begun to change hands rapidly at good prices. Reviewing the twelvemonth in its issue of December 30th, the Free Press says:

"The year 1892 is a notable one in the history of Camas prairie, which has made more progress in the last twelve months than in five preceding years. The steady advertising of its resources led to the discovery of the country, as it were, and the newcomers were quick to realize the possibilities which lay before it. As one result much land has changed hands at advanced prices, and a very large addition has been made to our population and to those interested in the development of our natural resources. New towns have been started and others projected, with the result that their occupants have succeeded in making two blades of grass grow where one grew before. A real start has been made toward opening the surplus reservation lands, and while the matter is still in doubt, its final accomplishment cannot be much longer delayed. Our mining camps have prospered more than ever before; new districts have been opened and much development work is in progress. Our vast mineral resources have been advertised as never before and fortune is smiling upon us."

Too bad that the forward movement of the prairie and county should have been brought to a sudden halt and a retreat so soon begun, but how different is the note sounded by this same paper about a year afterward, when is presented the following gloomy picture of conditions:

"The year 1893 opened with prospects of progress and development for Camas prairie and Idaho county that would have sent us to the top notch of prosperity if realized. Never did a season open more auspiciously; the winter was of unusual length and many cattle died, but the long wet spring, with its assurances of bountiful harvests, brought ample compensating advantages. As the season progressed and the promise of a great harvest became practically assured, and the feverish activity in mining circles and real estate speculations in town lots and farming lands developed, it seemed as if the long looked for boom had come. But then came the panic with its depression of values, and to cap the climax, the great harvest that had been gathered was practically ruined by the longest and heaviest rainy season known here since the settlement of the country.

"The one redeeming feature which has kept this community in a self-sustaining position during the panic was the fortunate sale of our live stock and hogs, at ruinously low prices, to be sure, but the aggregate sum was sufficiently large to relieve the financial stringency. The estimated value of cattle shipped from Idaho county this year is $160,000, and the value of hogs is $80,000. But for this one resource we should have been a hopelessly bankrupt community. These are strong words but they are nevertheless true. Our surrounding mining camps which usually put much money in circulation, were this year practically deserted and the output was never less. The claims which in other days were owned and worked by hundreds of Chinese and made to yield thousands of dollars which found its way into the channels of trade are now owned by white men who hold them for speculative rather than for practical purposes, and therefore to-day are idle and unproductive, to the great detriment of every citizen in the county. In the spring of the year there were great hopes that outside capitalists would take hold of some of the better developed quartz properties in Elk City, erect machinery thereon and make them productive; great schemes for the development of the hitherto unworked flat placer fields of that same mineral basin were projected and until the bottom fell out, matters in that camp assumed a very feverish stage of anticipation and excitement. But the year has gone by without any particular change. In Florence and Warren the season has been dull beyond precedent. On Salmon river alone is there an increase of population engaged in mining.

"On Camas prairie matters are in a state of stagnation which will endure until spring. We are just beginning to feel the pinch of hard times and the scarcity of money. The proceeds of our cattle sales are about exhausted, and having paid many debts here, the money has, in the ordinary course of business, been sent below to pay outside obligations. We are now, figuratively speaking, on the flat of our backs, and will remain so until something happens to start up the usual business activity. A boom in the wheat market will put the lower country on its feet right away, but isolated community is too far from railroads to be affected thereby."

But notwithstanding the gloom of this picture it may be doubted whether Camas prairie or any other part of Idaho county suffered one half as much from the depression of 1893-6 as did other sections of the American union; certainly the hard times did not last as long, though there was a condition of things bordering upon the industrial stagnation throughout the whole of the year 1894. There was little activity in the mines, and though crops in the agricultural districts were fairly good, prices were low. The stock market was so depressed as to render that industry only moderately profitable. The year saw one important move forward, however, and that was the building of two much needed wagon roads. The legislature which met in the winter of 1892-3 had appropriated $8,000 for a road from Camas prairie to Elk City and $27,000 for one down Little Salmon river and Salmon river to the southern terminus of the wagon road ending at John Doumecq's place.

Those who were residents of the county at the time will remember that in the summer of 1894 some remarkable meteorological phenomena were observed. The first and second days of June were remarkably sultry and on the evening of the second a southwest wind sprang up, ceasing about midnight. The next day at noon another wind started blowing from the same quarter, a hot wind the like of which had never before been known in the experience of the oldest residents of the county or the Indians. The animometer at the experimental station registered its velocity as having reached at one time seventy-six miles an hour, and having averaged fifty-six for four consecutive hours. At sundown it subsided and was followed by a comparatively low temperature. The wind, it is said, whipped trees to pieces, blew over flues, tore off shingles from houses, overturned light buildings and fences, stripped trees of their foliage and caused garden vegetables to wilt as if blighted with frost. Several structures were moved on their foundations, among them the new school house at Mount Idaho. The Salmon river rose thirty inches in twenty-four hours. Its waters floated away several riparian buildings, among them a sawmill on the south fork. Timber in the mountains was blown down in great quantities. The one advantage of the storm was that prospecting in the mining districts was facilitated by the fact that great holes were dug in the earth by upturned trees.

It may be safely asserted that hard times in Idaho county terminated during 1895. The opening of the reservation in the fall brought hundreds of homeseekers into the different towns, giving them an air of bustle and activity, but better far than any temporary inflation of population was the prospect, nay the certainty, that the development of the surplus Indian lands in the county and the end of Indian dominion would have an effect beneficial to the agriculturist in bringing the railroad and to the miner in opening the Clearwater river, the key to the Bitter Root mountain country.

The year 1895 was one of great activity in the mining districts. In speaking of the progress made, the Free Press says:

"First of all and foremost, the hydraulic elevator plant of the Idaho Mining & Development Company on American hill, in Elk City district, is the largest hydraulic enterprise ever inaugurated in Idaho county and certainly the most pregnant in its possibilities. Next comes the operations of the Relief Milling Company, in the same district—the pioneer enterprise in quartz milling and concentrating. On Deadwood gulch James Witt is opening up the Deadwood basin, by means of a bedrock flume, at great expense. On Crooked creek, in Dixie district, Blaine & Cummings are also putting in a large bedrock flume. The value of the newly exploited Moose creek diggings has been demonstrated this year by Heppner & Richardson, while various other smaller enterprises throughout the camps in the Bitter Roots are in process of development.

"On the Salmon river waters we find in Florence a discovery and development of hitherto undreamed of mineral wealth in quartz, which has so far progressed that a stamp mill for reducing the same is now in process of erection. In Warren the operations of the big Philadelphia Dredge Company will be watched with keen interest by its stockholders, and if it realizes the expectations formed of it, will bring to our virgin placer fields a steady stream of eastern money for investment in like enterprises."

The year 1896 was also one of great activity in mining circles, Florence being, perhaps, the chief center of interest. On April 5th the miners of that district, in mass meeting assembled, decided upon the location of a new town to be called New Florence. Its site was to be Summit Flat, situated a half mile southeast of the old town of Florence. Ten lots were reserved for the first ten business houses to open in the place; sixty or sixty-five others were divided among the residents, by lot. The new town was thought to have been rendered necessary by quartz development in the district. Elk City and Warren also made substantial progress. Activity in the mines had its beneficial influence upon the farming communities of course though these were not to recover fully from the effect of the financial stringency until a little later.

May 17, 1897, a cloud burst visited the Salmon river country, doing great damage to roads, ditches, flumes, ranches and almost everything in its way for a distance of twelve miles. The Free Press tells us that from Freedom to Captain Wilson's, the wagon road was a total wreck where walls were built; that every little gully on the south slope ran a torrent, carrying rocks, dirt and trees on the bottoms below, covering gardens, orchards and ranches from a few inches to fifteen feet deep. At White Bird horses and cattle were swept down into the river. So great was the damage to roads that wagon transportation of mails had to be discontinued, pending repairs. Another cloud burst visited the same region June 21st following, totally destroying the crops on the Sherwin ranch and doing some damage to the White Bird townsite.

It was during the early part of this year that the initial steps were taken toward establishing the Bitter Root and Priest River forest reserves, the executive order for the purpose bearing date February 22, 1897. This order provided that all prospecting should cease after March 1, 1898, but fortunately congress modified this feature, and provided that prospecting might always be carried on within the reserves under the same conditions as elsewhere, also that the land might be taken for agricultural purposes. Patrols are maintained, however, to see that the forests are properly preserved. The Bitter Root reserve, which most intimately affects our county, is situated in both Idaho and Montana and covers the entire Bitter Root range. The mining camps of Elk City, Dixie and Buffalo Hump are included within its limits.

A sensation was created December 29th of this year by the news that the incoming stage from Lewiston had been held up on the flat between the Pearson ranch and the town during the preceding night. After the two passengers, a miner named Arnold Gerber and a San Francisco drummer named Ben Rosenfelt, had been relieved of such money as the robbers could find, the former of twenty-eight dollars, the latter of thirty cents, the highwaymen ordered the driver, Allie Vincent, to throw out the mail sacks. Vincent threw them the way sack, which had nothing in it of great value, retaining the through mail. He was then ordered back to Denver, but after proceeding in that direction for about one hundred yards he again headed for Grangeville. Search the next day resulted in the discovery near the scene of the hold up of a notice to leave town which had been served on a half-breed named Charles A. Frush. The result was the arrest of Frush. One Daniel Hurley was also arrested and both men were held for trial at the May term of the federal court. Frush entered a plea of guilty and gave such evidence against Hurley that he was convicted. Both received life sentences.

Six years having elapsed since the county seat contest, the citizens of Grangeville assembled in mass meeting on January 17, 1898, for the purpose of considering the advisability of inaugurating a new contest. After considerable discussion it was concluded that it were best not to do so just then, as the citizens would be expected to furnish a courthouse and they had other matters of more immediate importance demanding their attention. Florence, too, had been enjoying a boom in its tributary mining territory and had become ambitious to get back the county seat. It was therefore thought that that town might cause a division in the forces favoring a removal such as would prevent the securing of the required two-thirds majority, thus leaving Mount Idaho in possession of the prize for another six years.

As in all other parts of the great northwest and the greater American union, so in Idaho county much enthusiasm was elicited by the outbreak of the Spanish-American war and a wave of intense patriotism passed over the people. The county was quick to furnish its quota of volunteers, indeed the opportunity to enlist was deemed a privilege and many more would have willingly gone to the war had the government required them. Members of the militia, Company C, were of course given the preference and on the evening of April 28th that company was ordered to the state rendezvous at Boise. When the fact became known, a fund was speedily subscribed and hasty preparations were made to give the boys a hearty Godspeed. They were tendered a reception in the opera house the next evening at which patriotic music was rendered and speeches were made suited to the occasion by Hon. Wallace N. Scales, Captain D. M. Hartman, J. F. Ailshie and A. F. Parker.

April 30th they set out in wagons to Lewiston. They were greeted with hastily improvised demonstrations at Denver and Cottonwood, at the latter of which towns they spent the night. They arrived in Lewiston in due season, where they were given another ovation, proceeding thence to Boise on May 5th. The following is the roster of the boys who started from Grangeville. Captain J. W. Murphy, First Lieutenant L. Castle, Second Lieutenant R. H. Hartman, Privates Frank Ames, H. M. McDermid, B. F. Knorr, F. McLean, Fred McKenzie, J. A. Wood, W. E. Cook, Bert Collar, Henry Holz, William Bloom, James Graves, Joseph Jones, William Maxey, ——McKee, Charles Smith, Frank Worden, Fred Beck, James Byrom, John Byrom, W. H. Jones, Joe Jones, W. H. Pearson, Robert Crea, Richard Crea, F. R. Pearson, H. H. Pogue, Ludwig Egeler, M. L. Murray, W. C. Rothwell, William J. Tracy, John Worden, Henry Giles, H. Strochan, Ed. Beck, Fred Ames, Bert Pearson, Henry Crea; also Ned Green of Cottonwood. Of these the following were rejected at Boise probably because they could not pass the physical examination, namely: Frank Ames, Henry Holz, William Bloom, Charles Smith, John Byrom, H. H. Pogue, John Worden, H. Strochan, Ed. Beck, Fred Ames, Bert Pearson and Henry Crea.

The Company C, as it was constituted during the war, was made up of the Company C whose personnel is above given and small companies from Washington, Cassia and other counties. From the memorial prepared from the official records subsequent to the war we obtain the following information: That the captain at the time of mustering out was James Graham; the first lieutenant, Richard H. Hartman, was in command from August 6, 1898, to March 25, 1899, and the second lieutenant, Edwin M. Holden; sergeants: Fred N. McKenzie, John A. Wood, Benjamin D. Knorr, Lee G. B. McDowell, (sharpshooter), William S. Maxey; quartermaster, Warren E. Cook; corporals: William C. Rothwell, John O. Lowe, Thomas W. Parry, Charles H. Abbott, Zabud S. Starks, Frank A. Warden, Bunker C. Eller, chief cook; Forrest E. Collins, lance corporal; musicians, William W. Adamson, Fred Farr; artificer, Hubert H. Anderson; wagoner, Henry H. Giles; privates, Cyrus Albertson, Tim W. Barton, John Bendy, David Bjorn, Val. Brackenbury, Malcolm Carruthers, Thos. E. Chidsey, wounded February 5, 1899, James B. Crea, sharpshooter, Robert Crea, William L. Cunningham, George Cook, Jr., Horatio A. Collar, Ludwig Egeler, James C. Graves, Sidney Gray, John E. Greene, Edward F. Harper, Ellet Hitt, Joseph J. Horton, Norman W. Jones, Joseph Jones, James W. Jeffreys, Paul A. Kinzel, Horatio Lowe, Arthur J. Labrash, George B. Manning, wounded April 10, 1899; Guy Merritt, Harry Minick, Michael L. Murray, (sharpshooter), Solon Orr, Frank R. Pearson, Joseph L. Pope, Edward Patch, Alois L. Price, George C. Robins (sharpshooter), Herman G. Rapp, (sharpshooter); Frank Riblett, William Resh, James C. Rich, Thomas Richardson, Jabez Saunders, George P. Simpson, Frank E. Smith, Orson C. Wixom, Henry A. Wolfe. Transferred: Quartermaster sergeant, Hugh M. McDermid to hospital corps; Private Edward Mason to hospital corps; discharged, before mustering out: Captain John W. Murphy, December 21, 1898; Musician Fred W. Beck, wounded February 5, 1899, Privates Harry J. Conners, James W. Ryan, John C. Cliff, Wesley Walton, wounded February 5th, 1899; Fred Goodwin, Thomas P. Burke, wounded February 5, 1899; John J. Donnelly, John A. Christensen, William P. Cutting, Leander E. Lamon, Robert Mills, Irwin Pierson, Fred H. Streeter, wounded February 5, 1899; Joseph J. Valentine. Roll of Honor: Corporal William H. Jones, died October 21, 1898; Private Bird L. Anderson, died June 11, 1898; Private James D. Jones, died November 1, 1898; Private Howard G. Haller, killed February 5, 1899; Private William J. Tracy, drowned March 17, 1899.

Record of events:—Left Boise, Idaho, May 19, 1898. Arrived at San Francisco, California, May 22, and went into camp at Camp Merritt. Embarked on steamship "Morgan City," June 26th. Left San Francisco bay enroute to Manila, June 27th. Arrived at Honolulu July 6th, leaving July 9th. Arrived at Manila Bay July 31st. Landed August 6th at Paranaque, and went into camp at Camp Dewey. On guard and outpost duty until fall of Manila, in which the Idaho boys took part. Went into barracks at Malate, August 18th. On guard and outpost duty until February 4th, 1899. In trenches and on firing line from February 4th to July 12th. Embarked on U. S. A. transport "Grant" en route to San Francisco, via Nagasaki, Inland Sea and Yokohama, July 31st. Arrived at San Francisco August 29. Went into camp at Presidio, August 31st.

Battles and engagements: With Spanish forces—assault and capture of Manila, August 13, 1898; with Philipino insurgents, 1899; battle of Santa Ana, February 4th and 5th; battle of Caloocan, February 10th and 11th; engagements at Guadaloupe, February 16th, 17th, and 18th; Santa Cruz expedition, April 8th to 17th; skirmish in the advance on Santa Cruz, April 9th; battle of Santa Cruz, April 10th; skirmish in the advance on Pagsanjan and De Lomban, April 11th; skirmish in the advance on Paete, April 13th. It should be added that First Lieutenant L. Castle, of Grangeville, was, on his arrival at Boise, transferred to the first lieutenancy of Company E, of which he was in command much of the time. Later he became captain of Company H, of Boise, with which he returned to San Francisco.

Everywhere throughout the entire war the Idahos conducted themselves in such a manner as to reflect credit upon the state that sent them forth, but perhaps one exploit in which the Grangeville volunteers were prominent is deserving of special mention here. On the 10th of April the command went out on Laguna de Bay to capture towns, in company with the Fourteenth regulars, the Fourth cavalry and the North Dakota Regiment of Lawton's brigade. Lieutenant Hartman, of Company C, was in command of sharpshooters at Santa Cruz and was on the firing line all the time with forty expert shots scattered out in line about 400 yards beyond the outposts, where it was easier to pick off venturesome Filipinos. On April 9, he created the famous "jackpot of Filipinos." It appears that he discovered some eighty or a hundred of the enemy lying in ambush for him on his right. He swung his men around so as to form an arc of a circle with the Filipinos in the center. Lieutenant Sims, of Company A, who was on the right, swung around so as to complete the corral. Then a terrible fire was commenced and in a few moments the "jackpot" was filled with the bodies of slain Filipinos.

October 1, 1899, the Idaho county volunteers returned home. They were greeted with ovations all along the route and when they reached Grangeville, the most enthusiastic and cordial reception was accorded them that has ever been given in the history of the county. Flags were unfurled, strains of martial music greeted their ears, flattering addresses were made, in short everything was done that could in any way emphasize the welcome of the people for those who had so well represented them in battles with a foreign foe. The overflowing heartiness of the reception will live long in the memories of those to whom it was given and of all who participated in this most enthusiastic of gala occasions.

While the Idaho county volunteers were making a record to be proud of in a foreign land, events of great moment in the country's development were transpiring at home. It was during the prosperous year 1898 that the famous Buffalo Hump mines were discovered and that an excitement was created destined to carry the county forward in population, wealth production and general development at a rate never before known since the palmy days of placer mining. The story of the discovery is thus told: In June, 1898, a prospector and miner named Charles F. Robbins, in company with George Mitchell, another devotee of the same calling, went into the Florence country on a prospecting trip. Thence they proceded to Warren, returning about July 15th. In Florence Robbins met another prospector named Bert Rigley Young. The two men, with Mitchell and a fourth mining man known as Perry Mallory, formed a party to go into the Meadow creek country, where they located some placer property. They worked the ground for a week, but not obtaining satisfactory results abandoned the claim and went over into the Wind river country, where Robbins and Young did the assessment work on a property. Mallory and Mitchell here separated from their companions and returned to civilization. The two remaining prospectors, upon completing the assessment work, resumed their prospecting. The second day out, the date being the 7th of August, they camped about seventy-five yards from the ledge of rock upon which the Big Buffalo claim was afterward located. When camp had been made, Young (who then went by the name Rigley) started on a hunt for deer. Returning about six o'clock he passed over the big, uncouth ledge. His attention was attracted by the character of the rock. He picked up a piece of quartz weighing about forty pounds, put it under his arm and went on with it to the camp, where that night it was put through the roasting process. The result was satisfactory and the next day the two men located the Big Buffalo and Merrimac. On the 10th, the Oro Fino, a southern extension of the Merrimac, was staked out. The men worked on the various claims from the morning of the 8th to the evening of the 11th, leaving next day for Florence for a fresh food supply. They told the story of their good fortune and soon the news reached the outside world and a rush for claims was precipitated. The bonding of these Hump properties for over half a million dollars gave to the world sufficient proof of their value.

Speaking of the excitement occasioned by the discovery to a reporter for the Spokane Daily Chronicle, Attorney Nash said:

"No one has any idea of the enthusiasm that the Buffalo Hump strike has aroused. It is all and even more than the locators claimed for it. The assays run to phenomenal values and none of the returns have been low. The strike itself is one of the most phenomenal geological freaks ever discovered. It consists of a huge vein of ore thrown up on the face of the plain and for five miles one can ride along beside it on horseback. In its course the vein runs straight through the Salmon river.

"For two weeks past men have been flocking from all directions to the camp. At night the camp fires resemble those of an army; for miles around they leap heavenward. More than two hundred prospectors were living in tents along the vein when I left Grangeville. Florence and the other camps are almost depopulated; men threw up good jobs to get to the strike; you meet them on foot, huge packs on their backs; on horseback, two men on a horse; in wagons with supplies piled up high; in all sorts of vehicles, all with but one thought—to stake out a claim before all are gone.

"The ledge is free milling white quartz. For years trained and veteran prospectors camped beside it, and climbed over and around it to get into the renowned diggings in Boise basin, in the Florence district, in the northern counties, into the Seven Devils country and to dozens of other localities long since forgotten."

A mining boom may be a costly thing for those who travel long distances and endure great hardships without being fortunate enough to find any reward in unearthed treasure, but it probably never has the deplorable effect upon conditions in the boomed section that a real estate boom has. The result of the sale of the Buffalo mines was a revival of activity in all the mining districts, and a rush into central Idaho in midwinter, which called forth words of warning from the local press. Throughout the whole of the year 1899, Idaho county was in a state of feverish excitement. Old undeveloped properties of which prospectors had known for years began attracting general attention, and inasmuch as they were new to the public many of them were looked upon as recent discoveries. The mining world was astonished at the discovery of the Buffalo Hump, Mallick, Salmon river and South Fork mines almost simultaneously, when as a matter of fact they were not new finds, though without fame, as their development had long been rendered impossible by isolation. A mining boom occasions co-operation in the building of roads and overcoming of natural barriers, producing results utterly unattainable by the generally impecunious prospecting class.

A not unimportant incidental result of the Buffalo Hump excitement was the bringing into prominence before the public of the richest and finest agricultural lands in the state, those of the Camas prairie and the Nez Perces reservation. Thus the farming classes profited not alone by the creation of an excellent home market for their products, but by the influx of men looking for homes, the augmentation of the agricultural population and the increased development attendant thereon.

Another cause of excitement during this year was the railroad activity centering in the Clearwater country. Both the Northern Pacific and the O. R. & N. were making surveys in the central Idaho region, and encouraging the hope that construction of roads in several different directions would soon begin, but the railroad situation has been discussed at some length in a previous chapter and needs no further treatment here.

Writing in the Portland Oregonian, a correspondent in Grangeville thus summarizes the conditions obtaining in Idaho county in the summer of 1899:

"This whole country is on the boom. Mineral strikes and railway prospects are the cause of it. Buffalo Hump being the most important factor. From Lewiston to Mount Idaho business is showing the effect of the boom and everybody is confident that it is but the beginning of a permanent prosperity. New towns and new additions to old towns are coming to the front; the price of real estate is leaping skyward; every house of every description is occupied to its full capacity and large numbers of new ones are under construction, while many vacant lots serve as tenting ground for the people who cannot otherwise get housed. * * *

The greatest drawback this country has is lack of railroads. At present all freight has to be hauled over a mountain range 5,000 feet high from Lewiston, seventy miles away. Two cents per pound is being paid to-day for all freight handled between the two points. This is a handicap that is discouraging to those who have to compete with the world, so the competition from this section has not been worth mentioning.

"Now two lines of railway are projected through the country. The O. R. & N. has done more than a make a preliminary survey. It has definitely located its line and obtained the right of way up the Clearwater and across the Camas prairie to Grangeville. The N. P.'s survey clings to the Clearwater river, following up the canyon on the side opposite the prairie, and aiming, it is said, for a pass that will allow it to go through into Montana.

"Gold dust and bullion to the value of about $250,000 were sent out of Idaho county last year, fully half of which was handled in Grangeville. That yield was much below the average and was much less than the value of the supplies taken in for the support of the miners. From Camas prairie last fall, ten thousand hogs were driven out to market and about three thousand each of cattle, horses and sheep. Besides these of course the local market was supplied. It is not found to be profitable ordinarily to raise grain, hay or root crops for the outside market, the cost of freighting by teams over Craig's mountain being heavy, and the home demand is so limited that there is small inducement for systematic farming. Scarcely one-tenth of the land that might be cultivated is now cultivated. The rich alluvial soil ranging in color from a mole brown to inky black, occasionally of clayey texture and in a few cases showing a little gravel or sand, is said to be the best known for barley, and the wheat grown on it is of such quality that one of the mills at Grangeville sends out a carload of flour a week to supply a special demand from San Francisco. Last year Grangeville sold goods of all kinds to the total of about $750,000."

The same conditions that had brought the good times of 1899 continued operative during the following year with the result that that also was very prosperous and brought substantial industrial developments. On May 26th a delegation from Grangeville's board of trade responded to an invitation to meet and confer with President Mellen of the Northern Pacific Railroad at Stuart. The railway man opened the interview by emphatically stating that the road he represented would extend its line to Camas prairie within a year if nothing unforseen should prevent. He stated that the truce agreed upon between himself and President Harriman in 1899 had been a blessing in disguise for Grangeville, inasmuch as the road, if forced to build at that ime, would have passed up the Cottonwood leaving Grangeville side tracked, while now a plat had been filed of a route touching the town.

In mining circles activity continued, the Hump being still the center of attraction, though signs of the coming Thunder Mountain boom were discernable. Not a little interest was taken in Dewey, a mine located the previous year on the south fork of the Clearwater, seven miles from Grangeville. The camp certainly held forth bright prospects and it had the advantage, should it prove meritorious, of being easily accessible. A wagon road was completed into the Hump country from Grangeville in October,—a splendid monument to the energy and public spirit of Grangeville and the prairie, and a great advantage to the farmer and the miner alike. There was much activity in some of the old camps.

"With the closing of another year," says the Free Press, in its issue of December 27, 1900, "the people of Idaho county can look back over the past twelve months and point with pride to the splendid advancement made in this part of the state. Immigration has flowed into our borders; our mines have been developed; our crops have been abundant; our merchants have enjoyed a lucrative trade, and all well directed energy has been rewarded."

The year of 1901 was one of progress in Idaho county along various lines. High prices for cattle, sheep and hogs made good times among the stockmen and farmers, while the various mines in the different districts were worked vigorously. The report of the state mining inspector stated that at Dixie, in the Hump country and on the Evergreen and Dewey mines on the south fork of the Clearwater near Grangeville much development work was done, and that the results were such as to encourage the mine owners to hope for the fulfillment of their most sanguine predictions. The general prosperity of the country induced not a few industrial projects of various kinds the boldest and chiefest among which was that for the building of an electric railway between Lewiston and Grangeville, via Denver, Cottonwood and Nezperce. At a joint meeting held at Grangeville August 12th of committees representing the Lewiston Commercial club and the Grangeville board of trade, this project was discussed and it was decided to organize a company. E. H. Libby, of the Lewiston Water & Power Company, argued the practicability of the scheme, proposing that power be taken from the south fork of the Clearwater and from the Grande Ronde river. Engineer Walter H. Hill had prepared estimates of the cost showing that $900,000 would be required to construct the line, exclusive of power, power plants, electrical equipments and rolling stock. The extensive area of agricultural and timber land tributary to the proposed road, it was argued, would abundantly justify the venture. It was decided to raise fifteen hundred dollars with which to make preliminary surveys, further estimates, etc., but the project has never been pushed, though its agitation may be resumed in future and there is a remote possibility of its ultimate materialization.

The chief sensation of 1902 was the Thunder Mountain excitement. For several years the existence there of both placer and quartz gold had been known, and the district was represented on the records of the United States assay office at Boise, but owing to its isolation and the absorbing interest of the Buffalo Hump and other districts less remote from ordinary routes of travel, it attracted little general attention. In 1902, however, he eyes of the public were turned in its direction, no doubt through the extensive advertising of the railroads, and a rush of no small magnitude was precipitated. The credit of the discovery is universally accorded to the Caswell Brothers. "In 1894," says the report of the state mine inspector, "Ben Caswell and Dan. Caswell first visited the district and located several claims, and while the formation was entirely quartz, there being no gravel carrying the gold as in placer mining, yet by panning the decomposed porphyry where upon the surface it had become air slacked, the venturesome prospectors secured some $260 in gold. For seven years these men, who were joined by another brother, W. T. Ritchey and Mr. Huntley, annually visited the district, and although their efforts were of the crudest and they were able to work only two weeks each season, a total of fourteen weeks, utilizing the water from the melting snow, within that period of time they secured $20,358.99 in gold, as shown by the receipts of the U. S. assay office at Boise.

"Among those who had heard of the discoveries of the Caswells was Ed. H. Dewey, of Nampa, Idaho, and with characteristic keenness and foresight, Mr. Dewey was the first to realize the wonderful possibilities of the district and interested his father, Col. W. H. Dewey, the well-known millionaire mining and railroad man, in a proposition to purchase the original Caswell discoveries. The Caswells concluded that an assured competence was better than even the ownership of a bonanza that would require large capital to develop. They also had other claims in the district and the interesting of Colonel Dewey would mean the building of roads to the almost inaccessible region and the enhancing of the value of every prospect. A deal was quickly made and a bond to dispose of the claims comprised in the original discovery was entered into in the sum of $100,000. Colonel Dewey immediately put a force of men at work and sent experts into the camp. So favorable were the reports of these experts, men of the highest standing in their profession, that Colonel Dewey and associates, capitalists of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, paid the agreed purchase price to the Caswells, although the bond was not due until January, 1903. The Dewey Company has done a great deal of work, having sent in a ten stamp mill, which was taken over the Boise-Bear valley route in wagons and by pack horses. They have run several hundred feet of tunnels and cross cuts which have all been in ore of a free milling character, averaging $7 and upwards per ton."

The knowledge of the facts contained in the report from which the above extract has been made and the advertising of the railroad companies, precipitated, as we have said, a large influx of people into the Thunder Mountain district during the mining season of 1902. Travel into the country was divided between two routes, via Boise and Bear valley and via Grangeville, Florence and Warren. Naturally the former route was the most popular with eastern people on account of its setting out directly from a transcontinental railroad, but there was much travel over the other route also, and the farmers, merchants and hotel men of Idaho county derived the advantage.

For two or three years previous to this time, the matter of removing the county seat from Mount Idaho to Grangeville had received some attention and at one time steps in that direction had been taken, but the scheme was not pushed to any conclusion. In 1902, however, it was resolved to bring the matter to an issue, so a petition was circulated and such other preliminary steps taken as were by law required in order to secure a vote on the question. The campaign does not seem to have been a very warm one, owing no doubt to the fact that citizens of Mount Idaho realized the hopelessness of their cause. The petition was numerously signed, and the vote at the general election was 2,637 in favor of removal, 943 against. On July 15th previous to the election, the people had voted by a vote of 193 to 13 to issue bonds in the sum of five thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting a city hall, the understanding being that it might be turned over to the county for use as a court house if such was deemed best. The building was erected and leased to the county for ninety-nine years at a merely nominal rental.

We have followed the course of this cursory review until it has brought us out of the realm of history and into that of current events. The dearth of available records and perhaps our own limitations have rendered it impossible to present as vivid a picture as we could wish of the county's development from the time its sands were first found to contain gold to the present when it is a county of happy homes, rapidly developing quartz mines, large live stock interests, schools, churches, societies, a well organized local government, good prospects for abundant railroad connections and a bright outlook for the future. Great as has been the development the past has wrought, a feeling prevails that the county's industrial history has just begun, and that the historian of the future will find a richer field of reseach than we have found, and events of much greater moment to record. The earliest pioneers have builded a goodly superstructure upon with their sons and successors may be trusted to erect, out of the rich materials that nature has provided with such a lavish hand, a grand and enduring edifice, such as will prove a worthy monument to themselves and their sires and predecessors.

CHAPTER III.

POLITICAL.

Despite a most thorough search through the county's archives and diligent inquiry among those most likely to know, we have been unable to find a trace of the earliest political records of Idaho county—those previous to 1869—and are forced to conclude that they are lost. This period covers the time when the county seat was located at Florence, and doubtless in moving the archives from place to place these valuable records have either been left behind or destroyed. There was not much semblance of law and order in Florence during the first few years of its existence and but little attention was given to the problems of government. Men were engaged in a mad scramble for gold. There were no important public works which required attention in the wild rugged country then embraced within the county's boundaries. The simple wants of the people were few in number and were attended to without the complicated system now in vogue.

The early government of Idaho county was identical in form that of most mining counties, except, perhaps, that it was less effective. Among the miners a local government was established which, although not always according to the laws on the statute books, nevertheless generally accomplished the main objects of law in a satisfactory manner. Most of these men, in fact there were very few exceptions, lived in expectation of the mines soon becoming no longer productive, which meant that the miners must leave, and they were, therefore, unconcerned in building up a stable government. This was the general character of the population of Idaho county during the 'sixties. If elected or appointed to office, men filled the positions or not at their pleasure, thus continually disarranging the mechanism of government. Seldom did an officer serve two terms and in most instances men failed to serve out the terms for which they were elected.

This being the condition of affairs for the first decade of the county's existence it need not be surprising if the records and lists of officers who served during this period are occasionally inaccurate, although we have been very painstaking in our efforts to give a correct record. It would manifestly be impossible to give an account of each resignation and appointment, so the names of those only who were known to have served or have been elected are given.

Section 2 of the act creating Idaho county reads as follows:

"Be it further enacted, That L. Lindsey be, and is hereby, appointed county auditor; Robert Gray, Robert Burns and ——— Sanbourn be appointed county commissioners; Jefferson Standifer, sheriff; ——— Parker, justice of the peace, for said county, until the next general election."

This act was passed and approved December 20, 1861.

The county having been organized and a system of government established, it became necessary to hold a term of district court, and so we find that on the 22d day of September, 1862, Hon. E. P. Oliphant, one of the three associate justices of the supreme court of Washington territory, opened court in Florence. Jefferson J. Standifer was present in his capacity as sheriff; J. Rand Sanburn, district clerk, was represented by his deputy, Jonas W. Brown; J. D. Williams and James Judd were appointed bailiffs, and John Donovan acted as the court crier. Besides these officials there were also present several attorneys, among whom we find the names of I. N. Smith, C. P. Sprague, H. L. Preston, J. K. Shafer, Edward Lauder, W. G. Langford and Daniel E. Smith, all of whom were admitted to practice. The first official act of Judge Oliphant was to appoint I. N. Smith prosecuting attorney to fill the vacancy then existing, after which the grand jury was sworn in. The names of these first grand jurymen are given as follows: John Creighton, foreman; B. M. Anderson, G. W. Keeler, William Baird, C. C. Higby, O. Robbins, J. A. Massey, J. B. Oldham, J. J. Walker, Charles Baird, R. G. French, D. H. Alderson, W. T. McMillen, Samuel Stuart, J. T. Galbraith and George Hardin.

The grand jury reported the following true bills: William Winters, George Ripperts, L. B. Helm, murder: William Thoman, Daniel Thorne, James Wendall, George Ivers, assault with intent to commit murder; John C. Holgate, counterfeiting gold dust: T. M. Pooler, James Stearns, larceny: Dick Tregaskis, A. J. Campbell, Richard Roe, John Smith and John Doe, obstructing public highways; and Patrick Layden, Milner & Casten, ——— Brown, Ballard & Calhoun, Howard & Howlett, Wallace & Holgate, ——— Kelly (Slate Creek house), A. I. Chapman, Benjamin Sargeant, Theodore Shultz, John Goff, ——— Miner, John Doe (Mountain house), Squire & Adams, Richard Roe, selling intoxicating liquors.

Holgate's case was immediately tried. J. Harphan, E. T. Beatty, Hugh Donahue, C. W. Walker, William High, John G. Babcock, J. W. McBride, George Popham, T. A. Lowry, William B. Park, C. A. Barnard and D. W. Curtis comprised the jury. Messrs. Smith and Sprague prosecuted the case and Lauder and Langford defended the accused. Holgate was found not guilty. September 30th Winters was placed on trial and late the same day the jury returned a verdict of "not guilty." These were the only important cases which were tried, the remainder being either nolle prosequied or continued. A great grist of civil cases came before the court for adjudication. As indicating the immense volume of business it may be said that forty different entries appear on one day's journal. Many of the cases were settled by the disputing parties, in some cases decrees were granted, others were summarily dismissed, while a few were continued. After being in session twelve days, court adjourned October 4, 1862. For nearly two years following this term practically no important business was transacted by the district court in Idaho county.

From a record of the early water rights granted in the county we take the following, which appears to have been the first claim filed:

"We, the undersigned, claim, as per notice posted on the main Slate creek and two branches on the south side of main creek, the waters of said main creek and branches for ditch purposes to be conveyed to the Florence mines, and the undersigned intend to apply to the legislature of W. T. for a charter for the said ditch, situate in Idaho county, W. T.

"D. H. Alderson,
"A. D. Saunders,
"G. W. Keeler,
"Jos. Hawkins.

"Florence City, July 22, 1862.

"Filed for record this 23d day of July, A. D. 1862; 7 o'clock and 10 minutes.

"I. H. Hoff, County Auditor.

"By Jonas W. Brown, Deputy."

The only other water right recorded in 1862 was that of Charles Bennett, who filed a claim to all the waters of Kelley's creek. This claim was filed October 12th.

On March 3, 1863, the territory of Idaho was organized and under the new regime Idaho county held its first election that fall. This election was called for the purpose of choosing a delegate to congress and representatives to the territorial legislature. Idaho county cast 346 votes for delegate. To the legislative council it sent Lyman Standford, and to the house, Alonzo Leland and John Wood.

In 1864 S. S. Fenn was elected to the legislative council, and E. C. Latta and Alexander Blakely were chosen as Idaho county's representatives in the house. Other than these three we have been unable to find who were elected that year. The following year a special legislative election was held at which Fenn was returned to the council and Alexander Blakely and J. A. Ripson were elected representatives, the former succeeding himself.

A roster of the officers elected in 1866 is as follows: Councilman, S. S. Fenn; representatives, J. H. Harris and A. W. McDonald; probate judge, F. A. Shearer; auditor, recorder and clerk, E. K. Patterson; treasurer, Daniel Courtenay; assessor, J. Renau; commissioners, Conrad Fruth, Thomas Marriott, S. S. Smith; surveyor, Ed. Hanegan; superintendent public instruction, Benjamin Haymond. All were Democrats.

The next election, that of 1868, resulted as follows: Councilman, S. P. C. Howard; representatives, E Mulkey and E. T. Bailey; commissioners, Thomas F. Marriott, James Morehead, ——— ———; probate judge, ——— ———; sheriff, H. B. Sinclair; auditor, recorder and clerk, Benjamin F. Morris; treasurer, J. J. Manuel; district attorney, James W. Poe; coroner, C. A. Sears. The commissioners appointed Alexander McDonald to fill the vacant commissionership and E. R. Sherwin as probate judge. Both of these appointees were Republicans, and, with Coroner Sears, were the only members of that party represented among the officers.

At this election the county seat was removed from Florence, which had been steadily declining, to Washington, the metropolis of the Warren mining district. The commissioners met at the new county seat in August, 1869, and contracted with F. Shissler and John Mathison for the construction of a county jail, the cost not to exceed $2,200. A vacant cabin was rented of John Wood for use as a court house. On July 14th the commissioners divided the county into three new election precincts, whose boundaries were defined as follows:

"District No. 1 to commence at the wire bridge across Salmon river and thence southwest to the headwaters of a stream running from near Marshall's old Mountain House and following down the line of said stream to its junction with little Salmon river at the upper crossing of said Salmon river between Warren and Warm Spring and thence following down the said river to its junction with the main south Salmon and all the country belonging to said county lying south of said line including Warren and South Salmon, shall constitute District No. 1.

"District No. 2 shall commence at the north line of District No. 1 and down the main Salmon river to the big canyon between John Day creek and Slate creek, including all of the Payette country with Warm Springs and Miller's camp and John Day creek, shall constitute District No. 2.

"District No. 3 shall commence at the north line of District No. 2 and all the country belonging to said county, north of said line, including Florence, Slate Creek and White Bird, shall constitute District No. 3."

In 1869 Idaho county had only nine county roads. The first of these was created May 15, 1862, and embraced the streets of Florence; the second road, being the trail leading from the head of Miners' street, via Babboon gulch and the mouth of Slate creek, to the county line, was created at the same meeting, as were also the third road, formerly the old Milner trail, and the fourth county road, the trail leading from the south end of Miners' street, Florence, to the Salmon. These were the oldest. The ninth road to be taken under the county's fostering care was that between the Allison place on the Salmon and Florence, via the Florence quartz mill. This road was created by the commissioners on May 23, 1869.

In 1870 Idaho county's officers were as follows: Councilman, S. P. C. Howard; representatives, P. Cleary and Perry Clark; sheriff, H. B. Sinclair; auditor and recorder, Benjamin F. Morris; treasurer, J. J. Manuel; assessor, Josh Fockler; probate judge, John Keep; commissioners, Harvey H. Hall, Charles Christie and H. A. Tinkham. Hall and Christie were the only Republicans.

The official vote cast at the November election in Idaho county in 1872 was as follows: For delegate, John Hailey, Democrat, 136, Joseph Huston, Republican, 92; district attorney, James W. Poe, Democrat, 124, John Clark, Republican, 99; representatives, N. B. Willey and Harvey Hall, Republicans, 137 and 103 votes, respectively, Harry Tinkham and Philip Cleary, Democrats, 98 and 94 votes, respectively; sheriff, H. B. Sinclair, Democrat, 113, J. S. Fockler, Republican nominee, though a Democrat, 106; auditor and recorder, B. F. Morris, Democrat, 128, I. Orcutt, Republican, 96; treasurer, R. Hurley, Democrat, 142, Leo Hofen, Republican, 82; assessor, Jefferson Rhoads, Democrat, 125, Henry Elfers, Republican, 99; probate judge, Levi May, Republican, 122, John Keep, Democrat, 103; superintendent public instruction, Richard Saux, Democrat, 128, George Woodward, Republican, 54; surveyor, Charles Schneider, Democrat, 130, H. Savage, Republican, 43, William Allison, Independent, 12; coroner, Jesse Farmer, Democrat, 128, C. A. Sears, Republican, 99; commissioner, second district, W. B. Holmes, Democrat, 42, W. B. Bloomer, 10.

The election of 1874 resulted in a sweeping Democratic victory as will be seen from the following vote:

For delegate, S. S. Fenn, Democrat, 163, T. W. Bennett, Republican, 23; councilman, S. P. C. Howard, Democrat, 146, Alexander McDonald, Republican, 40; representatives, Philip Cleary, George M. Shearer, Democrats, 117 and 66 votes, respectively, W. H. Rhett, Thomas Clark, Republicans, 64 and 48 votes, respectively, Fred Klippel, Independent, 65; district attorney, John Clark, Republican, 102; probate judge, Peter Grogan, Democrat, 148, C. A. Sears, Republican, 35; sheriff, C. W. Case, Democrat, 137, G. M. Dyer, Republican, 45; auditor and recorder, B. F. Morris, Democrat, 130, George Barnard, Republican, 51; treasurer, George Church, Democrat, 124, N. B. Willey, Republican, 61; assessor, Jefferson Rhoads, Democrat, 85, John M. Auchinvole, Republican, 99; commissioners, A. Freidenrich, S. W. Carpenter, John Wood, Democrats, 147, 148 and 85 votes, respectively, George Woodward, John Draper, Republicans, 114 and 37 votes, respectively; superintendent public instruction, J. J. Manuel, Democrat, 103, J. H. Elfers, Republican, 80.

The official records of the election held in 1876 are incomplete, giving simply the vote cast in this county for delegate to congress and district attorney. S. S. Fenn was reelected to congress and in this county received 245 votes, while his opponent, John Clark, secured only 131. James W. Poe, the Democratic nominee for district attorney, received 301 votes; Jasper Rand, 39 votes. S. P. C. Howard was returned for the fifth time to the council, and Philip Cleary was chosen as Idaho's sole representative in the lower house. C. W. Case was elected sheriff, Benjamin F. Morris was re-elected auditor and recorder, K. W. White received a majority of the votes cast for the office of assessor, Frank Oliver became treasurer, Aurora Shumway was elected probate judge and J. S. Fockler, D. H. Howser and George Dempster, commissioners. As usual nearly all of the men elected were Democrats. This was the first election held in the county in which the settlers on Camas prairie participated, that section becoming a portion of this county in 1875.

The names of the victorious candidates in the campaign of 1878 may be seen from the summarized vote given below: Delegate to congress, George Ainslee, Democrat, 210, J. W. Brown, Republican, 185; district attorney, James W. Poe, Democrat, 221, M. Bellure, Republican, 18; councilman, James Witt, Democrat, 175, N. B. Willey, Republican, 216; assemblyman or representative, William C. Pearson, Republican, 173, T. W. Girton, Democrat, 169, D. A. Gallagher, 50; probate judge, John Bowers, Democrat, 222, Isaac Chapman, Republican, 170, sheriff, C. W. Case, Democrat, 228, L. P. Wilmot, Republican, 167; auditor and recorder, W. S. M. Williams, Democrat, 218, Frank A. Fenn, Republican, 176; assessor, W. J. Rainey, Democrat, 224, J. L. Crooks, Republican, 167; treasurer, C. B. Wood, Democrat, 152, F. Oliver, Republican, 238; commissioners, John McPherson, T. Wall, C. Fruth, Democrats, 216, 210 and 147 votes, respectively, J. N. Rice, J. B. Chamberlain, Marion Smith, Republicans, 151, 241 and 210 votes, respectively; coroner, John Denny, Democrat, 182.

The annexation movement affected politics in Idaho county fully as much as in other counties of northern Idaho, and the campaign of 1880 was largely influenced by that movement. The people of this county seem to have been quite unanimous in their belief that annexation was a wise policy for the northern counties and at the polls 287 votes were cast favoring annexation to Washington. Only five cast negative votes. Brayman, the annexation candidate for congressman, received 297 votes, George Ainslee, the Democratic candidate from southern Idaho, received 162 votes, while Alanson Smith, the regular Republican candidate, also opposed to annexation, was given only 29 votes. For district attorney, A. Quackenbush, Republican, received 270 votes, L. M. Maxwell, Democrat, 215; for councilman, L. P. Wilmot, the Republican candidate, received 258 votes, J. H. Forney, Democrat, 226; for representatives, T. W. Girton, E. B. True, Democrats, received 255 and 250 votes, respectively, George Dempster, F. A. Fenn, Republicans, were given 226 and 233 votes, respectively; for probate judge, John Bower, Democrat, received 249 votes, W. C. Pearson, Republican, 237; for auditor and recorder, W. S. M. Williams, Democrat, received 236 votes, J. B. Chamberlain, Republican, 249; for sheriff, T. J. Rhoads, Democrat, received 259 votes, Charles Bentz, Republican, 231; for treasurer, William Baird, Democrat, received 265 votes, George D. Smith, Republican, 224; for assessor, W. J. Rainey, Democrat, received 289 votes, J. R. Adkison, Republican, 193; for commissioners, T. Wall, H. C. Johnson and W. M. McLeane, Democrats, received 244, 314 and 234 votes, respectively, D. H. Telcher, James Odle and C. M. Redman, Republicans, 250, 156 and 255 votes, respectively; for surveyor, F. Cobb, Democrat, received 252 votes, J. H. Robinson, Republican, 228; for coroner, Caleb Witt, Democrat, received 236 votes, John Denny, Republican, 241.

Again, for the year 1882, the official vote as canvassed, is missing and we can present only the names of the successful candidates. For the first time since the organization of the county the election went strongly Republican in 1882, only four Democrats being successful. These were C. W. Case, who was elected probate judge over George Woodward; T. J. Rhoads, who defeated Harry Wilson for the shrievalty; J. H. Forney, who was elected district attorney; and Delos Carr, who was elected one of the county commissioners. James Odle was elected councilman; William C. Pearson and Robert Larimer, representatives; J. M. Crooks and N. B. Willey, county commissioners; J. B. Chamberlain, auditor and recorder; J. M. Dorman, treasurer; D. H. Telcher, assessor; and John Denny, coroner.

The records of the election held in 1884 are also incomplete, so that only the names of the officers elected can be given. These were: Sheriff, A. W. Talkington, Democrat; treasurer, J. M. Dorman, Republican; probate judge, C. W. Case, Democrat; assessor, D. H. Telcher, Republican; district attorney, J. H. Forney, Democrat; commissioners, Cassius M. Day, John Mathison, C. B. Wood, Democrats; auditor and recorder, T. J. Rhoads, Democrat; surveyor, F. P. Turner, Democrat; coroner, John Denny, Democrat.

In 1886 the Democrats secured ten out of the fourteen officers elected. The campaign was fought on general party principles. The official vote is given as follows: For delegate, John Hailey, Democrat, 406, Fred T. Dubois, Republican and anti-annexationist, 277; councilman, S. S. Fenn, Democrat, 325, Robert Larimer, Republican, 354; representative, Henry C. Johnson, Democrat, 336, Frank A. Fenn, Republican, 346; sheriff, A. W. Talkington, Democrat, 411, J. T. Aram, Republican, 274; probate judge, C. W. Case, Democrat, 362, W. C. Pearson, Republican, 325; district attorney, J. H. Forney, Democrat, 385, J. E. Beede, Republican, 264; auditor and recorder, T. J. Rhoads, Democrat, 491, F. B. King, Republican, 188; treasurer, John Bower, Democrat, 425; assessor, M. V. Jarrett, Democrat, 321, J. N. Rice, Republican, 362; coroner, O. W. Bullard, Democrat, 281, S. E. Bibby, Republican, 392; surveyor, F. P. Turner, Democrat, 401, J. H. Robinson, Republican, 277; commissioners, 1st district, James Witt, Democrat, 112, C. M. Day, Republican, 79, 2d district, H. S. Jones, Democrat, 172, William Von Berge, Republican, 161, 3d district, Philip Cleary, Democrat, 67, J. B. Chamberlain, Republican, 65.

The annexation question came strongly to the front in 1888 for the last time, for before another election could take place Idaho had donned the garb of statehood and taken her place by the side of her sister states of the Union. The movement for annexation did not have as many friends in Idaho county as formerly, however, for Norman Buck, the annexationist candidate for congress, received a comparatively light vote. Several causes conspired to weaken the annexation spirit in this county, chief among which was the proposed division of the county should the northern portion of the state be segregated from the southern. Then, too, the people were weary of fighting for what seemed to be a lost cause and were apathetic in the matter. The apparent strength of the movement in Idaho county at this time will be seen from the vote for Buck which is given in the official count below:

For delegate, J. H. Hawley, Democrat, 365, F. T. Dubois, Republican, 252, Norman Buck, Annexationist, 57; councilman, T. F. Nelson, Democrat, 376, N. B. Willey, Republican, 307; representative, S. W. Smith, Democrat, 315, C. M. Day, Republican, 363; sheriff, Keith W. White, Democrat, 349, D. H. Telcher, Republican, 334; probate judge, C. W. Case, Democrat, 363, W. C. Pearson, Republican, 317; district attorney, J. H. Forney, Democrat, 400, W. A. Hall, Republican, 282; auditor and recorder, T. J. Rhoads, Democrat, 481, Robert Larimer, Republican, 208; treasurer, J. Bower, Democrat, 401; assessor, J. F. McLean, Democrat, 295, J. N. Rice, Republican, 387; commissioners, 1st district, Thelbert Wall, Democrat, 117, J. S. Kinkaid, Republican, 73, 2d district, J. B. Forsman, Democrat, 190, Charles Bentz, Republican, 165, 3d district, S. A. Willey, Democrat, 53, E. W. Robie, Republican, 78; coroner, T. W. Nickel, Democrat, 332, S. E. Bibby, Republican, 345; surveyor, F. P. Turner, Democrat, 283, E. C. Spedden, Republican, 395; superintendent of schools, H. Robbins, Democrat, 387. At this election only seven votes were cast in Florence precinct, at one time the most populous district in Idaho.

The first state election passed off very quietly in Idaho county. The issues were national in character and too generally known to require discussion here. The vote cast in Idaho county follows:

Congressman, Alexander E. Mayhew, Democrat, 369, Willis Sweet, Republican, 377; governor, Benjamin Wilson, Democrat, 365, George L. Shoup, Republican, 384; lieutenant governor, Samuel Taylor, Democrat, 345, N. B. Willey, Republican, 404; secretary of state, E. A. Sherwin, Democrat, 373, A. J. Pinkham, Republican, 377; treasurer, Timothy Regan, Democrat, 372, Frank R. Coffin, Republican, 378; state auditor, J. A. Wickersham, Democrat, 388, Silas W. Moody, Republican, 348; attorney general, R. Z. Johnson, Democrat, 373, George H. Roberts, Republican, 376; superintendent of public instruction, M. A. Kelly, Democrat, 372, J. E. Harroun, Republican, 378; justices of the supreme court, Hugh W. Weir, F. E. Ensign, I. N. Maxwell, Democrats, 372, 373 and 381 votes, respectively, J. W. Huston, I. N. Sullivan, J. T. Morgan, Republicans, 379, 372 and 373 votes, respectively; judge second district court, James W. Poe, Democrat, 385, W. G. Piper, Republican, 361; district attorney, J. H. Forney, Democrat, 462, E. O'Neil, Republican, 280; joint senator, C. W. Case, Democrat, 346, I. S. Weiler, Republican, 396; joint representative, Ezra Baird, Democrat, 365, J. L. Goodnight, Republican, 377; representative, S. W. Smith, Democrat, 353, F. A. Fenn, Republican, 391; sheriff, C. B. Wood, Democrat, 384, J. M. Auchinvole, 345; clerk, T. J. Rhoads, Democrat, 432, J. B. Chamberlain, Republican, 305; assessor, J. D. Hendren, Democrat, 385, Evan Evans, Republican, 352, treasurer, John Bower, Democrat, 412, J. C. Gelbach, Republican, 324; probate judge, Hiram Robbins, Democrat, 358, William A. Hall, Republican, 381; coroner, J. W. Turner, Democrat, 358, S. E. Bibby, Republican, 384; surveyor, J. C. Stephens, Democrat, 350, George Woodward, Republican, 374; commissioners, 1st district, A. Carpenter, Democrat, 100, J. M. Dorman, Republican, 110, 2d district, J. B. Forsman, Democrat, 179, G. H. Heberling, Republican, 170, 3d district, J. S. Fockler, Democrat, 62, W. J. Kelly, Republican, 101.

The campaign of 1892 was enlivened by a county seat contest. The little town of Grangeville had grown into a small city and its inhabitants believed that their town was the proper place for the county seat. The friends of the town therefore petitioned the district judge to order a county seat election, that the voters might express themselves in the matter of removing the county seat from Mount Idaho. This order the judge granted. Had it not been for the fact that Denver and Cottonwood were as ambitious for county seat honors as was Grangeville, and were as yet afraid to measure their strength with the metropolis of the prairie in case the voters should express themselves as favorable to removal, it it quite probable that those favorable to removing the county seat from Mount Idaho would have won their point. As it was, however, 470 votes were cast in the affirmative and 375 in the negative, and a two-thirds affirmative vote being necessary to remove the county seat, the project failed. It may be interesting to note the vote recorded in the different precincts on this question, so we herewith present the official vote:

Grangeville, yes 163, no 11; White Bird, yes 13, no 18; Slate Creek, yes 24, no 1; Clearwater, yes 16, no 36; Lake, yes 26, no 11; Fairview, yes 35, no 15; Mount Idaho, yes 15, no 46; Rapid River, yes 15, no 0; John Day, yes 8, no 1; Cottonwood, yes 16, no 81; Westlake, yes 14, no 3; Warren, yes 50, no 10; Elk City, yes 27, no 18; Denver, yes 21, no 57; Keuterville, yes 5, no 42; Forks, yes 13, no 14; Florence, yes 9, no 0: total, yes 470, no 375.

The Populists entered the political field in Idaho county in 1892 and made a few nominations for some of the more important county offices. Both the Republican and Democratic conventions passed strong resolutions pledging their support toward the early construction of wagon roads to Elk City and other interior mining camps. Of course the political parties all suffered from small factional fights engendered by the county seat contest. The official vote was as follows:

For president, Cleveland, 434, Harrison, 391, showing that the county was not far from being equally divided politically; congressman, E. B. True, Democrat, 430, Willis Sweet, Republican, 420, James Gunn, Populist, 27; governor, J. M. Burke, Democrat, 444, W. J. McConnell, Republican, 414, A. J. Crook, Populist, 34; lieutenant governor, G. V. Bryan, Democrat, 438, F. B. Willis, Republican, 415; justice of the supreme court, F. E. Ensign, Democrat, 426, I. N. Sullivan, Republican, 414; secretary of state, J. H. Wickersham, Democrat, 444, J. F. Curtis, Republican, 411; attorney general, W. T. Reeves, Democrat, 442, G. M. Parsons, Republican, 412; treasurer, Philip A. Regan, Democrat, 439, W. C. Hill, Republican, 413; auditor, W. J. McClure, Democrat, 433, F. C. Ramsey, Republican, 411; superintendent of public instruction, W. J. Faris, Democrat, 440, B. B. Lower, Republican, 410; joint senator of Idaho and Nez Perces counties, B. F. Morris, Democrat, 492, J. F. Ailshie, Republican, 366, J. H. Robinson, Populist, 24; joint senator of Idaho and Custer counties, A. F. Parker, Democrat, 74, J. G. Rowton, Republican, 99; joint representative of Idaho and Nez Perces counties, D. C. Stephens, Democrat, 426, W. L. Thompson, Republican, 405; representative, T. W. Girton, Democrat, 448, R. C. Divine, Republican, 403; sheriff, C. S. Gregory, Republican, 429, A. W. Talkington, Democrat, 409, William Coram, Populist, 52; assessor, J. H. Wann, Democrat, 440, C. F. Brown, Republican, 428; probate judge, J. C. Garber, Republican, 485, Levi Magee, Democrat, 382; treasurer, John Bower, Democrat, 481, John Gilmore, Republican, 372; commissioners, Jacob Reibold, Republican, 429, C. W. Case, Democrat, 420, Henry Meyer, Republican, 430, Delos Carr, Democrat, 419, J. S. Fockler, Democrat, 479, J. B. Chamberlain, Republican, 375; coroner, J. W. Turner, Democrat, 504, F. B. King, Republican, 349; surveyor, G. M. Robertson, Democrat, 477, George Woodward, Republican, 380. For the first time since the organization of the county a Republican was elected sheriff.

By 1894 the Populists had gained considerable strength in this county and polled a much larger vote than in 1892. All three of the parties adopted free silver platforms. Much personality and local strife marked the election in Idaho county. As will be seen from the following vote neither of the leading parties could claim a complete victory, the county offices being quite evenly divided:

Congressman, J. M. Ballentine, Democrat, 439, Edgar Wilson, Republican, 501, James Gunn, Populist, 170; justice supreme court, J. C. Elder, Democrat, 442, J. W. Huston, Republican, 506, Texas Angel, Populist, 146; governor, E. A. Stevenson, Democrat, 497, W. J. McConnell, Republican, 479, J. W. Ballentine, Populist, 141; lieutenant governor, J. B. Thatcher, Democrat, 463, F. J. Mills, Republican, 497, J. J. Chambers, Populist, 139; secretary of state, J. R. Hall, Democrat, 449, J. W. Garrett, Republican, 505, F. M. Tibbels, Populist, 146; attorney general, W. T. Reeves, Democrat, 445, George M. Parsons, Republican, 497, R. L. Spence, Populist, 150; auditor, James Stoddart, Democrat, 444, F. C. Ramsey, Republican, 503, Frank Walton, Populist, 145; treasurer, J. H. Bush, Democrat, 455, Charles Bunting, Republican, 499, C. W. Cooper, Populist, 145; superintendent public instruction, J. W. Faris, Democrat, 448, C. A. Foresman, Republican, 503, M. J. Steele, Populist, 145; circuit judge, second district, S. S. Denning, Democrat- Populist, 473, W. G. Piper, Republican, 563; district attorney, Clay McNamee, Democrat-Populist, 548, James E. Babb, Republican, 540; joint senator with Nez Perces county, A. F. Parker, Democrat, 538, C. M. Day, Republican, 470, G. W. Hinkle, Populist, 120; joint representative with Nez Perces county, K. W. White, Democrat, 515, W. L. Thompson, Republican, 481, S. D. Strong, Populist, 123; representative, Philip Cleary, Democrat, 439, J. G. Rowton, Republican, 531, J. A. Goodwin, Populist, 138; clerk, A. W. Talkington, Democrat, 547, C. S. Gregory, Republican, 428, Henry Kolb, Populist, 147; sheriff, Cyrus Overman, Democrat, 554, R. M. Henley, Republican, 365, E. L. Parker, Populist, 213; assessor J. D. Hendren, Democrat, 427, M. S. Martin, Republican, 583, C. W. Stewart, Populist, 113; treasurer, W. H. Sebastian, Democrat, 465, D. A. Wilson, Republican, 487, W. E. Graham, Populist, 142; probate judge, John Bower, Democrat, 485, J. K. Vincent, Republican, 398, Jacob Vercler, Populist, 233; commissioners, Thomas Surridge, Democrat, 400, W. S. Clark, Republican, 522, Hardin Chenoweth, Populist, 154, J. B. Forsman, Democrat, 408, W. W. Blackburn, Republican, 517, Alfred White, Populist, 132, J. A. Czizek, Democrat, 392, H. W. Cone, Republican, 571; coroner, J. W. Turner, Democrat, 480, F. H. Pearson, Republican, 421, W. F. Shawley, Populist, 187; surveyor, J. W. Evans, Democrat, 470, J. W. Shannon, Republican, 505, J. W. Henderson, Populist, 124.

The campaign of 1896 was as strenuous in Idaho county as elsewhere throughout the Union. The Republicans, Silver Republicans, Democrats and Populists held their conventions at Grangeville on the same day, Saturday, September 19th. As was expected the Republicans had divided on the all-absorbing question of the free coinage of silver, the regular Republicans adopting a gold platform. The three remaining parties attempted to effect a junction. After much conference the Silver Republicans agreed to fuse with the Democrats, the former being allowed the nomination of the two representatives, but the Populists and Democrats were unable to agree upon a division of the nominations and nominated a separate ticket. The fusion party was called the Democrat-Silver party. At the state conventions the Democrats, Populists and Silver Republicans, under the name of the People's Democratic party, fused in nominating several officers. Idaho county Democrats presented a strong candidate for the nomination for governor this year in the person of Aaron F. Parker, editor of the Idaho County Free Press. He was not the choice of the convention, however. On election day the silver party carried the county by a tremendous majority, Bryan receiving three times as many votes as were given McKinley. The Prohibition candidate for congressman, James T. Smith, received 10 votes and their candidate for governor, Moses F. Fowler, 8 votes.

The official vote was as follows: For president, Bryan, 1120, McKinley, 373; congressman, James Gunn, Fusionist, 655, William E. Borah, Silver Republican, 421, John T. Morrison, Republican, 374; governor, Frank Steunenberg, Fusionist, 1057, David H. Budlong, Republican, 385; lieutenant governor, George F. Moore, Fusionist, 614, Edward B. True, Silver Republican, 427, Vincent Bierbower, Republican, 380; secretary of state, George J. Lewis, Fusionist, 620, Charles Durrand, Silver Republican, 407, Isaac W. Garrett, Republican, 391; auditor, James A. Anderson, Fusionist, 623, Bartlett Sinclair, Silver Republican, 416, Elmore A. McKenna, Republican, 386; treasurer, George H. Storer, Fusionist, 618, Timothy Regan, Silver Republican, 414, Frank C. Ramsey, Republican, 387; attorney general, Robert E. McFarland, Fusionist, 611, George M. Parsons, Silver Republican, 418, John A. Bagley, Republican, 377; superintendent of public instruction, Louis N. B. Anderson, Fusionist, 607, Mathias F. Cowley, Silver Republican, 388, Charles A. Foresman, Republican, 367; inspector of mines, Benjamin F. Hastings, Fusionist, 1010, Theodore Brown, Republican, 389; justice supreme court, Ralph P. Quarles, Fusionist, 580, Edgar Wilson, Silver Republican, 429, Drew W. Standrod, Republican, 372; state senator, John W. Turner, Fusionist, 700, James Edwards, Republican, 370, Oscar C. Sheldon, Populist, 271; representatives, Robert F. Fulton, Charles E. Holt, Fusionists, 678 and 694 votes, respectively, J. G. Rowton, Charles Morehouse, Republicans, 401 and 365 votes, respectively, John Chenoweth, Alford White, Populists, 345 and 291 votes, respectively; sheriff, W. S. M. Williams, Fusionist, 683, Charles F. Brown, Republican, 430, Jerry R. Baker, Populist, 378; assessor, Thomas J. Yandell, Fusionist, 594, John R. McLean, Populist, 673, John B. Crooks, Republican, 242; treasurer, George M. Robertson, Fusionist, 620, David A. Wilson, Republican, 444, Delos Carr, Populist, 327; probate judge, Wallace N. Scales, Fusionist, 692, Jacob C. Garber, Republican, 504, Jacob Vercler, Populist, 267; surveyor, John A. Seeley, Fusionist, 515, James W. Shannon, Republican, 538, Frank Turner, Populist, 342; coroner, Thomas W. Nickel, Fusionist, 731, Edward W. Stevens, Republican, 449; commissioners, Daniel J. Bingham, Fusionist, 633, Jerry Dorman, Republican, 400, Andrew J. Williams, Populist, 344, Anton Hendricks, Fusionist, 507, Henry Meyer, Republican, 393, Christopher B. Knorr, Populist, 461; John E. Briscoe, Fusionist, 814, John N. Rice, Republican, 464. The amendment to the state constitution, granting the women full political suffrage, received 427 affirmative and 320 negative votes in the county.

The year 1898 brought forth the bitterest campaign that Idaho county had witnessed in years. Dissensions had arisen in all three parties and, strangely enough, out of it all came fusion between the Republicans and the Populists. The platform adopted by this unusual alliance did not mention silver, pledged the party to a just and honest administration of the county's affairs, pledged the party to reduce the fees and salaries of the county officers, to improve the county's roads to the end that the interior mining region might be more fully developed, and denounced the present law in regard to distributing liquor license monies. A rupture between the Democrats and the Silver Republicans was narrowly averted, the Democrats agreeing to fuse with the latter by the close vote of 32 to 22. As in 1896, fusion was the watchword of the state conventions, Democrats, Silver Republicans and Populists combining on several offices, while a portion of the Populist party maintained the Populist party organization and nominated a separate ticket.

The vote cast in this county was as follows:

For congressman, Edgar Wilson, Fusionist (Democrat-Silver Republican), 960, Weldon B. Heyburn, Republican, 581, James Gunn, Populist, 257, William J. Boone, Prohibitionist, 55; governor, Frank Steunenberg, Fusionist, 1025, Albert B. Moss, Republican, 615, James H. Anderson, Populist, 175, Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, Prohibitionist, 85; lieutenant governor, James H. Hutchinson, Fusionist, 998, James F. Hunt, Republican, 547, Tannas E. Miller, Populist, 165, James Ballentine, Prohibitionist, 57; secretary of state, Mart Patrie, Fusionist, 984, Robert S. Bragaw, Republican, 594, Joseph S. Bonham, Populist, 148, John W. Knott, Prohibitionist, 63; auditor, Bartlett Sinclair, Fusionist, 984, James H. VanCamp, Republican, 584, Arthur G. Whittier, Populist, 160, Mrs. Naomi McD. Phelps, Prohibitionist, 77; treasurer, Lucius C. Rice, Fusionist, 1151, George W. Fletcher, Republican, 586, John J. Anthony, Prohibitionist, 59; attorney general, Samuel H. Hays, Fusionist, 1004, Thomas L. Glenn, Populist, 166, Frank T. Wyman, Republican, 596, William A. Hall, Prohibitionist, 65; superintendent of public instruction, Permeal French, Fusionist, 1136, Lucy F. Dean, Republican, 628, Joshua N. Reynolds, Prohibitionist, 62; inspector of mines, Jay A. Czizek, Fusionist, 922, John W. Stoddard, Republican, 595, David Farmer, Populist, 276; justice supreme court, Isaac N. Sullivan, Fusionist, 1063, Drew W. Standrod, Republican, 631; circuit judge, Frank L. Moore, Fusionist, 773, Willis Sweet, Populist, 399, Edgar C. Steel, Republican, 581; state senator, Frank E. Fogg, Fusionist, 968, James Woodward, Republican-Populist, 807, Mrs. Luella Smith, Prohibitionist, 113; representatives, Joseph C. Stephens, Frank E. Johness, Democrat-Silver Republicans, 1,076 and 1,007 votes, respectively, Mrs. Mary Bennett, Joseph M. Wolbert, Republican-Populists, 819 and 614 votes, respectively, John S. Smith, Prohibitionist, 96; county clerk, Albert W. Talkington, Democrat-Silver Republican, 1,027, Mortimer S. Martin, Republican-Populist, 993; sheriff, John P. Harriman, Democrat-Silver Republican, 922, John F. McLean, Republican-Populist, 1,080; assessor, Harry W. Cone, Democrat-Silver Republican, 815, Fred White, Republican-Populist, 1,121; treasurer, George M. Robertson, Democrat-Silver Republican, 1,107, David A. Wilson, Republican-Populist, 796; probate judge, Lewis C. Arnold, Democrat-Silver Republican, 756, Joseph K. Vincent, Republican-Populist, 802, Silas Perkins, Independent, 243; superintendent county schools, Lewis Elsensohn, Democrat-Silver Republican, 1,104, George A. Cowgill, Republican-Populist, 675, James W. Phillips, Independent, 54; county attorney, Wallace N. Scales, Democrat-Silver Republican, 1,212, James DeHaven, Republican-Populist, 752; surveyor, Rufus Hawley, Democrat-Silver Republican, 995, Stephen Steininger, Republican-Populist, 785; coroner, George Stockton, Democrat-Silver Republican, 947, Henry B. Blake, Republican-Populist, 835; commissioners, Joseph B. Cook, George W. Petty, John E. Briscoe, Democrat-Silver Republicans, 913, 982 and 1,013 votes, respectively, Andrew J. Williams, August von Bargen, Joel B. Morris, Republican-Populists, 838, 823 and 769 votes, respectively, Jacob B. York, William R. Pitt, Lorenzo E. Smith, Prohibitionists, 39, 45 and 42 votes, respectively.

With perfect weather and a vote nearly twice as large as that polled in 1898, the election of 1900 passed off in this county with the best of feeling and without the slightest disturbance. The issues were national in character, generally speaking, and the result showed that Idaho county upheld the principles advocated by the Democratic party. In Grangeville, the registration reached 859 and 767 votes were cast, showing a marvelous growth in this precinct. The Democratic majorities averaged between 300 and 500. A small Prohibition vote, not exceeding 25, was cast.

Official vote: For president, William Jennings Bryan, 1,884, William McKinley, 1,527; congressman, Thomas L. Glenn, Fusionist (Silver parties), 1,783, John T. Morrison, Republican, 1,447, John F. Stark, Populist, 18; justice of the supreme court, Charles O. Scockslager, Fusionist, 1,745, Edgar C. Steele, Republican, 1,480, William Perkins, Populist, 20; governor, Frank W. Hunt, Fusionist, 1,785, Drew W. Standrod, Republican, 1,447, John S. Randolph, Populist, 24; lieutenant governor, Thomas F. Terrill, Fusionist, 1,733, Addison A. Crane, Republican, 1,440, Johannes Hansen, Populist, 19; secretary of state, Charles J. Bassett, Fusionist, 1,734, Martin Patrie, Republican, 1,432, Melancthon F. Eby, Populist, 46; attorney general, Frank Martin, Fusionist, 1,742, George E. Gray, Republican, 1,726, Clay McNamee, Populist, 33; auditor, Egbert W. Jones, Fusionist, 1,763, Henry J. Syms, Republican, 1,429, William W. Thorp, Populist, 20; treasurer, John J. Plummer, Fusionist, 1,732, George H. Kester, Republican, 1,430, Augustus M. Slatter, Populist, 44; inspector of mines, Martin H. Jacobs, Fusionist, 1,745, Robert D. Bell, Republican, 1,448, Edward Kimberly, Populist, 17; superintendent of public instruction, Permeal French, Fusionist, 1,808, Jessie Riley, Republican, 1,402; state senator, Joseph C. Stephens, Democrat, 1,713, Henry B. Blake, Republican, 1,471, James A. Goodwin, Populist, 63; representatives, Andrew W. Moore, Louis Smith, Democrats, 1,751 and 1,668 votes, respectively, James S. Parker, Dio C. Call, Republicans, 1,374 and 1,317 votes, respectively, Benjamin D. Knorr, William H. Clarke, Populists, 105 and 73 votes, respectively; sheriff, Jesse M. Dixon, Democrat, 1,830, M. L. Murray, Republican, 1,390, William Pauls, Populist, 105; assessor, John I. Overman, Democrat, 1,905, O. C. Lapp, Republican, 1,402, John F. Stark, Populist, 50; treasurer, George M. Robertson, Democrat, 1,883, George H. Michael, Republican, 1,311, William V. Manring, Populist. 59; county attorney, Wallace N. Scales, Democrat, 1,917, Douglas W. Bailey, Republican-Populist, 1,370; probate judge, Hampton Taylor, Democrat, 1,860, Joseph K. Vincent, Republican, 1,366; superintendent of county schools, Lewis Elsensohn, Democrat, 1,855, Edith B. Craig, Republican, 1,431; surveyor, Henry H. Pogue, Democrat, 1,633, James Stuart, Republican, 1,514, Edgar E. Douglas, Populist, 54; coroner, Thomas W. Nickel, Democrat, 1,578, Russell Truitt, Republican, 1,491, A. A. Kincaid, Populist, 112; commissioners, Henderson T. Dizney, Frank G. Mixoll, Alfred H. Bishop, Democrats, 1,568, 1,714 and 1,773 votes, respectively, Frank Brown, Edward S. Sweet, Milton S. Mason, Republicans, 1,637, 1,489 and 1,295 votes, respectively, Jefferson Wood, Benjamin M. Booth, Populists, 58 and 54 votes, respectively.

Idaho county now has thirty-nine precincts and at the last election polled 3,534 votes for the different candidates for congressman and 3,580 votes in the county seat contest. It has four members of the legislature and is honored by having James F. Ailshie, of Grangeville, on the supreme bench. For the fifth time in the history of the county the people voted upon the question of removing the county seat. For the second time the friends of Grangeville worked faithfully for the establishment of the county's seat of government at this thriving metropolis and this time they were successful. When considered precinct by precinct, the opposition to the removal is found to be very slight, although combined together the negative vote made a total of 943. There were 2,637 votes cast in the affirmative, however. Grangeville cast 880 votes favoring the removal of the county seat and only 7 negative votes, thus recording the fact that nearly one-fourth of the voting population in the county is to be found within the limits of this city. The issues of the campaign were for the most part national in character and a perusal of the vote cast shows that neither of the great parties can really claim Idaho county as its own.

The official returns are as follows: For representative to congress, Joseph H. Hutchinson, Democrat, 1,717, Burton L. French, Republican, 1,735; justice of the supreme court, Frank E. Fogg, Democrat, 1,655, James F. Ailshie, Republican, 1,854; governor, Frank W. Hunt, Democrat, 1,868, John T. Morrison, Republican, 1,658; lieutenant governor, William E. Adams, Democrat, 1,747, James F. Stevens, Republican, 1,682; secretary of state, Charles J. Bassett, Democrat, 1,753, William H. Gibson, Republican, 1,648; state auditor, John C. Callahan, Democrat, 1,741, Theodore Turner, Republican, 1,688; state treasurer, Edward P. Coltman, Democrat, 1,740, Henry N. Coffin, Republican, 1,643; attorney general, Frederick D. Culver, Democrat, 1,774, John A. Bagley, Republican, 1,631; superintendent of public instruction, Permeal French, Democrat, 1,833, May L. Scott, Republican, 1,603; inspector of mines, John H. Nordquist, Democrat, 1,730, Robert Bell, Republican, 1,641; judge of the second judicial district, Wallace N. Scales, Democrat, 1,955, Edgar C. Steele, Republican, 1,647; state senator, Levi Magee, Democrat, 1,735, Jacob L. Eckert, Republican, 1,824; representatives, Perry W. Mitchell, Hugh B. Fulton, Avery C. Moore, Democrats, 1,711, 1,512 and 1,710 votes, respectively, Dio F. Call, Fred White, Henry Meyer, Republicans, 1,706, 1,900 and 1,700 votes, respectively; county clerk, John I. Overman, Democrat, 1,963, Frank Brown, Republican, 1,752; sheriff, George J. Seay, Democrat, 1,879, William W. Blackburn, Republican, 1,704; assessor, William H. Williams, Democrat, 1,594, Henry Telcher, Republican, 1,973; treasurer, George M. Robertson, Democrat, 1,908, Albert M. Baker, Republican, 1,593; prosecuting attorney, Edward M. Griffith, Democrat, 1,876, Asa S. Hardy, Republican, 1,590; probate judge, Hampton Taylor, Democrat, 1,914, Joseph K. Vincent, Republican, 1,600; county superintendent of public instruction, Lewis Elsensohn, Democrat, 1,994, Charles F. McCarthy, Republican, 1,553; surveyor, William C. McNutt, Democrat, 1,877, James A. Carlisle, Republican, 1,589; coroner, John W. Turner, Democrat, 1,824, Russell Truitt, Republican, 1,644; commissioners, 1st district, Robert H. Farris, Democrat, 1,756, Arthur Clark, Republican, 1,674, 2d district, George Simon, Democrat, 1,852, Thomas H. Thompson, Republican, 1,594, 3d district, Robert Griffith, Democrat, 1,734, Charles E. Holt, Republican, 1,692. A small Prohibition and Socialist vote was also cast.

CHAPTER IV.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

GRANGEVILLE.

So hopelessly at variance is the testimony of different witnesses regarding many of the facts of Grangeville's early history and such is the dearth of reliable printed records concerning the town that it is a practical impossibility to compile its annals with more than approximate accuracy. No person can form an adequate idea of the treacherousness of the memory of man until he attempts to fix absolutely the dates of events two or three decades past, depending upon the concurrent accounts of independent witnesses to establish the truth beyond question. Not a little effort has been expended in trying to fix important dates in the history of Grangeville. The task has proven a vexatious one and the results unsatisfactory, but it is hoped that the sketch herewith presented will do no serious violence to truth.

All are agreed that the town owes its origin to the organization in August, 1874, of Charity Grange No. 15, Patrons of Husbandry, the effect of which upon the social and industrial life of Camas prairie has already been adverted to. Henry Hart Spalding, son of the noted Nez Perces missionary, was the organizer of the efficient association and King school house, near Mount Idaho, its first home. It is stated that the residents of Mount Idaho gave the grange very little encouragement, being without sympathy with the principles and faith in the efficacy of the movement, and that its membership was composed almost entirely of prairie residents.

Immediately after the organization of the order, J. H. Robinson, William C. Pearson and Nathaniel Markham were elected a committee to secure ground in Mount Idaho on which to erect a hall for the use of the association. These gentlemen waited upon Loyal P. Brown, then the townsite owner, but to their astonishment they received no encouragement whatsoever from him. Mr. Brown was not himself a believer in the grange. He told the committee so without reserve and said he did not want their hall within the limits of the town. Mr. Brown was a man of many virtues, a man whose memory is revered in the county. He was generally alert to perceive opportunities and courageous to grasp them as they passed, but in this instance he made a serious mistake, giving his town a rival which was ultimately to draw to itself the patronage of the surrounding country, becoming strong at the expense of the pioneer town, whose prestige, sightliness and convenience of location would otherwise have made it the metropolis of Idaho county.

Upon meeting with this refusal, the committee went to John M. Crooks, whose large ranch of six hundred acres was situated on Three Mile creek, and requested that land be given them for the proposed Grange hall. Crooks had been approached many times before by men who wished to establish business houses upon the creek, and had invariably refused concessions. This time, however, he changed front entirely, donated a tract of ground for the hall and gave the enterprise his enthusiastic support. The building was erected during 1876, at a cost of about $2,000, which sum was subscribed in cash, labor and materials by the members of the grange and friends of the project on the outside. The old road from Mount Idaho to Lewiston had passed Crooks's house previous to his time but it was now changed so as to lead in a more direct course across the prairie. Upon it the hall was located, and later it became Main street, Grangeville.

Though Mr. Crooks, as we have said, had steadily resisted the establishment of commercial houses upon his lands during the early days, when he was converted to a change of policy, he was converted in good earnest and never backslid as long as he lived. He gave not only the hall site asked for but five acres more and a water right on Three Mile creek for mill purposes. The direct beneficiaries of the latter donation were the Grange Flouring Mills Company, a firm composed exclusively of grangers. The mill was given precedence of the hall in the time of its erection. Work on it was begun in the fall of 1875 and continued until its completion about a year later. The construction of the hall did not commence until 1876. John Rauch supervised the mill construction; Charles Redman his assistant. William B. Bloomer and Frank Vansise were in charge of work on the hall, in the erection of which, as in that of the mill, several others were employed, including the donors of labor. Before the mill was completed the company ran short of funds, for money was exceedingly scarce at the time, and in order to make good the deficiency, J. M. Crooks, W. C. Pearson, J. H. Robinson and W. S. M. Williams mortgaged their land. All these mortgages were lifted during or before 1877, though the public spirited men who tided the mill enterprise over its most trying period were not reimbursed until some time later. The cost of the mill is variously estimated at from $7,000 to $12,000. Mr. Pearson was the first president of the company, and, ex officio, the first superintendent of the mill, his successor in both offices being W. S. M. Williams.

During 1876 and the two or three years following quite a number of frame structures were erected upon lots which had been laid out by Mr. Crooks at the time he made his donations of land. Among these was the home of John Mitchell, a miller; a small hotel, 16 by 24 feet, built by Bloomer & Vansise on the site of the present Jersey house, which was sold a year later to William C. Pearson; a little Chinese store building on the hillside opposite where the Eagle brewery was afterward put up; the blacksmith shop of Joseph Jewell, opposite the site of Atherton's present shop on E. Main street; the residence of A. L. Gordon, on the corner east of the Jersey house, of Charles Bentz, a son-in-law of Mr. Crooks, east of where Freidenrich & Alexander's store now is, and of a laboring man named Coon, who built, after the Indian war, on the corner of Main and what is now State street, which latter thoroughfare was for many years known by the name of its first resident. Mr. Coon's house was the first building on the west side of Dry creek. The first drug store was a small one on the site of Pfeufer's present store on Main street, built by Dr. Pring, an army surgeon and physician.

It is thought that the second merchandise store, aside from that of the Chinaman, was opened by Isadore Monheimer, as a branch of Rudolph's Mount Idaho establishment. The building, Mr. Vansise tells us, stood on the hill above the Chinese store just across the old mill ditch and is still in existence. This store was maintained only a short time and is entirely forgotten by some of the oldest residents of Grangeville. When it was discontinued, Nash Crane, a brother-in-law of Coon, opened a saloon in the building.

In 1878 or 1879, probably during the latter year, William Hill opened a general merchandise establishment in Grangeville. He procured his goods from Scott & Vollmer, of Mount Idaho, and has been supposed by some to have represented that firm, though Mr. Scott tells us that such was not the fact; that Mr. Hill acted solely upon his own responsibility in opening the little store. The next mercantile house of Grangeville was that of Aaron Freidenrich and Joseph Alexander, who came, it is believed, in 1880.

Previous to the annual meeting of the grange held in January, 1876, the village was without a name. The question of a suitable appellation was discussed and finally settled at that convocation, however. Many suggestions were made, among them Millville, Grangeville and Wheeling, the last after the then capital city of West Virginia, suggsted by J. H. Robinson. The name "Grangeville" having received a majority of one vote in the election was adopted, and by it the town has been known ever since. The postoffice was established about the year 1876, W. C. Pearson being its first master.

At the time of the Indian war, when there were not more than thirty-five people in Grangeville and its immediate vicinity, the hamlet had already begun to entertain ambitions of becoming the metropolis of Camas prairie, and General Howard remarks that considerable rivalry had already sprung up between it and Mount Idaho. It was the center of much attention during the continuance of hostilities in Idaho county, and it also took on a martial air for a short time in 1878, during the continuance of the Bannock and Piute Indian war in eastern Oregon. Grange hall was fortified and for a few days occupied, but happily the scare proved groundless, as the hostiles never came near, and no disturbances arose among the Nez Perces.

The first school on Three Mile creek was a log structure built by volunteer labor in 1868 on the farm of John Aram. Its first teacher was a man named McLaughlin, a miner wintering in the neighborhood, and the second the respected pioneer, James H. Robinson. Mr. Robinson informs the writer that the school was better attended and better equipped than one would naturally suppose, owing to the fact that the pioneer people of Camas prairie were more cultured and educated than are pioneers generally. This was the school of the district until after Grangeville was well started. In 1877, however, Rev. J. D. Flenner, a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, established in the town a church and an institution of learning known as the Columbia River Conference academy. This school held its sessions up stairs in the Grange hall, the free use of which was tendered as a bonus by the public spirited organization that built it. For several years the academy was a thriving institution. Starting with fifty-five pupils, it soon had an enrollment of one hundred. The relationship between the public school and this academy was quite intimate; indeed they blended together at first almost into one institution, for the same teacher was in charge of both, drawing his salary out of the school fund each year until that was exhausted, then presiding as principal of the academy and charging tuition. The academy occupied Grange hall for a number of years, but about 1884, as nearly as can be ascertained, it erected a building of its own where the Grangeville implement company's store now stands. The connection between it and the public school continued uninterruptedly, however, for a few years longer.

Naturally the growth of Grangeville during the eighties was quite slow. Isolation and scarcity of money were militating against it, as against the country generally, the latter due to the decline of placer mining before other industries could be developed to take its place. Elliott's history, published in 1884, speaks of the town as a little hamlet on the road leading to Mount Idaho, consisting of a mill and a few shops and dwelling houses.

Until 1885, Grangeville had never been surveyed but in the fall of that year F. P. Turner, county surveyor, made a plat of it, which bears date October 30th and was filed for record December 3d. The plat shows nine regularly laid out blocks two hundred by four hundred feet, bounded by North Second street, South street, Mill street and Coon (now State) street.

About 1890 the town took up the forward march in good earnest and since that time it has maintained a growth always steady and substantial and at times rpid; this, too, despite the long period of finncial depression experienced by the country generally. In a lengthy descriptive article on Idaho county, written in 1890, that well known and admittedly able journalist, A. F. Parker, gives us a glimpse of the Grangeville of that day which is of so much historic interest that we feel constrained to reproduce it here. He says:

"Grangeville is comparatively a new town, having been started in 1874. It has all the elements of a quiet, progressive center, and is one of the most moral, orderly and law-abiding towns in America. Every sojourner is struck by the steady air and self repose of its citizens. It is not a county seat, and between it and its near neighbor, Mount Idaho, the most cordial feelings are entertained. It is the commercial center of Idaho county, being situated in the most central part of the most fertile and thickly-settled portion of Camas Prairie. It is a farmer's, miner's, stockman's and prospector's trading point and does a very large mountain trade. It is located on Three Mile creek, three miles from Mount Idaho. The town is building up very rapidly. Its business interests comprise three large stores, carying the heaviest stocks of goods in Idaho, a fine hotel, two blacksmiths, brewery, two saloons, a weekly-newspaper, the "Idaho Free Press," with job printing office attachment, two contractors and undertakers, one boot and shoe maker, one furniture establishment, agricultural implement dealers, two drug stores, three doctors, two meat markets, harness and saddle manufactory, a saw and shingle mill in the timber two miles from town, and several dairies in the immediate neighborhood.

"Grangeville is an enterprisng town, and already possesses the attributes of a place ten times as populous, viz.: a high school, a resident minister of the Methodist church, a fine brass band, a choir and orchestra, a Chautauqua circle and other indications of culture and refinement that are greatly extending their influence in the community. Churches will be erected this fall by the Methodist and Episcopal congregations. A very large union Sunday school is organized here. The Patrons of Husbandry have a strong membership, own a fine hall, and are a power for good in the community. The Odd Fellows also make Grangeville their headquarters. A strong military company (Company C, Idaho Guards), equipped, armed and uniformed by the state is also organized here and universally commended for its efficiency of drill and military manœuvres. The town is growing very rapidly and promises to become in the near future the most important town in northern Idaho. Wood is obtained by hauling from the timber belt two miles south of town. Water is found at six to twenty feet. A new schoolhouse is building, its population is fast increasing, and the formation of a new social and commercial world is progressing with great rapidity. It will undoubtedly become the railroad center of the great Clearwater basin. Present population, 300."

In 1890, F. D. Vansise built for the school district a school house 22 by 36 feet, costing about $650. Many thought at the time that this building was inadequate to the needs of the town and the wisdom of their councils was soon discovered, for in 1893 a new and much larger and more expensive building was found to be necessary. 1890 also witnessed the laying of the corner stones of the two churches mentioned in Mr. Parker's article, the Methodist and Episcopal, both of which were built in due time. 1892 brought two banks, the Bank of Grangeville and the Bank of Camas Prairie, the former being the first institution of its kind in the town though the mercantile firm of Vollmer & Scott had for many years discharged some of the functions of a banking establishment. A second flour mill, with a capacity which was later increased to one hundred barrels, was erected in 1892, and a saw mill near town was also among the new enterprises inaugurated during the year.

In 1893 the little frame school house proved inadequate and on March 6th the district determined to order a special election to be held April 3d for the purpose of voting on a proposition to issue bonds in the sum of $5,680, with the proceeds of which to erect a school. The election was held pursuant to call and resulted in the authorizing of the bond issue by a vote of 72 to 8. July 16th of the following year the contract for building the new temple of learning was awarded to George W. Williams. The contract price was $4,995, but as usual in such matters changes were made in the plans necessitating increased expenditures, and bringing the total cost up to about $6,000.

Notwithstanding the hard times of 1894 the town enjoyed a substantial growth during that year. A telephone system was put in between it and Lewiston, and a number of new business enterprises were inaugurated. The old Grange flour mill passed into the hands of Scott & Vollmer, who renovated it thoroughly and increased its daily capacity to forty barrels. Grangeville's experience during the hard times goes to prove the statement so frequently made that points remote from a railroad are less affected by general financial disturbances than those in more intimate connection with the centers of population and civilization. It cannot be denied, however, that Grangeville felt the hard times and that its growth during those trying years was much slower than it would have been had prosperity prevailed generally.

May 13, 1895, the town experienced its first fire of any consequence, two of the oldest buildings in town being destroyed. The fire started in an old structure situated on the corner cast of the Jersey house, occupied at the time by one J. P. Fitzgerald. Mr. Fitzgerald had arisen at an early hour on the morning of the accident and started a fire in his cook stove. Soon after he discovered that the roofing around the stove pipe was on fire. He gave the alarm, but before anything could be done the building was beyond hope. An effort was made to save the vacant one next to it, however, by attaching a block and tackle to it and dragging it out of danger, but the tackle obtainable was not strong enough to stand the strain. Giant powder was tried with no better results and soon the building was likewise beyond hope. The Schmadeka building on the north, occupied by W. S. Hogan and family, was saved, though only fifteen feet distant, by suspending wet blankets from the roof; the Jersey house was kept saturated with water, while the foliage of poplar trees protected D. Sheaffer's drug store building on the east. Fortunately the day was one of absolute calm, otherwise the entire town might have been destroyed.

For more than the first two decades of its existence, Grangeville's inhabitants were so quiet and orderly that the necessity of town government was not felt, but during 1897 a class of vagabonds entered the place and for their proper handling as well as to promote the development of the town, the improvement of its streets and sidewalks, etc., it was thought best to incorporate. Accordingly on October 8th a citizens' meeting was held in Grange hall to take the initial steps in that direction. A committee on boundaries was appointed which reported as follows:

"We, your committee, would report the following boundaries: Commencing at the southwest corner of Sherwin's addition; thence north to lane north of Schmadeka's residence; thence east to road running south to Grangeville; thence south to north line of William Havernick's property; thence east a quarter of a mile; thence south to south of Mount Idaho road; thence west to near southeast corner of graveyard; thence south to section line; thence west to west of E. Evan's orchard; thence north to south line of Lewiston addition; thence west to southwest corner of Lewiston addition; thence north to northwest corner Lewiston addition; thence east to place of beginning.

"H. Wax,
"P. E. Sherwin,
"K. W. White, Committee."

A petition praying for the incorporation of the town with the above described limits was sent to the county commissioners, which body, on October 15th, incorporated the town, appointing W. W. Brown, Aaron Freidenrich, Henry Wax, E. C. Sherwin and W. F. Schmadeka, trustees. These elected Henry Wax mayor, John T. Riggins marshal, W. E. Bunnell clerk, R. Fulton village attorney, John Norwood treasurer. At the time of the incorporation, the Grangeville school district was constituted an independent one in accordance with the general laws of the state providing for the formation of such.

The final month of 1897 witnessed the second serious fire in Grangeville, a lucid account of which was given in the Free Press of December 24th as follows:

"Fire broke out in the southwest corner of the second story of the Eagle brewery building west of the Free Press office at 12:30 A. M. on the morning of Sunday, December 19th. In a few minutes the entire building was a mass of flames. The Hanson photograph gallery on the west quickly caught and thence the flames easily spread to the adjoining building owned by Mrs. Crea and occupied by H. F. Shissler as a restaurant. Meanwhile the fierce heat of the two-story saloon building had started a fire in the Free Press building, and for a while it looked as if the entire town of Grangeville was to be wiped out by the fire fiend. Across the street stood the high walls of the Grange hall presenting a most seductive mark for the flames. The heat was intense; but at the height of the danger, there being at this time more people aroused, a bucket brigade was quickly formed and a steady shower of water was thrown upon the exposed wall. This, together with the melting snow upon the roof, proved sufficient to keep the flames from spreading east of Hall street; and when the Free Press building fell in all hands turned their attention to saving the west end of the burning block. Here the fire was roaring merrily and throwing forked tongues of flame from the west wall of the restaurant across the vacant twenty-five feet of space between it and O'Kane's tailor shop. Fortunately the latter is only a small box of a building, and speedily a corps of workers were astride its ridge pole spreading blankets and deluging them with water in the very face of the roaring furnace, and after thirty minutes of hot work the restaurant collapsed and the danger was over.

"But while all this work was going on the south side of Main street was also threatened. More than once the front of the Palace hotel was actually on fire, and the fact that this block is not now in ashes is owing solely to the foresight of W. F. Schmadeka, who had equipped his premises with a fire pump and 250 feet of rubber hose. A steady stream of water was kept playing on the entire front of the block. So great was the heat of the fire that although Main street is eighty feet wide, it cracked the plate glass of Schmadeka's new brick building and blistered the paint all along the front of this block. The Jones meat market was once on fire.

"The conflagration came at a most seasonable time. There were three or four inches of new snow on roofs and streets, and the atmosphere was clear, calm and cold, so the flames went perpendicularly aloft, and such firebrands as were carried to a distance by currents in the upper atmosphere landed on the snow and were speedily quenched. Such firebrands were discovered at daylight on the porch of the school house and as far north as the flouring mills. But for the snow thus protecting the roofs, a dozen fires would have been started in as many different points and the entire town would have gone up in smoke."

The losses were as follows: William Von Berg, saloon, loss $250; Hanson, the photographer, loss $2,150, insurance $1,150; Mrs. E. A. Crea, restaurant, small value, no insurance; bank building, occupied jointly by the Free Press, small loss; Free Press, everything except files, ledger, subscription and account books, and editorial desk. Insurance on building and contents, $2,000.

It is said that considerable thieving was carried on during this fire, and no doubt to give the thugs another opportunity to ply their nefarious vocation, an attempt was made a week later to start another one. The ice house in the rear of and adjoining the Miners' saloon was saturated with coal oil and ignited and but for the fact that a man familiarly known as "Mule" Davis was sleeping in an adjoining room and was awakened by the flash, the dastardly attempt to set the town on fire would doubtless have succeeded. Mr. Davis realized the situation instantly and his prompt action saved the town, for it is said that had the fire gotten a good start, no means at the command of the citizens would have prevented a terrible catastrophe, as a strong chinook wind was blowing at the time. Such was the indignation incited by this contemptible deed that early next morning a vigilance committee was organized and systematic efforts instituted for the expulsion from Grangeville of the vagrant element which has been existing within its limits without visible means of support.

There was much activity in Grangeville during the year 1898, but the greatest improvement of the year was the inauguration of an excellent water system. That fall came W. M. Jack, of Portland, and later of Los Angeles, who had established water works in several western cities and towns; he found the residents of Grangeville ready and anxious for the improvement he proposed instituting, and soon had operations under way. He took the water from a mountain spring on the old Steve Roster place three and a half miles south of town, which spring is of enormous capacity and flows perhaps the best water available for city purposes in the state. Two large reservoirs were built and lined with concrete. Their combined capacity is about one million gallons. From them the water is conducted to the town in large mains and distributed wherever needed. Rudolph Bertsch is manager of the system, which was completed in 1899 at a total cost of $30,000.

It will be remembered that the great Buffalo Hump excitement started in the fall of 1898 and continued throughout the entire mining season of the following year. It gave a tremendous impetus to the growth of Grangeville, through which many thousands of people passed. The town at times was full of tents and other evidences of the great migrations passing through it. Fortunately other developments in the mining country to the southward, particularly in the Thunder Mountain region, have kept the town lively and contributed to its growth ever since until it has become an entirely different place from the Grangeville of a half decade ago. The citizens of the town are public spirited and alert, ever vigilant to secure to themselves as large a share as possible of the benefits accruing from mining discoveries and developments. To this end they always subscribe liberally toward the construction of roads, helping the mining men and at the same time helping themseles by making their town the best and most convenient trading point. It is claimed that in no other town in the west is it so easy to raise money for the promotion of any worthy enterprise. Fourth of July celebrations, street fairs and the like are for this reason almost invariably a success, reflecting credit upon their promoters and impressing favorable sentiments toward Grangeville upon the hearts of those who come as visitors.

No attempt has been made to give an exhaustive history of the industrial development of Grangeville thus far and it is thought that such for the last half decade would be too burdened with detail to interest the general reader. A review of the present business establishments, churches, societies, etc., will convey a sufficient idea of the advancement that has been made since the inception of the town, now nearly thirty years ago. A practically complete resume of the commercial houses and business men includes the following: Three newspapers, the Standard, Republican; the Idaho County Free Press, Democratic; and the Grangeville News, Democratic; two banks, Bank of Camas Prairie, the deposits in which on January 6th of the current year amounted to $259,151.78, its total resources at the same time being $338,375.41, and the Bank of Grangeville, which expects soon to become a national institution; six general stores, three of them carrying as large stocks as are carried anywhere in the state, Alexander & Freidenrich, Scott & Vollmer, the Bargain Store, the M. & M. Cash store, Adams & Wiltse proprietors, Joseph Pfeufer's store, the Big Buffalo store of which W. F. Schmadeka is the proprietor, and Henry Wax's store; three furniture stores, Albert Johnson, D. T. Mills & Company and W. E. Graham; dry goods and shoes, The Burt L. Crosby Company; the Grangeville Implement Company, Ltd., I. C. Hattabaugh secretary and manager; two hardware stores, Rudolph Bertsch's and that of the Hohaus & Hickerson Hardware Company; two meat markets, Henry Murray and Foster & Hall; drug stores, Bonebrake & Cone, Dr. E. H. Shaeffer, Pearson & Wood; hotels, the Jersey House, G. K. Reed proprietor; the Revere, Mark Howe proprietor; the Wiltse, George D. Smith proprietor, the Hotel Grangeville, J. A. Daziel proprietor, and George Arnold's boarding house; book store, W. S. M. Williams, proprietor, successor to Everett Gee; restaurants, W. D. Gillette's and the Model; millinery, Mrs. A. C. Hawson; livery stables, Boss barn, owned by Edward Price, the Pioneer, Henry Elfus & A. C. Laningham, and the Idaho, West, Hockersmith; blacksmith shops, David R. Atherton, Dame & Klaucke, James Oliver, Rey DePardee and Joseph Sorrow; planing mill, W. H. Campbell; city bakery, W. D. Gillette; wholesale liquor house, A. C. Hawson & Company; brewery, the Eagle, William Von Berg, proprietor; six saloons; feed store, Farnham & Neighbor; Japanese and Chinese store, Quong Lung; jewelers, J. W. Bonebrake, Robert Dunlap; photograph galleries, John A. Hanson's, Walter E. Bunnell's; assay office, E. Stahl; barbers, Frank Hogan, Daly & Allen; merchant tailor, A. R. Toney; notions and confectionery, Wade Brothers; cigar store, City Cigar Company, R. Cote, manager; tobacco and fruits, Levi Castle; real estate, Iowa Real Estate Company, Harris & Wright proprietors, Parker & Young, S. G. Chamberlain, R. R. Hotchkiss; mining engineers, W. C. McNutt, Hill & Tillson; physicians, S. E. Bibby, E. H. Sheaffer, T. W. Nickel, Jessie Clark-Bennett, G. S. Stockton; dentists, H. M. McDermid, Grant A. Green and H. V. Riggs; lawyers, Wallace N. Scales, James F. Ailshie (supreme judge), Clav McNamee, Robert F. Fulton, J. M. M'Donald, E. M. Griffith, G. T. McDonald, W. A. Hall, F. E. Fogg, C. H. Nugent, Lycurgus Vineyard, W. H. Cassady, Levi Magee, A. S. Hardy, George Young, John E. Jacques, George W. Goode, James De Haven, T. H. Bartlett, T. J. McDuffie, Allen Miller; painting contractors, Richard H. Hartman and Alexander Robinson; contractors and builders, Frank D. Vansise, Alexander Webber, A. J. Turner; postmaster, J. C. Garber.

Holtz & Son own a large, well equipped brickmaking plant situated northeast of town; capacity, 40,000 a day. It is to be further enlarged and improved this coming summer. Grangeville has two flouring mills, the Grangeville Roller Mills supplied with modern equipments and having a capacity of about one hundred barrels a day, and the Camas Prairie Roller Mills, Benjamin D. Knorr proprietor. The latter is the old Grange mill; built in 1875-76, and since improved and practically rebuilt by J. M. Crooks and Scott & Vollmer, from whom Knorr bought the mill last year.

It is equipped with the Plansifter system and is operated by both steam and water power, the latter being taken from Three Mile creek. The mill produces Extra White Rose flour, graham and farina, chop and feed, etc.

Though the hopes of Grangeville to some day become a railway center have not yet been realized, it is already a stage center of importance. Stages leave for Stites seven times weekly, for Florence three, for Cottonwood six, and for Meadows six. From Adams' camp on the Florence road a tri-weekly stage goes to the Hump. Freeman & White are contractors for carrying the mail on the Meadows route, W. A. Austin on the Cottonwood, and Charles F. Leland on the Stites, Florence and Hump routes, though stages on these last are maintained and operated by the Idaho, Nevada and California Stage Company. Mr. Leland is also the Grangeville agent, ticket and express, for the Northern Pacific railway.

The Pacific States Telephone Company maintain a local exchange in Grangeville, well patronized by the business men and citizens generally; also a long distance line to Lewiston giving connection with the outside world and special lines to all important interior points. The excellent water system of the town has been already adverted to. It furnishes not only a cheap and sufficient water supply for domestic uses, irrigating of lawns and the like but an excellent protection against fire. To render it available for the latter purpose two volunteer fire companies have been organized, and equipped at the town's expense with hose carts, hose, buckets, ladders, etc. The Grangeville Electric Light & Power Company was organized in May, 1902, and it pushed to a speedy completion work on the Clearwater six miles east of Grangeville in constructing an indestructible dam, headgates, flumes and canal, etc., in fact everything preparatory to installing a mammoth power plant. The buildings and machinery have not yet materialized, however, so that the far-reaching plans of the company for the benefit of Grangeville and other prairie towns are still unexecuted. Nevertheless Grangeville is well supplied with incandescent lamps, arc lights, etc., furnished by a small seventy horse-power plant put in by the company in the fall of 1899.

Citizens of Grangeville have invariably manifested a deep interest in school work. For many years the combination of the public school with the Columbia River Conference Academy gave it educational advantages such as were enjoyed by few if any other towns in the territory. When the academy ceased to exist the public school began a rapid development, and the town now possesses one of the finest schools in the state. Pupils who complete its eleven grades are given diplomas admitting them to the university, and of the 500 boys and girls in its various rooms it is hoped that not a few are working to that end. The building was erected and equipped at a cost of between twelve and fifteen thousand dollars. The teachers employed at present are, principal, P. M. Glanville; assistant principal, C. F. McCarthy; Misses Pauline Ray, Amy Ellenwood, Helen Fray, Mary Maxey and Bloom Taylor, and Mesdames Edith Crosby, Sarah Spedder and Emma Pogue. Joseph Greenfield is janitor. The school board consists of Edward McBroom, W. W. Brown, Everett Gee, James Edwards and John Norwood, and the clerk of the district is W. A. Hall. Grangeville has the only independent school district in Idaho county.

Seven churches are maintained in the town, all of them vital and active and most of them quite well attended. They are the Methodist Episcopal, Rev. J. S. Smith pastor; Protestant Episcopal, Rev. Willard Roots, rector; the Baptist, Rev. William K. Knox, pastor; the Catholic, supplied occasionally by the priest of Cottonwood; the Presbyterian, Rev. Fred J. Newton, pastor, building a church at this writing; the Congregational, Rev. D. D. Hambly, pastor; and the Christian, Rev. Charles McDonald, pastor. The churches have an efficient supplement in the Y. M. C. A., which was organized in the town in October, 1898, maintaining at first only a reading room in the old Grange hall. The next winter a small gymnasium was opened under its auspices in the Wilhams building. In 1900 the institution took quarters in what is now the Revere Hotel building, but in 1902 the rents became so high that the association had to move, and it was then it began earnest work for the raising of a fund wherewith to erect its own home. The people of Grangeville assisted it with their customary liberality, and on January 17, 1903, the building was dedicated. It is a two-story structure, erected at a cost of $4,500, and is equipped with reading rooms, bath rooms, library, a very complete gymnasium, auditorium, etc. Grant

A. Green is its secretary and physical director. An incumberance of $2,200 is still on the building, but so easy are the terms and so low the rate of interest that no apprehension is felt that difficulty may be encountered in clearing it off.

Like most western towns, Grangeville is well supplied with fraternal and insurance orders, most of which maintain flourishing lodges. Those established so far as known are: Mount Idaho Lodge No. 9, A. F. & A. M., which owns a brick hall on Main street; Mountain Queen Chapter No. 11, O. E. S., Mount Idaho Lodge No. 7, I. O. O. F.; Camas Prairie Encampment No. 18, I. O. O. F.; Mizpah Rebekah Lodge No. 12; Idaho Tribe No. 9, I. O. R. M.; White Rose Assembly, No. 212, U. A.; Buffalo Hump Lodge No. 30, K. of P.; Star Temple No. 5, R. S.; Grangeville Camp No. 206, W. O. W.; Idaho Circle No. 160, Women of Woodcraft; Grangeville Hive No. 14, L. O. T. M.; Grangeville Lodge No. 5,840, M. W. A.; Hancock Post No. 28, G. A. R.

Such is Grangeville, past and present. To cast its horoscope is fortunately no part of our task, but with its favorable location, the agricultural wealth of its immediate environment, and the vast developed and undeveloped mineral wealth of its more remote tributary territory, the pasturage of its hills and the timber of its mountains, with the enterprise and public spirit of its inhabitants and its prospects for railway connection with the outside world in the near future, we see no reason why it should not long continue to maintain the rapid pace of progress it has so well maintained during the past five or six years. In 1900 it had 1132 inhabitants according to United States census. In the last election, its citizens cast 576 votes, and its board of trustees in a resolution adopted March 21, 1903, constituting it a city of the second class instead of a village, claimed for it a population of 1800. May a continued growth at the same rate be its portion and the merited reward of its enterprising inhabitants.

COTTONWOOD.

This historic point was for many years during the early life of the county an important resting place for teams traveling from Lewiston to Grangeville, Mount Idaho and the mines. In 1863 Wheeler & Toothacher were in charge of the Cottonwood station, situated where Joslin's shop now is. They were succeeded about a year later by John Byram, and he by Joe Moore and Peter Ready, from the latter of whom it passed to Benjamin Norton, the man who lost his life during the Indian war. After the cessation of hostilities, L. P. Brown became practically the owner of the townsite by buying the place of Knighten, Harry Wilson and others.

A postoffice was established in the early days but the first business aside from that and a blacksmith shop was the store of F. B. King, opened about 1880. Some four or five years later, Charles Wood and A. A. Harris built a saloon. Robert Nugent tells the writer that when he came to the place in 1887, he found "Judge" Gilmore in charge of the blacksmith shop, H. H. Nuxoll and Barney Stubert in a carpenter shop, and the business men just referred to at their respective places. Mr. Nugent bought out Wood & Harris's saloon. F. B. King's store was transferred to Weiler & Wax about 1891. Mr. Nugent started a restaurant in 1893, in which year a pork packing establishment was also started. Dunham & Company, of Chicago, ran it for a couple of years, but eventually failed through mismanagement and gave the farmers a bill of sale of the property in payment of the sums due them. At present the building is used as a slaughter house.

In 1893, the first paper of the town, the Cottonwood Report, made its bow. Its first issue, bearing date January 27th, shows by its advertising columns that Wax & Goldstone were then engaged in the dry goods and grocery business; that C. B. Wood was proprietor of the Cottonwood House; that Felix Warren owned the Lewiston-Cottonwood stage line; that Revs. T. L. Buzzell and William Cronger were pastors of the Methodist and Catholic churches, respectively; that Davis & Sweet had a saw and planing mill; that F. M. Bridgfarmer was engaged in house, sign and carriage painting; that J. W. Gains had a livery, feed and sales stable; that J. W. Turner, M. D., was practicing medicine and surgery; and that Tannatt & Hogan were engaged in the real estate business and in surveying, also were townsite agents. The paper shows, too, that a literary society was in existence, of which E. T. Tannatt was president and Miss Ettie Simpson, secretary.

In 1895, the town began building rapidly, and it is since that date that the Cottonwood of today has come into existence. Without attempting to fix the dates of the coming of later business houses or the sequence of their establishment, we summarize the present business houses of the town as follows: Three merchandise stores, Samuel Goldstone's, Brown & Brust's and Harry Nuxoll's; three livery stables, J. T. Hale's, C. C. Burge's, and J. M. Eller's; J. W. Turner's drug store and that of the Idaho Drug Company: the Idaho County Bank, of which E. M. Ehrhardt is cashier; the saloons of Lyons & Dixon, John Peterson and John Funke; and the brewery of Schobert & Peterson; the St. Albert hotel, of which A. B. Rooke is proprietor, and the Cottonwood hotel (closed at this writing), owned by John Proctor; harness and saddles, Schiller & Simons; planing mill, sash and door factory, Webster & Wright; a steam flour mill of twenty-five barrels capacity, J. W. Crawford; blacksmiths, J. F. Davidson, E. Joslin and S. Saux; meat market, Simons Brothers; millinery and dress making, Mrs. William Bash; bakery, Mrs. Alice Tipton; grain warehouse, Samuel Goldstone; barber, John Caldwell; hardware and implements, H. H. Nuxoll; printing office (Camas Prairie Chronicle), Frank S. Wimer, proprietor; furniture, J. N. Moden; a Chinese laundry. It is said that a large creamery, capable of handling the cream from four or five hundred cows, is in project, also a new brewery. J. M. Wolbert, an attorney, is engaged in the real estate business, and George W. Coutts is also engaged in the practice of law. The dentists of the town are Drs. T. W. Bray and J. E. Smith, and the physicians practicing there are Drs. J. W. Turner and R. Truitt. Samuel R. Libby, the postmaster, is a watch repairer and jeweler.

The churches of the town at this time are the Catholic, Rev. H. A. Kremers, pastor; the Baptist, to which Mr. Daik ministers; and the Methodist, without a pastor at the time of the writer's visit. There is a large four-room public school in Cottonwood in which three teachers labor, namely, Prof. E. O. Steininger, Miss Mary T. Hayden and Mrs. Gussie H. Clark. A Catholic school is maintained by Rev. H. A. Kremers in connection with the church, intended, it is said, as a forerunner of a sisters' school. Fraternal orders are well represented, there being subordinate lodges of the I. O. O. F., Rebekahs, K. of P., M. W. A., and K. O. T. M. The first mentioned order has a large two-story hall with lodge and banquet rooms above and an opera and dance hall below.

While Cottonwood is as yet without a railroad it has daily stage connections with Grangeville, Lewiston and Keuterville, and tri-weekly with Kamiah. The O. R. & N. survey passes through the town.

Cottonwood enjoys a very favorable situation on the creek from which it takes its name. It is convenient to a large stock raising country, and there are six saw mills within ten miles of the place. The rich surrounding country furnishes the business men of the town assurance of a reasonably abundant and permanent patronage, and as the country grows their business and their number must enjoy a corresponding increase.

STITES.

The eastern terminal of the Clearwater Short Line is Stites, a prosperous, bustling little town of perhaps three hundred inhabitants. It has enjoyed a phenomenal growth during the brief period of its existence, and the energy, confidence and public spirit of its people are an abundant guarantee of further developments to be effected in the future. Stites possesses an excellent geographical location, and not without reason has it been given the sobriquet of "The Gate City of Idaho County," for through it must pass by far the major portion of this region's travel and commerce. The entire mining country of the interior is tributary to it, as is also the southern portion of Camas prairie. Nearly all of the stock shipments of the county are made here, constituting it a forwarding point of no little importance, as is shown by the fact that in ten days last August $35,000 worth of cattle and hogs were placed aboard the cars there. Within the same period 30,000 pounds of wool were shipped.

As will be seen by reference to a map of the county, Stites is situated within the old Nez Perces Indian reservation near its eastern edge. Its site was therefore Indian land until the opening of the reserve, and for more than a year after it remained unclaimed, but in 1897 Jacob Stites took as a homestead a tract which included the spot upon which the town was later built. In May, 1899, he relinquished his right to the lower forty of his homestead with the understanding that J. M. Shannon, N. B. Pettibone and J. G. Rowton, who had organized themselves into a firm known as the Stites Townsite Company, should make application to the government to have the tract set aside for townsite purposes. Application was made accordingly and not without success. At this time, Kooskia or Stuart was the railroad terminus, but shortly afterward Charles Sweeney and W. E. Travis, owners of large mining interests in Idaho county, induced the company to extend its road three miles further, though for nearly a year afterward Kooskia continued to be the general passenger and freight terminal. Then, however, a station was built at Stites, which thereupon became the actual as well as nominal terminus of the road.

In September, 1899, Robert Olcott and M. P. Strecker erected a small grocery store in the new town and a little later Duke Robins built a small stand for the dispensing of soft drinks. Then Dr. E. E. Briley opened a drug store and a physician's office, Duke Robins put up the Tanner hotel, Almon L. Young started a lumber yard, and James Jump established a grain depot near that of Mr. Sweeney, whose warehouse was the first building erected at the terminus. These were the pioneer business houses of Stites. Others have followed from time to time since until the substantial little city of today has been built up in answer to the demands of trade.

One of the largest general stores in the county is located in Stites, that of A. H. Greving. There are two other general merchandise establishments, those of Strecker & Pettibone and H. C. Oliver. The Stites Trading Company carries a large stock of heavy hardware, machinery, etc. One may take his choice of three hotels, the Butler, S. Daisley and Mrs. Ruckman, managers; the Tanner, owned by Mrs. Martha Euell, or the Tremont, of which Joseph L. Willson is manager. The Idaho County Patriot, a weekly paper, of which Frank M. Roberts is editor and proprietor, is a staunch and able advocate of the resources and advantages of the region surrounding its home. It succeeded the Register, the pioneer newspaper of the town, established February 22, 1901, by W. N. Robinson. Last August, Mr. Roberts purchased the Register plant and began utilizing it in the publication of the Patriot. The remaining business houses are as follows: Grocery, G. C. Percifull; drug store, Dr. E. E. Briley; meat markets, Weck & Burney, Decker & Tebias; fruits and notions, P. E. Ellis; blacksmith shops, E. W. Williams, J. W. Clayton; harness and saddle store, Phil Hartman; barber shop, D. A. Smith; real estate agency, Butler & Livick; livery stables, Underwood & Lamb and Perry Mallory. Three miles above town is the plant of the Stites Lumber Company, erected last April. The mill has a capacity of about 10,000 feet a day. The medical profession is represented by Dr. E. E. Briley, the legal by Ernest Livick, and that of dentistry by Dr. E. Beaudette.

The business men of Stites have recently manifested their progressive spirit by organizing the Citizens' Improvement Club, which boasts a large and growing membership. The object of the organization is expressed by its name. Its president is N. B. Pettibone; its vice-president, James B. Schultz; its secretary, Riley Clemans; its treasurer, P. E. Ellis; and its trustees, D. C. Howard, J. B. Burney and Duke Robins.

Stage lines extend from Stites to Newsome and Elk City and to Camas Prairie, Grangeville and numerous interior points, and the town has, of course, the advantage of passenger service, daily except Sunday, over the railroad to Lewiston and the outside world.

The people of Stites pay more attention, perhaps, to the causes of education and religion than those of most new towns and outfitting points for miners. The Baptist and the Episcopal denomination of Christians are both represented, and the former is now engaged in erecting a church edifice. Rev. J. S. Simmons is the pastor in charge. Public interest in the cause of education was manifested last year by the issuance of district bonds and the erection of a commodious frame building forty by twenty-eight feet in dimensions. Fifty-eight pupils are now receiving instruction within its walls from Principal David Story and Miss Hattie Percifull.

The town of Stites was summoned into existence by the Short Line railroad and with truth it may be said that its future is in the hands of the railway company. Its situation is a favorable one, and as long as it remains the terminal it can hardly fail to continue to be a prosperous little city, but an extension of the road is looked for in the not distant future, the effect of which cannot be foreseen.

KOOSKIA.

Kooskia is a thriving little reservation trading point on the Clearwater Short Line of the Northern Pacific, three miles from its terminus and just above the junction of the middle and south forks of the Clearwater river. A portion of the town really lies on the middle fork and is known locally as East Kooskia. A high hogback from the east runs down nearly to the junction of the two streams, and it is on the strip of land between the base of this hill and the rivers that the town has been built, though a few buildings lie across the south fork. The main town is on this latter stream, East Kooskia consisting of only a few residences. The south fork valley is sufficiently wide for several miles above its mouth to allow of cultivation, and a number of ranches and farms lie within it above Kooskia.

Besides the support which the town derives from these valley settlements, it receives all the trade from the communities up the middle fork, and much of that of the Kitterridge and Tahoe regions east of the south fork, also is the trading point of many residents of northern Camas Prairie, known as the Big Butte cattle country. Last season the Vollmer-Clearwater Company alone shipped 89,500 bushels of wheat from Kooskia.

Kooskia was first named Stuart in honor of James Stuart, a Nez Perces Indian, who was for many years a surveyor of lands, and is now a leading merchant in the town. Upon the opening of the reservation in November, 1895, George Rowton, who is still a resident, in behalf of himself and one hundred others, among whom were Hardin Chenoweth, A. J. Williams, William E. Graham and George Brown, made application to the government to set aside the 104 acres of vacant land lying along the east side of the south fork and the south side of the middle fork near the junction of those streams for townsite purposes. The application was granted, and in due time patents were issued to those interested. Of this grant about seventy acres are hill land.

Immediately upon the filing of this application and its acceptance at the land office, James Cox erected a small store; George Brown and Hurley Stevens opened another store, Luther Goebel built a hotel and restaurant, Frank Zenzinger a furniture store, and Edward Ames a blacksmith shop. Then Frank Ping installed a saw mill, William Graham opened a second furniture store, and Jacob L. Gross another general merchandise establishment. The town continued to grow slowly until the Northern Pacific announced that it would build a line up the Clearwater river when Stuart enjoyed a genuine boom, its inhabitants at one time numbering between four and five hundred. March 13, 1899, was a day of jubilee in Stuart, for upon it the people celebrated the arrival of the iron horse, which it was thought would go no further for several years. The people were doomed to disappointment, however, as the rails were laid another three miles and Stites became the terminal.

The railroad company named its station Kooskia, instead of adopting the name of the town, for the reason that there was already one Stuart upon its lines in this state. Consequently it became necessary in the interests of harmony for the town to adopt the name Kooskia, and this was done last summer.

The town was incorporated in the fall of 1901, and James Stuart, A. J. Williams, R. R. Woods, Dr. A. F. Wohlenberg and C. B. Patterson were appointed the first trustees. The present officers are: Mayor, M. J. Browning; councilmen, James Stuart and Bert Davis; treasurer, Hardin Chenoweth; clerk and attorney, P. W. Mitchell.

A year ago the citizens issued bonds in the sum of $1,500, with the proceeds from which they erected a fine school house. The inhabitants take much pride in their school, claiming that it is excelled in the county only by that of Grangeville. Miss Anna McLaughlin is the principal, and Miss Dora Baxster her assistant.

There are four general stores in Kooskia at present, those of Jacob L. Gross, R. R. Woods, the Kooskia Mercantile Company, and J. H. Hughes. The Idaho Outfitting Company, composed of J. S. Adair and J. T. Wills, handles hardware and implements of all kinds; the Clearwater Meat & Produce Company and Decker & Tobias supply the town with meat; J. H. Hovey conducts the Hotel Stuart and the Red Front feed stables; James Stuart has a furniture store; J. M. Robinett is proprietor of the Pioneer feed stables; A. F. Wohlenberg and R. J. Alcorn are the town's physicians, the former also conducting a drug store;

A PORTION OF LAKE PEND OREILLE.

WHITEBIRD BATTLE GROUND
Where Thirty-six United States Soldiers were Killed on June 17, 1877.

I. B. Hershey owns a blacksmith shop, the only one in the town; William E. Cage conducts the Home restaurant; Hon. P. W. Mitchell, at present representing Idaho county in the legislature, is Kooskia's only lawyer; Dr. E. Beaudette is its dentist and jeweler; M. J. Browning is proprietor of the only barber shop, and A. J. Williams, Jr., owns and operates the Kooskia Transfer Line. Kooskia also has a weekly newspaper, the Idaho Mountaineer, of which H. E. O'Donnell is editor and proprietor. The Mountaineer, which is four years old, is an excellent country paper. In East Kooskia Edward and William Young operate a small shingle mill, and George Rowton a ferry across the middle fork. Major F. A. Fenn, superintendent of forest reserves in Idaho and Montana, has headquarters in Kooskia, as does also Cassius M. Day, supervisor of the Bitter Root reserve.

HARPSTER.

Harpster is the name of an important little town and trading center situated on the south fork of the Clearwater river at the old Jackson crossing, about eight miles northeast of Grangeville, on the road to Elk City, and the same distance up the river from Stites. Like all of the towns along this river, Harpster lies in the bed of the deep canyon, fully sixteen hundred feet below Grangeville and half that many feet below the prairies on the east side of the Clearwater. The altitude at this point on the river is given as 1600 feet. Owing to its sheltered location, it receives the benefit of the warm currents of air which follow the Clearwater canyons, and on this account the climate is very mild the year around. The town receives its support from the mining interests along the river, especially from the rapidly developing Evergreen district six miles up the stream, and from the farming settlements on the prairies lying to the east and west. The narrow width of the canyon through here precludes any extensive farming in the lower altitude, although some fruit and vegetables are raised with great success.

There are really two townsites here, neither of which bears the name of the postoffice, Harpster. The oldest and most important of these sites, is that of Bridgeport, whose history dates back to the time when William Jackson established a small station at this point on the trail between Camas prairie and Elk City. This was early in the 'sixties. Jackson built a toll bridge across the river and continued as the proprietor of this isolated station until succeeded by Clindinning previous to the Indian war. Clindinning's place was burned by the Nez Perces in 1877 and was never rebuilt. Eventually Loyal P. Brown came into possession of nearly five hundred acres of land at this point, and in 1893, at the time of the mineral discoveries here, the Clearwater Mining Company purchased eighty acres of the Brown tract and laid off a town which they called Brownsville. C. A. Hastings opened a small store on the old Clindinning site during the summer of this year. About the same time that Brownsville was founded, John E. Beede filed a homestead claim on the land adjoining the Brown tract on the north, but made no effort then to plat the land for townsite purposes. In the fall of 1893 P. L. Obannon and H. C. Oliver erected a store near the Hastings building and subsequently purchased his stock and consolidated the two concerns. Then Wellington Clark bought Oliver's interest, and since that time the firm name has been Obannon & Clark.

The quartz mines opened by the Clearwater Mining Company did not prove as rich as expected, and after sinking a deep shaft and running a drift, the company abandoned them. Of course this injured the business of the little hamlet that had arisen, but the loss was more than overcome by the stimulus given the place by the settlement of the surrounding country after the hard times. The Brown property, including the old site of Brownsville, was purchased by the Surridge brothers, James and Thomas, in 1898, and October 1st the town of Bridgeport was laid out on this land. The town of Riverside was also laid out by Mr. Beede, north of Bridgeport, and these two sites exist independently today. Obannon & Clark removed their store to Bridgeport in March, 1899, and at the same time George Renner opened a saloon there. Since then O. C. Lapp has erected a building in which he keeps a general store, C. M. Fagan has established a blacksmith shop, L. Z. Millott a harness and repair shop, Surridge Bros. a livery barn, Obannon & Clark a hotel, and Dr. Charles Busey has opened a drug store. A year ago the postoffice was removed from Riverside to Bridgeport. It still retains the name bestowed upon it nearly ten years ago in remembrance of Abraham Harpster, who was one of the oldest settlers in the county, having come to Oro Fino at the time of the first mining excitement. O. C. Lapp is postmaster. H. C. Oliver keeps a general store, and Joseph Wimpy a hotel in Riverside. The Harpster postoffice has a daily mail service to and from Stites. In 1900 a school house was built in Bridgeport by subscription, and a school opened. This school is now maintained by the district and is taught by Miss Frances Wilson. The town will soon have an excellent water system, now under construction by one of the townsite proprietors, Thomas Surridge. The inhabitants are confident that it will not be long before the Northern Pacific extends the Clearwater Short Line farther up the south fork, a survey having already been made to Elk City, and with a healthful location, pure water, a rich tributary country and a railroad, feel that Harpster will become a place of considerable importance and size.

WHITE BIRD.

Situated in the picturesque canyon of White Bird creek at a point about a mile from the confluence of that stream with the famous Salmon river is the compact and snug little town of White Bird. Many circumstances combine to make it noteworthy. On either side rise precipitous hills, green in spring time with nutritious grasses, except where the huge columns of basalt stand out tier above tier, bidding defiance to rain and frost and all the forces of disintegration, which for ages have been struggling to reduce them to vegetation-bearing mould. The environs are picturesque beyond description; gigantic in proportions; rugged in aspect. The town also is a place of historic interest, for just to the northward is the spot where the Indians administered to Perry a most disastrous defeat in the dark days of Indian warfare.

But for years after that fatal engagement there was no town of White Bird, though ownership of the township had been asserted even prior to the struggle of 1877. The man who exercised "squatter sovereignty" over it at the time of the outbreak, James Baker, was killed by the Indians. It later passed to L. P. Brown, who sold it to S. S. Fenn in 1891. The first uncertain prophecy of a town had appeared several years earlier when H. C. Brown opened a store. This, about the year 1889, had become the property of Frank and George Fenn.

When S. S. Fenn came in April, 1891, he established a stage station and hotel. There was no school in the place, at this time, but one had been built on the hill two miles from the present town. The postoffice was established when the Fenn Brothers took charge of the pioneer store, F. A. Fenn being the first postmaster.

The town consisted of the business houses heretofore mentioned until about 1894, when Charles Chamberlain opened a saloon. Another saloon was started about a year later by A. Cooper, and to him Mr. Chamberlain sold his stock and fixtures, purposing to embark in the general merchandise business. The pioneer store had passed, during the fall of 1891, into the hands of A. J. McQuade, and he and Chamberlain were the merchants of the town until the death of the former. Leopold Freidenrich succeeded Mr. McQuade in 1897. During, it is thought, the fall of that year, G. W. Curtis bought an interest in Chamberlain's store. In time he became owner of the entire property, and after running the business for eight or nine months he moved his stock to Lucile. The building has changed hands two or three times since. The Star hotel was put up by Mrs. Dalmage in 1897, and sold the same year to F. Z. Taylor, who transferred it during the current year to Mrs. Hadorn. In 1897, also, William Whitney's blacksmith shop was opened. Next year it passed to Ben Davis, who later sold it to John Nevins, from whom it passed to its present owner, James Jones.

Gordon's livery stable, across the street from the Model hotel, was built in the summer of 1899, and sold recently to Mrs. Hadorn, who also has the stage office. Contemporaneous with the building of the stable was the opening, by S. Dalmage, of a meat market. After maintaining this business about a year, he sold to Wilson & Gregory, who occupy the building as a saloon. The next important business building of the town was the Bargain Store, erected in December, 1899, by Gordon & Fenn, and occupied first by A. M. Baker. Last fall it became the property of Brockman Brothers. The Model hotel, erected during the fall of 1901, was occupied by different renters until the spring of 1903, when it was purchased by Mrs. Hadorn. Odd Fellows hall was built in 1902. Its lower floor is at present occupied by Brockman Brothers. Last year, Cooper's feed yard was erected, also a warehouse, in which Mr. Cooper handles hay and grain.

Recapitulating, we have the present business establishments of the town as follows: General merchandise, Leopold Freidenrich, Brockman Brothers; saloons, A. Cooper, Wilson & Gregory; hotels, the Model, Mrs. Virginia Hadorn; two other hotels in connection; livery stable, owned by Mrs. Virginia Hadorn, who also owns the Grangeville-White Bird stage line; feed stable, Frank E. Pierce; blacksmiths, Jones & Hill; barbers, Edward Russ and William Thompson; meat market, Michael Murray. Dr. W. A. Foskott practices medicine in the town; F. Z. Taylor is United States land commissioner and Miss Effie Taylor is postmistress.

The town has a two-room school house in use during nine months of the year. The teachers are E. A. Carpenter and Flora Kittrell. The I. O. O. F. is the only fraternity in White Bird. There is no church, but a Sunday-school convenes regularly, Mrs. W. A. Foskott, superintendent.

SLATE CREEK.

This is a small postoffice station established in 1870. The postmistress at present is Mrs. Josie Irwin, and the store in which the office is located is conducted by John Irwin. The people in the neighborhood are stock raisers, and three ranches corner at the town, owned by Joshua Fackler, John Rice and Walter Rhett. The town is located on the Salmon, and the public school is about one mile distant, down the Salmon river.

WESTLAKE.

The townsite of Westlake was located in 1887 by J. B. Rice as a preemption. There was a general store at this point in 1889, and the postoffice was established about ten years ago. At an early period the state road ran through the townsite, quite a number of people coming to the place in 1887. Previous to this date the stock and sheep men controlled Craig's mountain. The town was named in honor of Mrs. Sarah Rice, nee Westlake. It was platted in 1896 and a hotel erected by Charles R. Babcock. In 1896 Adam Kammers started a blacksmith shop, Smith & Horton a livery barn, and in 1901, (February), Crom & Stewart erected a store building. They came from Milton, Oregon. Previous to the transfer of the townsite Emmet Putnam had started a store across from the present Westlake drug store, afterward selling out to Crom & Stewart. About this period a flour mill of twenty barrels capacity was erected, Emmet Putnam opened a furniture store and J. B. Rice a drug store. William Clausen established a general store in 1896 just outside the town limits, on his own land. The present business houses comprise the Westlake drug store; two general stores, Clausen's and F. B. Pennock & Co., the company including Crom & Stewart; furniture store of Emmet Putnam; blacksmith shop of Orin Eastman; hotel and saloon, conducted by Shaw & Neighbor, who have, also, a feed barn in connection.

The church of Westlake is represented by the Seventh Day Adventists. A public school with an attendance of thirty pupils is open six months in the year. The postmaster is James A. Crom, the mail coming via the Lewiston-Cottonwood route every day except Sunday. Westlake is situated five miles from the Salmon river, from which vicinity it receives considerable trade.

FOREST.

A postoffice was established at Forest about 1892, in charge of a man named Richardson. Later he sold out his business to H. J. Vincent, who added a small store in connection, (about 1892), and there was no advance in general business until 1896. During that year the I. O. O. F. ran up a two-story building. The present business houses are represented by the Idaho Store Company, Coffin Brothers; one blacksmith shop, H. T. Hostley; feed stable, sawmill, hotel and bar and a barber shop by Robert Hostley. The fraternities are represented by the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. J. F. Harris is the present postmaster. The Christian denomination holds services in the town every alternate Sunday. Mason prairie and the Salmon river country are contributary to the trade of the town, around which there is quite a flourishing settlement, provided with an excellent public school.

KEUTERVILLE.

July, 1884, the townsite of Keuterville was preempted by Anton Hendricks, and the patent secured in 1889. The first store was erected by Mr. Kuether in 1888, and this was followed by a blacksmith shop by John Maugg, in 1889, and in the early '90s came Henry Greving with a general store. The postoffice was established in 1888. A Catholic church was erected in 1885 or 1886, under direction of Father Diomete, S. J., and the same summer a considerable immigration of German farmers flowed in. Mr. Maugg built a hotel in 1898, although boarding houses had been conducted by Mr. Hendricks and others prior to that year. The present business enterprises are Dree's general store, postoffice, Anton Hendricks, postmaster, John Maugg's hotel, livery barn by Paul Burgund, who purposes to open a general store, Blacksmith shop by Mr. Maugg and a millinery store by Mrs. E. W. Drees. There are four sawmills in the neighborhood of Keuterville, from which the town draws its trade. It also has a share of the patronage of the Salmon river country. An ungraded public school is conducted six months of the year, B. L. Hussmann, teacher. The attendance is about fifty.

DENVER.

The townsite of Denver originally belonged to B. F. Morris, 720 acres, of which 160 are platted. It was purchased from Morris by the Denver Land and Townsite Company, consisting of Morris, Vollmer and Scott, Dernham & Kaufman, Spotswood & Veach, and a number of small stockholders. It can be justly claimed that Mr. Spotswood is the father of the town. In anticipation of the advent of a railroad considerable money was expended in "booming" the town, and then came "hard times," and failure of railroad materialization, paralyzing industries. The first residence in Denver was built by J. J. Pulse, in 1892. Previous to that there were three hotels, the first, the Idaho, by Shissler & Ingraham; the second, the Denver, by John Henderson, and the third by G. W. Cooper, now of Moscow. In 1893 G. F. Troeh established a general store, followed by Henry Kuether, Dernham & Kaufman Co., and J. D. Davis & Co., in 1894. A drug store had been established by J. J. Pulse in 1892. Of the original business men of the place Mr. Pulse is the only one left. A blacksmith shop was started by C. W. Miller in 1892. The opening of the Indian reservation drew a number of business men away, and the town has never recovered its vitality. At present it is estimated that there are 900 people in the precinct. Denver is located ten miles from Grangeville and ten from Cottonwood.

At present there are three general stores, Henry Kuether, L. Spangler and J. D. Davis & Co. J. W. Dunn conducts a furniture store, J. J. Pulse a drug store, S. K. Dunn and A. B. Clayton, blacksmith shops, Isaac Zehner & Son a flouring mill, saloon by William Von Berge. In April last Mrs. Lottie Harper opened a hotel. Rhoads Brothers conduct a livery and feed stable, and D. H. Bolte an implement house. The postmistress is Mrs. Lizzie Allen Wood, and the school teacher Jacob Vercler.

WOODSIDE.

The new town of Woodside was promoted by a man named Marr, the initial enterprise beginning January 1, 1903. The present business comprises a general store, a dance hall, postoffice, hotel and restaurant.

MOUNT IDAHO.

Mount Idaho, the timber covered mountain which bounds Camas prairie on the south and forms the first of that series of rugged ranges which extend far into southern Idaho, has given its name to the oldest town on Camas prairie and, with the exception of Florence, the oldest town in the county. This little village nestles peacefully among the beautiful pine groves and intervening parks at the base of the mountain and at the extreme eastern edge of the prairie. From this commanding eminence the whole prairie with its northern background of hills and mountain ranges and its bordering canyons of the Salmon and Clearwater rivers becomes at once an open book whose every page presents an inspiring and fascinating picture. Through the town courses a clear mountain stream which bears the unpoetic name of Butcher creek. The sight is both beautiful and healthful and for many reasons well adapted for the location of a town.

Directly south of the village a broad, deep ravine or small canyon cuts through the mountain and opens out upon the town. Up the western side of this depression winds the old Milner trail, now of course a roadway, which for forty years has been the popular route to Florence—since the trail was blazed through the forest through several feet of snow in the spring of 1862. Many years ago this primitive trail was converted into an excellent wagon road, which at present is one of the most important in northern Idaho, as it is the most direct route to the Buffalo Hump mines and forms a portion of the state wagon road between Mount Idaho and the southern part of the state.

The opening of this historic trail furnished a sufficient reason for the establishment of a station at the base of Mount Idaho and the beginning of the trail and so during the winter of 1861-2 Mose Milner built a log cabin on the site of the future town. This cabin was of a type known as a double cabin, a story and a half high and boasted a puncheon floor. An addition, which served the double purpose of a kitchen and a dining room, was attached to one side of the main building. This pioneer hotel stood on what is now Florence street, formerly the old trail.

The following spring, that of 1862, Loyal P. Brown, a Bostonian who had come west to recuperate his shattered fortunes, while en route to Florence reached the Milner station with his wife, and so forcibly did the business opportunity presented by this trail and station appeal to him that he forthwith joined with James Odle, another recent arrival, in buying the property. They took immediate possession and for three years conducted the business together. Then a disagreement arose over the establishment of a saloon in connection with the hotel and Brown bought Odle's interest. During the forty years this hotel has been in existence it has been conducted in strict accord with the temperance policy first adopted by Brown in 1862. At the time the property was purchased Brown filed a squatter's claim to the land on which the station was built and the next year Odle filed on the claim just west of the Milner claim. On these two claims the town was built, although most of the buildings are on the older one.

A few weeks after Brown and Odle purchased the Milner property, Seth Jones, who had gone into Florence the latter part of May, returned to the prairie and with his wife opened a second station at the lower end of the trail. This station stood on the flat in the eastern part of the present town. Mr. and Mrs. Jones conducted their station until the summer of 1863, when Mr. Jones settled on Three-mile creek and became a pioneer farmer of Camas prairie. As before stated, Mr. Odle severed his business connections with Mr. Brown in 1865. In 1863, however, he, too, commenced farming on the claim he had taken west of the station, closely following Mr. Jones. Mr. Brown and his wife remained in the Mount Idaho hotel until the former's death a few years ago, since which time Mrs. Brown has relinquished possession of the business and retired to private life in the town which has so long been her home.

Just who is responsible for the naming of Mount Idaho is not known. Soon after the discovery of the Florence mines, however, the mountain was referred to by that name and in time it was applied to the little settlement at the foot of the Milner trail.

Because of the very favorable geographical location of the place, the little hamlet early became an important and popular resting place for those traveling to and from the mines and for many years possessed a very numerous floating population. Especially was this true during the great rush of 1862 and 1863, when the stations were often totally unable to provide accomodations for those who wished to avail themselves of the rude privileges afforded. Quite a number of the criminal class in the region made the place their headquarters in 1862; in fact for a number of years the town was considered a sort of a criminal's refuge, though in justice to those few settlers who were in business there, it should be said that this reputation was not of their choosing by any means.

A postoffice, Mount Idaho, was established very early in the life of the town and Mr. Brown became postmaster. He also installed a small blacksmith shop and dispensed provisions and supplies of all kinds to those who wished to purchase on the prairie. Brown's station and a few dwellings constituted the town for the first decade of its existence.

In 1872 came the first store, established by Ralph Jacobson and his two brothers, in one end of Brown's hotel. This business venture did not result successfully, however, for the owners soon sold to a man named Rudolph, who was Mount Idaho's only merchant until 1875, when Vollmer & Scott opened a branch store there. Wade Rice built a saloon in 1872, which in 1877 was owned by J. M. Auchinvole and these three business houses, together with Brown's hotel, comprised the commercial portion of the town in 1877, when the Indian war broke out. There were probably one hundred inhabitants then.

Meanwhile Mount Idaho had become the county seat as a result of the annexation of Camas prairie and the Elk City region to Idaho county. This important change was made in 1875 and gave quite an impetus to the town's growth. A handsome county building was erected in 1878 at a cost of several thousand dollars and subsequently a jail was added. These two buildings occopy a block of land on the eastern side of Florence street, and served the county until 1902, when the seat of government was removed to Grangeville. The site of the buildings was donated by L. P. Brown in 1875 on condition that the ownership of the ground should revert to him in case the county seat was removed elsewhere, but subsequently, in 1892, the county was given an additional deed to the property.

Mount Idaho occupies a prominent place in the history of the Nez Perces war and throughout the whole campaign in Idaho was one of the principal bases from which operations were carried on. To this place the terrified settlers of Camas prairie flocked on that memorable evening of June 14, and here they remained until Joseph's hostiles left Idaho. Here it was that the settlers built the famous stone fort, within whose protecting walls they expected to defend themselves to the last. At one time nearly the whole population of the prairie, about 250, were assembled in and around this defense.

The old fort stood on the little hill just north of town, the site of the present school house, and occupied a very strategic position. The fortification was in the form of a circle, perhaps 150 feet in diameter, and was constructed of two rail fences built parallel with each other, the intervening space being filled with rocks and timber. The wall was between four and five feet high. Entrance was gained through a narrow passageway on the west.

In the fall of 1878, another mercantile establishment, Grostein & Binnard's branch store, was added to those already in the thriving little village. For several years succeeding the Indian war, the town grew and prospered, experiencing its greatest degree of prosperity during the years 1878-79-80, when the population reached and passed the 200 mark. From this time on, however, Mount Idaho was outstripped in the race for supremacy by Grangeville, a rival town only two miles distant, which was founded in 1875 by the settlers of Three-mile creek. In a hard fought contest in 1892 over the possession of the county seat, Mount Idaho narrowly escaped losing this much coveted honor, and last fall Grangeville finally obtained the prize. The loss of the county seat was a serious blow to Mount Idaho, though it had been expected for years.

Mount Idaho's population now numbers one hundred and fifty people. Although of far less importance than formerly the village is still the trading point of a thickly settled farming community and is the nearest commercial center to the interior mining camps. Four miles east of town is the Dewey or Evergreen mining district on the south fork of the Clearwater; eight miles southeast are the Cove Placer Mining Company's extensive placers which have just been opened; three miles northeast is the large sawmill of Edward Heitzman; and two miles east of town Royal Skaggs operates a small sawmill. All these do a large share of their trading at Mount Idaho, besides which the town receives considerable patronage from the travel to and from the Buffalo Hump district. The O. R. & N. railroad survey passes through the town and up the canyon through which the Milner trail led.

At present Matthew H. Truscott conducts a general store and is the village postmaster; the Mount Idaho hotel is conducted by L. N. Smith; Wiley Knighten has a blacksmith shop; Herman Brown is the proprietor of a general store; and there is one saloon. The small Chinese population in the town is catered to by one merchant, Sang Yuen. Until about ten year ago the Mongolian population was much larger than the white population.

The first school in Mount Idaho was held in a small frame building erected on Main street in 1867. Mr. Brown donated the ground and contributed most of the money with which the school house was built. Miss Biancia Reed taught this school. For several years this building sufficed and then, for a long time, the school was held at different places in the town. Finally, five years ago, the district purchased the hall erected by the Masonic fraternity on the hill just north of the town and in this building between fifty and sixty pupils are now taught by Miss Margaret Hawk and Miss Beatrice Ellenwood.

The town has no fraternal or secret orders and, strangely enough, is without even a church. A six-times-a-week mail service is maintained and a tri-weekly service between Mount Idaho and the Hump and Florence.

ELK CITY.

The historic town of Elk City is on sloping ground on the east bank of Elk creek, one and one-half miles above its junction with the American river. Much of its history has been given incidentally in connection with the mining district, which bears its name. The present town consiste of a miscellaneous aggregation of board and log houses, arranged along a single street extending in an east and west direction. Its population in 1900 is given by the official census as 100, but it probably exceeds that considerably now. It has all the usual business houses and they are all doing well at this writing owing to the revival of interest in the mining district. Being at the junction of roads leading to Buffalo Hump, Big creek, Oro Grande, Red river, Ziegle creek, Dixie and Thunder mountain, it is the natural distributing point for the entire section between the middle fork of the Clearwater and the Salmon river and if it ever becomes a railway terminal it must speedily become a large and important town. There is a practicing dentist in Elk. The only lodge there established is the I. O. O. F.

CLEARWATER.

Was credited in 1900 with a population of 90. Its principal business houses are a store kept by Obannon & Clark, a hotel by Harry Baker, a livery and feed stable, and a postoffice. It is situated about twelve miles from the railway terminal, Stites.

DIXIE.

In the center of the mining district of that name is an old point. It at present consists of about twenty or twenty-five buildings arranged along Crooked river. The principal business establishments are a general merchandise store, Charles Buer proprietor, a large hotel and a postoffice.

OTHER TOWNS.

The towns and points not mentioned in the foregoing at which postoffices were established in January, 1903, are: Adams, Callender, in the Buffalo Hump county; Canfield on Doumecq plains; Concord, population in 1900, ten; Ferdinand, population, last United States census, 31; Florence, whose early history has found place elsewhere in this volume, population 75; Freedom, postoffice at the mouth of Slate creek; Glover, Goff, population 25; Greencreek, population 28; Gregg, population 57; Hump, population 51; Lorena, Lowe, population 21; Lucile, population 52; Orogrande, Pollock, population 15; Resort, Riggins, Roosevelt, in the Thunder Mountain country; Syringa, population 25; Tahoe, population 20; Warren, an old mining center in the southern part of the country, credited in 1900 with a population of 150; Woodland.

CHAPTER V.

DESCRIPTIVE.

The largest, most varied section of a grandly rugged mountain state, Idaho county presents many problems to him who essays to describe its topographical aspect, its diverse elements of wealth, its industries, its products and its people. Bold indeed is he who would attempt an adequate pen picture of its wondrous conformation, the grandeur of its scenery, the magnificence of its lofty, rock-ribbed, snow crested uplands, the sublimity of its yawning, deep-cut canyons, the enchantment of its less rugged valley scenes, the crystal beauty of its lakes, its swift-flowing rivers and its mountain torrents, the divine perfection of coloring with which nature has added a touch of softness to its boldest, wildest, most rugged features, the mystic veiling of giant strength with feminine beauty, the harmony, the magnificence, the splendor of the whole. Well might an abler writer shrink from such a task. In vain would one with no greater gifts attempt portraiture so pretentious. Yet he would be indeed a craven and derelict to duty who, having opportunity, would fail to contribute his mite toward extending public knowledge and deepening public appreciation of a land so picturesque in contour, so rich in crude elements of wealth, so ready to pour into the lap of industry an abundant reward.

In this age of scientific research, men are prone to seek causes for observed effects, and this chapter would be read with no little interest, could it draw aside the veil of the past and reveal the solution to problems which have presented themselves to thousands of thoughtful minds since the entrance of whites into central Idaho. Why this distribution of rocks? How came these canyons? Whence these deposits of gold? How came they to be distributed thus? Most important of all, where are the missing mother lodes? Some of these questions no man can answer. Others would doubtless yield a ready solution to the investigation of the skilled geologist. For some reason the geology of central Idaho has received but little attention from scholars, practically the only investigators until quite recently being the indomitable gold hunters, who give themselves slight concern about theories and generalizations further than those which tend to aid them in their search for hidden treasuries. Of a like practical character are the few notices given the country in the earlier government publications. Nevertheless Idaho county presents an ideal field for the geologist. Its deep-cut canyons expose the rocks to a depth of several thousand feet in many places and to him who can read petrographic language, these rocks reveal a history of deep and absorbing interest. They tell a tale of a giant age when the earth was torn and twisted by the fire demon, whose spittle was lava and whose breath was flame; of a war between him and the frost king continued through successive ages, in which the combatants were successively victorious. They show the efforts of the king of ice and snow to imprison his enemy under an immovable mass of rock, and how the powerful foe at length broke through his prison wall and in his anger spewed forth yet greater lakes of fiery lava, how the opposing king renewed the conflict, again forcing his enemy to a retreat in the caverns of the earth and again weighting him down under a mass of rock. They show successive escapes of the demon, each followed by renewed warfare and final victory for the king, until at last the fire gave up the conflict and the frost ruled supreme. They tell the story of that reign of ice, during which the lands were being slowly moulded and fashioned to suit the fancy of its new ruler, and how he at last grew weary of his task and withdrew to the mountain heights, where he makes an annual descent that he may assist the softer forces of water and rain and decomposition in their benevolent fashioning of the land for the uses of man. They tell also of these gentler agencies, which for ages have been noislessly at work, of Neocene lake beds, of floods, of erosion and of variations in drainage.

But we leave the details of the story of the rocks to be developed by those to whom their language is not so nearly unknown, merely pausing to notice some of the observations of Lindgren and Leiberg upon the geology and topography of our section. The maps and reports of the former show the southern part of Idaho county or much of it in the granite area, while Grangeville and Mount Idaho are known to be not far from the contact of that formation with the sedimentary rocks. Florence, Buffalo Hump, Warren, Secesh Ridge, Marshall lake, and the country, intervening, together with a strip extending many miles farther south, as shown to be in areas of granite and diorite; the Salmon river canyon at the bend of that river from a westerly to a northerly course, including John Day, Carver's ranch, Fiddle creek, and considerable territory around the confluence of the Little Salmon with the larger stream of that name is marked on the map as a carboniferous area of slates, schists and old effusive rocks, as is also the Seven Devils region, while the Salmon river country northward from a line of contact between John Day and Freedom is characterized as a Columbia river lava formation. Large areas of country on either side of the Little Salmon south of Pollock and between the Salmon and the Snake are marked rugged mountains or rugged high ridges and their petrographic character is not indicated, not having been determined by the survey.

"The main mountainous complex north of the Snake river," says Professor Lindgren, "may be divided into three parts. The great central granite area occupies by far the largest space, extending with a width of 100 miles from the Snake river plains northward to the limit of the map. (The township line north of township 27). How much farther north it extends is not known, but probably it ends somewhere in the Clearwater drainage, by junction of the eastern and western sedimentary areas. As provisionally outlined on the map, it forms one of the largest granite areas in the United States."

With regard to the Seven Devils, Lindgren says that they "may be considered an outlier of the main old mountain mass of Idaho, against which successive fiery flows piled up, until now only the summits protrude above the lava plateau. North of the copper mines on the western side of the river the contact of the old rocks with the basalt rises to nearly 7,000 feet, and the whole canyon is cut in these old eruptives and allied rocks. But immediately north of this point the contact again sinks, and heavy basalt flows from the brink of the canyon continuously down to Lewiston. Thus the gigantic trench of the canyon has shown the structure of the Columbia lava and laid bare the formation upon which it rests. Below the broad plateau lies a buried topography—mountain ranges, deep valleys and canyons, all blotted out by the swiftly succeeding flows, only the very highest peaks still showing their heads. The bottoms of the old valleys clearly lie far below the deep cut of Snake river, how far is not known. More detailed investigation will reveal more of the character of this old submerged topography."

An immense area in the eastern part of Idaho county, as well as much of southeastern Shoshone, is included in the Bitter Root forest reserve. The region is wild, rugged and in some places grand indeed, being traversed on the east by the main axis of the Bitter Root mountain divide between Idaho and Montana, from which spurs extend far to westward. The rock of the area is granite and diorite. Until recent years this was the least known region of the United States, few having ventured into its remote retreats and forbidding depths except the indomitable prospector, and the various surveying parties sent out to search for passes through which railways might gain entrance to the Pacific states. The establishment of the reserve has done much to dispel ignorance regarding the country, and the reports of the various government agents will soon make it one of the best known areas of the state.

The writer has before him a government publication of which John B. Leiberg is the author, a few excerpts from which will serve to convey an idea of its topographic features sufficient for our purpose.

"The Idaho portion of the Bitter Root forest reserve," says this authority, "is situated almost wholly within the Clearwater river drainage area, a tract along the southern boundary on the Salmon river slope being the only exception. The Clearwater drainage consists of a number of large forks or tributaries, which divide into an intricate system of long and short canyons, mostly narrow and winding. Its main arteries are the North, Middle, Lochsa, South, Lolo and Selway forks. Of these tributaries the area of the reserve includes the entire length of the Selway and Lochsa forks, and a small portion of the southern drainage of the North fork. The canyon system of which these affluents from the main trunks, is by far the most noteworthy and striking feature in the topography of the Clearwater basins. Its windings and ramifications are very great. Excluding the Salmon river gorge and lateral canyons and the small draws or mere creases in the mountain sides of the Clearwater areas, I estimate that the canyon system of the Clearwater basins within the reserve measures more than 5,000 miles in aggregate length.

"The western slope of the Bitter Root mountains is primarily formed by a few great branches from the main range, which in their turn branch out into a vast mass of curving, winding, peak-crowned spurs, constituting the water sheds of the Clearwater basins. * * * The primary divides, together with the great number of lateral spurs to which they give rise, form a perfect maze of bewildering ridges. From the summit of an eminence that commands a clear view of the surrounding country for many miles the exact course of even one canyon or spur cannot be traced for more than a mile or two at most. The curvings, windings, ascents and descents are incessant and confusing, and in every case only actual travel can determine the precise point at which any particular canyon or spur originates or ends. The primary divides vary considerably in their topographic details, depending on the amount of erosion they have undergone and the agent that effected it. The lateral spurs, on the contrary, do not differ much, except near the main range of the Bitter Roots.

"It is in the main range of the mountain system that the most rocky and precipitous areas exist. From Lolo pass to Nez Perces pass the rock formation is a massive, hard granite. The crest of the range is a succession of sharp, craggy peaks and 'hogbacks,' with long east and west swinging curves alternating with deep saddles where the larger canyons have their rise. The peaks attain elevations of 8,000 to 9,000 feet—in some instances 10,000 feet—while the deeper saddles, which form the passes of the range, have elevations of 5,800 to 6,500 feet. The direct western slope of the main backbone of the system has been cut and fissured by great glaciers that have long since disappeared, but which left behind beetling crags, deep canyons with precipitous walls, and a general ruggedness in the landscape that time has not yet succeeded in modifying, except in a very small degree.

"The general aspect of the crests of all the primary divides for distances of forty to sixty miles west from the main range, indicates the existence of past glaciers on their summits and upper slopes. The sculpturing of the slopes and the peculiar recessing of the heads of the larger canyons into the divides are, in their general features, precisely the same on the primary divides as they are on the main range, where no doubt exists as to the presence and work of big glaciers in past times. The most rugged and elevated portions of the Bitter Root range lies north of Nez Perces pass. South of this place the crest averages 1,500 to 3,000 feet less in elevation, and is for the most part a narrow ridge with rounded outlines occasionally rising into small peaks, but on the whole is more like the primary divides toward their termination on the west. The main range of the Bitter Roots north of Nez Perces pass has always proved a formidable barrier in the way of travel from east to west in this region. The difficulty does not lie in the approach from the eastern side, though this declivity has by far the shortest and steepest slope. It is the descent on the western side that presents the chief obstacles. The immediate slopes from the crest are here very abrupt, are cut up by immense gorges and abound in precipices and extensive rockslides to such a degree that they are entirely impassable. The three trails extending across the reserve, the Lolo trail on the north, the trail through Lost Horse pass in the center and the Nez Perces trail on the south, were laid out by the Indians ages ago and their course was made to coincide as nearly as possible with the crests of the primary ridges, the canyons being utterly impassable without much grading and rock cutting."

With the rock-ribbed Bitter Roots, just described, on the east and piercing with their rugged granite spurs the country to westward for scores of miles, with the lofty Seven Devils, spanning, like a Colossus, the strip between the Salmon and the Snake, with Craig's mountain forming a northwestern boundary, and with the Salmon river mountains on the south, with all these ranges, many of which sent forth huge glaciers in past ages to plow deep furrows in the bosom of earth and with the swift flowing streams to continue by their erosion the deepening of the canyons, Idaho county is indeed a rough, rugged, prodigious region. It is not hard to imagine it as having been fashioned by the hand of a giant architect as a home for a giant race. The lover of a tender beauty may find here scenes suited to his taste, but it is to the admirer of a strong, wild, picturesque landscape that central Idaho will appeal with especial potency. A scenic poem it may be denominated, but it is a poem replete with epic heroism, composed in the stirring meter of the Norse Viking's song of defiance, with a few couplets of a gentler strain, little of the soft, sweet music of love. It is not, however, the plan of nature to divorce absolutely masculine strength from feminine prettiness, the sublimely grand from the delicately beautiful, and there is in the eternal verdure of the forest, the deep blue of the distant hills, the paler blue of the summer sky, the rich green carpet that spring time weaves, and the illumination of the sunlight, power to subdue and soften and transfigure the most rugged landscape. Here as elsewhere may be seen the effort of artistic nature to adorn, with the clinging ivy vine, the ruins of the feudal castle.

But it must not be supposed from the foregoing that Idaho county is all mountainous; on the contrary there is within its borders one of the finest and most extensive bodies of agricultural land in the entire state. From many points in the surrounding mountains may be obtained a splendid view of a part or the whole of this grand prairie, but perhaps as good a position as one may choose is a station on the side of Craig's mountain not far from Foster's grave. As the observer beholds the beautiful scene which is spread out before him, he is not surprised that the wild Indian warrior of 1877 should have resorted to force and arms rather than yield the privilege of wandering free over such a prairie and such inviting mountain uplifts, meekly submitting to the semi-incarceration of a reserve. It was the writer's privilege to behold Camas prairie from the position designated, early in the spring of the present year. The country had been the scene of a noiseless warfare for its possession, that between the seasons; and the forces of warmth and sunlight had just succeeded in driving their adversaries, the frost and the snow, to distant retreats in the heights beyond. The country was not at its best. It had not yet been clothed in vernal colors. The labor of the husbandman during the previous fall had, by turning up the rich black soil in places, given it a somewhat checkered appearance, and here and there could be noticed the first feeble efforts of the winter wheat to cover the blackness of its parent soil, with a carpet of green. The distant hills wore their perennial timber covering, the verdure of which was then as always transformed into a dark beautiful blue by one of nature's secret processes. Though the hills to the left shut off the view of the mountains in that direction, making it impossible to see the entire farming country, the prairie appeared crescent shaped, the concave side toward the beholder, and it seemed to rise by a gradual ascent to the timbered and snow crested uplands beyond. It required but little effort to project one's self backward through thirty-five or forty years of time and behold in imagination the waving sea of blue camas which delighted the eye of those whose privilege it was to view the prairie in its virgin state. By a still slighter effort one might picture to himself the intense greenness which is to characterize the country when the gentle springtime shall have woven to full completion its crown of verdure.

But why carry this description further when we have before us one from an abler pen and one which has come to possess a historic interest, having been written more than two decades ago? In 1881 A. F. Parker said:

"The tender light of an afternoon sun bathed the landscape in mellow tints as we obtained our first view of Camas prairie from the summit of Cottonwood hill. The scene spread before us was one of entrancing beauty. At our feet lay the prairie itself, with its undulations and gently rising slopes, softened by distance into the appearance of a great tranquil inland sea; streaching away to the eastward, the dense greenness of its vegetation merges into the dull gray of the foothills, which in their turn vanish into the blackness of the timber clad mountains in the background. The eye at first rests with feelings of refreshment upon the luxuriant hue of the vegetation with which the prairie is decked till the very intensity of its verdure becomes painful and we turn naturally for relief to the grand old mountain ranges that form such an appropriate setting for this gem of the Pacific slope.

"Looking to the southward, the snow-capped peaks of the Salmon river mountains loom grandly up, their serrated summits rising tier above tier till they are themselves overtopped by the weird and fantastic forms of the Seven Devils, whose majestic heights clearly penciled on the horizon and clad in the chaste grandeur of glittering snows lend to this enchanting scene an appearance of awe-inspiring severity that strangely contrasts with the peaceful landscape reposing at our feet. The rugged vertebrae of the Bitter Roots rise sharply heavenward and form the eastern boundary of the prairie, while spurs of this mighty range stretch far away to the northward and form the rock-ribbed Coeur d'Alene mountains, behind whose towering crests rise the pinnacles of other ranges, priests robed with the snows of eternal age. But the eye soon tires of the stern grandeur and unutterable solitudes of these primeval hills, and seeks harmony in contemplation of the pastures below. The stage road running the full length of the valley and by its dense blackness attesting the unexcelled fecundity of the soil, an occasional cabin, the remnants of a stockade fort erected in the dark and bloody days of 1877, the villages of Grangeville, Mount Idaho and Camp Howard glistening in the sun, nestling snugly in their respective locations at the far end of the valley, with the limited area of cultivation, hidden from view, these are the only evidences of civilization visible on Camas prairie—the land of Indian romance and of historical tragedy—the most beautiful, the most fertile country in the world.

"Nothing in nature is more enchanting than a view of this romantic spot, obtained at a time when the green of the prairie is suffused with the golden glow of a setting sun; and but for the fact that, like Daedalus of old, our wings are of wax and liable to melt if we soar too near the sun, we would love to linger upon the beauties of the landscape, to which, however, no pencil and no brush can do adequate justice. As we descended the hill to Cottonwood and traversed the thousands of acres of fertile soil, untilled and crying to heaven for the plow, our determination to advertise to the world the wondrous wealth of northern Idaho became like cast-iron in its rigidity."

Other agricultural and stock raising sections of the county are the valleys or canyons of the Clearwater and Salmon rivers and some of the tributary streams. Though the area in these suited to farming is not extensive, the valleys are of no little agricultural and horticultural value, for their moderate elevation and sheltered position give them the advantage of a much finer climate than the high country between and on either side of them. The Clearwater valley is traversed by a branch of the Northern Pacific railroad as far as a town called Stites. It will receive more particular treatment in connection with Nez Perces county, but we may say here that though similar in its general features to the Salmon river canyon, it is inferior in topographic grandeur. The rivers themselves are both streams of great beauty, and both noted for the furious impetuosity of their flow. This it is that gives them their moderate breadth and depth though they carry off the waters from so large a scope of mountainous country, receiving tribute from such a complex of creeks and rivulets that a blue print map with the drainage traced in white, presents nearly as much white surface as blue.

To one entering the Salmon river canyon from the north during the winter or spring seasons, the scene is especially entrancing. The deep, sticky mud of Camas prairie is likely to blind temporarily one who has toiled through it to the beauty of its topography, the richness of its soil and the blessings it bestows so bountifully upon its inhabitants. The climb to the summit of White Bird divide is sure to be attended with inconvenience, if not hardship, being either muddy in the extreme or snow-clad, and the eye and mind are prepared to feast with especial pleasure on the beautiful landscape that comes into view, when you begin your descent of the opposite slope. As you wind your way down the steep hillside and behold, stretching away to your right, the narrow valley of White Bird creek, apparently ending at the foot of a steep, snow-capped bluff, which is, however, across the Salmon river, you are likely to wonder how Colonel Perry could have dared to lead his men into a country so favorable for ambuscades and so difficult to get out of in case of defeat. But there is no danger now. The work of the Indian warrior is done and you gaze without fear upon a landscape at once extremely rugged and uncommonly regular. The hills are steep and high to be sure, but their sculpturing is so smooth as to suggest the work of a landscape gardener, while the numerous cattle paths extending horizontally across them one above another, would, if a little more nearly straight, give the impression of terracing. To your right as you pass through the town of White Bird, looms up a great, precipitous knob of basalt, much more irregular and rugged than the surrounding hills, castle like columns of undecomposed lava rock rising perpendicularly in places from its steep sides. Upon this at the time of the writer's visit, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of feet above the valley, well up toward the summit, a herd of cattle were feeding peacefully, many of them in places where, it would seem, a mountain sheep would hardly dare to venture.

Rugged though White Bird canyon is, that of the Salmon river proper is deeper and more rugged, though the hills on either side are of the same steep, comparatively smoothly sculptured character. As you ascend the river you are continually reminded of the two main industries of the people. Herds of cattle, feeding upon the precipitous sides of the verdure-clad hills above you, speak of the extent to which pastoral pursuits engage their energies, while piles of tailings, huge excavations in the gravel banks of the river, an occasional ditch far up on the hill side, here and there a large iron pipe bearing water to some hydraulic giant and perhaps an occasional miner at work on his property tell you that the precious metal abounds, that much energy has been expended in securing it in the past and that not a little effort is still being directed toward its acquisition. Though smiling spring pays its earliest visit to this land, hoary winter always takes up its abode not far away, and the sight of vernal beauty and loveliness at hand bordered by a landscape appareled in robes of snow just beyond is a common and perfectly normal one. However interesting to the new comer this illogical marriage between winter and summer, it has long since ceased to seem marvelous to the eyes of the old Idahoan.

If you are interested in the past history of the country, you will find the people more than willing to point out to you places rendered memorable by the stirring events of the awful Indian outbreak of 1877. Though this terrible scourge visited the land so long ago, its details were so horrible, and shocked the sensibilities of the pioneers so deeply, that the impressions remain vivid to this day, and the story has been told so many times that even the younger generation is familiar with the landmarks of the war. They will point out to you the remnants of Indian fortifications; the place where Perry was first attacked; where Howard crossed the river and where he camped; the high bluff upon the summit of which is the prairie where the Indians from times immemorial were wont to assemble for councils and for worship; the place where Benedict was killed; the old stone chimneys, sole remnants of the miners' cabins in which were the Masons and Osbornes when the Indians attacked them; the site of the fort at Slate creek; the field in which were Elfers, Bland and Beckroge when tragic death overtook them; and the spot where poor, old, consumptive Dick Divine was murdered for his gun.

As you ascend the river, the scenery becomes more and more grand at least as far up as Goff. Beyond that the personal observation of the writer did not extend, but perhaps the reader may get some idea of the topography of this great river canyon throughout the rest of its course in Idaho county by a perusal of the following from the pen of J. V. Dwyer, who, in describing a hunting trip taken by himself and others last winter, said:

"My brother and myself left Salmon City on the 8th of November on a hunt for big horn sheep, and descending the Salmon river thirty-five miles to the mouth of Indian creek, outfitted at the store of the Kittie Burton Gold Mining Company, which is located about five miles up Indian creek from the mouth. We there bought a flat boat, 36x10 feet in size, and loading our possessions on this boat, started down the stream for Big creek, where we camped for a number of days, hunting the mountain sheep and deer in the high mountains. We had arranged for Captain Guleke to join us at Big creek before the winter ice had formed, but on Thanksgiving day the storm began in an unmistakable way and we then knew that if we were to make the river trip it would have to be made at once.

"November 29 we started down the stream without waiting for Captain Guleke, and reaching Poverty flat about the middle of the afternoon, fifty-five miles below Salmon City, found that the river for a quarter of a mile was blocked with slush ice. It was right then that trouble began and we surely had enough of it within the next week. Going to the foot of the slush ice gorge we started to clear out a channel through which the boat could be floated, and by the time night had come on, we had cleared the channel with the exception of the last three hundred feet. This we expected to finish within half an hour the next morning, but were disappointed in this, as the next morning we found that the ice flow of the previous night had again choked the channel worse than ever before. Three days we struggled with this ice flow, when we were joined by Captain Guleke and another day was spent in a last effort to remove the obstruction. The Captain then advised that a smaller boat be made, which could be portaged over the gorge on a toboggan. The building of this boat occupied two days, the tools in use being a dull saw and hand ax, and the material planks from our larger boat and from the remains of a smaller boat we found stranded at Poverty flats. A large portion of the supplies were left in the large boat.

"Once started down the river in the smaller craft, our troubles may be said to have been over, as there was never the least doubt about reaching the mouth of the river, although on several occasions there seemed to be considerable doubt about our making the trip alive. The first day after leaving Poverty flats and before we reached the mouth of the middle fork of Salmon river, we struck another ice gorge, over which we portaged with little difficulty. The next day from this we entered the Black canyon, which has a length of something over ten miles, and which took three days to traverse. During these days the hours were filled with excitement and risk. Seven ice gorges were met and surmounted. In no case was the ice solid, the solid ice reaching out from the shore on each side and leaving in the middle of the stream a channel, which was filled up with slush ice, and enormous snow balls, this slush ice and snow sometimes reaching below the surface to a depth of ten or fifteen feet. In this stretch of the river there would be a quiet reach of water, its surface mirroring the enfolding hills, while below this would come a rapid or fall, where the water, a sea green color, would rush down a rocky gorge, on a twenty per cent. grade, or perhaps fall almost perpendicularly for ten or fifteen feet. The channel in these swift places would be plentifully besprinkled with huge red and green granite and sand stone boulders, and the waters would be lashed into foam. At the foot of each of these falls would be a combing wave, apparently rushing back up stream, and on several occasions these waves almost swamped the boat. But it was not the rushing waters, alternating with pools of quiet depth, that formed the greatest charm in the scenery.

"The name Black canyon is no misnomer. It was and is a black canyon in very truth. Floating on the quieter stretches of the river and looking toward the heavens, it seemed as though the scene told its own history of the great mountains of granite which had been reft by the giant hand of the Almighty, raised in anger against an unworthy world, leaving here a gash in many places five thousand feet in depth, and which in many places even the erosion of the ages has not more than gently scarred, while in others the evidences of the great convulsion which had split the rocks asunder were apparently as fresh as on the day when the cleft was formed. On either side there would be nothing but the bare rock walls, red and green and blue and brown, with never a blade of grass or shrub, while far above, forming a fringe for the clear blue of the sky, which showed in a thin slit like a silver thread, was the dark blue of the forest, intensified by the dazzling whiteness of the snow that sparkled with all the shades of light that would be given out by a cluster of diamonds. The memory of the three days spent in traversing this Black canyon will be with me through the years to come.

"After we had traversed the Black canyon, no other dangers that the river might have in store for us could produce more than a pleasurable excitement, and each rapid and fall was met and conquered without the quickening of a single pulse beat. Beautiful scenery, sublime in its loftiness, did not end with the Black canyon, and in many ways the stretch of river between White Bird and the junction of the Salmon with the Snake rivers furnished as beautiful scenery as can be found anywhere on the American continent. After leaving White Bird, the river, although wild in its flow, gave evidence along its banks that man had come here and made this his home. There were a number of little homes, with vineclad porches and orchards back of the house. Occasionally there were long stretches where the river ran in deep gorges and where the sun does not strike the water during eight months of the year. The walls of the canyon here are a chocolate colored basalt, and in many places the columnar basalt stretches from the water's edge for a thousand feet or more into the air, the columns rising like cathedral spires. In other places these cliffs of columnar basalt have been faulted and the columns, in place of soaring skyward, are placed at almost every imaginable angle.

"We reached the mouth of the Salmon river December 17th, and two days were occupied in reaching Lewiston. After leaving White Bird we had been constantly warned to beware of the Wild Goose rapids, and so much had been told us of the dangers of the passage there that we had almost decided to line over the rapids, something we had not done in our whole trip. All during the forenoon we had been keeping a careful watch for the Wild Goose, and finally about noon, unable to stand the suspense any longer, the boat was pulled ashore near a house, and a farmer asked how far it was to the Wild Goose. We were much surprised when told that we had passed the rapids about six miles."

But we must not allow ourselves to be betrayed into dwelling at too great length upon the topographic features of Idaho county, for scenic beauty, though adding greatly to the charm of any region, is nevertheless in this practical age secondary in importance to numerous other considerations. Though from an agriculturist's standpoint there seems to be much waste land in central Idaho, yet is the country almost everywhere rich in some form of wealth. The palmy days of placer mining have long since passed, but the revival of the last decade in quartz mining has brought to light not a few promising prospects and some producers, the wide distribution of which, considered in connection with the evidence of mineralization in many parts of the intervening country, fosters the belief that Idaho county is some day again to lead the state, as it did in the early 'sixties, in the production of mineral wealth. The season of the year during which this work is being prepared renders it practically impossible to visit the mines in person and our lack of mining experience must of necessity render this description of the mining industry somewhat superficial, but we shall do our best with the information at hand.

Among the mining districts which are today commanding attention are several the names of which were household words in the golden days of 1861-2-3. Florence, which had such a brilliant early history, enjoyed a very considerable boom in recent years and though interest has subsided somewhat, it is still among the important districts of the county. Situated in the vicinity of the Salmon river its environs partake of the picturesqueness which characterize the canyon of that stream and country adjacent to it. The general topography of the canyon at this point was thus described in 1885 by the gifted pen of A. F. Parker:

"Four miles from Florence we strike the head of the seven mile grade to Salmon river. The descent into hades is not more abrupt and precipitous than the tortuous trail which winds around the face of the mountain and drops the weary traveler finally at the approaches to the wire bridge. From the summit of the huge spur down which the trail winds, one can look for miles and miles over a sea of mountain and ravine, of ragged precipices and stony heights, of barren wastes and pine-crested slopes. Far below yawns the black gorge through which the river runs, dwarfed from our point of view to a mere silver thread. Descending, we note that the shelving sides of the canyon meet at the bottom until they inclose the turbulent waters of this dangerous stream. The elements acting on the sides of the gorge have scraped some parts into precipitous crags and scooped others back, so that the walls present a series of projecting bastions and semi-circular recesses, traversed by innumerable ravines. The dark forests of pine that clothe the summits sweep down to the very brink of the river in scattering groves on both sides. Such is a general plan of the place, but it is hardly possible to convey in words a picture of the impressive grandeur of the scene.

"There are those to whom such a scene is the very abomination of desolation, nothing present that is not savage and inhospitable. But to a keen eye it has manifold attractions. From the summit the crags and slopes tower upwards in endless variety and form with the weirdest mingling of colors. Much of the granite rock, especially the crumbling slopes, was of a sparkling white that dazzled the eyes, and through this groundwork harder masses of dull scarlet, merging into craggy knolls and pinnacles, shot up in vertical walls. In the sunlight of early morning the canyon is a blaze of strange and ever changing color as the shadows recede from the scarred fronts of yellow, red and black, and become illumined with the bright rays of the strengthening sun. And above all lie the dark folds of pine, sweeping along the crests of the precipices which they crown with a rim of sombre green, while far away in the distant perspective is an endless succession of rugged mountains, priest-robed in the snows of eternity, or clothed in the sombre hues of the forest. There may be gorges in the Yellowstone or Yosemite of far more imposing magnitude, but for dimensions large enough to be profoundly striking, yet not too vast to be taken in by the eyes at once, for infinite changes of picturesque detail and for brilliancy and variety of coloring, the Salmon river canyon is as striking and impressive as any in America."

The mining district is situated on the north side of the river on a plateau near the brink of the canyon. Its elevation is approximately 6,000 feet, so that in winter snow falls to a great depth. Lindgren estimates the total production of the camp at between fifteen and thirty millions. "The production from July, 1868, to July, 1869," he says, "had already sunk to $200,000; during 1871, only $100,000 were produced; during 1872, $78,000. From this date the camp is rarely mentioned in the mint reports, and during many years the Chinese were in undisturbed possession, washing old tailings. The report of 1881 estimates the production at $45,000: in 1882, it was $35,000; in 1884, $40,000; in 1885,, $44,093 of gold and $403 of silver; in 1887, $38,449 of gold and $1,551 of silver. Soon after the camp became practically deserted.

"While it was recognized at an early date that the gold was derived from quartz veins, these were considered of little value. The only quartz vein mentioned in the old reports was the Harpster and Little, located four miles from Florence on the brink of the Salmon river. This was a silver vein containing practically no gold. In 1896 and 1897 quartz mining received a great impetus. Prospecting showed the presence of very many veins and the district was soon covered by locations; several mills were erected and the population increased to about 1,000."

The mining revival in the district resulted not alone in the building of mills and developing of quartz prospects, but in some attention being paid to placer mining by improved modern machinery. Thus in the fall of 1898, a dredge of the dipper variety with a daily capacity of 2,000 yards, was instituted by the Bucyrus Dredge Company, of Milwaukee, at a cost of $50,000. It was operated during two seasons but did not do its work in a satisfactory manner.

The district furnishes a complicated system of gold-bearing quartz veins, upon which in 1897 and 1898, several hundred claims were filed. Assay values are said to range from $18 to $50. The Hi Yu vein on Sand creek is a ledge two to four feet wide and is said by Lindgren to consist of quartz seams separated by altered granite, which yield gold valued at $14 an ounce. The vein, he says, was worked as early as 1872 and in 1897 it had been developed by a drift 175 feet long. A new mill was erected in 1898, and worked continuously for a while, but we are informed that the mine is now in litigation.

A quarter of a mile southeast of the Hi Yu on the south branch of Black Sand creek is the Banner vein, a "vein of glassy, pure quartz up to six feet thick, though ordinarily much less, said to go $50 per ton and to contain 2½ ounces gold, six to seven ounces silver, very little pyrite. Some of the altered granite is also said to be as rich as the quartz. Several minor faults cross the vein, causing it to diverge locally from its course." A Huntington mill was in course of erection in 1897 at the time of Lindgren's visit. It burned in 1899. The mine was patented and allowed to fill with water and remain idle until 1901, when it fell into the hands of the First National Bank of Spokane. John M. Herman, of Moscow, organized the Florence Gold Mining Company for its operation, and in 1902 built and equipped two Huntington mills, also fitted up the mine completely, the aggregate expenditure in this manner being $20,000. It is said that the underground workings measure unitedly 1,200 feet. The mine closed down last spring and is at present in litigation.

The Gold Bug vein, located a short distance south of the Banner, belongs to the Banner group. It has been opened by means of a tunnel, and it is stated that from it and the Banner, the old Banner company extracted $50,000 worth of ore. The Blossom vein is situated west of old Florence. It consists of altered granite alternating with quartz veins of varying thickness. "This ledge," says the government report, "is confined between thin layers of soft clayey material, separating it from the hard country rock. Free milling gold is said to occur in the altered granite and the clay—talc, so called,—as well as in the quartz. A considerable amount of gold was obtained from this mine in early days by means of crushing in mortars. The Blossom is said to be one of the most persistent veins of the camp, and it can be followed for a considerable distance. The vein is developed by a shaft following it and reaching to a depth of 110 feet from the surface. The shaft extends 58 feet below the tunnel, which is 220 feet in length." A Huntington mill was erected on this property in 1897 by the Blossom Mining and Milling Company. It was never operated, however, and in 1901 became the property of J. M. Herman. The mine was relocated in the summer of 1902 by Walter Bennett of Florence.

The Ozark vein is located near the head of Gold Lake creek, a tributary of Slate creek, at a point about a mile from old Florence. The government report on it says: "The deposits consist of one principal vein averaging 18 inches in thickness and striking south 84 degrees east. A smaller vein, averaging a foot in width joins the former vein at an acute angle, having a strike north of 88 degrees east. A number of smaller stringers run parallel to the latter. The larger vein cuts off the second as well as its parallel stringers. In all, these stringers form a zone up to 50 feet wide, which is said to contain enough to be milled with profit. The quartz is of the ordinary glassy kind, seemingly characteristic of this camp. It contains but little sulphurets and shows excellent comb structure. Some of the altered granite along the stringers carries free gold and is crushed with the quartz. The mine is developed by two tunnels 600 feet long, cutting the seam obliquely and striking about north 62 degrees east. A five-stamp mill reduces the ore. The Ozark was in 1897 the only producing mine, with the exception of a small quantity milled at the Hi Yu." It is, however, stated that the mine has not produced any since 1897 and is idle at present. Its owner is M. J. Shields, of Moscow.

About a mile west of Florence is the Waverly, a vein of something near twelve feet width. The developments reported in 1897 consisted of a shaft 116 feet deep. J. M. Herman, we are informed, took an option on it in 1898 and expended $3,000, but gave it back to its original owners because he could not keep the water out of the workings. It is said to be very rich. It is now the property of the Waverly Gold Mining Company, a Moscow corporation, who are not operating it at present. There is a two-stamp mill on the property.

The Poorman vein, three miles southwest of Florence, was in 1897 reported to have been developed by a shaft 120 feet deep and a tunnel, also to consist of quartz similar to that of the other mines of the district except that ruby silver and horn silver were present. A five-stamp mill was erected on this property in 1897, and run a few hours, after which the mine shut down and the mill was sold to the Little Giant Company, of Warren.

The Cubano vein at the head of Miller creek, half a mile west of Florence was opened in early days. It was again located about two years ago by Mrs. Emma Meinart, of Florence, who is engaged in developing it, reducing the ore in a two-stamp mill. It is claimed that the vein is the richest in the camp, the ore assaying $100 and upwards.

The Gilt Edge, adjoining Florence on the east, has been developed by a shaft 200 feet deep. A new steam hoist was installed last summer, and the Gilt Edge Gold Mining Company, recently organized by R. J. McLean, of Mount Idaho, is engaged in extending its shafts and is drifting. The ore is said to assay from $50 to $70, free gold.

The Bullion, of which Henry Wax, of Grangeville, is the present owner, was opened as much as a quarter of a century ago. It was formerly the property of S. S. Fenn, who used to have its rich ore packed to a railroad and shipped. It is a silver proposition. Six or seven hundred feet of development work have been done on it. It lies eight miles southeast of Florence.

The Whatcheer vein, seven miles south of Florence and two west of the Bullion, is now owned by the Whatcheer Mining Company of Pullman, Washington. The vein is said to be from one to three feet in thickness and the development work to aggregate six hundred feet. Other valuable veins are the Yakima, four miles south of town, owned by Flint & Reed, of Grangeville; Snowshoe, near it, the property of W. A. Bennett and George Connor; the Coupon and the Caudeleria, owned by R. J. McLean, and the Anderson Brothers' mines, a large group, the gold bearing ore from which, it is said, is soon to be treated in a 20-ton mill. The great drawback to mining in the district is the presence of water in such quantities as to flood the workings. Until this is drained off not much progress can be made.

On the south side of the Salmon river canyon about twenty-seven miles from Florence in a southeasterly direction is the Warren mining district, the story of the discovery of which, with its early history, has been related heretofore. It is one of the two or three camps in Idaho county which have been noticed in recent geological publications, and concerning it Lindgren's report has this to say:

"Warren is one of the least accessible mining camps in the west, being about one hundred and thirty miles by wagon road from the nearest railroad. In consequence of this, as well as of the short season and bad roads, expenses of mining are necessarily high. The road from Weiser, after leaving the plateau of the Columbia lava at Payette lake, continues up the narrow canyon of the North Fork of the Payette until, at an elevation of 6,300 feet, it crosses the low and swampy divide between the Salmon and Payette rivers. At this point the character of the country changes. Down toward the brink of the Salmon river canyon extends a heavily forested area of comparatively gentle relief. The road at first follows the valley of Secesh creek, which has a most remarkable course, as will be seen from the map. Rising only a few miles from the great canyon of the Salmon, it runs in a southeasterly direction, and finally, thirty-five miles from its head, empties into the south fork of the Salmon river, which again empties into the main river fifteen miles northeast of Warren. This peculiar course indicates clearly that the plateau and its drainage, to the south fork of the Salmon river, are of great antiquity compared with the latter. The road, leaving Secesh valley, crosses a ridge and descends into the drainage of Meadow creek, near the head of which Warren is located. The character of the topography about Warren is the same as that of Secesh valley. Gently sloping ridges rise to about a thousand feet above the valley, and a forest of black pine covers everything. The bottoms of the creeks and streams are covered with gravel to a considerable depth, and near the divides little marshes are common. A few miles north of Warren the country slopes precipitously towards the Salmon river."

Warren has the distinction, notwithstanding its remoteness from transportation facilities, of being the first of the old placer camps in which any considerable attention was devoted to quartz mining. Thus Prof. Lindgren, deriving his information from the Raymond and mint reports, tells us that in 1869 the principal gold and silver veins were known, that the Rescue yielded $13,000 and was developed by a shaft one hundred and twenty feet deep; that in 1870 the quartz mines were averaging $50.00 per ton while the placer mines averaged $5.90 per day per man during four months; that in 1871, 1,500 tons of ore were extracted, averaging $37.00; that from the quartz mines up to that date $125,000 had been extracted and that two hundred and fifty recorded claims were known. "In 1872," continues the extracts, "the gold veins of Rescue, Charity, Sampson and Keystone were worked; of gold-silver veins, Martinace, Hunt and Washington. In 1873 Rescue and Charity were worked. In 1874 Rescue was idle. In 1875 the placers were nearly exhausted. Of the quartz mines the following were worked: Hic Jacet, Keystone, Knott, Scott, Alder, Rescue and Sampson. In 1881 the same mines and several more were worked with good results. In 1882 the Charity, Tramp and Knott quartz veins were operated. In 1884 the Tramp, Knott and Little Giant were worked. In 1897 the Little Giant and Goodenough were worked and many others prospected; placer mining by steam shovel was in progress one mile below Warren. In 1898 the Little Giant and Goodenough were worked. A ten-stamp mill had been erected on the Iola and was in operation."

The largest producer of the Warren district is the Little Giant vein, situated half a mile south-southeast of Warren in Smith gulch. The ore consists of quartz, containing native gold of a rather pale color, also small quantities of tetrahedrite, galena, brown zinc blende, arsenopyrite and pyrite. It is stated in the geological report on the mine that during the fourteen years preceding 1897, the mine produced 1,665 tons of ore, which, being milled, yielded an average of $117 per ton. A ten-stamp mill was moved from the Poorman mine in Florence onto this property in 1900, but it is idle now as the vein has become involved in litigation. Its present owners are the Idaho Little Giant Mining Company of Grangeville.

The Rescue is said to be the oldest quartz mine in north Idaho. Its vein extends at least half a mile, and upon it are located the Idaho, Goodenough and West Goodenough. Limdgren's report credits it with a production, in all the years during which it has been worked since 1868, of between $100,000 and $150,000. It was idle in 1897, owing to its having become subject of litigation, and it is idle at present. "Where examined," says the government report, "the vein forms a belt of crushed granite one and one-half to two feet wide, schistose in places and containing small veinlets of quartz inclosing minute foils of free gold, together with a little zinc blende, galena and probably also tetrahedrite. The average width of the vein is said to be three feet, of which about eighteen inches constitutes the pay streak. In thin sections the quartz proves to be entirely normal, well crystallized vein quartz. The yield of ore is from $20 to $50 per ton. The vein is (1897) opened near the creek by a crosscut 475 feet long. Drifts extend 300 feet east and 600 feet west on the vein. East of the crosscut the vein has been stopped to surface and also for fifty feet below the drift, while on the west side but little stopping has been done." On the property is a ten-stamp mill, operated by steam. The mine is inactive at present.

The Goodenough vein is said to consist of solid quartz, two to eight inches wide, with well defined walls. It is a high grade property, with zinc blende, pyrite and ruby silver present. Like the other properties of the company, it is inoperative at present. Other veins are the Charity, developed by two tunnels, the Knott, one of the earliest discoveries, developed by three tunnels, the Tramp, Hic Jacet, Delaware, Blue Bird, Bull Dog, some of which have been somewhat developed, the Martinez, Keystone and Hunt; the Hawkeye and Washington, the Arlise, the Lucky Ben and the Scott; the Iola, on which a ten-stamp mill was erected in 1898, and the Beamish. The Silver King is the only mine in the district in operation, all the others, for some reason, being in a state of suspended animation at this time. It is being worked by the Silver King Mining and Milling Company, of which Amber Stewart is manager. A ten-stamp Frasier & Chalmer mill treats its ore and it has two Willley concentrators. Its deepest tunnel taps the vein at a depth of 300 feet.

While Warren is, perhaps, one of the steadiest of the old camps, it is experiencing a period of industrial quiet at present, no doubt owing in part at least to the Buffalo Hump and Thunder Mountain excitements. It is said that the district is characterized by the fact that rich float is frequently found and rich surface showings which show a tendency to "pinch out" as greater depth is attained.

The Marshall Lake mining district, northwest of Warren and south-east of Florence, is the newest and one of the most promising in Idaho county. As yet but little development work has been done and owing to the character of the region and the composition of the ores, this district must be slow in coming forward, although its future appears to be a very bright one. Since the discovery of the first mines here over four hundred claims have been located and more than twenty different veins have been uncovered, all of which prospect well.

The topography of this region is that characteristic of the upper Salmon river, high, timbered ranges or divides separated by narrow, abyssmal canyons thousands of feet in depth. With the exception of the state wagon road which crosses the Salmon at the mouth of French creek, follows this creek for several miles and then crosses the divide onto Lake and Secesh creeks, thence to the Salmon meadows, the country can be traveled over only by tortuous trails which climb precipitous slopes and dip down into deep canyons across the roughest of ground. At French creek the Salmon is about 2,700 feet in altitude. Six miles from the river on either side, on the north and the south, the divides rise to a height of 8,000 feet, while numerous raging mountain torrents leap down from these lofty ridges through short, dark and deep canyons to the mighty stream below. The northern slopes of these divides are heavily timbered with fir and tamarack large enough in size for mining and building uses, while a sparser growth covers the canyons to the water's edge. Beneath the roots of this wild forest lies the mineral wealth which some day will be taken from nature's hidden storehouse and distributed among men.

The principal portion of the Marshall Lake district lies on the precipitous northern slope of the high Salmon river-Lake creek divide, between French creek on the west and California creek on the east, although many good prospects have been found and several placers are in operation across this divide on Lake creek and Marshall lake. The official southern boundary of the district is described as a line running from the western prong of California creek near Burgdorf's warm springs westward to French creek. The mineral zone is perhaps twelve miles wide and, so far as known, about eighteen miles long, the veins running parallel with the Salmon and at right angles with the smaller breaks or canyons. However, it would be erroneous to assume that the district thus described embraces the entire mineralized section, for every veteran prospector knows that the whole interior region is mineralized and that color can be found anywhere in central Idaho. French creek is a stream carrying fully 2,500 miner's inches of water in midsummer and possesses a tremendous fall. This creek is well favored, at its lower end, with excellent mill sites and is said to be the best stream in that region for power purposes. California creek heads on the Lake creek divide and empties into the Salmon eighteen miles above French creek, which is the larger stream. Between these flow Maxwell, Carey, Long Tom, Fall and Bear creeks, on the last of which are a majority of the claims in the district including the developed properties. Bear creek is a very small stream not more than large enough to run a ten-stamp mill. Its source is in Twin lakes, two small bodies of water covering perhaps ten acres each. They lie, one below the other, just across the summit of the Lake creek divide and on the Salmon river slope at an altitude of about 8,000 feet. There are no fish in their waters and except for a short time during the summer, their surfaces are frozen and covered with snow. Each has an outlet and the two streams draining the lakes form a junction two miles lower down, creating Bear creek. Two miles west of Twin lakes and across the divide at an altitude nearly two thousand feet lower, is Marshall lake, from which this district receives its name. This body of water is a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide and heads in a deep basin directly under the crest of the divide. This body of water is the source of Lake creek, which courses through a beautiful stretch of meadows extending many miles along Secesh creek, into which the former stream flows. George H. Connor, who is our principal authority on the Marshall Lake district, estimates that fully 40,000 acres are embraced in this fertile, natural meadow and says that, besides Fred Burgdorf, many others have already turned their stock in upon its luxurious grasses. The waters of the lake and streams are of crystal clearness. They are the delight of millions of trout which every year come into the mountains from the south fork of the Salmon river into which Secesh creek flows.

The snows are almost perpetual on the summit of the Lake creek divide, where the altitude is close to 8,300 feet, so naturally these higher regions are accessible to the prospector for only a short portion of the year. Lower down, near the Salmon, it is possible to carry on work for several months each season if not all winter. Florence is the nearest postoffice to the mines on the Salmon river slope and Warren is the trading point and postoffice of those who live near the top of or across the divide.

As heretofore stated, the principal mines lie on Bear creek. Here it was that the first discoveries were made during the summer of 1898 by two prospectors, Isaac Maxwell and a man named McKibbon. Late in the season these two men opened a rich vein between Twin lakes and the top of the divide. Specimens from it assayed as high as $19,000, though the general average was in the neighborhood of $100. The gold was free milling and was found between alternating walls of schist and granite. Maxwell and McKibbon did the necessary assessment work on the four claims taken, which they named the Mountain Chief group, then sold the property forthwith to Charles Sweeney, of Spokane, its present owner. Sweeney kept up the assessment work and that is all. The discovery was not heralded abroad and elicited little general interest. During the summer of 1900, however, A. A. Easton and D. L. Roy went into the region and located the Kimberley group of four claims. They sank a fifty foot shaft on the Kimberley and struck a rich lead, sixteen inches wide, assaying $125.00. This was in September. The following May they located four more claims three miles down the canyon, at an altitude of about 4,000 feet. This group they named the Jewel. Three ledges were uncovered, the Jewel, the Multnomah and the Bellorr. The Jewel vein is eighteen inches wide and assays $75; the Multnomah, a three foot lead, assays perhaps $40; while the Bellorr vein is about twenty inches wide and carries values lower than the Multnomah. At present a one hundred and twenty foot tunnel taps the Jewel ledge; the Multnomah is opened by several surface cuts and on the Bellorr thirty feet of tunneling has been constructed. In 1901 a small sampling mill was erected on the Jewel group and the ores of these veins and those at the lakes were thoroughly tested by the owners. James L. Hill, of New York city, purchased both the Kimberley and Jewel groups in February, 1903, for $65,000. Besides Easton and Roy, the original locators of the properties, three others, George H. Connor, J. G. Wright and William A. Scott, as equal partners with the locators, received shares of this money, they having furnished the grubstake. Mr. Hill expects to install a ten-stamp mill on the Jewel ledge as soon as roads can be built into the district.

Besides these properties several other excellent prospects have been opened, all of which promise well. Most of them lie on Bear creek and the high ridges on each side, and as before stated, the veins run at right angles to the canyons of these creeks. Generally speaking the veins dip about eighty degrees. They carry sulphides of iron, galena, zinc and gold, and from forty per cent. to eighty per cent. of the values may be secured by milling. The remaining concentrates are rich, but will require smelting.

Other slightly developed claims of the district are the Mineral King and Richmond, owned by Rufus A. Hendricks, which lie three-quarters of a mile south of the Jewel group and on which a two foot vein has been opened, and the Crescus, owned by J. W. Turnbull, which lies a little farther up the creek and has an eighteen inch vein. The western slope of Bear creek canyon is known as Treasure Hill and the most prominent property in this locality is the Treasure Hill group, owned by Turnbull, Penny and O'Kane, of Grangeville. This vein is fully three feet wide and assays close to a hundred dollars. The owners are now busily engaged in further developing their property. There are numerous other properties in the district, most of them but little developed as yet.

Inasmuch as the Thunder Mountain mining district is not yet out of the "boom" period it is difficult to get accurate information concerning it. No geological reports upon it are as yet available and many of the newspapers notices of the country fail to elicit confidence in their authenticity from the fact that their representations—though they may be true—seem not conservative enough for full credence. At this season of the year it is impossible to visit the district in person, but from the accounts of reliable mining men, we are convinced that it is one of great merit and must win a place among the leading mineral producing regions of the United States. It is situated in southeastern Idaho county, and consists of a territory said to be about forty miles in length by thirty-five in width and embraced within the following boundaries, namely, the Middle Fork of the Salmon river on the east; the Big creek, Elk creek divide on the west, the Big creek-Salmon river divide on the north and a certain broken line running through a yellow pine basin on the south. Heavy bull pine, black pine and red fir forests cover most of the region. The western side is quite open, but from Marble creek to the Middle Fork heavy forests obtain, increasing in density as one proceeds east. High, bald hills, timber covered peaks, and box canyons characterize the country, which, in general, is of a very rugged topography. The Middle Fork for some distance traverses a deep gorge, marked "Impassable Canyon" on Rand, McNally & Company's map. Little is known of its character, although it is possible to get down to the water's edge in places from either side, the difficulty being that the passes on the east and west do not meet each other. It is stated that a number have lost their lives in attempting to go through the canyon in floating craft.

In the Thunder Mountain region the highest mountains are clothed perennially on their north sides with snow. The district is named from Thunder mountain, the high timbered divide separating the waters of Marble from those of Monumental creek. It is about thirty-five miles long and the summit of its upper plateau is covered with a dense forest. It has been so-called because of meteorological conditions observed there. Prospectors tell us that in thunder storms, the heavy detonations are echoed and re-echoed until the effect is terrific, causing the earth to tremble under one's feet as if disturbed by seismic forces.

Those going into the district must approach by one of the three principal routes, first, the Boise trail, entering Idaho county through Bear valley, crossing the divide to Monumental creek and thence to Roosevelt; second, the Warren trail, leading from Warren eastward to Shaver's ranch, thence across the South Fork, thence up the river to the mouth of Elk creek, thence up that stream to the summit, thence via Smith, Big and Monumental creeks to Roosevelt, total distance from Warren, eighty miles; third, the trail from Salmon City, which crosses the Middle Fork eight miles above the ranch of Newton Hibbs, thence over the divide westward to Marble creek, up that fifteen miles to Marble City, thence due west over the divide to Roosevelt; total distance from Salmon City, one hundred and twenty miles.

Writers upon the Thunder Mountain mining district have almost universally avoided a discussion of its geology, stating that it is too complex to be described except after exhaustive and careful research. It is known, however, that basalt and granite abound. The formation was not such as to lead prospectors to expect mineral in paying quantities and for this reason the region was long neglected. It is stated that the ores appear to have been scorched, showing the effect of volcanic action.

"In Thunder Mountain," wrote E. M. Reed in the Spokesman Review, "the formation is volcanic and the predominating rock is ryolite of a light color. The dyke or reef on which the Dewey and other claims have been located has been compared with the wonderful Rand reef in the Transvaal and is strongly suggestive of Colorado. The ryolite reef is well marked on either side by walls of birdseye porphyry and an occasional cropping of barrolt. The reef extends northeast and southwest and the gold pan test will show color anywhere, while sample pans have produced as high as ten dollars. Five hundred dollars have been taken out in four days with one of the old fashioned rockers, but the average yield is very much less."

In an article published by the Boise Statesman, Zenas N. Vaughn, C. E., had this to say about the Thunder Mountain country:

"First I will say a word about the geology. Were I disposed to verify the adage that 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread' I might enter into a lengthy scientific discussion of this phase of the subject. I shall be brief but I hope to dispel one illusion. Thunder Mountain is not all porphyry. It has a goodly sprinkling of it, to be sure, but there is room there for almost everything and almost everything is there.

"I entered the district from the Sea Foam side. Up to a certain point everything had been granite. The Sea Foam country is granite, though it has immense upheavels of eruptive rock. A short distance north of the Middle Fork of Salmon river the granite is replaced by porphyry formations. Notwithstanding this, within ten miles of the Dewey mine there are large areas of granite which carry huge ledges of quartz. This is pre-eminently true of the rock along the southwest fork of the Monumental. In some places the formations are very complicated. There are areas of granite, bird's-eye porphyry, quartz porphyry, quartzite, diorite, phonolite, and serpentine mixed up in bewildering confusion. Perhaps the most common rock in Thunder Mountain is a sort of phonolite that splits up into characteristic slabs.

Close to Roosevelt the structures are either porphyry, phonolite or some allied eruptive rock. Ten miles to the northward the geology changes and the country is granite, quartzite, serpentine or quartz-porphyry. To the southward of Indian creek the porphyry is replaced by a very beautiful white granite, or in some places gneiss, which holds its own for many miles. To the eastward, as above explained, the eruptions extend well nigh to the Middle Fork of the Salmon.

"Dangerous as it to do so, it is difficult to refrain from theorizing on the above conditions. There is reason to believe, however, that Thunder Mountain and the contiguous mountains are an intrusion of volcanic rocks into an area of prehistoric granite. Beyond this it is not safe to draw conclusions.

"The mineralization of this district is peculiar. The ores, though so widely different in appearance may be grouped under two general heads. The first one is the most puzzling and the one which has awakened such widespread interest in the district. It is generally called a porphyry or a talc in some places. While there undoubtedly are talcose deposits, these ores do not generally seem, at least to the writer, to be either porphyry or talc, but a sort of pulverized quartz, which has been cemented into a coherent mass by infiltration of waters holding in solution oxide of iron and carbonates of lime, magnesia, etc. These ores vary in color from snow white to yellowish, brownish and bluish.

"The second class is quartz, occurring in regular ledges, generally carrying an abundance of iron, also carbonate of lime and magnesia, with flarite and other minerals. Pyrites of iron and copper, with carbonate and silicate of the latter metal, are very common. Generally speaking, the quartz ores are more likely to be base and the conglomerate ores free, though there are many exceptions on both sides to this rule. Some of the richest among the conglomerate ores show no colors in panning.

"Probably one of the most unique discoveries made in Thunder mountain is a nickel ledge, carrying $2,000 values of nickel, copper and gold, controlled by Mr. Stonebreaker. This is some distance below Taylor's cabin and at the side of the Monumental creek trail."

The Thunder Mountain country is usually considered as made up of two districts, the eastern and the western. The latter, embracing Big, Smith and Profile creeks, produces gold, silver, copper and lead. On the northern portion of the basin of Big creek, silver is the principal metal, while on Logan creek, a tributary of the stream just mentioned, silver predominates. On Profile creek lead is found in large quantities. Gold is quite widely distributed over the entire district. The values in the eastern district, embracing Monumental, Marble and Indian creeks, are found in a porphyritic quartz, covered with a basalt capping, and consist of free gold entirely. It is here that the principal developments have been made. The oldest group of claims in the district is the Dewey, discovered by William, Louis and Daniel Caswell in the early 'nineties, and worked constantly since. The Caswells were in the habit of sluicing the decomposed porphyry, then allowing the solider formation beneath to weather until the following summer, when it would be found to have decomposed to a considerable depth and to be ready for sluicing. Their property was bonded to Colonel E. H. Dewey in August, 1901, for a reputed sum of $100,000. It is worked at present by a ten-stamp mill. The entire property consists of fourteen claims, the Gold Reef, Goldie, Coal Pit Fraction, Gravel Point, Dollar, Poorman's Treasure, Fraction, Golden Treasure, Gold Bug, Golden Wedge, Equinox, Gold Bug, Wonderful and Buffalo. Most of the development work is done on the Poorman's Treasure, but as no person, other than employees or owners, is allowed in the mine, the extent of the workings and the size of the vein are not known. It is stated that the company expects to install and begin operating one hundred stamps in the near future.

Another noted mine of the district is the Sunnyside, purchased from the Caswell brothers for a reputed sum of $125,000. It is said that this price was paid for the property before it had been developed any to speak of and while it was still a prospect. It is located on the Marble creek slope east of Dewey. It belongs to the Belle Thunder Mountain Company, who last summer utilized the labor of some fifteen or twenty men in its development. The excavations are said to aggregate about 1,400 feet.

A third property of note in the Thunder Mountain district is the Fairview group on Monumental creek near Roosevelt, owned by the Gold Ridge Mining Company, a Pittsburg concern. It is developed by two tunnels. The ledge formation is similar to that of most of the ledges of the district,—porphyritic quartz. Values are said to average high, and we are informed that assays of $100 per ton are not uncommon.

The Tiger group on Marble creek was sold last year for a reputed sum of $200,000. It is only partially developed at present, but is a promising property. The same is true of the Rainbow group west of Roosevelt and the Grangeville, which joins the Sunnyside on the north and which was located in 1901 by W. H. V. Rickards and Albert Tuttle.

Considerable development work in the western district has been done on what is known as the Werdenhoff group on Smith creek, about six miles from its mouth. The ledge, which is about sixteen feet wide, consists of free milling quartz averaging $16 in gold per ton. It is developed by about 400 feet of tunneling and shafts. It is said to have been sold recently to a Colorado syndicate for $280,000. The Crown property, owned by the same company, is located on Big creek between Logan and Smith creeks. The ledge is said to be sixty feet wide and to consist of low grade, free milling ore.

The Hogback owned by A. A. Lydon, B. F. Goldman, I. C. Hattabaugh, Frank Gardner and other Grangeville parties, is also on Big creek. It carried gold, silver, copper and lead, but its values cannot be secured without smelting. The vein is twelve feet wide and averages $14.80 per ton in assay values, though numerous kidneys have been found assaying from $70 to $380.

Besides the above there are numerous other properties in course of development in both the eastern and western districts and it is claimed by conservative mining men that the showings in most of them are such as to encourage the belief that the camp has a brilliant future before it. It has been overadvertised, no doubt. Stampedes into the country at the wrong season of the year have been precipitated with the natural result that disappointed gold hunters have started a reactionary movement. Booms and their reactions are seemingly necessary incidents in the development of new mining camps. Both are temporary in their effects. Both will soon be of the past in Thunder Mountain and the camp will settle down to a steady development of its resources. That these are numerous and extensive there can be little doubt, and the man who describes the Idaho county of a decade hence will surely have occasion to speak of not a few producers in this isolated region.

The bars of Salmon river have been a source of revenue to the placer miner since the earliest days. They have probably never yielded immensely large returns for labor, but have furnished a grub stake to many a stranded prospector, a good living to miners whose ambitions were not too extravagant and a few dollars of ready money to the farmer and stockman in the vicinity. Most of the lower bars have been worked. To secure the gold in the higher ones and the old bed of the river now far upon the mountain side is a problem engaging the attention of not a few, but its satisfactory solution has not yet been found. Quite a number of individuals and companies are still at work on the Salmon river placer grounds at least part of the year. One company is putting in a dredge to wash the gravels of Doumecq bar. Robie & Smith are operating on Mrs. Robie's farm. A company composed in part of Spokane mining men is doing some work on the famous Horse Shoe bars and is preparing to install a plant for the more satisfactory handling of its auriferous gravels; the Slate Creek Mining Company, operating near Samuel Large's place, has a ditch out of Slate creek seven miles long, with a capacity, it is claimed, of 1,600 inches. The Victor Mining Company, in which Senator Wilson, of Spokane, is interested, operates a claim between Slate creek and John Day; P. E. Sherwin has a property above John Day creek. The claims of the Consolidated Hydraulic Mining Company are also above the mouth of that stream, while above the mouth of Little Salmon there is but one hydraulic mine, that of William Short. Several placer miners, besides those mentioned, are operating in a small way at different points on the stream.

In the immediate vicinity of Salmon river are some very promising copper properties. Four and a half miles northwest of White Bird are the claims of the Idaho Mining & Smelting Company, principal among which are the Indiana, Mineral Point, the Missouri, the Michigan, the Last Chance, the Idaho, the Pocohontas and the Copper King. The Indiana has been developed by a tunnel 248 feet long cutting almost squarely across the vein and by a tunnel twenty-two feet long following a stringer. Superintendent Fred A. Davis, from whom these data were obtained, informs us that all indications point toward the existence of an immense body of ore of average grade, with numerous high grade shoots and stringers. The values are in copper and gold, and the absence of zinc is an encouraging circumstances. Reduction works and machinery including an air compressor, are in contemplation.

Another important property of the district is the Rainbow group, six miles northwest of White Bird. It consists of the following claims: Rainbow, Dominion, Blue Front, Lone Star and Eddy. Its owners are S. A. Wilson, J. W. Reid and Ed. Fehan. These gentlemen have expended most of their efforts on the Rainbow, doing only assessment work on the other claims. This lead is sixty feet wide. An assay of a picked specimen from it gave fifty per cent. copper, $34 per ton gold and 14 ounces of silver, and it is said that even richer specimens might be obtained. The superintendent of this mine stated to the writer his belief that a fair average assay would give seven per cent. copper.

A district of the Salmon river country, whose importance has long been known, but which has necessarily been neglected on account of its isolation, is the Rapid river region. This stream empties into the Little Salmon six miles above the mouth of the latter stream.

Its bed is in the bottom of a high box canyon, which in one place widens out to form Alliance basin, a bunchgrass valley two and a half miles long by a mile wide, whose only inhabitant, we have been told, is H. F. Johnson, the "Seven Devils poet." Near the mouth of the west fork of Rapid river, and eight miles from the mouth of the main stream, are located the Rapid River mines. It is said that there are a number of good properties here, but only two are being worked, the George Hardwick claim, to develop which a tunnel 600 feet long has been constructed, and the claim of the Irwin Brothers, who have 300 feet of tunneling. Both are copper and gold bearing properties.

Near the head of the east fork of Rapid river is the Black Lake district, in which are a considerable number of claims, but the country is without roads, hence there is little encouragement to claim owners to make extensive developments. Notwithstanding drawbacks, however, Edward Ford & Company have been at work for four years, developing their property and blocking out an immense body of ore. Last summer they installed a steam mill. In the short time it was operated they realized very encouraging returns in gold bullion. The Iron Springs Mining Company are also active in pushing development work, and, it is stated, intend building a mill on their property this summer. The two companies are contemplating the construction, by their united efforts, of a road down Rapid river to the state wagon road.

Coming to the Clearwater mines we shall give first place to Elk City, an ancient camp, the earliest history of which has already found a place in these pages. During the four decades since its first discovery it has been a gold producer almost uninterruptedly, though at times its product dwindled to insignificance. After the palmy placer mining days, the district passed into the hands of the Chinese. A revival of interest in it took place during the middle 'eighties, when some quartz claims were taken and since that time white men have given considerable attention to its wealth of placer gold also. The first placer mining by improved modern methods was begun about 1889 by C. D. Gavin, of Chicago. In 1891, the initial attempt at dredging was made, the machinery for the plant being packed in on the backs of mules. The dredge was utilized for a time in working the banks and bed of Red river, but it proved too light for its purpose and its use had to be discontinued. In 1899, Butters Bros., of Michigan, built another dredge, the use of which, after a couple of seasons' trial, has also been abandoned. The only placer mines in operation in the spring of 1903 were the Gold Hill claims, owned by Cook Brothers & Brownell, who were operating a No. 2 giant. However, it was expected that R. D. Leggat, of Butte, Montana, would operate during the summer his Buffalo Hill claim, upon which is a large hydraulic plant, and that work would also be done on the Little Elk placers by H. Rittenhouse; on the Ternan hill, by Henry Ternan; on the Deadwood gulch claims by James Witt, and on a number of other good properties. No doubt much placer gold is yet to be garnered in this famous old camp.

Quartz mining in Elk district dates back to 1884, when S. W. Smith and H. E. McKinney located what was known as the Buster group of claims. Since that many quartz veins have been located and developed to a considerable extent. The American Eagle group near the head waters of Ziegle creek, owned by the American Eagle Consolidated Mining Company, Limited, consists of eight claims. The vein is twelve feet wide with a paystreak varying in width from two and one-half to ten feet, and carrying values of from $5 to $312 a ton. Its direction is northeast and southwest, dip vertical. It has been developed by 1,100 feet of tunneling on two different levels, a one hundred-foot shaft and 2,500 feet of drifting along the vein. The equipment of the mine consists of a ten-stamp mill, two concentrators, a Blake crusher, and a tramway 3,500 feet long. It was said in April to have produced since January 1, 1903, $27,500, and fifteen tons of concentrates assaying $105 a ton. A cyanide plane is to be installed in the near future. The Fish Hawk group, owned by the same company, consisting of nine claims adjoining the American Eagle, is now in process of development.

The Hogan group of claims, situated on Crooked river, twelve and a half miles from Elk City, gives promise of becoming the finest property in the district and one of the finest in the entire northwest. It consists of about fifty claims located on the wooded hills on either side of the river, and is owned by the Crooked River Mining & Milling Company. The ore is described as pyrites of iron in quartz and porphyry with granite contact and is said to assay from $5 to $50. The property has been quite extensively developed by tunnels, shafts and chutes, and is equipped with a twenty stamp, water power mill, the water for which is brought from Crooked river by a ditch a mile long. A dynamo, operated by this water power, furnishes electric lighting for the entire plant. Disinterested mining men have spoken very highly of the probable future of this property.

The Boyer and Republic groups have stamp mills, but are being operated at present only on a small scale. Other claims in course of development and making encouraging showings are: the Laurel and West Laurel, situated on Laurel hill at the head of French gulch, sulphide ores with pockets of free crystallized gold assaying $16 to $18, ledge six to nine feet wide, developed by a 27-foot shaft, 250 feet of tunneling and 40 feet of drift; the Blue Ribbon group, on a hillside between Red Horse creek and Ziegle creek, owned by Brown, Cook, Brownell and Poyneer, sulphide ores, assaying $12, developed by 520 feet of tunnels, a 60-foot shaft and several cross cuts; the Pacific group, owned by L. Blomberg; the Champion group, owned by S. McGibbons, and recently placed under control of the Thunder Mountain Gold Company, of Philadelphia; the Occidental group, owned by Chesbro & Baner; the Lily May, by J. A. Coverly; the Buster, by S. W. Smith; the Cleveland, by Smith, Parker and others; the Grangeville, by J. W. Reed, Joe Schoener, Henry Wax and James Edwards, and other properties. Conservative mining men consider the Elk City district as a whole as one of the most promising of the old Idaho county camps.

Following a road leading in an easterly direction from Elk City across American river and Red Horse creek, thence southerly, one arrives, after a journey of twenty-six miles, in the ancient mining district of Dixie. The first mineral discoveries were made here in the early 'sixties, but only a small amount of placer mining was done and by primitive methods. When Samuel Dillinger arrived in 1865, he found only three men at work. But like many of the old placer camps there has been a revival of interest in the district in later years. It is, nevertheless, a quiet place at present and has been since the closing down of the Comstock mine, though many good quartz properties are being slowly developed.

One of the earliest-placer camps, the Dixie district is still a producer of gold dust. The Olive Gulch placers, owned by a man named Hasslett, are a good paying property. The Crooked Creek placers, owned by P. S. Prichard and George Blaine, consist of 153 acres of patented ground along the stream. They are being operated by a No. 2 giant, with water from a ditch three and a half miles long, conveyed to the giant by 1,600 feet of pipe.

Among the quartz claims of the district, the Ajax, the McKinley and Roosevelt and the Comstock are perhaps the best known. The first mentioned was purchased by Finch & Campbell about two years ago from James Turner, who had been developing it during the preceding six years. It is located about half a mile northwest of the town of Dixie. Finch & Campbell built a ten-stamp mill on it and operated the mine for six or seven months. The results were not satisfactory, so they sold their mill to the American Eagle Company, of Elk City district, and abandoned the property.

It is understood that the Comstock mine is to be reopened this summer and the ore from it reduced in a four-stamp water power mill, now in contemplation. The property is situated on Rhett creek, four miles southwest of Dixie, and is owned by the Poole Brothers.

The McKinley and Roosevelt, owned by Sam Dillinger, is likewise situated on Rhett creek. The ore is galena, assaying about $18. The developments consist of two hundred feet of tunneling, striking the ledge at a depth of fifty feet, also considerable drift work along the vein.

To the northwest of Elk City, on the road leading from that point to Camas prairie, is the Newsome mining district, another ancient camp, the discovery of which dates back to the 'sixties. Rich placers have been worked there since by white men and Chinese, but always on a small scale. At the present time, the Newsome-Leggat Hydraulic Mining Company, Limited, is operating the Leggat High Bar placers, situated on the divide between Newsome and Leggat creeks at an elevation of 700 feet above the latter. The company owns three and a half miles of ditch and flume and intends to utilize two No. 2 giants during the present season. Besides the property mentioned, which includes 1,600 acres of ground, this company owns the ground and bed of Newsome creek from its confluence with the Clearwater to a point within a mile of Newsome station. G. W. Thompson, of Lewiston, is president of the firm and James Surridge, of Harpster, vice president. The Buckeye placers, below Newsome station, are being worked under the management of C. P. Richardson.

Twelve miles up the south fork of the Clearwater from Stites is an unorganized mining camp, popularly known as the Dewey district. It lies on the survey for an up river extension of the railroad, but even with the road no nearer than Stites, it is easily accessible, being only about eight miles from Grangeville. Its warm climate incident to its slight elevation gives it an incalculable advantage over most of the other mining districts of the county.

The mining claims of the belt are in a porphyry dyke ranging in width from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, with a strike of north fifteen degrees east. The east wall of the dyke is granite and lime and the west wall granite and clackite. Through this dyke run six or more ledges ranging in width from 15 feet to 35 feet, and of these five are being extensively developed. They carry values above water level of $4 to $10 in gold and below water level where the quartz is replaced by sulphide, the values are in gold and copper and increase perceptibly.

Years ago, claims in this district were taken and abandoned, among them the Evergreen, but it was not until 1898 that the development of the mines began in earnest. During that year the Admiral Dewey and St. Patrick mines were located by J. L. Bishop and others. In August, 1898, Matthew Jacobs, Otto Abling, J. J. Marasack and A. A. Kincaid purchased the property and began developing it by sinking a shaft and running tunnels. In the spring of 1899 the mine passed into the hands of the Dewey Consolidated Mining and Milling Company, which has pushed development work with considerable vigor, shipping, so report has it, $35,000 worth of ore from small space. It is also said that arrangements have been made for the disbursement of $100,000 during the current summer in pushing development.

The Evergreen Eureka Gold Mining Company is the owner of three claims, the Evergreen, the Eureka and the General Arthur, situated west and north of the Dewey group. These claims were likewise discovered in 1898, the fortunate prospectors being Joseph Pfeufer, John L. Bishop and Nelson Clauser. These gentlemen did some work on the property, then sold to A. A. Kincaid, C. G. Betts, George F. McKinney and S. W. Cope, who held it until September, when the present company was organized. This mine has a greater depth than any other in the county and is the most extensively developed, the tunnels, drifts, etc. aggregating five thousand feet. Its shipments of ore have been relatively small and confined to the high grade product, owing to the fact that at present the ore has to be transported three miles up a mountain side on horses, then hauled in wagons to the railroad. Several car loads, however, have been transported to Stites in this manner and shipped.

Adjoining the Evergreen group on the north are the claims of the Mount Idaho Gold Mining Company, Limited, consisting of the St. John, the Pride of the Clearwater, the Clearwater, the Leroi and the River Wedge. They were located about the same time as the two groups last described, by R. L. Smith, Joseph Baker and others. Recently it has passed into the hands of the Mount Idaho Gold Mining Company, just mentioned, which is pushing developments with four shifts of men. Several hundred feet of tunnels have been already constructed. While the mine has done no shipping, it is claimed that the showings are excellent. Besides those mentioned, several other properties are being developed in the district, among them the Atlanta group.

Near the confluence of the south and Lolo forks of the Clearwater is what is known as the Lolo or Pardee mining district. The mines in this vicinity were discovered some four years ago, William Price, Judge Stearns and the Lafferty brothers being the pioneers of the region. The presence of mineral in the locality had long been suspected and the showings exposed by workmen in constructing a road bed for the Clearwater Short Line confirmed the suspicion and led to the prospecting which eventuated in the discoveries. The ore is base in character, carrying more copper than any other metal. Considerable development work has been in progress during the past three years, especially in 1902, and it is thought that this year some ore will be shipped to smelters.

The property of the Pittsburg-Idaho Mining and Smelting Company, situated half a mile above the town of Pardee, has been most extensively developed. Fully $10,000 has been expended in opening the group and at present a tunnel is being driven to tap the main ore body. It is now 250 feet long.

Farther down the river, the Pardee Company is engaged in opening its property, the Idaho-Empire group, which is said to give promise of great things to be garnered in the future. Jack & Macbeth are also opening a group between the Pardee and the Pittsburg-Idaho properties.

Some very good placer dirt has been found and worked on the Clearwater river in the vicinity of the present Dewey camp, and at the Wilmot and Johns places. Claims are held at present by Herman and Albert Brown and by a company of which a man named Fisher is the leading spirit, but though these and other claims promise well, placer mining on the Clearwater is not being pushed with great enthusiasm at present.

Not far from the summit of the divide between the Salmon and Clearwater basins is one of the most famous, though one of the youngest, mining districts of the county and the Northwest. The story of its discovery has been told on other pages. After giving an account of the Buffalo Hump discovery substantially as it occurs in a former chapter of this work, the Idaho Free Press, continuing says:

"A hundred locations were speedily staked and work commenced. With every foot of development on the Big Buffalo the ledge got stronger and richer. On the 24th of August a district was organized; a band of determined prospectors met on the south shore of Buffalo lake; there had been some jumping of claims, and many matters of interest were up for discussion—these men who were gathered around the camp fire that August night were makers of history. It reminded one of the old councils during the French and Indian wars, when matters of deep importance were discussed around a camp fire under the old council trees.

"R. F. Carney was elected chairman and J. C. Moore secretary. Charles H. Scott was elected recorder and the district named Robbins mining district in honor of Charlie Robbins, the discoverer. The limits of the camp were defined as follows: Commencing at the confluence of Newsome creek and the South Fork of the Clearwater river; thence southerly to Fish lake; thence down Lake creek, the outlet of Fish lake, to its confluence with Crooked creek, thence down Crooked creek to its junction with the Salmon river; thence westerly down the Salmon river to the mouth of Meadow creek; thence up Meadow creek to Wind river; thence up Wind river to head of the East fork; thence northerly to head of John's creek; thence down John's creek to South Fork of Clearwater river; thence easterly up said river to the mouth of Newsome creek, the place of begining."

The country rock, according to experts, is gneiss, a species of granite, one of the oldest and best known formations for mineral bearing veins. The principal vein of the district is a fissure running in a northerly and southerly course, having a width of from twenty to forty feet. The vein filling is a hard, white, brittle quartz, carrying about one and one-half per cent. of pyrites of iron, one per cent. of lead, one half per cent. of antimony, one half per cent. manganese and a trace of copper besides the precious metals.

"Samples taken from the surface croppings and the open cuts over the entire length and width of the ore body give the following results: The croppings, $12 in gold and one ounce of silver, the cuts, the thirty feet across the Big Buffalo averages one ounce in gold, one and a quarter ounces in silver, about $21.50 per ton. Cut No. 2, ten feet in depth on the Merrimac, averages four-fifths of an ounce of gold and one ounce silver, in values about $17 for the entire forty feet in width."

"During the past ten years," says the expert above quoted, who was writing in 1899, "I have visited nearly all of the mining camps of prominence west of the Rockies, as well as those throughout Montana and Dakota, and I have never seen anywhere a surface showing equalling the showing made on the Big Buffalo and Merrimac claims.* * * Nearly all mining engineers who have visited this district are of the same opinion, that this is one of the greatest discoveries of the age. The streams heading at this Buffalo Hump district and flowing into the Salmon and Clearwater rivers were placer mined in the early 'sixties and one express company—Wells, Fargo & Company—alone handled over $40,000,000 that was produced out of the placer mines within a radius of twenty miles from this Eldorado. Competent and able mining engineers are of the opinion that this placer gold came from the ledges traversing the Buffalo Hump region."

The Big Buffalo was sold to the Buffalo Hump syndicate less than a year after its discovery. It has been developed by a two hundred foot shaft and 1,000 feet of drifting. The vein is said to be fifty or sixty feet wide and to carry $11 a ton values of gold and silver. It is stated that the ore shipments to date have returned in the vicinity of $200,000.

The Jumbo has the most work done on it of all mines in the camp. Tunnel No. 1 is 141 feet long; No. 2, 540 feet; No. 3, 860 feet, and there are 600 feet of cross cuts. The vein averages eight feet in width on the upper level and 12 on the lower. A four-stamp mill is already installed on the property and a twenty-four stamp mill is in course of erection, all the machinery being on the ground. It is said that over $80,000 worth of ore were worked in the four-stamp mill, inside of twenty months.

The Cracker Jack is located on a ledge eight to fourteen feet wide, carrying $10 to $30 in gold and silver. Over 1,000 feet of excavations have been made in the development of this property. The equipment consists of a fine stamp mill, producing from $3,000 to $6,000 a month, soon to be enlarged by the addition of ten stamps. The company is also arranging to install a complete electric light plant. Past shipments of bullion are claimed to aggregate between forty and fifty thousand dollars.

On the Atlas mine, six or seven hundred feet of development work have been done, all on the ore vein, which is six or seven feet wide, and carries values varying from $15 to $20. It is expected that a ten-stamp mill will be installed this year. No shipments have been made from this mine as yet, but the showing is excellent.

The Wise Boy has been developed by between a thousand and fifteen hundred feet of excavation. Its vein varies in width from 5 to 12 feet and carries good values. The product of the mine is being handled in a ten-stamp mill.

Developments on the Mother Lode No. 2, belonging to the Concord Company, expose a vein varying in width from 18 to 20 feet. The St. Louis, in the same group, has had over six hundred feet of development work done on it, and arrangements have been made to develop it much more extensively during the current summer. Its ore body is five to eight feet wide.

Besides the properties mentioned above there are hundreds of prospects in the district, many of which give good surface indications. It is said that the leads all run due north and south and all dip to the east except the Big Buffalo, which dips west. No loss in value with depth has been experienced and no faults or breaks in the veins have so far been found. The camp certainly promises well, and there are conservative mining men who expect it to prove a permanent and extensive producer.

The foregoing account of the mines of Idaho county is not claimed to be exhaustive and its preparation was undertaken under circumstances rendering absolute accuracy an impossibility, but care has been taken not to overstate and overestimate. Though mining in this part of the state is old, it is yet young. Few mines have been thoroughly developed, but the wide distribution of precious and base metals, the fact that placer gold was found so abundant and so diffused in early days, and the showings which have been brought to light by the relatively meagre developments wrought under great difficulties are an abundant warrant for the faith of the people in the future of the mining industry in central Idaho.

No more than a general discussion of the stock raising, agricultural and lumbering industries of Idaho county is possible from the fact that official figures or reliable data of any kind are not to be had. The great Camas prairie, the largest body of agricultural land in the state, is capable of producing any cereal crop in great abundance as has been fully proven by experiment. A yield of sixty bushels per acre of wheat is not an uncommon thing, and oats and barley do proportionately well. It is claimed that as a wheat section the prairie is not inferior to the famous Palouse country of Washington, while it has a decided advantage over that noted belt in that it produces large crops of timothy hay. But wheat raising as an industry in itself has never obtained in Idaho county, owing to the absence of railroad facilities. The wheat and other cereal products are consumed largely in the fattening of cattle and hogs. Flax, which requires a rich black soil, is becoming an important source of revenue to Idaho county farmers, who frequently secure yields of twenty bushels to the acre.

Besides timothy, blue grass and clovers are found to flourish in all the farming areas, except the more elevated mountain valleys. The fact that these grasses can be so easily produced, as well as cereal crops for fattening, has encouraged and will continue to encourage the rearing of live stock.

Fruit raising on an extensive scale does not obtain in the county for the reason that there is no market for the product other than the local one. It is claimed that all the hardier fruits are a success on Camas prairie but there are few large orchards there, most of the agriculturists raising only enough fruit for family consumption. In the sheltered valleys of the Clearwater and Salmon rivers, which enjoy a warmer climate than the table lands above, owing to their comparatively slight elevation, the more tender varieties, such as peaches and apricots, are reared with great success. While the limited area of these favored sections renders large individual orchards an impossibility, yet the aggregate acreage devoted to fruit is very considerable. As the country becomes more fully settled and developed and transportation facilities of a modern type become a realized fact, the tendency must be in the direction of increasing the orchard area in these favored river bottoms. The day is doubtless not so very far distant when the valleys of the Clearwater and Salmon rivers will be orchards and gardens from end to end.

Stock raising is still the master industry of Idaho county. It is the natural business of an isolated region, especially one of an essentially mountainous character. Central Idaho is almost ideal for the stockman. The grass clad and wooded uplands furnish an abundance of summer range; the warm, sheltered river bottoms supply a safe retreat for cattle and horses during the winter months, so that feeding at any season of the year is only necessary to a limited extent. All the hardier cattle are usually compelled to subsist themselves entirely upon nature's gratuities, and under ordinary conditions the loss is not greater than two or three per cent. While the conditions for cattle raising are excellent, they are not such as to permit the business to assume enormous proportions and individual holdings of more than five or six hundred head are not common. No statistics are at hand giving the aggregate number of cattle in the county. Perhaps, however, some idea may be obtained from the assessment roll, which places the number of common stock at 14,447 head, and of milch cows at 1,503 head. That these figures are far below the actual, no one with a knowledge of the weakness of human nature will deny; but how far, who can tell?

The authority just quoted gives the number of saddle horses in the county as 1,385 head, of work horses, 3,664; of stock horses, 3,077 and of stallions, 8. That sheep raising is not neglected appears from the fact that 18,161 head were assessed in 1902. Hog raising is an important industry and the recent jump in the price of pork placed many a farmer of Idaho county on an excellent financial footing. The number of swine assessed in 1902 was 8,110 head.

Naturally in a partially developed and somewhat isolated country we expect manufacturing to be neglected. The possibilities of Idaho county in this direction are great, but they have scarcely begun to be developed. Only four grist mills are being operated, according to the assessment roll, in a country where several million bushels of wheat per annum might be raised. The establishment of the Bitter Root forest reserve must of necessity exert a deterrent influence in the development of the lumbering industry, but its possibilities of production despite the handicap are certainly far from being realized. The assessed saw mills of the county number 29; the planing mills, 8; and the shingle mills. 3.

The character of the people who have discovered the mineral wealth of the country and wrought its development thus far is about what we might look for in a pioneer community whose habitat is a wild, rugged mountain region. They are an active, independent class, resourceful in overcoming difficulties, congenial and approachable, yet able to dispense with society for months, when their business interests demand a temporary withdrawal into regions far beyond civilization's outposts. The average of intelligence and knowledge of general current events is not lower than that of many more favored communities. A stranger is likely to notice with admiration the skilful horsemanship of both men and women and the fearlessness with which they ride over the winding trails of the steep hill sides and on the very edges of precipices.

No distaste for culture or disposition to disregard the amenities of life is observable among this people. In the large comunities, churches of all the leading denominations are to be found, and they are at least reasonably well attended and sustained. The fraternal societies are represented wherever there are sufficiently large communities to render their maintenance possible and the fraternal spirit is as marked as in other western communities. The pioneers of the county brought with them from their former homes a love of the school house on the hill top, and the advantages it affords the rising generation. Unfortunately the earliest reports on the public schools are not obtainable, so that the gradual development of the system cannot be traced. Even the later reports, those for the year 1893 and succeeding years, are not complete, but they show in general a tendency in the direction of progress. The average length of the school term has increased from four and three-tenths to five months, though unfortunately the number of third grade teachers is greater in proportion to the whole number than it was in 1893. The showing in this respect is not discouraging, however, for of the 28 teachers of the county in 1902, two were holders of first grade certificates and 19 of second grade. The number of organized districts in 1900 was 54, four of which maintained graded schools. The number of school houses then owned by the districts was 42. Eight districts rented buildings. During the past four years, institutes have convened annually. While there are no colleges or institutions of higher learning within the boundaries of Idaho county, the youth of that section is not deprived of opportunity to obtain higher culture in their own immediate neighborhood as the state university at Moscow and the state normal school at Lewiston are both within easy reach.

It will be seen from the foregoing sketch, imperfect though it may be, that the largest county in superficial area in the state of Idaho is not the least in importance or in possibilities of development. The county is teeming with unappropriated treasure. It holds a wealth of mineral in its mountains, the extent of which is probably but dimly suspected by the general public, notwithstanding the interest which has centered in Thunder Mountain, Buffalo Hump and other mining districts during the last few years. The agricultural possibilities of its great prairie and valleys are as little appreciated, while its wealth of water power, now unharnessed, who can estimate? Its enterprising inhabitants are ready to welcome to their assistance the laborer, the homeseeker, the capitalist—any who is able and willing to help in the upbuilding and development of the country,—and they do so with the greater earnestness since they are fully assured that nowhere in the great west—the home of opportunity—is the intelligent sower more certain to reap an abundant harvest.

HENRY J. ELFERS.

MRS. CATHERINE M. ELFERS CLEARY.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

IDAHO COUNTY

HENRY J. ELFERS, deceased. It is very fitting to grant space in the history of Idaho county for a memorial of Henry J. Elfers. He was one of the earliest pioneers, a man of ability and courage, a loyal and patriotic citizen, a true friend and a devoted and loving husband. His untimely end at the hands of murderous Indians is one of the dark spots in the history of our county. Especial mention has been given of the matter in another portion of this work but in connection with a brief epitome of Mr. Elfers's life we shall revert to it again.

Henry J. Elfers was born in Hanover, Germany, on February 2, 1834, being the son of Burn and Adelaide (Bishop) Elfers, natives also of the fatherland. Henry J. received good training in the old country and came to California in 1849, where he mined for a number of years. In 1862 he was drawn by the gold excitement to the Salmon country and the next year in partnership with Henry Mason and John Wessell he started a ranch on John Day creek. They kept a general supply store, operated a good hotel, conducted a dairy of two hundred cows and ran a pack train into the mines. Susbequently Mr. Mason sold out, but Mr. Wessell continued a partner of Mr. Elfers until the former's death in 1872. In 1870 Mr. Elfers returned to Germany and there wooed and won Miss Catherine M. Beckroge, bringing her back to the United States on the same ship in which he had crossed the seas. At San Francisco they were united in the bonds of matrimony, October 16, 1871. Her father's name was Herman H. and that of her mother, Anna M. Lange. In Germany Mr. Beckroge was a farmer. Mrs. Elfers was born in Germany August 14, 1845, and has one brother John. They came direct to the John Day ranch and Mr. Elfers continued his business there. On the evening of June 13, 1877, three young Indians came to the Elfers ranch, with whom Mr. Elfers and Mr. Bland held a conversation. Later the savages went away and the next morning Mr. Beckroge and Mr. Bland went after the horses and were killed by the Indians who lay in ambush. Two of the murderers came to the house looking for Mr. Elfers, and the other stood on guard. They went into the office and took a gun but Mr. Elfers did not see them. Mrs. Elfers was in the milkhouse just under the bank. Coming from that she saw the Indians standing in the office door and turned and went into the house by the back door. Mr. Elfers, meantime, had started for the field and on his way was murdered by these Indians. A Mr. Whitfield, who had been hunting, discovered the bodies and notified Norman Gould. Victor, a Frenchman, on the Salmon a few hundred yards below, saw the smoke of the guns. His suspicions being aroused, he notified some others and they came to investigate, and Mrs. Elfers was notified of the death of her husband by Barney Mallory. Mr. Elfers had held a long council with the Indians once in reference to Mr. Ott, whom the savages wanted to kill for having killed an Indian. Mr. Rhett and Mr. Elfers would not listen to the killing of Ott and it is supposed that the savages were angry with Mr. Elfers on account of this. Mr. Philip Cleary, a partner of Mr. Elfers in the mines at Florence, came out and conducted the business for three years and then the establishment was rented to E. W. Sherman & Sons. In 1885 Mrs. Elfers and Mr. Philip Cleary were married and on November 19, 1895, Mr. Cleary was called hence by death. Since that time Henry Elfers has taken charge of the business. Mr. Cleary was an active and prominent man in politics and was twice a member of the state legislature. Mr. Elfers was one of the most prominent men of the county. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Elfers, Adelaide L. Lanningham, Henry J., Catherine Gordon, Marie E. Kieling.

Mrs. Cleary is a woman beloved by all who know her. She has ever manifested a charity and true sympathy to all who were in trouble and her kind acts and ways are well known by everybody. She is passing the golden years of her life amid many warm and devoted friends in the enjoyment of a competence that is justly hers.

FRANK M. HAWK is one of the earliest pioneers of this section as also he is one of the pioneers of the coast country, his parents coming here in the days of weary trail journeys, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant to this estimable gentleman a representation in the history of Idaho county.

Frank M. Hawk was born in Richland county, Ohio, on November 24, 1844, being the son of John M. and Matilda (Frampton) Hawk. The father was born in Beaver county, Pennsylvania, in 1818, and died in Olympia, Washington, on January 4, 1883. The mother was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, being of Scotch extraction. Her great-great-uncle, James Wilson, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. She died in Portland in 1852. The grandparents of our subject were also born in Pennsylvania. In 1846 our subject was brought by his parents to Dekalb county, Indiana, where he attended district school six months previous to leaving in 1852 for Olympia, Washington, which trip was made with ox teams and attended with great danger and hardships. Frank was educated in the public schools and in the Wesleyan Institute. When seventeen he came to Pierce and mined until 1865. Thence he went across Lolo pass to Montana, mining in the Blackfoot region for four years. In 1869 he returned to Olympia and opened up a business in shipping oysters and clams to Portland and other points. He was the first one who started in this business and for two years he did remarkably well, but then others started and he sold out. He took a twenty-mile contract of grading for theNorthern Pacific from Tenio to Tacoma and in 1873, owing to the failure of Cook & Company, operations were suspended and our subject lost his capital, seven thousand dollars. Then he went to Alaska and Cassiar mines in British Columbia and did well for four years. Being crippled by rheumatism he was forced to retire and before he could get cured he had consumed most of his capital again. With what was left he bought a stock of goods and went to the Flathead country and there opened a store with two partners. Two years of successful operations there and he sold to his partners and was again laid up with rheumatism. Again his capital was nearly exhausted in seeking a recovery. Since that time Mr. Hawk has been prospecting and mining with headquarters at Kooskia and he is doing a good business there. He is considered one of the substantial men of the place, and is a member of the Washington Pioneer Society of Olympia. Politically he is a stanch Republican. Mr. Hawk has two brothers, Melvin F., a farmer at Roy, Washington; Albert R., deceased. This last brother took the prize for the best story of crossing the plains. He wrote of the trip of the Hawk family. This trip was attended with great trouble and suffering. They calked the wagon bed and floated two hundred miles down the river and enroute the mother was so shocked at the sight of floating bodies of other emigrants, who had been drowned, that she died in Portland soon after.

ABRAM COON is a man of extended frontier experience and has made a good record in his career. He dwells at present on his homestead seven miles northeast from Kooskia, where he has some valuable saw timber. Abram Coon was born in Wyoming, on November 14, 1867, the son of Adam and Diana (Lewis) Coon. The father was born in Adams county, Illinois, in 1799 and was a wholesale merchant. He participated in the Black Hawk war. The mother died when this son was young. Our subject attended public schools in his native place and assisted his father until 1887, when he went to Utah and took an active part in the Ute Indian war. Mr. Coon volunteered to carry messages when no other one would, and his courage and intrepid daring are matter of record in the history that deals of that period. He was prominently identified in these wars and did much to assist materially the whites in repelling the savages. Mr. Coon also spent one year and eight months in carrying the United States mails in Wyoming and during this period also he had many dangerous and trying experiences, which were fully detailed in White's Indian Wars, and we have the pleasure to remark that in all these experiences Mr. Coon had always manifested the same courage and consummate coolness in danger and trying times that characterized him in the excellent service in the Ute war. He located in Cassia county, Idaho, in 1898 and rented land and in 1900 he came to his present place and took a squatter's right. This was abandoned soon and he took a couple of other places successively, selling them, but finally returned to his present place and here he has continued since. Mr. Coon constructed a hall in partnership with three others for the use of the neighborhood and recently he has purchased the entire property and it is one of the central points of the community. Mr. Coon devoted his winters to labor in the woods here and the summers are spent on the prairies handling steam engines. He has three brothers and two sisters, William H., Adam, Limial, Matilda, Mary May.

In Utah, on May 2, 1893, Mr. Coon married Miss Rachel J., daughter of William and Nancy J. (Balice) Darling, natives of Michigan. Two children were born to this marriage, but they are both deceased. On January 14, 1901, Mrs. Coon was called away by death. Mr. Coon is a member of the Congregational church and in political matters he is a Socialist.

HENRY J. McFADDEN has a beautiful and valuable farm about two miles south from Whitebird on the banks of the Salmon. He is a leader in enterprise and development and is a man of excellent standing. Henry J. McFadden was born in Harrison county, Ohio, on July 25, 1830, the son of Benjamin and Mary E. (Wilson) McFadden. The father was born in Ohio and there remained all his days, passing the river in 1886, aged eighty-three. The mother was born at Harper's Ferry and was a sister of Colonel Wilson, who commanded at that point. She died in Harrison county, aged seventy-eight, it being in 1887. Our subject is the eighth of a family of eleven and grew up on a farm, receiving his education in the common schools. At the first call for ninety-day men he stepped promptly forward, the only one of his township, and took the musket to defend our free institutions and the homes of the Union. He was enrolled in Company I, Thirteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He went in as a private and soon rose to first lieutenant. Upon the second enlistment in Company D, Forty-third Ohio, under Colonel Wager Swain, Mr. McFadden was captain of his company. He participated in the battles of Carnifax Ferry, Island No. 10, New Madrid, Jackson, Fort Pillow, Pittsburg Landing, was twenty-seven days in the siege of Corinth, and at the battle of Corinth: he was wounded in both the siege and battle. He was also in the siege of Vicksburg, in the battles of Booneville, Iuka, Jackson, Mississippi, Memphis, Redbluff, Buzzard's Roost, Atlanta, Resaca, and saw much other service besides. In addition to the wounds mentioned, he was knocked down by a shell in the struggle of Island No. 10. At the close of the war Mr. McFadden received an honorable discharge, being now a member of the G. A. R. and receives a pension from the government. He went to Ohio, thence to Illinois, and Kansas, handling stock. Next we see him in San Juan, Colorado, doing placer and quartz mining. In 1881 he came to the Coeur d'Alene country and mined until 1888. Then, in company with three others, he entered the Thunder Mountain district and did well. This company was the first invaders of that section. In 1890 Mr. McFadden came to his present place and now, in company with A. Cooper, he has a half section. They have a first-class orchard of all varieties of fruit and nuts, as well as a large vineyard. He has twenty or more acres in orchard, which is one of the best to be found anywhere and the skill of our subject has made and is making a first-class success of it. He also handles stock.

On April 24, 1897, Mr. McFadden married Mrs. Priscilla M. (Wilson) Silcott, a sister of Ex-Senator Wilson, of California. By her former husband Mrs. McFadden had five children, Joseph A., deceased, at Dayton, Washington, in 1886; Louis L. died at Spokane in 1897; Edward died in California, when seven years old; Annie Hastings; and Mariah, who was drowned in the sinking of the steamer Brother Jonathan in 1865. Her former husband was a well known physician, with whom she traveled to various sections of the United States. Mr. and Mrs. McFadden are highly esteemed people and have the good will and confidence of all.

JOSEPH HIMMELSPAK, better known as Joe Baker, was born in Baden, Germany, on January 17, 1847, the son of Nebemuk and Katherine Himmelspak, also natives of the Fatherland. He was reared and educated in his native place and when fourteen went to Switzerland. Soon thereafter we find the youth in Italy, then he journeyed to France, and after that to Africa. He returned home from the Dark Continent after five years and three months later came to the United States. He spent some time in Newark, New Jersey, and in Philadelphia and then came to Lewiston. This was in 1869 and the following year found him in Elk City and on Newsome creek, mining. Three years were spent in the alluring search for nature's hidden wealth, when he returned to Camas prairie, where he worked until the Indian war of 1877. He was a volunteer from Mt. Idaho and for six weeks had charge of a Salmon detachment. When the Indians departed over the Lolo trail Mr. Himmelspak and James Cearly took dispatches, via Elk City, to Missoula, that the Indians were coming. He went back over the Lolo trail after the Indians had passed and met General Howard, for whom he scouted under Colonel Miller, and bore dispatches from Gibbons battlefield to Deer Lodge, a distance of one hundred and thirty miles and carried return messages to Howard. At Henry Lake he received his honorable discharge and returned to Camas prairie. Since that time Mr. Himmelspak has devoted himself to agriculture and mining and is prospered in the same lines today. He owns a fine ranch fitted for vegetables and fruit and supplies much of the same to Grangeville. He also is owner of the Maude Randall and the Lone Dutchman claims, upon which he is doing some development work. Mr. Himmelspak is also connected with other properties in the same district. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. and is a Republican. He has been much interested in politics until recent years. On account of a defect in his hearing Mr. Himmelspak has retired more from politics lately. He is a man of excellent standing in his community, being well known and esteemed.

JOHN W. KEITH. One and one-half miles northwest from Canfield lies the estate of our subject. It was taken before the land was surveyed, the year being 1892, and since that time Mr. Keith has been a steady laborer for the improvement not only of his land but also for the upbuilding of the country and for the general advancement and welfare.

John W. Keith was born in Boone county, Missouri, on May 23, 1857, being the son of George G. and Maria A. (Willis) Keith. The father was a farmer and stockman and was born in Boone county in 1828 and died July 31, 1901. The paternal grandfather of our subject, John H. Keith, received a patent for land in Missouri, which was signed by John Quincy Adams as president, and our subject's father has a patent signed by Andrew Jackson as president. The mother of our subject was born in New Jersey in 1829 and now lives in Nez Perces county. Her parents were pioneers in Missouri. John W. grew to manhood in Missouri and there he received his education from the district schools. He remained with his father until of age and then clerked in a store in Lexington, Missouri, for eighteen months and after that took up farming, which he followed until 1880, the time he sold out and moved from Missouri overland with teams to Walla Walla. Soon he came to where Colfax now stands and could have taken a preemption there but preferred other land. He farmed there until 1892 and then took his present place, as mentioned. He has one hundred and fifty acres of good land, substantial improvements, and raises general crops and horses, hogs and cattle.

In 1889, near Colfax, Mr. Keith married Miss Ethel, daughter of Dr. A. R. and Mary A. (May) Morgan, natives of Missouri. They were pioneers in an early day of Oregon and Mrs. Keith was born in the Willamette valley. She has three brothers and two sisters, Nellie, William, Augustus, Clarence and Bertie. Mr. Keith has the following brothers and sisters, William, Allen, Jesse and Hollis, all in Idaho. Three children, Joseph, Lillie and Minnie P., have come to gladden the home of our subject. Mr. Keith is a member of the M. W. A., at St. John, Washington. Politically he is a man of courage to carry out his convictions and he selects the man regardless of the tenets of party ties.

JOHN LYON resides eight miles south of Whitebird and devotes his attention to raising stock. He was born January 25, 1843, in Grant county, Wisconsin, the son of Zachariah and Priscilla (Henan) Lyon, natives of Indiana. The father was a pioneer in Wisconsin and also went to California in 1849 with ox teams, returning to Wisconsin later. The mother died in 1863; the father died in Dakota in 1889. Our subject was reared and educated in Wisconsin and in January, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, Thirty-third Wisconsin Infantry. He fought in numerous battles, as Vicksburg, Horseshoe Bend, Olive Spring, the Red River expedition, Spanish Fort, Nashville, Fort De Russy, Pleasant Hill Landing and many others, as well in numerous skirmishes. He was in the midst of many severe battles but was never wounded. During the war he traveled about 9,000 miles and endured about all the hardships that a soldier could; as his company was all killed but a few, he was transferred to the Eleventh Wisconsin, Company H, and finally was honorably discharged in August, 1865. He is a member of the G. A. R. and now has a badge made out of the brass cannon that was first fired at Fort Sumter. Following the war, he went to Wisconsin and then traveled over the country considerably. At Vicksburg he had the measles, which settled in his throat and affected his organs of speech, from which he has never recovered. In Bloomington, Wisconsin, on November 24, 1869, Mr. Lyon married Miss Arminta J., daughter of James and Eliza (Higgins) Canter. She was born August 10, 1854, in Grant county, Wisconsin. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and died in Clermont county, Ohio, in 1854. In 1880 our subject moved to Brown county, South Dakota, and farmed extensively and successfully; then later, on account of failure of crops, he lost heavily. In 1890 they came by wagon to the Palouse country and in 1893 to their present place. Four children have been born to this marriage, Herman, in Yuma, Arizona; Nellie E., who has taught school in this vicinity for five years, was a stenographer and typewriter in Spokane, cashier and bookkeeper in Yuma, and is now completing her education in Los Angeles, California; Sherman, who is in partnership with his father, has a good bunch of stock and a well improved place; Margie L. Mr. Lyon has a large interest in a large copper proposition near his place, for which they have had flattering offers. It runs $60 in gold and copper. Mr. Lyon has always been on the frontier, is a typical pioneer and a first-class rifle shot. Mrs. Lyon's mother first married Frank Oxley, who died from the cholera. Then she married James Canter, the father of Mrs. Lyon. After his death she married Aaron C. Stiles. He also died and in 1900 Mrs. Stiles also died at Mt. Vernon, Illinois, in her seventy-ninth year.

ALEXANDER I. WATSON is one of the pioneers of the west and especially of Idaho county, where he now resides, one of the respected and venerable men of wisdom and worth. His home is two miles south from Grangeville, where he owns a valuable farm, well improved and a good dividend producer.

Alexander I. Watson was born in Darke county, Ohio, on June 2, 1830, the son of Robert and Nancy (Stanford) Watson. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1789 and died in 1854. He settled in Miami county, Indiana, in 1838, and his father was born in Ireland. Our subject's father served his country as captain in the war of 1812. The mother was born in Virginia and died in 1842. Alexander was brought up in Ohio and Indiana and when eighteen moved to Iowa. He attended school in the various places of residence and then taught two years. In 1849 he settled to farming and in 1859 started to Pike's Peak, stopping but a short time there, he went to Salt Lake City with a government outfit and thence on to Eldorado county and was soon engaged in mining. In 1862 he came thence to Florence country, landing in Lewiston on May 16, 1862. Not meeting good success in Florence he went to the Salmon above Whitebird and mined. He took land on Camas prairie in 1866, which he sold, and took land again in 1869, selling this in 1885 and bought his present place.

In Iowa, in 1849, Mr. Watson married Mona E., daughter of Amon and Sarah (George) Shaul, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. Mrs. Watson was born in Hamilton county, Indiana, in 1833 and has two sisters and two brothers, Malinda Bentley, Matilda Shaul, G. I., M. J. Two children have been born to this couple, Clarissa E., deceased, Alice Overman. Mr. Watson is the last one living of eight children. He was a member of the Grange that built the first building in Grangeville. He is a Democrat and active. Mrs. Watson is a member of the Methodist church.

At the time of the Indian war Mr. Watson lived a mile south of the lake on Rocky canyon. The Indians had been holding councils for some time and on June 13th, becoming suspicious, he, with Cy Overman, went with his family to Mt. Idaho. Mr. Watson had previously refused to sign the petition to place the Indians on their reservation. He had been notified by Galbraith, whom Crooks sent on the evening of the thirteenth. That was the same evening that Robertson and Jarrett drove over to Mt. Idaho and the next morning West and the Indian were sent to Lapwai. The murders had already been done on the Salmon when Mr. Watson was coming to Mt. Idaho, but he did not know it. Three young Indians had stopped at Mr. Watson's place as they went on their murderous errand. While at his place, after talking, they went into the bedroom, he thinks to find a gun, and he ordered them out. One was Mox-Mox. Mr. Watson's home, Henry Johnson's barn, Mack Williams and Lambert's haystacks were all burned about ten A. M. on the fifteenth for signals.

JACOB STITES was born in Sussex county, New Jersey, on February 24, 1872, being the son of Samuel J. and Catherine A. (Winters) Stites, natives of New Jersey. They were married in New Jersey and now live in Ewing, Nebraska. In 1733 three brothers, John, Jacob and Samuel, came and settled in New York, Connecticut and New Jersey, respectively; different members of the family were prominent in the Revolution and the war of 1812. The father of our subject was born in 1837 and served in Company G, Second New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, from September 16, 1864, to May 22, 1865. He was in active service and received his discharge in Memphis, Tennessee. The mother came from a prominent old family of New Jersey, of Dutch and Irish extraction. Our subject was raised in his native place until eight, the family then all going to Nebraska, where he was educated in a sod school house, two months out of each year, until he was eighteen. Much of his time was spent in working out for the support of the family. When eighteen he railroaded in Wyoming, then ranched in Colorado, following which he was engaged in the smelter in Anaconda, Montana, then wrought in the quartz mill in Silver City, Idaho, and finally returned to ranching in Nebraska for two years. During this last period he was in the Cherokee strip run, but secured no claim to suit him. In 1895 we find him in the quartz mill in Ouray, Colorado. In July, 1896, he came to Genesee and then to Kamiah, where he labored for Felix Corbett, the Indian who risked his life to save the missionaries in the time of the Indian war of 1877. He tried to get the Indians to show him a claim, but they were reticent. However, when Mr. Stites went to the mountains and shot a deer and divided with them, they told him of his present place, adjoining Stites. He filed on March 24, 1897, on a quarter section, his family being the first white people to settle in this vicinity. He was possessed of little capital, but by hard work and careful management he succeeded in getting started. When he was building his house the Indians, four in number, came with Winchesters and ordered him off. The carpenter became frightened and ran away, but Mr. Stites reasoned with them, telling them to wait a week and survey the land, which they did, and, finding that he was right, they apologized. In 1899, when the railroad was building, he was troubled with all kinds of jumpers, who were desiring to pull his land away from him for a townsite, but he would yield neither to cajoling nor threats and held firmly to his right. Finally, those who had jumped it by fraudulent mining locations, withdrew and he was left in peace. In February, 1900, Mr. Stites sold sixty acres to Messrs. J. G. Rowton, N. B. Pettibone and J. W. Shannon, taking an interest in the townsite company and reserving the privilege of naming the town. He sold his interest, with the exception of ten lots, and now owns one hundred acres of fine land, does general farming, runs a dairy and also an ice business and deals in real estate. Stites is a thriving town, located near the battle ground between Howard and the Indians, and is the supply point for all Camas prairie, Thunder Mountain, Buffalo Hump and other mining countries. Mr. Stites has a beautiful home place adjoining it. Mr. Stites has three brothers and four sisters, John W., Edward J., Harison, Nancy J., Mary E., Hattie Thayer, Martha; he has also one half-brother and three half-sisters, Alva, Laura Prine, Emma Clemmens, Amanda Pember. Mr. Stites is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Mt. Idaho Lodge, No. 9, at Grangeville; I. O. O. F., Stites Lodge, No. 87, while he and his wife belong to the O. E. S., Mountain Queen Chapter, No. 11, Grangeville. He is a member of the Baptist church and his wife of the Christian church.

On February 22, 1899, at Mt. Idaho, Mr. Stites married Norah M., daughter of Albert E. and Ella (Emmons) Alexander, now living in Mt. Idaho. The father was born in New York, traversed the continent and dwelt in various states enroute, finally coming to Oregon in 1875 with ox teams. He was an Indian fighter and an intrepid frontiersman. The mother was born in Ohio and married in South Dakota. Mrs. Stites was born in Oregon, on February 16, 1880, and has one brother and four sisters, Albert E., Laura E. Smith, Gertrude, Viola, Marietta. Politically Mr. Stites is independent. He and his wife are leading people in this vicinity and are of excellent standing, being capable, genial and possessed of sterling integrity and worth.

A. D. BARTLEY, one of the first pioneers of this country and a miner who has achieved excellent success in many places, is now operating in the Dewey camps and has interests there in some valuable properties. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on March 25, 1832, the son of Joseph B. and Gerushia (Gilett) Bartley. The father came to the United States, the only one of his family, and served in the war of 1812. The mother's ancestors were also prominent in American struggles. Our subject was left an orphan when four and was raised by an uncle. He went to Illinois about that time and was reared and educated there. In 1859 he crossed the plains with his brother-in-law and they mined in Placer county, California. In 1864 he came to Boise and there he and his partner cleaned up about twenty-three thousand dollars. Later they gained about the same amount in Kootenai county. Then he purchased a mill, which was later burned with all the lumber and logs. In 1870 he came to Idaho county and took a preemption just south from Grangeville. At the time of the Indian war he enlisted as a volunteer at Mt. Idaho and was with Howard much of the time as special scout. He was one of the famous seventeen and his account is as follows: Perry sent a dispatch by Crooks that he was surrounded by Indians at Cottonwood and wished help. Crooks arrived in Mt. Idaho the evening of July 4th. The next morning the seventeen started, commanded by Randall. They descried the Indians and counted them from three hundred and thirty to three hundred and thirty-three. All were in the fight. Randall pressed on toward Cottonwood, and when in a reasonable distance of the Indians, he halted and asked if any one knew the signal to fight. Bartley announced that he did and Randall said, "Give it." Bartley rode his horse in a circle, and it was at once answered by the savages. He then rode in a circle three times and the fight was at once precipitated. One hour and forty-five minutes it raged and the little band came out with six killed and wounded. This stand, says Mr. Bartley, was their only hope, as the Indians would have massacred all had they shown the white feather. Only one man, George Shearer, came out during the fight. Afterwards a company of volunteers ran away from Perry and came to the little remnant. Mr. Bartley saw the Clearwater fight and most of the maneuvers and when the war was over he returned to his mill and farm. Later he sold those properties and is now devoting himself to mining.

In 1876 Mr. Bartley married the last time and one child, Hattie, deceased, is the fruit of this union. By his first marriage he had two sons, Joseph and Abraham, deceased. Mr. Bartley is a Mason and a Republican. He is a good citizen and stands well.

FRANK M. POWERS. The industrious and energetic man of whom we now speak is one of the sanguine believers in the bright future of the thriving town of Stites and has wrought with skill and hard labor here. He owns and operates a good sawmill plant and planing mill and does a good business.

Frank M. Powers was born in Walworth county, Wisconsin, on November 4, 1855, being the son of Oliver and Esther (Owens) Powers. The father, of Irish extraction, was born in New York state and died in Minnesota in 1901. He was a carpenter and builder. The mother of our subject was born in Canada and died in 1897. Our subject went with his parents to Buchanan county, Iowa, when eight, and was educated in the schools of Winthrop. When eighteen he learned the carpenter trade of his father and in 1877 went to Verndale, Minnesota, where he wrought at his trade for four years. Thence he went to the Black Hills and freighted and in 1882 settled in Canning, South Dakota. Two years later he came to Watertown, South Dakota, and in 1889 to Puget Sound, then for eight years he wrought in Tacoma. Then came a trip to Douglas, Alaska, where he did millwright work. In 1899 he went to Clarkston, Washington, and in 1900 came to Stites. He assisted to build most of the prominent structures of the town, including Greaving's large store. In April, 1902, Mr. Powers built a sawmill four miles up the river, where he does a good business. It has a capacity of twenty thousand feet per day and is equipped with a twenty-five horse power engine, planer and is well furnished. He also owns a residence in town. Mr. Powers is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Clover Lodge No. 91, in Tacoma, and of the I. O. O. F., in Stites. Mr. Powers is a stanch Republican and has served as school director. He has one brother and one sister, George, and Elizabeth, widow of Charles Comfort, and a music teacher in Lewiston.

In 1899 Mr. Powers married Mrs. Ellen Hunt, a native of Iowa.

JOHN M. SHISSLER. This enterprising young man is one of the substantial representatives of the county of Idaho and is at the present conducting his father's business of general merchant, postmaster and rancher at Newsome. Also he is interested in weighty mining ventures in Buffalo Hump and Thunder Mountain, being an experienced and practical miner.

John M. Shissler was born in Idaho county, on August 24, 1877, being the son of Franklin and Elizabeth (Shearer) Shissler, who are mentioned in this volume. He was reared in this county, attended district school until he was sixteen, then took a four years' course in the State University. Since that time he has been engaged with his brother, George, in handling the business mentioned, on account of the poor health of the father. They are doing well and are up to date business men, who have the confidence and esteem of all. Politically Mr. Shissler is allied with the Democrats and is a potent influence in the campaigns, being intelligent in the issues of the day. He is a member of the Episcopalian church and is a stanch supporter of the faith. Mr. Shissler comes from an old and prominent family and has reason to be proud of his ancestors who will in turn recognize in this scion a worthy descendant.

ANDREW PERSSON was born in Sweden, on June 2, 1858, the son of Per and Kjersti Persson, natives of Sweden also. Our subject has three brothers and two sisters, Johannes, Per, Nils Peter, Elna, Cristina. He attended district school during his school days and also worked on the farm with his father and when seventeen, it then being 1875, he came to California, in the United States, where he remained in various employments, including farm work, logging and handling a squad of Chinamen on a reed farm until 1880. Then he migrated to Latah county and bought a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, which he cultivated for six years and on account of the panic lost all he had but a team, wagon, two cows and a little cash. Then he came to his present place, about one mile northeast from Greencreek, took a homestead and built a small house. He returned and brought the family, having a hard time on account of the inclement weather, and since then he has continued in the improvement of the farm with most excellent results, as the following will show. .He has one hundred and forty acres cultivated, threshed last year four thousand three hundred bushels, cut twenty tons of hay and headed considerable for the hogs, besides having other crops. He now has a good seven-room house, fair barns and material for a large new barn, two granaries with thirty-five hundred bushels of first-class grain in them, good farm machinery, including self binder, wagons, hacks and other necessities, a fine windmill, a thousand feet of pipe running the water into the house, a stone cellar and many general improvements. Mr. Persson has forty-five hogs, five cattle and ten horses, and a good orchard, beginning to bear. All this has been accumulated by his skill and thrift and he is one of the leading farmers of this section.

On January 10, 1885, Mr. Persson married Miss Nellie, daughter of Nils Peter and Enger (Jonsen) Winstrom, natives of Sweden. The wedding occurred in San Jose, California. Mrs. Persson was born in Sweden on December 24, 1864, and she has one sister, Lenda, and one half-sister, Lillie Palsen, and one half-brother, Janne. Mrs. Persson's mother married a second time, her husband being Ola Palsen. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Persson, Edven Walfrid, Carl S., Arved P., Elmer A., George G., John A., Sadie J., Clara C. Mr. and Mrs. Perrson are Republicans and take an active interest in the questions of the political realm.

GEORGE N. CONKLIN, deceased. When the subject of this memorial passed away recently, it was known that one of the leading men of this section of Idaho county had gone to his rest beyond the grave. He was a man of good habits and fine ability and had friends from all quarters of the county. George N. Conklin was born in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1839 and died May 1, 1902. He was the son of Henry and Mary Conklin, natives of the east. The father was a cousin of Roscoe Conkling, who used the terminal G. Our subject grew to manhood in Iowa and learned the trade of engineer. He had received a good education in his native place and followed his trade on the Michigan Central. In 1860 he crossed the plains to Colorado and also mined later in Boise basin. He owned the first three buildings in Butte and discovered the Parrott mine. He located the Sweetwater free milling gold mine for which he received thirty thousand dollars. He came to Slate creek in 1871, then traveled some. Later, in 1874, in San Francisco, Mr. Conklin married Mrs. Julia Ceilley, widow of Isaac Ceilley, Her parents were Charles J. and Mary (Spencer) Vail, of English extraction. Mrs. Conklin was born in Boston and has three sisters, Georgiana Sutherland, deceased, Ella Baker, Hattie Wilcox. Mr. Conklin had one brother, Alonzo. The following children were born to this marriage: Edward H., Frederick C., Helen Frances, Mrs. Pearl Gill, Myrtle, Effie. Mrs. Conklin has two children by her first husband, Charles W., George A. Mr. Conklin was an active Democrat. The summons of death came to Mr. Conklin very suddenly. Feeling slightly indisposed he continued to work and was taken sick in the night, dying of heart disease, before the light could be lighted. His remains were buried on the farm and he was sincerely mourned. He had an interest in the Horse Shoe Bend placer claim and moved down here in 1897. They now own the old Indian Joe place in this family and are handling stock and mining.

The son, Frederick, was in the Philippine war, serving in Company F throughout the campaign. Mr. Conklin was a member of the A. F. & A. M. from early manhood.

HON. FRANK A. FENN is one of the most prominent men of the state, having been actively engaged in various leading capacities since the early days and being thoroughly posted in the history of the division. He is a man of marked capabilities, which have been manifested in a telling manner in times of crises, while in his every day walk, Major Fenn has always displayed those qualities of worth, integrity, sagacity, and substantiality that stamp him a man of progression, broad mind and fitted for weighty responsibilities. A detailed account of his life and of the activities and enterprises in which he has figured prominently would form a component chapter of Idaho history. We append an epitome while in another portion of the volume will appear a fuller account of those matters more especially connected with northern Idaho.

Frank A. Fern was born in Jefferson, Nevada county, California, on September 11, 1853, being the son of Stephen S. and Rhoda M. Fenn. The father was born in Watertown, Connecticut, on March 8, 1820, whence the family went to Lockport, New York, when this son was three years old. When twenty he went to the vicinity of Dubuque, Iowa, and in 1847 married and in 1850 went to California, crossing the plains. He settled on the Yuba and took up mining and general merchandising. The family joined him in 1852 and there remained until 1862 when a move was made to the Salmon river mines, where Florence is now. The father mined and conducted a general store with S. A. Woodward. From 1867 to 1872, they lived in Lewiston and there he was the first register of the land office, being appointed by President Johnson. Mr. Fenn was prosecuting attorney for two terms, represented Idaho county in the legislature five sessions and was delegate to Congress from the territory, serving from 1874 to 1878. He died on December 9, 1892. The mother of our subject was born in St. Albans, Vermont, on December 18, 1830. She married in 1847, and died on June 13, 1884. She was a noble woman and always engaged in helping the sick and suffering. She was a skillful nurse and many times has saved life in the frontier regions by her timely aid. When crossing the plains she was the only woman in the train and her two children died of cholera in the Platte river. Our subject attended public schools in Nevada county until the family came to Idaho. There he attended the first school in the territory, it being at Florence and taught by Mrs. S. E. Robinson. In 1863 he attended school in Walla Walla and took a course in the Whitman Academy when it first opened in the winter of 1865 and 1866. In 1869 he was appointed by I. K. Shafer, delegate from Idaho, to the United States Naval Academy and there sat under the training of such men as Sampson, Dewey and Schley. He left the academy in 1872 and returned to Idaho where he took up teaching. At the time of the Indian war of 1877, Major Fenn was first lieutenant of Company B, Second Regiment Idaho Militia and was also commissioned adjutant of the regiment by M. Brayman, governor of the territory. He was with Colonel Perry at his defeat on Whitebird and took part in the Cottonwood fight when seventeen whites were attacked by one hundred and forty-two savages. His horse was shot and his lip wounded, but otherwise he came out sound from the awful struggle. Following this he was in charge of the commissary department at Mt. Idaho. Then our subject took up farming five miles north from Mt. Idaho, but later sold his half section there and raised sheep on the Whitebird. Selling out this line Mr. Fenn was admitted at the supreme court in Boise to practice law, where he resided from 1890 to 1901. Previous to this Mr. Fenn had been postmaster in Mt. Idaho, deputy district court clerk of the county and also in 1886 he was chosen to represent the county in the legislature. He was also elected again in 1890, the first state legislature, and held the important position of speaker of the house. From April, 1891, to 1893, he was chief clerk of the state land board, and in 1896 was chosen representative from Ada county, being the only Republican in the entire legislature. In 1896 he was secretary of the Republican state committee. When the Spanish war broke out, Major Fenn offered his services and was appointed captain of Company H, First Idaho Volunteers. He was acting major from April, 1899, to September, 1899, when he was promoted to major. He took part in the battle of Manila, August 13, 1898, Santa Anna, February 5, 1899, Colcocan, February 10 and 11, 1899 and in September of that year he received an honorable discharge. In June, 1901, the major was appointed superintendent of the United States forest reserves in Idaho and Montana and removed to Kooskia, where we find him at the present time.

On December 16, 1877, Mr. Fenn was married to Miss Florence E., daughter of Russell and Margaret K. (Rice) Hobbrook, who were born on September 30, 1830, in Ohio, and December 16, 1839, in Missouri, respectively. The father came to Oregon in an early day, being an orphan and took up stock raising. He was in the Rogue river and Modoc wars and is now living near Whitebird. The mother came with her parents across the plains in 1844 with the second Whitman train. Mrs. Fenn's father and grandfather opened the first livery stable in Portland. She attended school in Idaho, Washington. Her birth place was near Hillsboro, Oregon, on January 13, 1861, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Eugene, Oscar, Ephriam, Carrie Fenn, Nannie Hansen. Mr. Fenn has the following brothers and sisters: George G., Walter A., Stephen S., Jr., Nettie M. Hansen. To Mr. and Mrs. Fenn there have been born five children, Fred D., born September 12, 1878; Homer E., born June 4, 1881; Lloyd A., born November 9, 1884; Rhoda M., born April 8, 1890; Florence A., born March 12, 1892.

Major Fenn is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons and of the W. of W., while his wife belongs to the Women of Woodcraft. Mrs. Fenn and the children also belong to the Christian church.

ANDREW J. WILLIAMS, one of the property owners of Kooskia, is also engaged in farming just northeast from the town. He is one of the enterprising men of the section and was one who first came to the site of Stuart and located. Andrew J. Williams was born in Grayville, Illinois, on March 6, 1834, being the the son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Anderson) Williams, born in 1781 in North Carolina, and in 1789, in South Carolina, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Illinois, served in the war of 1812, and died in 1839. The mother died in February, 1857. Our subject was reared and educated at the Skillet forks of the Wabash and remained with his parents until he was eighteen years old, at which time he removed to Marshall county, Iowa. In this section he farmed from 1846 to 1857 and then went to Kansas, remaining until 1859, in which year he was led by the gold excitement to Pikes Peak. Four years were consumed in the search for the precious metal, then he returned to Iowa, settling near Council Bluffs. Two years later Mr. Williams removed to Buffalo county, Nebraska and in 1868 he went to Cherokee county, Kansas. It was 1874 that he made the long journey to the Palouse country and there he farmed until 1892, experiencing the dangers and loss of the Indian outbreak. In the year last mentioned he came to the vicinity of Grangeville and purchased a farm, which he sold upon the opening of the reservation. He settled where Stuart is now and at once opened a livery stable. He continued in the operation of that with his son until 1900, when he leased it and also other business property which he owns there and took up his abode at East Stuart.

On November 16, 1856, Mr. Williams married Miss Persis, daughter of Masury and Mary (Wright) Woodward, natives of Vermont, and born March 18, 1802, and September 23, 1805, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Ohio, went to Iowa when sixty and farmed; he died in 1890, aged eighty-eight. The mother comes from old Puritan stock, and her father was a captain in the war of 1812 and died aged ninety-nine. She died in Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1890. Mrs. Williams has the following brothers and sisters: Fayette, Lucius, Rena Householder. The following children have been born to this worthy couple: Wells R., born January 17, 1858, and now in Reno, Nevada; Charles F., born January 15, 1867, now deceased; Andrew J., Jr., born December 24, 1869; Lew Wallace and Fred F., twins, born July 7, 1872. Mr. Williams was county commissioner in Nebraska, and justice of the peace in Kansas. He is a stanch Republican. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Congregational church.

JAMES STUART. It is with great pleasure that we are enabled to place upon the records of the history of northern Idaho an epitome of the career of the capable and esteemed gentleman whose labors have accomplished so much in Nez Perces and Idaho counties, for the advancement of these counties, for the uplifting of the Nez Perces, for the general welfare of all. A moving spirit in that most important enterprise, both to the Indians and the other people, the opening for settlement of the reservation, a keen observer of the needs of the Indians and nerved with a powerful spirit to accomplish the provision of these needs, a man of ability in many lines as will be evidenced, and having the happy ability to accomplish things which will greatly accelerate the chariot of progress for all, it is eminently fitting that Mr. Stuart should be granted representation in the chronicles of these counties, where he has accomplished so much.

James Stuart was born at Spokane falls, in October, 1863, the son of James and Susan (Mitchel) Stuart. The father was born on March 14, 1832, in Harrison county, Virginia. His parents, Robert and Nancy C. Stuart, moved to Bureau county, Illinois, in 1836. Two years later they went to Muscatine county, Iowa, which was then inhabited almost exclusively by the Sacs, Foxes, Musquakees, and other Indians. There James Stuart was reared and educated by his parents, completing his training in the high school in Iowa City, in 1848. The father returned from California and went thither again with his sons, James and Granville. He returned to Iowa and they mined and herded stock and fought in the Rogue river Indian war. Desiring to return to the states, they were diverted from the trip on account of the Mormon troubles and went to Montana. They hunted, trapped, prospected, and the father of our subject was the first man to discover gold on Gold creek. He was the first sheriff elect of Missoula county, Washington Territory, and the first one in the Rockies north of Colorado. As sheriff he hung Spellman, a horse thief, which was the first legal execution in Montana, then Washington Territory. Mr. James Stuart was elected captain, with power absolute, of the first party of explorers of the Yellowstone country. The expedition left Bannock City, on April 9, 1863, and returned, having had many encounters with the Crows, by way of Bridger, on June 24th. Mr. Stuart was a physician and surgeon and was always prompt to relieve suffering without recompense. In 1864 he was elected to represent Deer Lodge county in the legislature. Mr. Stuart was eminently successful in dealing with the Indians, being equitable, just, gentle and yet possessed of that firm resolution, iron will and unflinching courage demanded in those dealings. He spoke the native languages with ease and skill and stood high in the estimation of the best men of all tribes where he dealt. Mr. James Stuart died on September 30, 1873, aged forty-two. He was a junior of the grand lodge of Masons of Montana. His brother Granville was minister to Peru, under Cleveland's administration. The mother of our subject was born in 1844, and her mother was a full-blooded Nez Perces woman, and her father a French Canadian. She died in April, 1892.

Our subject was reared mostly on the Nez Perces reservation, was well educated at the government schools, also learned the cabinet trade there. He attended the school at Forest Grove and took a complete course in civil engineering. In the fall of 1885 Mr. Stuart took up farming and stock raising and followed that until the government undertook the allotment and then he was interpreter for Miss Alice Fletcher, who was government allotment agent. This continued until the fall of 1893. Then the government treated with the Indians and under a clause they were to have a surveyor and Mr. Stuart was appointed to this position. In 1895 he resigned and went to general merchandising. Later he sold out and opened in the furniture and undertaking business in Kooskia. He owns several allotments, town property, his store and other property and is doing a good business. Mr. Stuart has one half-sister, Nancy Spencer, on the Clearwater; two half brothers, Robert and Richard, both in Montana.

Mr. Stuart was judge of the police court in 1893 and in 1895 he was interpreter for a party of Indians who went to Washington, D. C., and in the spring of 1902 was elected by the tribe to investigate all records concerning treaties and stipulations between the government and the tribe. He ascertained that a balance of nearly twenty thousand dollars was due and unpaid on an old treaty and is taking steps to collect this for the Indians. Mr. Stuart is a strong Republican and he and his wife both belong to the Presbyterian church. He fought hard and long for the opening of the reservation and was the first to put his name to the treaty, although his life was threatened for so doing. He takes great interest in building up and forwarding the interests of the Indians and leading them to better education and more thorough civilization. He has opened a real estate office in Kooskia for the sale of allotments of Indians who have died, as the heirs are now allowed to sell, by a recent law. He is devoting considerable attention to reading law in addition to his other business and is one of the leading men of the county.

MANUEL C. MORRIS is one of the industrious and stirring farmers dwelling about eight miles northeast from Greencreek upon a quarter section which he secured by homestead right and which by his labor and skill is being made a valuable farm, well tilled and substantially improved. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, on November 25, 1864, the son of Nathaniel M. and Margaret A. (Propst) Morris. When our subject was eight the family removed to the vicinity of Farmington, Washington, and he had but scanty opportunity to attend school. He remained with his parents until the time of his majority and then started to do for himself. Having a span of horses and harness he went to tilling the soil of a rented place. He did well in his venture until the panic struck the country, and, with hosts of others, he lost considerable, but by continued industry and persistent efforts, he was enabled to pay all obligations and in 1896, he came to his present place and filed. The following harvest found him working in the Palouse and after the last debt had been squared he came to his farm with a capital of thirty dollars. All his property at the present time has been secured by his industry and thrift since. He has his farm all fenced, owns thirty-five hogs, fifteen horses and twelve cattle. He cultivates a third of the land, has orchard and buildings and is on the road to prosperity.

At Farmington, Washington, on February 4, 1890, Mr. Morris married Mrs. Arminna J. Simmons, the daughter of William R. and Sarah (Gulliford) Cooper, natives of Missouri and born on August 8, 1835, and February 15, 1838, respectively. Mrs. Morris was born in Oregon, on September 10, 1863, and her first husband was A. I. Simmons, a bookkeeper at The Dalles. By her first marriage she has one son, William S., born at The Dalles, on January 6, 1884. Mrs. Morris has the following brothers and sisters: Thomas J., Jacob W., Zilpha A., Viola J., Mildy, Ida Dell, Arbanna B., Maud E. Mr. Morris has six brothers and three sisters, Henry R., Anthony P., John W., Clarence L., Thomas J., Albert J., Eva M., Minnie M., Lucinda A. Mr. and Mrs. Morris are stanch Republicans and take a keen interest in the welfare of the county and state and its political questions.

EDWIN C. VANDEBURGH resides eight miles south of Whitebird, where in partnership with his son Jerry he farms and raises stock. He was born on July 26, 1840, in Green county, New York, the son of Peter and Mary J. (Martin) Vandeburgh. The father was born in Dutchess county, New York, and enlisted in the Civil war. He served for two years and was discharged on account of poor health, dying one year after this. The mother was born at Catskill, New York, and died in Clinton county, Missouri, in her ninety-sixth year. The family removed to Rock Island county, Illinois, when our subject was a boy, and he remained at home until 1858, and then started for Pikes Peak, walking as far as Nebraska City, after which he drove six yoke of cattle on through. He helped open up some of the first mines on Gregory gulch, and was successful. In 1861 he enlisted in Company K, First Colorado Cavalry, under General Canby, was sent to New Mexico, and fought in the battle of Apache canyon on the Rio Grande. In 1862 he was on the Arkansas river and was in a battle where about six hundred Indians were killed, all the savages being killed except one man and two papooses. The two papooses, a boy and a girl, were sent to President Lincoln, who placed them in school. Our subject was discharged from service on October 26, 1865, and on November 10th, following, he started for Montana, but as the mules died, he went on foot to Salt Lake, and the next spring went to Aldar gulch. In the spring of '66 he came through the Salmon river country, and in 1869 went to Portland.

On August 4, 1870, Mr. Vandeburgh married Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, who was born in 1842 in Indiana. Her parents, Dr. J. and Maria J. Clark, were early pioneers in Iowa, Clarksville being named for them. The father came west to Portland in 1869 by team, in 1873 went to Dayton, Washington, and died in 1895. The mother died in 1875. Both were devout members of the Christian church. Our subject came to Dayton, Washington, in the summer of 1871 and engaged in farming until '93. Then he mined until 1898, when he came to his present place. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vandeburgh, Peter and Jerry, twins; Roxey, wife of Daniel Bowman, of Dayton; Rosa, wife of George Reed, of Crook's Corral. Peter married Miss Viola Johnson. Jerry is in partnership with is father in raising stock, and owns a homestead, which is a fine place, well improved. Mr. Vandeburgh and his sons own a fine copper property, which gives promise of great value. In Dayton, in 1892, Mr. Vandeburgh raised 22,000 sacks of grain.

FRANKLIN P. TURNER is one of the skilled civil engineers who has labored all over the western country and has assisted materially in opening the way for the ingress of civilization. At present he has retired from this line of labor and has given himself to the art of agriculture, residing one and one-half miles east from Lorena.

Franklin P. Turner was born in Monroe county, Indiana, on August 30, 1854, being the son of Andrew J. and Mary L. (Whitson) Turner, natives of Indiana, and born in October, 1827, and on March 27, 1827, respectively. They still live in Kansas. The father came from an old North Carolina family, was a pioneer to Kansas and in 1854 went thence to Iowa, but returned two years later. He took part in the border warfare and helped to drive Price out. He dwells near Ossawattomie, having a good farm there. The mother comes from a Virginia family and two brothers, Solon and Numa, fought in the Mexican war. She was married in October, 1853. Our subject was brought up in Kansas, took a course in the state normal and a special training in civil engineering in the state agricultural institution at Manhattan. In 1870 he went to Colorado, but soon returned to his studies. He also trained in a drug store. In 1874 Mr. Turner was again in Colorado, and in 1875 he went across the plains and in 1877 he was back in the Indian Territory. He travelled in Texas and Kansas and in 1880 he was in Albuquerque. He did engineer work on the Rio Grande, saw the Southern Pacific join the Santa Fe at Deming, New Mexico, in 1881, then went thence through Arizona to San Diego and made his way by steamer up the coast to Tacoma, where he learned of the assassination of Garfield. On August 30, 1881, Mr. Turner landed on Camas prairie, taught school, followed his profession later on the Northern Pacific, also in California and Utah, and did much government surveying near Ft. Mojava, and in April, 1884, he landed again in Camas Prairie. He lived near Grangeville until the fall of 1889, when he purchased his present place. Mr. Turner has the following brothers and sisters: Emma Barber, Margaret Day, John W., George W., Andrew J., Elsie M. Dillman.

On March 2, 1886, Mr. Turner married Miss Eleanor M., daughter of Benjamin and Realda (Willis) Wilmot. Her father was born in Kentucky in 1803, was reared there and learned the trade of a millwright. He did labor through the central states, came to the coast in 1865 and two years later to the south fork of the Clearwater. In 1870 he settled near Grangeville and made furniture, the only furniture to be had then. He died in 1886. The mother of Mrs. Turner was born in Wisconsin and died in 1860. Mrs. Turner was born on April 8, 1853, in Charles county, Missouri, where she was raised. In 1881 she joined her father. She is one of the noble pioneer women of this section and remained here for more than a year seeing no one but Indians. She has the following brothers and sisters: Asinith Riggins, John W., Emma Caerley, Thomas, Sarah Bratton, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Turner have the following children: Wilmot C., Forest P., Andrew J., Frank R., Mary E. In 1885 Mr. Turner was elected county surveyor on the Democratic ticket. He served until 1889. In 1897 he published the Alta Idaho Arca, a Populist organ, which in 1899 became the Socialist exponent. Mr. Turner is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

OSCAR M. EVANS is one of the prosperous and successful agriculturists of Idaho county. He lives seven miles south of Whitebird and is a man of good standing. He was born in Caldwell county, Missouri, on September 8, 1837, the son of Horace and Candace (Judd) Evans. The father of Horace Evans was a native of Massachusetts. The father was born in New Hampshire in 1810 and the mother was born in Ohio in 1820. Our subject went with his parents to Illinois when but a child and from there to Fremont county, Iowa, where his parents both died. He had received a good education, then went to Otoe county, Nebraska, where he was married September 14, 1862, to Catherine E. Jemison, who was born September 1, 1841. Her parents were John and Catherine Jemison. After marriage Mr. Evans settled in Mitchell county, Kansas, and in 1888 they came to Pullman, Washington, and engaged in farming. In 1890 he was in Latah county, Idaho, and eight years later Mr. Evans entered a homestead on his present farm. He has good land, a nice young orchard, plenty of timber, does general farming and raises cattle, horses and hogs. The following children have been born to this marriage: Oscar H., near Whitebird; Horace E., near Moscow; Marion F., in Mitchell county, Kansas; Mrs. Catherine E. Poe, near Whitebird; Mrs. Lucinda J. Harper, in West Virginia; Mrs. Mary E. McBlair, in Mitchell county, Kansas; Mrs. Lillie D. Burlinghoff, near Whitebird; Mrs. Eva Eppler, deceased; John D.; Rosa A. Mrs. Burlinghoff's husband, Charles B., was killed on February 10, 1900.

FRANKLIN SHISSLER. It is now our pleasant privilege to chronicle an epitome of the career of this estimable and doughty pioneer, whose labors in the state and territory of Idaho have been of permanent value to the country where he has wrought; especially in Idaho county has he done much to aid in development and to open the way for others to come in and make homes. His name is indissolubly connected with the county of Idaho in many prominent ways, both in inaugurating industries, and maintaining the same with mammoth improvements, which he managed and completed.

Franklin Shissler was born in Sunbury, Pennsylvania, on October 28, 1830, being the son of Henry and Anna (Long) Shissler, both natives of Pennsylvania, and descendants of old and prominent Dutch families. The father's parents were massacred by Indians; the maternal grandfather was living on the Brandywine during the Revolution. He was captain in the war of 1812, and was detailed with his company to Blackrock with his men, but as no supplies were forwarded, they had great suffering. Our subject was reared at Port Carbon, Pennsylvania, and finished his education in the Pottsville Academy, after which he became an expert machinist. He wrought in New York and New Jersey, and when twenty-two took passage for Melbourne, Australia, where he mined for two years, then wrought at his trade, and in 1855 came to San Francisco. He mined in California and Oregon until 1862, in which year he came to Idaho, since which time he has been one of the active and progressive men of this section. He has been occupied in all the various industries, of packing, sawmilling, ranching, general merchandising, and mining. He built the first and for a long time the only sawmill in Idaho county. This was constructed at great effort and was of untold benefit to the country. Mr. Shissler built two bridges across the Salmon, and this great labor has had a wonderful effect in stimulating commercial relations and travel. He raised many race horses here and also did a general farming business on his ranch. He was in the Indian war of 1877, and did excellent work in constructing the fort. Since 1884 he has been postmaster at Rustic and now at Newsome, where he also handles a general merchandise business. Mr. Shissler is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Mount Idaho Lodge, No. 9, and has belonged to this order since 1864. He is also a member of the Idaho County Pioneer Society. Mr. Shissler has one brother living, Henry, in Pennsylvania, who was in the medical department of the Civil war. He also has some brothers dead, mentioned as follows: William, killed in the Civil war; Edward, major in the Civil war; George, also in Civil war, both deceased; John, in Civil war three years, now deceased.

At Slate Creek on the Salmon, on February 1, 1866, Mr. Shissler married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick A. and Susan (Gordon) Shearer. Mr. Shearer is a native of Frederick City, Maryland, is a cousin of Admiral Schley, and now lives in Newsome. He was born in 1816, and has three living generations of descendants. He came to California, via the Isthmus, in 1852, and was in the mercantile business in Marysville until 1860. Then he went to Siskiyou county, and in 1862 came to Idaho. He was probate judge for seven years and was always a prominent Democrat. The mother of Mrs. Shissler was born in Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, on March 25, 1818, and died on her birthday, in 1900. Mrs. Shissler's two uncles are in the regular army, one is General David Gordon, and the other is Captain Charles G. Gordon, of the Civil war, both retired. Mrs. Shissler has one brother deceased, George M., who was a major in the Confederate army, and served on Bradley T. Johnson's staff. He came to Idaho and married a sister of J. P. Vollmer. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shissler: Frederick, Harry, George, John, Susie Ingram, Mary E. Pettibone; also these, who are deceased: Louisa, Virginia, Elizabeth, Annie and Edward.

JOHN B. RICE. The subject of this article is a business man in Westlake, being the owner and operator of a good drug store at this place. He is numbered with the most enterprising men of the section, and his endeavors have been crowned with the meed of success.

John B. Rice was born in New York city on June 8, 1867, the son of William M. and Sarah M. (Westlake) Rice. The father was born in Troy, New York, and is now a commission merchant in Seattle. He was a pioneer of Nez Perces county and was twice elected probate judge on the Democratic ticket, and is an influential man in the campaigns. The mother of our subject was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1849, and still lives. Her father was a native of Cornwall, England, and her mother was born in America. Our subject was educated in his native place and was preparing for Amherst College when the parents came west and settled at Lewiston in 1882, where he grew to manhood. In 1882 his father established the first store on the reservation, at Lapwai, by government permit, giving our subject charge of it. They also had a store at Lewiston and another at Juliaetta. After this our subject went into Moxley's drug store at Lewiston and learned the apothecary's art. In 1889 he came to Idaho county and filed on the site of the present town of Westlake, which was so named from his mother's ancestors. He and his father secured a section and in 1895 laid out the town and opened a mercantile establishment. In 1900 John B. sold out and opened a drug store, where we find him at the present time.

On May 16, 1897, in Westlake, Mr. Rice married Miss Florence, daughter of George and Elmina Babcock, natives of New York and Pennsylvania, respectively, and now living near Forest. Mrs. Rice was born in Wisconsin, on August 12, 1873, and has two brothers and one sister,—Esther, Charles, Ross. Mr. Rice has the following named brothers and sisters: Louise, Maude, Florence, Grace, William, Archibald, Ernest. Three children have been born to this union,—Jessie, Lonita, Dorothy. Mr. Rice is a member of the M. W. A. of Westlake. Mrs. Rice is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist church. Mr. Rice is a Democrat and active in political matters. He has control of the mail route from Westlake to Ferdinand, and also sells real estate.

GEORGE C. POE resides about eight miles south of Whitebird, and was born August 19, 1862, in Linn county, Oregon, the son of William and Jane (Bernetta) Poe. They crossed the plains with an ox team in a very early day, being among the earliest pioneers in western Oregon, and when this son was very young they both died. He was the fifth of a family of ten children, and as far back as he can remember he had to do for himself. He visited various places and worked for a salary during the early years of his life and in 1881 went on the Northern Pacific near Rathdrum and took a contract of making ties. In June of that year he was in the little village of Rathdrum when "Poker Jack" insulted a squaw. She struck him and he slapped her in return. She immediately gave the war whoop, and within a very few minutes two hundred infuriated braves were on the track of "Poker Jack," and by the mere skin of his teeth he was saved from their hands. From here Mr. Poe went to Walla Walla. He started to California and at Polk county, Oregon, on the way, was taken with typhoid fever. He was very much depleted by the disease, and when he was able returned to Walla Walla. Next we see him in British Columbia, and then near Pullman, Washington, in which town he was married on October 5, 1890, Miss Katie Evans becoming his bride. She was born on April 20, 1868, in Otoe county, Nebraska, the daughter of Oscar M. and Emma C. (Jamison) Evans. The mother died in 1892 and the father lives near Whitebird. Our subject came to his present home in July, 1894. He now owns a half section of good land, and has it well improved, and also one of the best residences south of the Salmon. Mr. Poe handles cattle, horses and hogs. He has four children,—Claude F., Fred M., Vera and Annata.

GREEN W. DALLAS. This hardy and skilled prospector and millwright is one of the earliest pioneers of this whole northwest country and for over half a century he has wrought in this and the California districts of minerals. He is a man of keen discrimination, boundless energy, practical judgmnt and a fund of knowledge and experience that place him undoubtedly in the lead in his line. His experience would fill a volume, and it is a matter of regret that we cannot grant greater space to their detail. However, we will note the more salient points in his career, and first we record that he was born in Cooper county, Missouri, on February 13, 1834, his parents being Joshua A. and Mary (Woods) Dallas. The family was prominent in Texas history, and the town of Dallas was named from an uncle, who perished in the Mexican war before the United States interfered. The father was born in 1799, went early to Missouri, took part in the Black Hawk war and died in 1882. The mother was born in 1807 in west Tennessee and died in Missouri in 1844. Her ancestors were doughty Indian fighters under Daniel Boone. Our subject was raised and educated in Missouri and when fourteen began his western experience by driving beef cattle for the government to New Mexico, making the trip on horseback. On September 15, 1853, we find him in Sacramento, where he diligently gave himself to mining. Later we see him in Florence, and in the breaking out of the Boise basin excitement he went thither with pack trains, and from that time for many years he followed that adventurous life. He packed to Kootenai, British Columbia, and all the principal camps in the northwest in the sixties. Mr. Dallas bought a livery stable in Lewiston, but the life was too quiet and he soon sold and went to his pack trains again. He built the first stamp mill in Warren, the Pioneer, and also the Rescue, then the Hic Jacet. He constructed the Callender in Buffalo Hump, with the dwellings. In Elk he built the Blue Dragon, and the Ajax in Dixie. Mr. Dallas was an active participant in the Indian outbreak of 1877, fighting the savages and doing excellent scout work. He has prospected all over the coast and in 1902 was in the Thunder mountain district and believes that the camp is to be one of the great ones of the world. While there he built the postoffice and the recorder's office. Mr. Dallas has placer claims in various sections and is one of the most skilled men in mining in the state. He has the following brothers and sisters: Elizabeth Stevens, Caley Morris, Nancy Morris, Charles, Susan F., Evelyne, Sarah A., John, Margaret, Samantha, Melissa. Politically Mr. Dallas is a Democrat, and is active in the campaigns. He is one of the landmarks of the country, his labors have paved the way for civilization, he has shown a marked and upright walk, he has won the respect and esteem of all and he has done his part in building up the county.

WILLIAM WILSON is one of the well known early settlers of this section of the country and his labors have been successful in the line of stock raising and farming. At present he is dwelling nine miles east from Kooskia and has a good farm and an excellent orchard.

William Wilson was born in Switzerland county, Indiana, on March 25, 1836, being the son of John and Mahala (Scott) Wilson. The father was born in Ohio in 1798. He was a successful farmer and stockman. In early days he went to Indiana and there married, and in 1844 another move was made, this time to Missouri. It was 1851 that the long journey to Linn county, Oregon, was made, where he took a donation claim. Later he lived near Pendleton and in 1876 he died at the old home in Linn county. The mother of our subject was born in Scotland, married in 1835 and died in 1885. William was raised and educated in Linn county and remained with his parents until 1856, when he started to raise stock for himself in southern Oregon and northern California. In 1863 he came to eastern Oregon and continued in the same business until March 12, 1875, when he came to the Clearwater and bought a squatter's right. This was abandoned in 1885 and Mr. Wilson took his present place and has devoted himself to its improvement since.

In July, 1873, Mr. Wilson married Mary Too-Ma-Les-Poo, a Nez Perce woman, and one child has been born to them, Howard, born in 1888. Mr. Wilson has the following brothers and sisters: John C., Prier, Robert E., James, Marion, deceased, George.

Mr. Wilson gives an interesting item gained from the councils of the Nez Perces, having attended the same. It is this that if the whites had not shown terror and became panic stricken, they would not have been molested in the last trouble.

BENJAMIN P. BROWN. Which one is better known of the old pioneers who braved the trials of the early days, faced the dangers incident to invading a country peopled with savages, endured the hardships and performed the labor incident to opening up for civilization the vast country adjacent to the Salmon river—who, we repeat, is better known among these pioneers than Benjamin P. Brown. One by one different persons have stepped upon the scene of action, but now, hale and hearty in the golden years of his life, Mr. Brown is dwelling upon his ranch seven miles southeast of Whitebird, which he took from the wilds of nature over thirty years ago. "In those days," said Mr. Brown, "the luxuriant bunch grass was nearly to one's waist, and it was a very paradise for all animal life."

Benjamin P. Brown was born November 8, 1832, in the southeastern part of Missouri, being the son of James and Susan (Richardson) Brown, natives of Kentucky and Missouri, respectively. When Benjamin P. was but a child his mother was called across the river to see the realities of the world beyond. The lad remained with his father, receiving his education and training until manhood's estate arrived. In 1852 he bade farewell to the scenes and places of his youth, his friends and loved ones, and commenced the weary trip across the sands and mountains toward the setting sun. Four months later the sturdy young man was digging gold at Downersville, California. He labored in various camps until 1858 and then went to San Francisco and by ship to Bellingham bay, whence he traveled on foot into the Fraser mines. Shortly he left there and came to The Dalles and the next spring he went to Oro Fino. The following fall found him in Florence, and in all the camps adjacent to the Salmon Mr. Brown has labored. For forty years he has lived in this section and knows its history from beginning to end. Since 1871 his headquarters have been upon his ranch. Mr. Brown has been quite a hunter in his day and during the Indian troubles of 1877 he was a scout and guide for General Howard. He participated in the Clearwater battle and in other of the engagements. Mr. Brown has his place supplied with average improvements, has a good orchard and is living in quiet retirement. He is the youngest of a family of seven children and the rest are all dead. Since sixteen Mr. Brown has faced the realities of the world upon his own resources. He has done duty on the frontier of the entire western range, has packed his blankets over many a weary trail, has met face to face the adversities that beset the pioneer and in it all has manifested a determination, a reserve force and capabilities that mark him a strong man of courage and resources.

JAMES S. GUSEMAN lives about four miles northeast from Greencreek, where he owns a small farm and is devoting himself to its improvement. He is not one of the earliest pioneers, but is one of the industrious laborers for the advancement of the interests of Idaho county, and stands well in his community. He was born in Lancaster, Ohio, on December 24, 1849, the son of George W. and Elizabeth (Evans) Guseman, natives of Ohio. He attended school during his youthful days and remained under the parental roof until the estate of manhood arrived. Then he went to Indiana to visit his sister and later journeyed to Kansas. In that state he was employed railroading for twenty years and was an experienced hand in handling a track. He then traveled to various portions of that state and later to all the northwestern and western states and territories and wrought in various capacities and had much experience in the world. Finally in 1898, Mr. Guseman came to Cottonwood and at once engaged in threshing and later gave his attention to farm work and on December 16, 1898, he settled on his present place. This was taken as a homestead and in addition to improving the same, he has also given much of his time in other capacities in this section. Mr. Guseman is a great reader and a well informed man. He has one sister, Orpha Ledman, who was born in Ohio, on February 5, 1848.

CHARLES M. CAMPBELL. Among the many who have wrought for the upbuilding and advancement of Idaho county, none has manifested more zeal, interest and skill than has the subject of this sketch. He is at present doing a general farming business, together with raising stock, about four miles from Whitebird. He was born March 14, 1851, in Ray county, Missouri, the son of Thomas and Melinda (Snowden) Campbell. The father was born in Indiana and came early to Missouri. The mother was born in Ray county, Missouri, and both died in 1861. Our subject was the eldest of a family of five children, and two years after the death of his parents he went to Florida with his uncle, L. B. Campbell, who was a physician. The doctor organized a medicine company and put his nephew with him, traveling all over the southern and middle states. This continued for ten years, and then our subject settled to farming until 1883, when he drove through to Wyoming. He was stable boss at Twin creek, Wyoming, for two years. Then he went to Evingston and handled the trotting stock of A. C. Beckwith for two years. After this we see him in Anaconda, Helena, and finally in Davenport, Washington. In 1899 he came to the Salmon river country, and while getting out some rock he was crippled in his right hand for life. In 1902 he leased a ranch adjoining his homestead, and is now paying attention to general farming and raising stock. He has a fine bunch of hogs and his ranch is well supplied with water and timber. Mr. Campbell is especially successful in raising hogs, and he has some fine specimens now. Mr. Campbell is a well informed man, and ever keeps abreast of the times and is a leader in all that would be for the advancement and upbuilding of the country.

EDWARD W. ROBIE, deceased. The subject of this memorial was born in New York, in 1833, and died on February 20, 1888, his demise being caused by heart disease. He was a good man, possessed of excellent talents and held in high esteem by all. His parents were John and Sarah (Ladd) Robie. The father was born in Vermont of English parentage; his ancestors were pilgrims in the Mayflower and fought in the Revolution. The mother came of Scotch ancestry. Our subject grew to manhood in New York, came west in 1874 to look after his brother's mining interests in southern Idaho and in 1876 came to Idaho county. He was a miller by trade and assisted to construct the Grangeville mill in 1876-77. He was on Camas prairie at the time of the Indian outbreak and was commissioned captain by the governor giving him charge of the Grangeville militia. Mr. Robie served as lieutenant in Company A, First Missouri Volunteers, for nearly four years during the Civil war. Following the war, he and Peter Smith bought the Baker property at Horse Shoe Bend on the Salmon, raised stock and mined. This line of work continued until his death.

In 1880, Mr. Robie married Mrs. Isabella Benedict, widow of Samuel Benedict, and daughter of John and Sarah (O'Donnell) Kelly, natives of Ireland and descendants of prominent people of Ireland. Five children were born to this marriage, Emma, Edward V., Alice, and two deceased. Mrs. Robie was married to Samuel Benedict on February 7, 1863, at Florence, Idaho, and to that union four children were born, Grant, Mrs. Caroline Taylor, Frances I. Shissler, Mrs.

ISABELLA ROBIE.

SAMUEL BENEDICT.

EDWARD W. ROBIE.

Addie Brown. Mrs. Robie was born on Staten Island, in 1848. She was at her home just below White Bird on June 14, 1877, when her husband, Mr. Benedict, came in wounded in both legs. His horse had been shot by the Indians also but he secured another at Mr. Baker's ranch. Another band of Indians came that evening and murdered him and August Bacon, who was trying to care for him and beat back the savages. Mrs. Benedict and the little girls fled into the brush and darkness. She went to Manuel's house and she and Mrs. Manuel remained secreted until Friday, when she started to Mr. Idaho with her little girls. On Sunday morning she passed the soldiers going to fight the Indians and as they returned in retreat they put her on a horse and took the little girls. Her saddle turned and she was left in the way. She fled to the cover of the undergrowth and wandered until captured by the pursuing Indians, who spared her life at the earnest entreaty of the squaws, who knew her well. Mrs. Benedict then wandered until she was found by Mr. Robie, who had come in search of her. Later occurred her marriage with Mr. Robie, as mentioned above. Mr. Robie left a good home and property at his death which Mrs. Robie is now handling and with her son's assistance is doing well. Mr. Smith, partner of Mr. Robie, is caring for the mines. Mr. Robie was raised a Presbyterian and Mrs. Robie is a Catholic. He was a prominent man, an active Republican and although he served as county commissioner he nearly always refused office which was frequently tendered by the people.

ALMON L. YOUNG. This well known business man is the owner and operator of a fine saw-milling plant situated four miles south from Stites, where he does a good business and is favored with a thriving trade. He is a man of sound principles, manifest integrity, and stands as one of the substantial and public minded citizens.

Almon L. Young was born in Stewartstown, New Hampshire, on October 4, 1861, being the son of Charles M. and Nancy (Russell) Young. The father was born in New Hampshire and died March 3, 1898, at Nezperce. He was a contractor and builder, a prominent Republican, and leading citizen in his country. The grandfather and great-grandfather of our subject were born in the vicinity of his nativity, and their ancestors, all being farmers, came from Scotland in 1660. The mother of our subject was born in Vermont, as were her ancestors for six generations back. The Russells were an old English colonial family. Her father was a Free-will Baptist preacher of considerable prominence. She died on June 9, 1890, aged forty-seven. The death took place at New York Mills, Minnesota. Our subject was educated in the graded schools until eighteen and then learned the trade of stationary engineer. He came to Minnesota when twenty and remained there six years. The next trip was to Spokane, Washington, and there and in the vicinity he remained ten years. In 1896, Mr. Young came to the reservation and took a piece of land. Later he relinquished this and went into the sawmill business at Lookout with Mr. Harry I. Stewart, also mentioned in this volume. Two years in this line and then Mr. Young sold out and came to Stites at the opening of the town. He started a lumber yard and dray line and two years later, in partnership with Frank M. Powers, built the saw-mill which he now owns and operates.

At Battle Lake, Minnesota, on November 19, 1886, Mr. Young married Miss Nellie R., daughter of Asa S. and Martha (Moses) Winer. She was born in Perham, Minnesota, and died at Battle Lake, Minnesota, on June 17, 1890, leaving one child, which died when two years old. Mr. Young is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Kendrick. He is a Republican in political matters and is intelligent in the questions of the day. On January 12, 1903, Mr. Young sold his interest in the lumber and sawmill business to Mr. E. E. Leach, and is now devoting his time to his mining interests.

BARNEY R. ROGERS, who was born May 21, 1863, in Dodge county, Wisconsin, is now one of the substantial citizens of Idaho county, residing about three miles southwest from Whitebird on an estate of one-quarter section. He raises stock, does general farming, and also pays some attention to mining. Mr. Rogers's father, Orrin J., was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and his father, John Barney Rogers, was a native of New York, and lived to be ninety-three years old. Orrin J. served in the Civil war two years and had two brothers, Mathew and Amos, also in that struggle. The mother of our subject, Emerance Nims, was a native of the state of New York, and had five brothers who served in the Rebellion, four of whom were killed. Her father, Loyal Nims, died at Dayton, Washington, in his ninetieth year. Her mother also died at that place. Our subject's parents were married in Dodge county, Wisconsin, and in 1874 they removed to Salt Lake City, locating a ranch of over five hundred acres close by the city, where they still remain. In 1879 our subject came to Boise on horseback and engaged with Lang & Rhine, large stockmen. Later he drove eleven yoke of oxen into Virginia City, Montana, then went to Bozeman and freighted with horses. In the spring of 1881 we find him in the Wood river country, whence he went to Sand Creek, Wyoming, in the stock business. Then he returned to Salt Lake, later journeyed to Colorado, drove cattle to Wyoming, went again to Salt Lake, traveled in southern Idaho, visited the Yellowstone Park, mined in the Lost River country, and packed his blankets to various camps in different sections, during which time he had numerous frontier experiences and endured many hardships. In 1889 he located in Uniontown, Washington. The next year he came to Camas prairie and 1892 marks the date of his settlement on his present ranch. Mr. Rogers takes great interest in the educational and general progress of the country and is an enterprising citizen. He is a member of the I. O. O. F.

On October 17, 1885, Mr. Rogers married Miss

Lodicy, daughter of Charles and Mary (Smith) Nowlan. The father came from England to the United States when young, crossed the plains and was one of the first settlers at Salt Lake, helping to lay out the town of Salt Lake. He took an active part in the erection of the Mormon temple, and died six years ago. The mother was a native of Missouri, crossed the plains in 1849, and died about eleven years ago. Five children have been born to our subject and his wife, Mary E., Troy B., Hattie E., Orrin K., Afton B. Mr. Rogers has six sisters, Adeline E., Sylvia A., Clarissa L., Emma C., Emily M., Flora E. Mrs. Rogers has one brother, George F., and one sister, Catherine.

GEORGE W. DUNCAN, a worthy and industrious farmer, dwelling about eight miles northeast from Denver, has shown himself a capable soldier in the battles of life. In the days when dark fratricidal strife lowered over this fair land he was one who quickly pressed to the front with the fire of youth and the determination of a strong man to grasp the musket in defense of the union. He fought as long as there was a foe to raise a hand against the grand old stars and stripes and then retired from the field of battle to become a stanch and substantial citizen of the country he had assisted to save. A somewhat more detailed account of his war record is worthy a place in this volume. In 1862, being then eighteen, he enlisted in Company H, Thirtieth Missouri Infantry, at Laclede, Linn county. He was in active service from that time until April 9, 1865, when he was mustered out, a veteran bearing the laurels of a brave soldier and defender of the homes of his country. Among the many conflicts in which he participated, we may mention Chickasaw bayou, Arkansas Post, Jackson, the siege of Vicksburg, the second battle at Jackson, Mississippi, then at Fort Blakely, Alabama. In Columbus, Texas, he was honorably discharged, and on August 21, 1865, he wended his way back to his home. He left that home a youth and now came back a bearded veteran, crowned with proper laurels freely given by a grateful nation to faithful and brave service. He remained in civil life until June 24, 1872, when he migrated to Yamhill county, Oregon, and there farmed for six years. In 1878 he came to the territory now embraced in Latah county, which was then Nez Perces, where he wrought with display of wisdom and enterprise until 1902, at which time he sold his property there and located his present place. He owns a snug little fruit ranch of sixty acres, and is making himself a comfortable home place for the declining years of his life. Mr. Duncan has two brothers and three sisters, Thomas M., Benjamin W., Nannie Hoffman, Margaret O'Bryan, Cornelia E. Crafton.

On December 22, 1869, Mr. Duncan married Miss Susan, daughter of John and Rebecca (Carpenter) Bowen, natives of Kentucky. Mrs. Duncan was born in Illinois, on June 3, 1852, and has one brother, William, and one sister, Mary E. To Mr. and Mrs. Duncan have been born two sons and five daughters, Thomas M., born in Yamhill county, on November 14, 1872; Earl V., born in Latah county, on February 5, 1894; Irene, born in Oregon, on December 25, 1874; Ora Nancy, born in Oregon, on April 7, 1876; Mabel E., born in Latah county, December 22, 1879; Maggie, born in Latah county, December 27, 1881; Bessie L., born in Latah county, February 28, 1889. Mr. Duncan is a Republican and is always found in the front ranks of those who forward the advancement and development of the country. He is a man of good standing, has shown himself a genial and pleasant companion, a man of worth, a stanch friend, a patriotic supporter of the government and a good business man. He and his estimable wife have journeyed on for many years together, and now as the zenith is about reached, they have the satisfaction of knowing that a good record has been made, that a proper competence has been laid by and that they have hosts of friends from every quarter.

CHARLES D. BRACKETT, of Whitebird, Idaho county, Idaho, is a native of Kansas, having been born at Larned, Pawnee county, February 25, 1877.

His father, a veteran of the Civil war, was born in the state of New York; his mother was a native of Canada, born at Ottawa. Her maiden name was Mary A. Tierney, and she came to the United States, locating in Iowa, in 1851. Herself and children are members of the Catholic church. Until the age of ten years our subject was reared and educated in Kansas. In 1888 he crossed the plains with a wagon train, and after a journey of three months' duration, arrived at Spokane Falls, Washington. Later he located at Moscow, where he attended school four years. His parents removed to Whitebird, Idaho, on the Salmon river, in 1891, where Charles engaged in ranching. But aside from that industry his pursuits have been many and varied, including mining, agriculture, freighting and the cattle business. In 1901 he made a trip of four thousand miles, visiting relatives, among whom he numbers many of the most highly respected and influential people of Clinton county, Iowa, including ex-Senator McGinn, and Dr. Richard Monahan. Returning to the west he engaged in the cattle business, and later visited the now famous Thunder Mountains, where, in the spring of 1902, he made a number of locations.

JOHN T. CRAMBLIT. In all the principal camps of the northwest from the early day until the present, the subject of this article has wrought with winning hands many times and always accompanied with the toil, hardship and deprivations incident to early mining. He is a man of stability and substantial qualities and has a good standing, and has many warm friends.

John T. Cramblit was born in Ohio, on January 16, 1836, being the son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Lukens) Cramblit, natives of Maryland. The paternal ancestors came from Germany. The mother of our subject died in January, 1896. John T. was reared in Ohio and attended the high school of Senecaville, from which he graduated in due time. When twenty-six, he engaged in mercantile pursuits, which continued for seven years. In 1862 he crossed the plains and located in Auburn, Oregon, where he delved for hidden treasure. One year later he was in the Boise basin, where three years of hard labor were spent. Then he journeyed to Portland and operated the Farmers' hotel for three years. Next we see him in Lagrande, where, for fourteen years, he operated a drug store. Then he sold out and returned to his first western occupation, mining and prospecting. He has several good quartz claims in the Sumpter district, and also has much other mining property. Mr. Cramblit is a member of the A. F. & A. M. at Lagrande. He has two brothers and four sisters, Eli, Alexander, Julia A. Albin, Naomi, Mary J. Albison, Elizabeth.

On March 1, 1866, Mr. Cramblit married Frances, daughter of William and Hannah (Huston) Carter. The father, who was a native of Indiana and an old Oregon pioneer, is now deceased. The mother also came from Indiana in 1862 and is now deceased. Mrs. Cramblit was born in Terre Haute, Indiana, was married in Portland, and died March, 1900, in Baker City, Oregon, leaving four children, Rosie G., wife of E. H. Ruckman, in Stites, where our subject makes his home most of the time; Clara, wife of W. M. Moore, in Baker City, foreman in the Herald office; John, a butcher in Baker City, now living in our subject's old home; Bertie, in Baker City. Mrs. Cramblit had one sister, Catherine, wife of W. Caldwell, in Baker City.

LUCIEN TURMES resides about three miles south of Whitebird, where he owns an estate of one-half section, and devotes himself to its culture and raising stock. He was born in Luxemburg, Germany, November 6, 1867, being the son of Wenzel and Susana (Kiser) Turmes, natives also of Germany. The father was a plumber by trade. He served five years as sergeant in the regular Belgian army, and then came to the United States in 1869, landing in New York. The next year he came to Minnesota, and the mother arrived from the old country with the two children. Our subject was the elder and had one sister, Mrs. Margaret Culom. After a short residence in Minnesota they moved to Yankton, South Dakota, whence in the spring of 1879 they journeyed to Ada county, Idaho, and in the fall of the next year they settled on Shoofly creek in Owyhee county, where they still live. Six children were born to the parents after coming to this country. In 1891 our subject started to seek his fortune in prospecting. Then he went into partnership with Dennis Holland, of Lewiston, and operated in the Crooks' Corral country with reasonable success for some time; then sold out. Our subject then went into partnership with James Powell, continuing for three years. In the spring of 1901 Mr. Turmes bought Mr. Powell's interest and has continued since in general farming and stock raising.

On September 5, 1900, Mr. Turmes married Miss Lizzie M., daughter of Tryon J. and Mary A. (Tierney) Brackett, natives, respectively, of New York and Canada. Mrs. Turmes was born April 4, 1881, in Morris county, Kansas. They have two children, Elmo J. and Aloysius Victor.

JOHN TAYLOR is one of the early pioneers of the Pacific coast, and his energy and stirring spirit have made him a leading figure in the various places where he has wrought, especially in freighting, in mining and in prospecting. Mr. Taylor was born in Massachusetts, on June 15, 1836, was educated in Chicopee Falls, and in 1855 accompanied his father and brother on the trip to California via steamer, in which the sons had the sad duty of burying the father at sea. He mined with his brother in Shasta county until 1859, then went to Sacramento and freighted. He hauled freight to Virginia City until the Union Pacific was completed in 1870. He had one of the handiest and most complete outfits on the road, consisting of eighteen mules and six wagons. It was of the size to best pay in this work, and he continued to use this until 1883, transporting goods from the railroad to southern Nevada, Belmont, Columbus, Belleville, and so forth. In March, 1886, he landed in Idaho county, having also spent some time in Arizona. He at once secured a homestead and also a pre-emption where he now lives and has continued here since. He sold his pre-emption later, and in January, 1903, Mr. Taylor sold eighty acres of his homestead. He is a strong Republican, is one of the substantial and highly esteemed men of the county and has hosts of friends, being well acquainted with the pioneers of this section. Mr. Taylor had one brother, mentioned in this work, and one sister, Mary, in Springfield, Massachusetts.

JACOB E. HOLBROOK is a highly respected young farmer and stockman of Idaho county, who resides five miles southeast of Whitebird. He was born on January 18, 1876, in Whitman county, Washington, the son of Russell and Margaret K. (Rice) Holbrook. The parents were very early pioneers of the west, settling first in Oregon, whence they came to Whitman county. After some years of residence in that section they moved to the Salmon river country, which was about eighteen years ago. Our subject located his present homestead in 1897 and has about one hunderd acres of good land, the balance being grazing. The place is well improved with house, barn, orchard, etc., and is annually laid under tribute by the skill of Mr. Holbrook to produce excellent returns in crops. In addition to this property Mr. Holbrook has a goodly holding of cattle and horses.

On January 16, 1900, occurred the marriage of Jacob E. Holbrook and Christie Karnes. She was born May 22, 1881, in Whitman county, Washington. To this union there has been born one child, Alberta K. Mrs. Holbrook is a daughter of John and Elizabeth Karnes. Mr. Holbrook has labored for himself since he was twelve years of age and much credit is due him for the enterprise and energy that he has manifested.

LORAN D. HOFFMAN dwells about six miles northeast from Denver on eighty acres which he homesteaded on March 15, 1902. He has some cattle and hogs and is engaged in the good labor of improving his place and raising stock.

Loran D. Hoffman was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, on June 6, 1876, the son of Andrew M. and Nannie D. (Duncan) Hoffman. The father was born in Illinois, on May 13, 1848, and at the time of the Civil war enlisted in Company I, Fiftieth Illinois Infantry, and served during the entire war, being honorably discharged at its close. The mother was born in Missouri, on November 9, 1847, and her father, Henry Duncan, was born in Kentucky, in 1807. She was educated for a teacher and taught in Missouri during the war. Our subject attended school and worked with his parents until he was twenty-one, and on July 11, 1897, went to Goldendale, Washington, and thence to the O. R. & N. across and into Oregon, where he worked out. He walked all the way from his home and returned with five dollars, the same amount he started with. He attended school some months, then went to Oakesdale, where he harvested and worked a time, after which he went to school again at his home. We next see him in Oakesdale working, then back to school again at home. He went to work in Polk county in the hop yards and on July 19, 1901, went to Latah county, and the following fall, on November 6, he made his advent into Idaho county, taking his homestead the following March. Mr. Hoffman has two brothers and five sisters, Burd O., Sidney W., Grace A., Lela E., Dora B., Jessie O., Leota L. Mr. Hoffman is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the Order of Washington, and is a staunch Republican. He is an active member of the Christian church, and stands well in the community.

JESSE G. AUSTIN. From the fertile prairies of Missouri to the rich slopes of Idaho county, the subject has farmed in various places and has always displayed that skill and thrift which bring about real development and upbuilding. At present Mr. Austin is dwelling on a farm ten miles north from Clearwater, and not only handles that but also raises considerable stock, having now sixty head.

Jesse G. Austin was born in Jackson county, Missouri, on September 28, 1835, being the son of Robert and Eliza J. (Watkins) Austin, natives of Missouri, and born in 1811. The grandparents on both sides were pioneers in Missouri; in 1865 the mother of our subject was called hence by death. The father sold out and went to Kansas in 1867, and later to Modoc county, California, where he now lives. Our subject was educated in Missouri and remained with his parents until he was twenty-five. Then came independent action, and in 1861 he went to Pike county, Illinois, which was the home until 1867. He then journeyed to Kansas, Johnson county, where fourteen years were spent. Thence Mr. Austin came to Oregon, then to Whitman county, Washington. He purchased two hundred and forty acres four miles northeast from Oakesdale and farmed there until the summer of 1892, when he sold the property, and August saw him with his family on his present place and this has continued to be the family home since that time. Mr. Austin is prospered and is one of the respected and leading citizens of his section. He has the following brothers and sisters: James T., George E. and William H., deceased, John H., Sarah, deceased.

On January 29, 1860, Mr. Austin married Sarah A., daughter of John and Emilia (Hastings) Sellars. The father, a brick mason, was born in Pennsylvania, and settled in Pike county, Illinois. In 1845 he removed to Kansas, but later returned to Illinois, where he died. The mother of Mrs. Austin was born in Indiana on November 23, 1822, her parents being pioneers of that state. Mrs. Austin was born in Indiana on March 23, 1842, and has three sisters: Abbie W., Melissa Hawkins, Ella Crockett. Five children have come to bless this household: Christopher C., born December 26, 1862; William A., born May 20, 1865; John H., born July 16, 1867; Mary, born January 2, 1874; Robert S., born July 5, 1877. Mrs. Austin belongs to the Christian church. Mr. Austin is a Democrat and is an advocate of first class roads and the best of schools.

GEORGE ROSSITER. Five miles east from Whitebird is the estate and home of the subject of this review. The place consists of one hundred and sixty acres of good land, the title to which Mr. Rossiter secured by the right of homestead in the early nineties. He has a good dwelling, fine orchard, does general farming and stock raising. He is one of the respected and esteemed members of society and is a man of sound principles and integrity.

George Rossiter was born on June 14, 1865, in Osage county, Kansas, being the son of Samuel and Mary (Bly) Rossiter, natives of Pennsylvania. The father came to Osage county in a very early day and in 1869 removed thence to Jefferson county, Nebraska. In 1877 he migrated with his family to Pullman, Washington, and there entered land and engaged in farming. In 1881 he died, being in his sixty-sixth year. The mother died in the same year. About this time our subject started out for himself. He was variously employed until 1891, when he came near his present place and entered a pre-emption, which he sold later and took the homestead mentioned. Mr. Rossiter has three sisters and two brothers: Mrs. Eliza J. Fisher, Mrs. Mary A. Horstman, Mrs. Emma Ashpaugh, Samuel, Stephen.

On August 25, 1891, Mr. Rossiter married Miss Mattie, daughter of George W. and Ellen Curtis. Mr.

Curtis crossed the plains from Kansas with his family in a very early day. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rossiter: Emma L., Samuel R., Myrtle M. and Lulu M.

EDWARD C. SMITH lives five miles southeast of Whitebird and is one of the substantial stockmen and farmers of the county. He was born December 15, 1868, in Quincy, Illinois, and is the son of Pleasant C. and Anna M. (Bidle) Smith. The father was a native of Tennessee and crossed the plains in the early 'fifties to California with ox teams, later returning to Illinois. The mother had crossed the plains and returned to Illinois, and then went by water to California, accompanying her parents on both occasions. Our subject crossed the plains with his parents in 1870 to Sonoma county, California; they went thence in 1885 to Whitman county, Washington. From the age of five until eighteen Edward C. attended school and received a good education. He followed farming with his father until 1893, but the fall previous he took his present place as a homestead and since 1893 it has been the scene of his labors. Mr. Smith has a nice band of cattle, a good farm and is a prosperous man. This speaks well for his abilities and energies, when we understand that he started in 1893 with no cattle whatever.

On January 8, 1895, was celebrated the marriage of Edward C. Smith and Miss Esther Karnes. Mrs. Smith was born March 3, 1876, her parents being John and Elizabeth Karnes. In 1876 they came from Kansas in wagons, to Whitman county, Washington, and in 1892 they removed to the Salmon river, where they now reside. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been blessed by the advent of two children, Lewis C. and Laura. They are people of excellent standing and have the good will and confidence of all in the community.

ALBERT GALLAWAY. The subject of this article is a miner and so successfully has he followed his vocation that he has secured a goodly competence and is now one of the substantial men of Idaho county. He was born on April 9, 1858, in Monroe county, Mississippi, being the son of George M. and Louisa T. Gallaway. In the fall of 1860 he came with his parents to Arkansas and there owing to the fact that the father took sides with the Union cause and enlisted to fight for his country and flag, the family were forced to endure great hardships. Our subject well remembers those days of trials and trouble. On one occasion he was asked by a Confederate soldier what he was. His reply, "I am a little boy" displayed a presence of mind and wisdom far beyond his years, but the soldier was determined to search out the political standing of the child and said, "What would you be if you were a man?" Whereupon the lad replied, "I would be a Fed." The inhuman tyrant said he would kill him and followed his word by a stroke of the sword which bereft the boy's hat of the brim on one side and grazed his shoulder. His prompt action and alertness were all that saved his life. In 1875 the family came to Jackson county, Oregon. Our subject, though but a lad, drove a team all the way and took his share of guard duty. To test him one night the men drew the loads from his gun and a man named Church, disguised in a blanket, played Indian. Young Gallaway promptly exploded both caps and then sprang for another gun he had held in reserve. Church quickly called a halt and decided that the lad had courage enough to attend to guard duty. The family removed from Jackson county to Yakima county, Washington, in 1876. Two years later they settled near Palouse, and in 1882 our subject went to Missoula county, Montana, where he was assistant foreman in the construction of telegraph lines for a year and a half. In December, 1883, he located at Whitebird, his parents having previously come hither. Mr. Gallaway followed farming, mining and riding the range and especially in mining has he been very successful. Since childhood Mr. Gallaway has been a real nimrod. The wild turkeys were the first game that he bagged and the first winter he came to this county he killed eighty-seven deer during the hunting season. He also killed thirteen elk, eleven of them being killed on one day with eleven shots. His experience in bear hunting, his narrow escapes and thrilling adventures, would make a volume in themselves. Mr. Gallaway is now devoting his attention to the development of mining property.

STEPHEN K. MAHURIN is not only one of the enterprising citizens of Idaho county but is also a veteran of that great struggle wherein he fought to preserve the union and our free institutions. He is a deserving man and justly claims a position in this connection. Stephen K. Mahurin was born on March 14, 1845, in Grayson county, Kentucky, being the son of William H. and Anne (Dewees) Mahurin, both natives of the same county. The father was born on January 28, 1816, and died in his seventy-sixth year in Graham county, Kansas. The mother was born on July 16, 1821, and died in her seventy-fourth year in the same county as her husband. At the age of nine our subject came to Brown county, Illinois, with his parents, and thence to Linn county, Missouri. On October 19, 1863, he enlisted in Company G, Sixth Iowa Cavalry, and was sent to protect the traffic on the Upper Missouri river. On July 28, 1864, he was in a battle with the Sioux Indians which lasted from daylight until five P. M., and so fierce was the struggle that they were unable to obtain any refreshments during this long and trying period. He was in many other skirmishes and battles with the savages and had some very narrow escapes, but was never wounded. However, he was once struck with a spent ball. At the close of the war he was honorably discharged and is now a member of the G. A. R.

On August 17, 1869, Mr. Mahurin married Miss Anna L., daughter of Obadiah and Jane R. (Clark)

Austin, born in Kentucky on June 4, 1807, and on August 3, 1810, in Missouri, respectively. They were pioneers of Henry county, Missouri, and the father died there on January 14, 1853. Mrs. Mahurin was born in Henry county, Missouri, on April 15, 1847. Our subject journeyed with his family to Iowa, thence to Nebraska and in 1888 he came to the Grande Ronde valley, Oregon. One year later he moved to St. Marys, Idaho, and two years subsequently came to his present home, five miles east of Whitebird. He located a good homestead and has devoted himself to its improvement together with handling cattle, horses and hogs. The place is supplied with plenty of water, has two large barns and other valuable improvements. Mr. Mahurin is a staunch Republican and has always taken an active part in the campaigns as well as in educational matters, being now clerk of the district. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mahurin: Sterling P., Violet, deceased, Stephen L., James W., deceased, Thomas C., Ada Bender, and Daniel W.

STONEWALL J. CRAIG. Among the substantial and capable men who have weathered the pioneer days of Idaho county and whose labors have made her the prosperous division that she is today, we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, who has a fine farm one-half mile east from Morrow, which he took in the eighties and has made his home since. He raises general crops and cattle, horses, and hogs, being thrifty, industrious and successful in his labors.

Stonewall J. Craig was born in Callaway county, Missouri, on September 7, 1863, being the son of Joseph L. and Mary E. (Jones) Craig, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. His early life was spent in the native place and there he received his education. At the age of twenty-four, it being 1887, he came west to Spokane and followed the real estate business for one year, after which he came to his present place in Idaho county and settled, having explored the country previous to this. His parents came across the country the next spring and settled near Cheney, Washington, leasing land while also they took a place adjoining that of our subject and remain there still. Mr. Craig at once took up general farming and raising stock and has steadily devoted himself to it since. He had made up his mind to take a further educational course, but about that time he met Miss Maude W. Rice, and he changed his mind, and on December 24, 1891, Miss Maude Westlake Rice and Mr. Craig were made husband and wife. Mrs. Craig is the daughter of William M. and Sarah M. (Westlake) Rice. The father was born in Troy, New York, June, 1844, came to Lewiston in 1882, then on to Idaho county, and is now operating a commission establishment in Seattle. In 1894, Mr. Rice established the town of Westlake, naming it from his wife. His ancestors were pioneers in Massachusetts and were prominent in the Revolution. Mrs. Rice was born in New York city in 1847. Her father was an Englishman and came to the United States when young. Her mother was a member of the Quakers and was of Dutch extraction. Mrs. Craig was born in Brooklyn, New York, on November 26, 1872, and has the following brothers and sisters: John B., Mary L. Harford, Florence M., Grace, William C., Archibald, Ernest. Mr. Craig's brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in the volume. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Craig: Charles H., Elsie, Joseph L., Jennie A., and Mary K. Mr. Craig is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Morrow and of the M. W. A. in Westlake. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church. He is justice of the peace in Westlake township. Mr. Craig is a true blue Democrat and labors hard for success in the campaigns. His party desired to nominate him for state senator but he refused and they, without his knowledge, nominated him for sheriff, but the ticket went down. He has over a half section of land and is well-to-do.

EVERETT G. DEARDORFF is a young man of promise and although he is not one of the earlier pioneers, still he comes to Idaho county with that capability and energy which will materially augment the building force and advancing spirit of the county. He was born in Callaway county, Missouri, on December 17, 1879, the son of James R. and Rebecca (King) Deardorff. The father was born in Ohio, on October 6, 1859, and is now a farmer, also operates a saw mill and a grist mill. The mother of our subject was born in Illinois, was bereft of her parents when an infant, and she died in 1886. Our subject was a constant attendant on the common schools between the times of farm work up to 1897, then he went to Illinois, and was rejected when enlisting for the Spanish war on account of his youth. Returning home he remained until the spring of 1899, then wrought on government work on the Mississippi and six months later went to Chillicothe normal school in Missouri, then returned to the government work, being foreman of the cutting crew. Later he served in the capacity of cook, then wrought in a glucose factory, then returned to the same normal school, after which he visited his home and on the third day of July, 1902, he came west, landing in Idaho county, where he went to work near Grangeville, on a farm. He took the school examination and securing a certificate for teaching, chose his first school in the Redrock district, and on February 20, he finished successfully a five months' term. Three days later he began another term, at the Lamb school near Lowe and is fast making himself popular as a teacher. Mr. Deardorff has one brother, Urban, one half-brother, Earl, and one half-sister, Leota. Mr. Deardorff is a Democrat and active in the realm of political life. He has made application for a membership in the I. O. O. F. and is a popular young man.

GEORGE E. PUTNAM is one of the business men of Westlake, having now a hardware and furniture establishment, which he is operating with good success, and being a man of uprightness, he merits and receives the good will and confidence of the people.

George F. Putnam was born in Winnebago county, Illinois, on July 16, 1857, being the son of Goyne M. and Lavina (Babcock) Putnam. The father was born in New York, on January 14, 1822, and died in January, 1902. He was a direct descendant of General Putnam of Revolutionary fame. The mother was born in Indiana in 1823 and is now living in Oregon. Our subject had a great misfortune when he was two years old that rendered him a cripple all his life, being obliged to use a wheel chair now. He was educated in Rock county, Wisconsin, whither his parents removed when he was a lad. He remained with his parents until thirty and with them came to Milton, Oregon, in 1889. They settled in the Walla Walla valley in July, and our subject engaged in the grocery business. He followed that business there and in Walla Walla for ten years, and in 1899 came to Westlake and entered the same business. A short time subsequent, Mr. Putnam sold out and returned to Walla Walla, only to return to Westlake in 1900 and open his present business, where he has continued since that date, doing a good business and being one of the substantial men of the town. Mr. Putnam is still a jolly bachelor and content with the quieter joys of the celibatarian. He is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist church and is a good supporter of his faith. He is interested in general progress and upbuilding, and is a public minded man. Politically he is a Republican. Mr. Putnam has the following named brothers and sisters: Florence L. Kelly, Myrtle E. Stron, Walter E., Harry E., Herbert E., and Katie M., with our subject at Westlake.

CHARLES FLYNN is one of the prosperous and thrifty farmers and stockmen of Idaho county and has been for many years, while he also handles mining interests, being one of the earliest to arrive in these districts and having remained in this section since those days of two dollars a pound for flour.

Charles Flynn was born in Prescott, Ontario, Canada, on August 8, 1841, being the son of Benjamin D. and Margaret (Thistlethwaite) Flynn, natives of Canada. The father was a blacksmith and died on May 24, 1868, and the mother died on February 28, 1892. Our subject was brought up in his native place and received his education from the excellent schools of Ontario. He left the parental roof when he was eighteen, and came by steamboat to San Francisco, crossing the isthmus by pack animals. He was soon in Columbia and Tuolumne county and spent several years in the alluring search for the precious metal. In the spring of 1862, he came by steamer to Portland, and thence up the Columbia and so on to Florence. He prospected there during 1862-63 and the next year went to Newsome creek and took placer work in earnest. He was successful and since that time has been more or less interested in properties there. When the war broke out with the Indians, Mr. Flynn joined the Mt. Idaho Guards, being at Harpster, and was detailed with others to guard the women and children, which responsibility was discharged with the utmost care and faithfulness. In 1883 Mr. Flynn took up his present farm as a pre-emption claim, it being two miles north from Clearwater. He has made this his headquarters since that time and while he conducts farming and raising stock, still he is interested in mining. He owns a share in the well known Robin and Bluebird mines on Newsome, with others. Mr. Flynn has the following brothers and sisters: Robert J., Thomas W., Frances McIntyre, Frederic E. Mr. Flynn is an active Democrat and is always allied on the side of improvement, being really one of the builders of the county, since his labors have been wisely bestowed here for forty years.

WILLIAM W. MATTOX, who dwells about four miles southeast from Lowe on a farm which he secured under the homestead right, is one of the industrous and capable farmers of Idaho county and is deserving of mention in the work that chronicles the history of this section. He was born in Carroll county, Arkansas, on June 9, 1857, the son of John C. and Telitha J. (Davis) Mattox. The father, who was born in North Carolina, on December 6, 1824, was detailed as blacksmith during the Rebellion, and was a pioneer in that line in Arkansas. He married on August 21, 1847. The mother of our subject was born on December 7, 1831, and died on March 19, 1893. At the age of twenty, our subject started out to do battle on life's arena alone and was possessed of the capital of a pair of good stout hands and plenty of grit and courage. Two years later he went to Texas and farmed. The next year he and his father bought three hundred acres, which they sold the following year, and returned to the native place and rented land, then bought sixty acres. Eight years later he sold out and came to Idaho county, landing here on May 28, 1893. He rented a quarter, later rented three hundred acres and then had the misfortune to lose his house and all personal possessions by fire. In October, 1896, he took his present place as a homestead, and since that time has devoted himself to its culture and improvement. He has nine head of neat cattle, fifteen horses and other stock and is cultivating about half of his land. Mr. Mattox has the following brothers and sisters: John W., Q. Monroe, Jamison, Gillem T., Sarah J., Alice U.

In Arkansas, on August 26, 1880, Mr. Mattox married Miss Belzora C., daughter of John E. and Mary F. (Williams) Wallis, natives of Tennessee and Missouri, respectively. The mother was born in June, 1839. The father was wealthy but lost all in the war. Mrs. Mattox was born on June 21, 1859, was educated well and taught in Arkansas. She has one brother, William W., a lawyer, born in Missouri, on February 17, 1858, and died December 21, 1901. To this marriage there have been born four boys and one girl: Willis L., born June 19, 1881; John C., born March 12, 1883; Clisha W., born July 29, 1887; Ewin E., born July 20, 1891; Mary T., born August 5, 1894. The boys were all born in Arkansas, but the girl is a native of Nez Perces county. Mr. Mattox is a Republican, and he and his wife belong to the Christian church.

SHERMAN S. GALLAWAY is one of the rising young men of Idaho county, who devotes his attention to the production of the fruits of the field and stock raising. His well kept estate of 200 acres lies five miles east of Whitebird, and among other improvements which enhance its value, we especially mention the orchard. It covers seven acres, has been wisely selected from the choicest kinds of fruit and is probably one of the best bearing orchards in the county of Idaho. Mr. Gallaway justly takes a pardonable pride in this excellent improvement. He was born on May 27, 1870, in Searcy county, Arkansas, the son of George M. and Louisa T. Gallaway. When our subject was five years of age he was brought across the plains by his parents to Jackson county, Oregon. During the great Centennial year they made their way to Yakima county, Washington, and in the spring of 1878 removed to the Palouse country, then in the spring of 1883 they came to Whitebird. At the early age of sixteen our subject assumed the individual responsibilities of life and from then until the present he has devoted much of his time and energy to rearing stock. In 1893 he located his present place and soon thereafter bought forty acres more. In addition to this estate he has a nice band of cattle and horses besides other stock. The farm is well supplied with water, has an abundant out range, and is very well situated. Mr. Gallaway is a member of the I. O. O. F. and stands exceedingly well in the community.

Ever since Mr. Gallaway has been large enough to lift a rifle he has given considerable time to the art of marksmanship, but not content with that alone he has penetrated the various forests and mountain districts in and adjacent to Idaho county, and many are the rugged grizzlies and cinnamons which he has met in mortal combat. Although he has been in extreme and dangerous positions on various occasions he has invariably come out on top, the rugged bear biting the dust. Mr. Gallaway supplies his larder largely with wild meat of various kinds and is familiar with all the hunting grounds in this section of the country.

GILBERT N. LAMORE, who has been one of the leading spirits in the inception and progress of Clearwater, is residing about one mile south of the post-office and has a good piece of land taken as a homestead. He is one of the prominent men of the community, has manifested integrity and uprightness and won all as his friends.

Gilbert N. Lamore was born in Eau Claire, Berrien county, Michigan, on December 30, 1852, being the son of Louis and Sarah L. Lamore. The father was born in Canada, on August 14, 1822, of French ancestors. He came with his parents, Enos and Josephine Lamore, to Michigan when he was eight, and to use their words, it was a "howling" wilderness. He went to Buffalo and learned the trade of ship carpenter, and in 1846, May 17, he married Miss Sarah Losey. They went to Pipestone township, Berrien county, bought forty acres and when he died, January 24, 1899, he had two hundred acres more. The mother of our subject was born on January 19, 1823, in New York, went to Michigan in 1836 with her parents, who dwell there still. Our subject was reared and educated in Michigan and learned the carpenter trade from his father. On September 5, 1876, he came to Portland, thence to Forest Grove, where he farmed and did carpentering. On March 12, 1884, Mr. Lamore came to Dayton, Washington, and soon afterward removed to his present place and took a homestead. Mr. Lamore now has one hundred and fifty-eight acres, having donated two acres for a free cemetery. He raises stock, does general farming and carpentering, and owns considerable property in addition, including lots and store building and so forth, in Clearwater. Mr. Lamore has the following brothers and sisters: Josephine E., Charles L., George S., Cornelia E., deceased, Lydia M. Rodell.

On October 17, 1889, in Benton Harbor, Michigan, Mr. Lamore married Miss Florence E., daughter of Samuel and Lucy Correll, of Michigan. She was born on July 16, 1855, and died at Forest Grove on October 13, 1893. Two children were born to this marriage, Agnes, who died on December 5, 1890, and Bert, who died in August, 1892. Mrs. Lamore had two brothers, Loren and Lloyd. Mr. Lamore is a Republican, and is always striving for better roads, better schools, and general improvement. He was the first mover for a school at Clearwater, with A. W. Williams organized a literary club, assisted to start a Sunday school, and in all ways Mr. Lamore has shown himself deeply interested in the welfare and progress of the community.

HENRY R. CALDER, owner and operator of the sawmill one-half mile north of the town of Clearwater, and also owner of a good farm which he conducts in addition to the mill, is one of the substantial and industrious citizens of our county and is deserving of especial mention in the history of northern Idaho.

Henry R. Calder was born in Kennebec county, Maine, on December 12, 1840, being the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Harris) Calder, natives of Massachusetts. The father was born in 1794, of Scotch ancestry, was master of a whaler out of New Bedford and in later years moved to Maine and settled to farming, where he died in 1865. The mother died in 1845. She was descended from the Pilgrims. Our subject was educated in Maine and Connecticut, and when fifteen went to sea as apprentice on the Nestorian. When eighteen he joined the United States navy and sailed on board the Dispatch, a steamer engaged in geodetic survey. Serving his time, he was honorably discharged and returned to Maine. While on a visit to his sister in New Jersey, Mr. Calder enlisted in Company C, Twenty-eighth New Jersey Volunteers, under Captain Joe C. Leston, the date being August 30, 1862. He fought in the battles of Acquia creek, Fredericksburg and under Hooker at Chancellorsville. He was second lieutenant at Fredericksburg, where he was wounded in the arm, and first lieutenant under Hooker. He was discharged on July 6, 1863, then went to Illinois, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and mined and did various work. He returned to Kansas and entered the butcher business, but later farmed. In 1878 he came overland to Colfax, Washington, and farmed there for six years. He went then to the St. Marys river country and in 1893, after having returned previously to Colfax, he bought his present place. He operated his mill on his farm until it was cleared and is now doing a good business where he is located. Mr. Calder had three sisters, now deceased, Mary, Eliza, Emma and one brother, Josiah.

On November 2, 1870, Mr. Calder married Miss Mary E., daughter of Israel and Sarah A. Trahern, natives respectively of Virginia and Pennsylvania and died in 1854 and 1847. Mrs. Calder was born on April 29, 1843, in Ohio and has the following brothers and sisters: Albert P., Adeline Dyer, Wilberforce, Warren C., Wellington A., Emma B. Gregg, Jacob. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Calder: Samuel, Ettie and Nettie, deceased, Robert S. Mr. Calder is a Republican, a substantial citizen, and was justice of the peace in 1897-8.

JAMES F. THOMPSON, an enterprising and capable farmer and stockman of Idaho county, dwells four miles east of Whitebird, where he has a good ranch, well improved and cared for in a skillful manner. He was born on February 3, 1854, in Linn county, Oregon, the son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Donaghe) Thompson. The father was born in Missouri on October 6, 1823, and the mother was born June 4, 1826. They were married in Missouri and crossed the plains in 1852, going direct to Linn county, where they located a donation claim and engaged in farming and stockraising. The father was very successful and accumulated a good property. He was a prominent man in public affairs and a leading spirit in the advancement and upbuilding of the county. He died there February 10, 1872. The mother is now living there in Linn county and is very hardy for one of her age. She is a devoted member of the Methodist church as was also her husband. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and on July 15, 1877, he married Rachel E., daughter of Benjamin and Betsey (Brooks) Olney. Mr. Olney was born March 9, 1826, in Canada and died July 6, 1884. Mrs. Olney was born September 17, 1830, and died January 22, 1860. Mrs. Thompson was born April 9, 1859, in Miami county, Kansas, and crossed the plains with her father in 1874. Mr. Olney had served for two years in the Civil war. In 1883 Mr. Thompson moved with his family to Grant county, Oregon, and engaged in the stock business there until 1891, when he came to Latah county, Idaho. In 1892 he removed thence to Camas prairie and in 1893 he settled on his present place and this has been the scene of his labors in stockraising and farming since. The following children have been born to this couple: Bertha E., deceased; Melissa M., deceased; Joseph B.: Laura L., deceased; Sarah E., deceased; Alta V., John M., Clara A., Martha C.

The night of January 9, 1894, is the saddest time in the history of this family. While all were sleeping quietly in their newly erected dwelling on the homestead a thundering avalanche of snow swept down upon them and Mr. Thompson was barely able to rush out of the house with his wife before it was buried completely. As soon as possible it was excavated but four of their girls, aged fifteen, fourteen, nine and seven, were smothered to death. Alta V. was nearly dead, but they resuscitated her. This is one of those sad accidents in human existence which reason can never compass and to which faith can only bow.

PERRY A. McGUIRE is one of the progressive and energetic farmers of Idaho county; last year he turned off five thousand bushels of oats, twelve hundred of flax and other productions in proportion. He rents three hundred acres of Indian lands ten miles southwest from Kamiah and also has some stock.

Perry A. McGuire was born in Platte county, Missouri, on December 14, 1854, the son of William and Elizabeth (Barnes) McGuire. The father was a farmer and in 1857 located the land where Leavenworth, Kansas, now stands. Here he was exposed to a severe cold which caused his death soon after leaving the farm. The mother was born in Boone county, Missouri. Our subject received a good district schooling and at the age of eighteen he started in life for himself. He had the wealth of a pair of willing hands, a good head to direct them and a courageous heart. He went to Indian territory where he was teamster one year for the United States, then in 1875 he was in the same capacity in Mexico. Returning to Colorado he prospected and mined for two years. Then his next journey was to Durango, where he freighted for four years, after which he sold his outfits and bought cattle. He remained in this industry for eight years and then sold out at a good figure. His next move was to Tillamook county, Oregon, where he farmed and raised stock for four years. Next he went to the Big Bend country in Washington, and took a homestead and timber culture, raising horses and farming for six years. Selling his property there, Mr. McGuire came to Idaho county on December 25, 1900, and has given his attention to cultivating a half section of Indian land where he now dwells. He has been a great traveler, having had many and varied experiences in the different localities in which he has resided, but always manifesting a spirit of energy and activity. Mr. McGuire has the following half-brothers and half-sisters by his step-father, Mr. Barnes: Fielden T., Thomas, George, Mary, Martha. By his step-father, Mr. McGuire, our subject, has three half-sisters: Angaline, Lee, Lizzie.

In Tillamook county, Oregon, Mr. McGuire married Miss Mity, daughter of William and Ann (Lavender) Rhoades, the wedding occurring on October 2, 1885. The parents of Mrs. McGuire were born in Missouri. To Mr. and Mrs. McGuire there has been born one child, Albert M., in Tillamook county, on October 23, 1886. Mr. McGuire is a Democrat, a man of influence and good standing.

DAVID WEDDLE lives twelve miles southwest from Kamiah and is an engineer by trade. He has wrought in various places and is a thorough master of his craft. He was born in Missouri, on November 10, 1848, the son of John C. and Jane (Busley) Weddle. The father was born in New York city in 1797 and was bound out to a manufacturer of looking glasses. When the war of 1812 broke out he ran away and enlisted in the infantry, under Reed, and served all through the war and five years afterward. The mother of our subject was born in Kentucky. Our subject attended school and in 1861 started to do for himself. He labored at various occupations and did considerable traveling, being in various states and territories. In 1892 he came to Moscow and after some time in working in the town he went to the mountains to engage in a sawmill. One year later he went on to a farm and remained six years. He did not succeed in that undertaking and went into the timber where he bought forty acres. Later he sold this and then was engineer in the mills. In 1902 he came to Idaho county and operated a threshing machine engine. Mr. Weddle has three brothers and two sisters: Samuel H., John R., James H., Charity, Telitha.

On December 16, 1881, Mr. Weddle married Miss Emma I., daughter of Andy and Rhoda McNickels. Mrs. Weddle was born in Illinois in 1861 and died on November 11, 1886. Two children were left at her death: Allie R., born in Illinois on August 9, 1883; Ida May, born in Missouri on September 22, 1886. Mr. Weddle is allied with the Democratic party and takes keen interest in political matters.

THEODORE D. SWARTS is a well known stockman and farmer residing four miles north of Whitebird. He was born March 11, 1847, in Warren county, Ohio, the son of John A. and Mary D. (Leonard) Swarts, natives respectively of Virginia and Ohio. The family crossed the plains with horse teams in 1852, to Nevada county, California, where the father did mining. Our subject attended school until sixteen and then took up mining, which he followed for a number of years. In 1864 we find him thus occupied in Florence and later he came to Camas prairie, where he carried the express from Mount Idaho to Warren. He did this business for a number of years for others and then he bought the line himself, continuing the same until 1878, when he settled at Grangeville. His residence was the third in the town. The next year he came to his present location and here he has continued raising stock and farming until the present time. His estate is well improved and he is a prosperous man. When the Indian war broke out in 1877 Mr. Swarts volunteered to come to Whitebird and fight the Indians. He was in that battle where the whites were defeated, many of the soldiers were killed and three citizens were wounded. Mr. Swarts received a bullet in his hip and laid five weeks in the hospital at Mount Idaho. G. M. Shearer was shot in the shoulder and Herman Faxon was shot in the thigh. The farm of Mr. Swarts is the scene of a portion of this battle and some of the soldiers were buried there. The identical thorn tree where the soldier was mutilated and fastened to the limbs, is still standing, and Mr. Swarts intends to always preserve it. It is very noticeable that the tree is no larger today than twenty-six years ago when the horrible act occurred.

On August 21, 1877, Mr. Swarts married Miss Electa, daughter of John T. and Clara E. (Smith) Brown. Mrs. Swarts was born December 16, 1858. Her parents crossed the continent by ox and horse teams, from New York state to Roseburg in that year. In 1867 they came to Camas prairie and the father died there in 1873. The mother is now Mrs. Baldwin, living near Grangeville. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Swarts: Pearl E., Lewis J., Marion E. Newman, Lillian R., Bertram B., Willard A., deceased, Vernon D., T. Sidney, Lulu, deceased. Mr. Swarts is a member of the A. F. & A. M., and also belongs to the Idaho Stock Association.

THOMAS SURRIDGE has won in the race of business and achievements in handling the resources of this new country, because of his energy, his sagacity, keen business discrimination and alertness to grasp the opportunity presented. He was born in London, England, on August 7, 1849, the son of John and Mary (Corcoran) Surridge. The father was born in Kravestock, Essex, England, on January 12, 1826, the descendent of sturdy yeomen who were traced back to sixteen hundred in the ancestral book. He was educated in his native land, came to the United States in 1857, settling twelve miles north from Ann Arbor, Michigan, and farmed until his death, March 20, 1898. The mother was born on May 24, 1826, in Tralee, county Kerry, Ireland. She went with her parents to London in 1834, married in May, 1846, and died on August 19, 1900. Our subject was ten years old when the family came to Michigan and he gained his education in London and Michigan. When of age he went to lumbering in Saginaw and in 1874 he came to Grass valley, California. He wrought for the Idaho Mining and Milling Company in the lumber department for a time and on May 19, 1876, he embarked on the good steamer, John L. Stevens, to Portland, arriving May 23, thence to Wallula, then by wooden rail over the Baker line to Walla Walla, and on May 28th he landed in Lewiston. He came on to Harpster, taking a section by the different rights. On June 13, 1877, Mr. Surridge joined Company B, Second Idaho Militia, and was messenger between Major Williams and Colonel McConville at the Clearwater fight. Since that time Mr. Surridge has remained in Harpster, has a one-fourth interest in a general merchandise store, half interest in the livery, does real estate and other business and is one of the leading men of the community. In April, 1898, Mr. Surridge and his brother bought four hundred and eighty acres and then platted forty as the town of Bridgeport. Mr. Surridge handles his large farm to general productions, raises stock and also handles mining interests.

On November 27, 1874, Mr. Surridge married Julia M., daughter of Charles and Mathilda (Hammond) Pecord, natives of France. The father was born in 1827, came to Canada when seven years old, learned the blacksmith trade there with his uncle and wrought at various places and finally, 1866, came to Orwell, Vermont, where he still resides. The mother was born in 1827, came to Canada with her parents when fifteen, married in 1857 and died in 1893. Mrs. Surridge was born in Oswego, New York, on October 3, 1856, and has brothers and sisters as follows: Mathilda Chamberlain, Joseph, deceased, Fanny Schakett, Charles, Phoebe Clark, deceased, Wilford L., Georgia, deceased. Mr. Surridge has the following brothers and sisters: James, Eliza Case, George, Kate Emerson, Annie Cyluff, Joe. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Surridge: May Smith, Kate Lapp, John, Georgia. Mr. Surridge is a stanch Democrat and a member of the A. F. & A. M., Mt. Idaho Lodge No. 9.

WALTER L. BROWN, the senior member of the firm of Brown & Brust, general merchants of Cottonwood, is one of the substantial and capable business men of Idaho county and has manifested himself a man of capabilities, worth and integrity, which have won for him not only the excellent patronage in business ways which he enjoys, but also the high esteem and confidence of the people.

Walter L. Brown was born in Buckingham county, Virginia, on December 31, 1865, being the son of John W. and Sarah A. (Miller) Brown, natives of Virginia. The father was born in 1827 and died in 1887, having been a merchant. The mother was of Scotch extraction and died in Grangeville. Our subject was raised in Virginia, received a good education and business training; at the age of nineteen he determined to try the responsibilities of life for himself. He landed in Lewiston on December 10, 1885, and at once went to clerking for Mr. Barnett. He also worked for J. P. Vollmer & Company and then went to Portland and took a business course. In 1888 Mr. Brown went to Warren and took charge of a stock of goods for Mr. Benson. In 1890 he, in partnership with W. J. Kelly, bought the stock and continued the business until 1892. In that year Mr. Brown sold out and came to Cottonwood. He engaged in business with Henry Wax, which firm did a good business until 1901, when Mr. Brown bought out his partner and continued the business until the end of the year alone. Then he took William G. Brust as partner and since, the business has been conducted under the firm name of Brown & Brust. They do a fine business, have a patronage from all portions of the county and are capable, upright and reliable merchants. Their stock is large and selected with the best of wisdom and is at all times complete and furnishes to the customer exactly what he wants with the assurance that it is sold to him as cheap as the markets of the world can produce.

On June 14, 1899, at Grangeville, Mr. Brown married Miss Adda Cable, who had taught school in that town for several years, being one of the successful educators of the county. Her parents were born in Ohio and her father was a Baptist preacher. Mrs. Brown was born in Ohio in 1872 and has two brothers and four sisters in California. Mr. Brown has the following brothers and sisters: Mary, John N., Nannie, Sallie, William W., Charles A., Albert A., Robert E., Thomas A. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Politically our subject is an active Democrat and an influential man of the county. He is always at the caucuses and conventions, is a man of sound judgment and his counsels are valuable to his party.

RICHARD B. HENLEY is one of the younger and enterprising citizens of Idaho county and is at present living upon his ranch, six miles up the Whitebird creek from the town. He was born October 21, 1877, in Allen county, Kansas, the son of Richard M. and Martha J. (Strickler) Henley, born in Missouri, August 15, 1849, and in Indiana, October 21, 1852, respectively. In 1880 the family crossed the plains in wagons to Buena Vista, California, and three years later they returned to Kansas. In 1891 they came to Camas prairie and our subject worked with his father at the stock business until he was eighteen years old. During this time he secured a good education in the public schools and then started a confectionery store in Grangeville. In 1901 he came to his present place, taking it as a homestead and now has it well improved with buildings and orchards and owns in addition a nice residence in Grangeville and a band of cattle. Mr. Henley started out for himself when eighteen and his stock and capital were plenty of courage and two good, strong hands, and all that he has gained is the result of hard labor and excellent management in financial affairs.

On August 15, 1900, Mr. Henley married Miss Martha Brusha, daughter of Mrs. Hadorn, of Whitebird. One child, Wallace Burton, has been born to this couple and they have also adopted two, Alfred and Frank Soten, sons of Mrs. Hadorn's sister. Mr. Henley is a member of the W. of W. and a man of enterprise and worth.

ROBERT NUGENT, at present handling a barber shop in Cottonwood, is one of the earliest pioneers in many sections of the west, but especially so in Idaho and Nez Perces counties, where he has been one of the leading miners, stage drivers, and general progressive pioneers. It will be greatly interesting to see some of the items of his career and we append the same with pleasure.

Robert Nugent was born in Rochester, New York, on April 7, 1844, being the son of John and Anna (Frazier) Nugent. The father was born in Troy, New York, was a pioneer of the west and descended from Irish extraction. The mother was born in Glasgow, of Scotch ancestry. The father went, via the Isthmus, to California in 1859, dug gold for a time, then returned to the states for his family, outfitted with ox teams and made the way to Salt Lake City. They wintered there and the next year he and our subject went to Montana. He returned to New York and Robert made his way to Lewiston. He crossed the mountains with Jim Flannigan's pack train, froze his feet and went five days without food. Finally they secured some camas from the Indians and so kept alive until they came to Lewiston. This was December 23, 1864, and since that early time Mr. Nugent has been identified with this country and is intimately acquainted with its development. He next went to Mt. Idaho, thence again to Montana and spent some time in Virginia City, returned again to Lewiston, went to Florence and wintered in Walla Walla. In 1871-2 Mr. Nugent held the important position of road supervisor and collector at Florence. He mined each year in early spring and summer and when the water gave out went to other work. In 1877 he carried the mail and pony express from Mt. Idaho to Warren and on June 13th, of that year, the Indians broke out. Mr. Nugent was sergeant in the Mt. Idaho Volunteers under Captain Randall and Major McConnell. They were across the Clearwater when General Howard was surrounded by the Indians and was later relieved by Captain Jackson. The Indians attacked the volunteers and stampeded fifty horses, but were repulsed. A detachment, in which was Mr. Nugent, went to Mt. Idaho for more horses and they drove the outposts of the Indians before them while Howard repulsed the savages on his side. After this Mr. Nugent drove the stage from Mt. Idaho to Lewiston, then raised stock with Ben F. Morris near Denver for six years. Next we see him dealing in horses in Spokane and later he settled in Cottonwood; this was in 1888, and he has been more or less identified with this place since. In that year Mr. Nugent married Charlotte Stage and took up the saloon business until 1895. Mrs. Nugent died in January, 1896. Since then Mr. Nugent has handled mining during the water season and operates a barber shop in Cottonwood. He has three brothers and two sisters: Dannie, John, Henry, Mary A., Sarah. Mr. Nugent is a Democrat and has always been central committeeman, was road supervisor for several terms, deputy for many years and is one of the active men in politics and all matters for advancement of the community.

Mr. Nugent could tell many interesting incidents of frontier life. One time he received $25.00 from a merchant for packing him across a swollen creek. Like all the volunteers, he received nothing for his services, horses lost or provisions furnished. Once in early times when Warren was the county seat, there was great rivalry between that town and Florence. Our subject was pitted against Charlie Morton, who was county assessor and lived in Warren, which place he represented, to ride a race from Florence to Warren, July 3, 1872. Distance, fifty miles, and the time not to be over five and one half hours and the purse five hundred dollars. Mr. Nugent made it in five hours, seventeen minutes and one half, beating Morton by two and one half hours. Mr. Nugent rode the horse back the next day in seven hours.

CHARLES L. RICE has wrought with display of wisdom, industry and tenacity in the development and advancement of Idaho county for years and stands to-day one of the respected and capable men and a loyal and upright citizen. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, on April 1, 1847, the son of James E. and Nancy (Bair) Rice. The father was born in Canada in 1812 and died in 1888, crossed the plains in 1844 and settled in Washington county. He moved to Idaho in 1880 and settled on Camas prairie. His parents were Americans and the mother was visiting in Canada when he was born. The mother of our subject was born in Michigan in 1817 and died in September 1902. She accompanied her husband across the plains and endured the hardships of pioneer life. Our subject was fourteen when the family left Washington county and settled in Douglas county. He was educated in these places and remained at home until 1870, when he came to Idaho county. He took land and engaged in the stock business until 1890, when he sold out and went to mining at Elk, where he continued for seven years, sold out and remained three years longer. He did well in this mining venture. Since then Mr. Rice settled at the Dewey mine, where we find him at the present time conducting the boarding house. He also has property on the Clearwater near the Dewey.

In 1897, in Oregon, Mr. Rice married Miss Margarette McCready, whose father, a pioneer in California, took an active part in the Rogue river war. Mrs. Rice was well educated and taught some time before her marriage. She has two brothers and one sister: Charles, Julia Odle, John R. Mr. Rice has three sisters and five brothers: Ann Harness, Eliza Roan, Mary McGee, Hull, John N., Russell H., James H., Frank W. Two children have been born to this union: Walter S., James H. Mr. Rice is a stanch and active Republican.

At the time of the Indian war he was living three miles north from Grangeville, having just brought his newly wedded wife home. He was notified of the threatening attitude of the Indians but did not think it worth while to move. Frank Fenn warned him again on the eve of the thirteenth and he at once went to Mt. Idaho with his wife, and stood guard that night. Frank Fenn had been picket below Grangeville and had picked up Hill Norton who had told all. He turned the boy over to another man who brought him in and Fenn, Jim Adkinson and our subject rode over to the wagon, about three and one-half miles west on the road. Moore and Day were in the wagon, Mr. and Mrs. Norton on the ground. Mr. Norton was dead. They did not know Chamberlain was with the party. They wanted water and immediately Fenn returned for assistance. Mr. Rice at the request of Mrs. Norton went to search for her sister, Lena. He saw a horse standing on the prairie a long distance off and soon became convinced it was an Indian's. He returned to the wagon and asked Adkinson to get the harness off the dead horses. He went again to look and saw Fenn coming and also saw the lone horse whirl around swiftly which was the signal for the Indians. He hurried to the aid of Adkinson and they harnessed their saddle horses in and began the race for Grangeville. The Indians were a large band and were coming with swiftness. Had it not been for the prairie being soft, they would have overtaken the wagon, but even as it was, the horses, each being ridden by its owner, encumbered with harness and wagon, made the run in time to escape the savages. They went on to Mt. Idaho and arrived there about ten o'clock A. M.

WELLINGTON M. CLARKE, of the firm of Clarke & O'Bannon, is one of the leading merchants of the section, and the firm not only handles a first-class general merchandise establishment in Harpster, but also operates another in Clearwater, doing a good business in both places and standing among the leading merchants of this portion of the county.

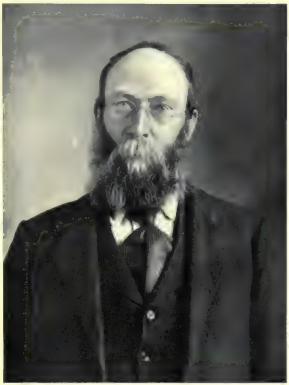
Wellington M. Clarke was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, on November 22, 1855, and a short account of his parents appears in another portion of this work. When ten he came with the balance of the family to Garnett, Anderson county, Kansas, and later he finished a course in the Geneva Academy in Allen county, that state. In 1874 Mr. Clarke went to Illinois but returned to Kansas in December, 1876. The following spring he went with his brother, Arthur, and sister and her husband, J. G. Rowton, to Mt. Idaho, via San Francisco, Portland, The Dalles, Lewiston, having the experience of cars, steamers, portage, stage, and footing. They completed their journey on April 28, 1877. On June 13, 1877, he answered the call for volunteers to fight the Indians and with fifteen others, a troop of cavalry and Perry they scouted to Whitebird, then went to Slate creek, where they were detailed as the guard for the women and children. Later they joined General Howard in the chase of the redskins. After the war Mr. Clarke worked one year for L. P. Brown and then in 1882 went to the Saw Tooth range, rode for cattle and later opened a butcher shop in the mining camp of Vienna. Selling this he took a homestead in 1884 one-half mile southeast from Clearwater. Six years were spent on this and then Mr. Clarke mined in the vicinity of Dixie. He worked a placer bought from Sam Dillinger for three years, then took charge of C. A. Hasting's store in Harpster for a year and then in company with his present partner, Mr. Clarke bought the stock and buildings. They have a fine establishment now, do a good business and as stated have also a store in Clearwater. Mr. Clarke still owns his valuable ranch, and also has various mining interests, among which is a placer property of one hundred and twenty acres one mile below Harpster. He is a Republican and is always interested and influential in the campaigns.

JOSEPH A. McKINNEY lives about one mile northeast from Lowe, where he has a farm of one hundred and forty-three acres of fine land which is being improved in a good manner. He has some stock, such as cattle, horses and hogs. He was born in Jackson county, Missouri, on April 6, 1835, the son of John and Anna (Austin) McKinney, born in Cumberland county, Virginia, on April 6, 1804, and in Indiana in 1806, respectively. The father was a minister and began his labors when he was twenty. He died June 17, 1888. The mother died in 1847 and Mr. McKinney married Orpha Carter, who crossed the plains with Dr. Whitman to be a missionary in Oregon. Mr. McKinney crossed the plains with ox teams in 1847. Our subject attended district school and then Chapel college and started out at seventeen without means save a courageous heart and willing hands. He packed to California for three years and on one occasion he struck the market just right at Jacksonville, where he sold four thousand pounds of flour for a dollar per pound. He bought sheep and handled that industry for seven years. Then he bought land and farmed. Later he was in a sawmill, then two years afterward sold and bought another farm. This he farmed sixteen years, but as his health broke down he sold and changed location and bought again, but lost heavily by fire. Then Mr. McKinney sold and bought a mill and later lost nine thousand dollars in another fire. Then he came to Athena and was overseer for a company for three years. Later Mr. McKinney came to Latah, Washington, and in 1894 to Idaho county and bought land on Cottonwood which he sold in 1902. In 1900 he located on his present place and since that time has given himself to its improvement. He has an orchard of two hundred trees, some stock, buildings and other improvements.

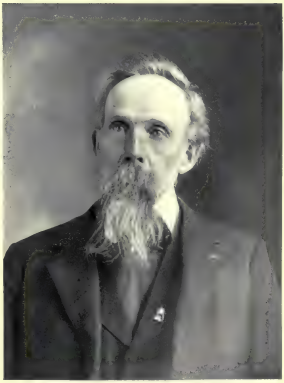
On August 4, 1854, Mr. McKinney married Miss Nancy J., daughter of John and Hannah (Venah) Wiseman, natives of Kentucky. Mrs. McKinney was born in Miami county, Indiana, on January 17, 1836, was educated in the district schools and crossed the plains with her father in 1852. Mr. McKinney has four brothers and four sisters: William, Wilkerson, John F., George B., Matilda A., Zerrelda G., Sarah, Elizabeth J. Mrs. McKinney has the following named brothers and sisters: Daniel A., Elizabeth, Catherine, Sarah, Lydia A., and also the following half-brothers and half-sisters: James B., John W., William, Hariet, Mary, Hannah. To our subject and his estimable wife there have been born the following children: William C., born June 17, 1855; Marion, born on September 8, 1857; John, born March 29, 1868; Zerrilda, born October 16, 1850; Clara E., born July 29, 1860; Alvareta C., born October 25, 1861; Olive M., born May 3, 1865; Martha A., born October 24, 1867; Ida Bell, born May 14, 1869; Ephia, born June 3, 1871; Maggie R., born October 23, 1877; Bertha E., born February 18, 1880. Mr. McKinney is a free silver man and his wife is a member of the Republican party. In church relations they adhere to the Methodist denomination.

HON. WILLIAM C. PEARSON, deceased. No compilation of the character of our volume would be complete without especial mention of the noted man whose name heads this memorial. His labors in Idaho county testify more eloquently than we are able to do of his own personal value and the great good that he accomplished during lifetime. He was a man of intrinsic worth, always holding the welfare of the community uppermost and ever laboring with that untiring zeal and energy that should characterize the real pioneer and the true builder of free institutions. William C. Pearson was born November 25, 1829, in Chautauqua county, New York, the son of Thomas Pearson, a native of England, who came to the United States when young and settled in New York. In 1853 he crossed the plains with ox teams and located in Washington county, Oregon, where he died in 1856. The mother was born in Philadelphia, in 1809, and died in Oregon in 1863. They were married in 1827 and at the time they crossed the plains had six children: Thomas M., the subject of this sketch, Henry, John, Frank and Jessie. Our subject went to California in 1856, but returned to Oregon the following year and finally settled in The Dalles, where he was married on December 15, 1862, to Miss Isabel Crooks. She was born June 11, 1848, in Boone county, Iowa. Her father, John M. Crooks, owned the land where the city of Boonesborough, Iowa, now stands, and was a prominent man in that section. He crossed the plains in 1852 with an ox team, bringing his family to Polk county, Oregon. Later he lived at The Dalles and in 1862 came to Camas prairie, being one of the earliest pioneers. He was noted as being one of the most liberal and enterprising citizens of this county, his death occurring in 1884. Our subject came to Camas prairie in 1863 to engage in stock-raising, and brought his family here in 1866. Mr. Pearson and his father-in-law, Mr. Crooks, were the moving spirits in laying out Grangeville and promoting the town, in building up the county and in general progress. Mr. Pearson participated in the Indian war, doing some good fighting. He held various county offices and was chosen by the people to represent Idaho county in the state legislature for two different terms. He was a member of the I. O. O. F., and was an active and influential Republican. On September 30, 1892, Mr. Pearson was called to the world beyond and it was a time of mourning throughout the entire county, as he was beloved and esteemed by all. His widow survives him and is now living with their eldest son, Thomas M. Pearson, who is a prominent stockman about three miles north of Whitebird. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pearson: Thomas M., Mrs. Addie Bibby, John A., Frank R., Mrs. Kate Mullinix, W. Herbert, Ray I., Isabel M., and James B.

NORMAN GOULD lives ten miles southeast of Freedom, is a stockraiser and orchardist and one of the leading men of Idaho county. He was born in Erie county, New York, in 1831, the son of Reul and Almira (Peck) Gould. The father was born in 1808 and died in 1854 as the result of an accident in one of his sawmills. His father, Isaac Gould, was a captain in the Revolution, enlisting at sixteen, and was at the surrender of General Burgoyne. The mother of our subject was born in Connecticut and died before he can remember. Norman grew up in New York and received an academic education. Then he came west and began life for himself. He did sawmilling in Ashtabula county, Ohio, then went to Indiana, and in 1853 crossed the plains by teams. He mined in California for eight years, was then in Nevada and in 1863 came to Boise basin. Prospecting and mining occupied him there for some time and in 1866 he came to the Salmon river country. He has been on the Snake river, in the Seven Devils district and in various other mining sections. In 1874 Mr. Gould took the first ranch on Rapid river, it being where the town of Pollock now stands. Later he rented the Salmon ranch, then the Elfers ranch and in '76 he operated the Elfers mill. Being at this place during the Indian outbreak he saved his life, as all of the men on the ranch were killed. The scenes of this outbreak are related in another chapter. Mr. Gould formed one of the party which fortified and defended Slate creek stockade and was also one of the party which buried Henry Elfers and his murdered companions. In 1878 the settlers on the Salmon again occupied a fort in anticipation of an attack by the Bannocks. Since that time Mr. Gould has continued to raise stock, farm, raise fruit and operate a sawmill. Recently he relinquished the latter business.



In 1883 at Lewiston Mr. Gould was united in marriage with Ella, daughter of John and Rebecca (Holt) Phelon, natives of Kentucky. The father was of Scotch-English descent, born in England, and died in



NORMAN GOULD.

MRS. NORMAN GOULD.

JAMES J. REMINGTON.

THEODORE E. DAVIS.

1851. Mrs. Gould was born in Davis, Kentucky, June 1, 1837. She has one brother, James, who at present resides at Atlanta, Florida. Mr. Gould has one brother, Isaac Gould, living in Chautauqua county, New York. In politics Mr. Gould is a stanch and energetic worker of the Republican party and has served his fellow Republicans as a committeeman. Secure in the possession of his fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, one hundred of which is fenced, which has good buildings and an excellent orchard, Mr. Gould devotes his principal attention to raising cattle, hogs and fruit, and commands the respect and good will of all who know him.

JAMES J. REMINGTON, who resides at the Remington ferry on the Salmon, one and a half miles south of Whitebird, is one of the heaviest taxpayers in Idaho county. He is a man of marked ability in certain lines and comes from an old and prominent family which has been noted as possessing some of the most talented and successful inventors of the United States. His uncle, Lafayette Remington, patented the well known Best traction engine and another member of the family invented the noted Remington rifle. The father of our subject, Virgilous D. Remington, who married Clarinda C. Tyrrel, a native of Ohio, was also a native of Ohio and one of the earliest pioneers to the Willamette valley. He came to California in 1853 and while passing through the state of Missouri, our subject was born on April 16, 1853, in Schuyler county. Settlement was made near Folsom in the Golden state and they remained there until the railroad came in 1858, when they removed thence by steamer to Portland, which was a small village at that time. In 1860 they removed to Marion county, remaining until 1871. The father was a noted mechanic and manufactured wagons, plows and various machinery, many articles of which are still in evidence. Our subject has a plow with which he plowed his garden in the spring of 1903, which was manufactured by his father many, many years since. He also owns various articles of furniture, the handiwork of his father over thirty years ago. Among other things he has a barrel made about 1872. On July 4, 1871, the father and mother with their family of six children, DeWitt C., our subject, Ellmore S., Jerome L., Mrs. Mary Rauch, landed in Cottonwood. Later they removed to Oregon, returned to Idaho, and then the parents went to Woodburn, Oregon, where the mother died on July 17, 1897, in her seventy-fourth year, and the father passed away August 29, 1898, in his seventy-second year.

On October 11, 1880, Mr. Remington married Mrs. Cornelia F. (Castle) Eccles, who had three children by her former husband. They are John M., Loyal M. and Celestia May Tourtellot. Mrs. Remington was born November 23, 1851, in Tazewell county, Illinois, and was the daughter of James H. and Delilah A. (Kirby) Castle, natives of Illinois. Mr. Castle enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Eighth Illinois Infantry, in the fall of 1862 and served until his death on January 1, 1864, in the hospital at St. Louis. Mrs. Remington came west with her mother and four brothers. One of them, Levi Castle, was a captain in the Philippine war. They came to Oregon in 1870 and to Camas prairie in 1871. The mother now lives in Los Angeles, California, being in her seventy-seventh year. Our subject went to Whitebird creek in 1886 and took up stockraising and saw-milling. In 1894 he sold that place and moved to his present location. In addition to his ferry and home farm, which is embellished with excellent improvements, he has a quarter section south of the Salmon river, four hundred acres near Grangeville, goodly bands of horses and cattle and a very large holding in sheep. His family enjoys one of the finest residences in Idaho county and Mr. Remington is justly classed as one of the most prominent and progressive men of northern Idaho. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Woolgrowers' Association. Five children have been born to this household, Elmer I., James E., deceased, Rufus V., Bertha A., deceased, Bessie A. Like his ancestors, Mr. Remington is possessed of remarkable mechanical ability and ingenuity and is able to manufacture any article of wood or iron. Mr. Remington was here during the Indian troubles and was an active participant in the warfare, doing guard duty, and much work in scouting.

THEODORE E. DAVIS is a woolgrower and one of the leading citizens of Whitebird. He was born December 2, 1842, in Marion county, West Virginia, being the son of Franklin and Jennie E. (Bowman) Davis, natives of the same county, where also they were married. The mother died in 1854. Our subject, who was the eldest of a family of six children, enlisted in the Confederate army, Company A, Thirty-first Virginia, in the spring of 1861. He fought under General Lee and participated in the following battles, the two battles of Winchester, Allegheny mountain, Cross Keys, Port Republic, Cedar Mountain, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Fredericksburg, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Lynchburg, Fisher's Hill, Five Forks, and finally at Appomattox Courthouse he was one of eight thousand whom General Lee surrendered to the government. Mr. Davis participated in many skirmishes besides these battles and it is evident that he had both courage and fighting ability. He was wounded in the Wilderness and at Port Republic. After the first year Mr. Davis was a corporal and he endured in hardships, suffering and deprivation more than can be mentioned. Following the war he was employed in various places until 1870 and then came to Vernon county, Missouri. Eight years later he went to Colorado and did blacksmithing. In 1881 he came thence to Almota, Washington, in a wagon. In 1886 he went to the mouth of Santa creek on the St. Marys, being one of the first settlers and stockmen there. In 1898 he came to Camas prairie and since that time Idaho county has claimed him as one of her citizens. Mr. Davis handled sheep previously and is now the owner of over 3,000 of these valuable animals. He ranges them on the Salmon in the winter and in the mountains during the summer.

On December 25, 1867, Mr. Davis married Miss Prescitta, daughter of Jefferson Broadwater, a pioneer of West Virginia, and a native of Maryland. On April 26, 1893, in the St. Marys country Mrs. Davis was called from this life to the world beyond. She was born June 17, 1851, at Pennsborough, West Virginia, and was one of a family of fourteen children. She bore to Mr. Davis nine children, Walker J., Mrs. Myrtle Crow, deceased, Mrs. Daisy Renfro, Norval L. and Creeda, deceased, Russell B., Grover Cochran, Essie P., Gertie W.

CHARLES W. DUNHAM was born November 9, 1874, in Walla Walla. His father, Samuel P., was born in Pike county, Missouri, January 29, 1834. In '53 he crossed the plains with ox teams, leading a large train to the Willamette valley, where he located land. Two years later he sold out and went to Mount Shasta, California, and took up the stock business with his brother, Amos. In 1857 he came back to Oregon and farmed. He was married at Salem, 1861, to Elizabeth M., daughter of Reuben and Mary Price. Mrs. Dunham was born in Indianapolis, on November 15, 1842, and crossed the plains with her parents in 1853. Their train suffered hardships from the Indians, but no one was killed. Mr. Dunham remained in Oregon until 1873 and then came to Walla Walla. Four children were born to this marriage,—Dollie, deceased, Arthur, our subject, and Mrs. Eva Lenon, all three living at Whitebird. In 1878 Mr. Dunham went to Genesee, Idaho, and in 1884 came to Camas prairie, and in 1893 he settled at Whitebird, where he now resides. It is interesting to note that in 1862 Mr. Dunham, in company with his father-in-law, brought a band of sheep into this country and passed through where Whitebird now stands. Plenty of Indians were there making ready for winter and the luxuriant bunchgrass was waist high. They took the sheep on to Florence, where they were butchered and sold and he made other trips of the same nature.

Our subject was educated in the various places where he lived, and after school days began the battle of life for himself. He took land and raised cattle and has been very successful in his endeavors until the present time. He has good bands of stock, a good ranch and a fine residence property in Whitebird. Mr. Dunham was one of the leaders in organizing the first Sunday school in Whitebird, in May, 1896, and was the second superintendent. In January, 1897, he was one of a committee of three who arranged for the erection of a public school building at Whitebird. On October 26, 1891, Lodge No. 72, of the I. O. O. F., was organized in Whitebird, and Mr. Dunham was initiated into the mysteries of that order on that night. He has passed all the chairs and is also a member of the Encampment. When the Idaho Stock Association was organized, on May 24, 1892, Mr. Dunham became secreatry and has served in that capacity since. He also is on the executive board. He is chairman of the Republican club and has been a delegate to the various county conventions. Mr. Dunham enjoys the esteem and good will of all who know him and is a man of real worth and integrity.

JAMES SURRIDGE is associated with his brother, Thomas, in a general merchandising establishment in Bridgeport, also in a livery business, and together they own the townsite, while also he pays much attention to a large stock farm of one section, which he secured from the government, and which he is handling in a skillful manner and with fine returns.

James Surridge was born in London, England, on July 3, 1847, being the son of John and Mary (Corcoran) Surridge, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. About 1859 the family came to Michigan, where our subject was reared and educated; in 1874 he came west, and two years later he landed in Idaho county, at Harpster. In 1877 he went back to England and the following year came again to this section. In July of that year he took part in the Bannock war, and then selected his land which he took from the wild and now owns. Since that year Mr. Surridge has devoted himself to stock raising, being the first to import thoroughbred Clydesdale horses into northern Idaho. He also brought in Durham cattle and Berkshire hogs. He has been a leader in these important lines and the country has derived much benefit from his intelligent endeavors here.

On January 15, 1900, Mr. Surridge married Charlotte, daughter of Fred C. and Louise (Grondenberg) Smith. The father was born in Hanswerum, Ostfriesland, Germany, on June 17, 1829, and his parents were Conrad and Margaret (Van Der Velde) Smith. They came to the United States in 1849 and settled in Pekin, Illinois. He started a blacksmith and wood working shop, which later developed into the mammoth plant of T. H. Smith & Co., wagon works, of Pekin, with a capital of $200,000.00, and a capacity of eight thousand wagons a year. They employ one hundred and fifty men, with a wage scale of over twenty-five thousand dollars per year. They also operate a bank and a plow factory. Frederick H. was killed in a railroad accident on December 4, 1890, at Jackson, Illinois. The mother of Mrs. Surridge was born in Dusselldorf, Germany, on November 18, 1836, and is now living in Pekin. Mrs. Surridge has the following brothers and sisters: Frederic F., Conrad F., Lincoln, George, Louis, Teis, Margaret Eberham, Charles W., all in Pekin. Mr. Surridge is a Democrat and his wife is a Republican, both stanch and well informed upon the questions of the day. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., Mt. Idaho Lodge No. 9. Mr. Surridge is also superintendent of the Newsome & Leggett Mining Company, of Newsome, Idaho, which has the largest placer mines in the county and does a systematic mining business.

JOHN OLSON is one of the skillful and leading mining men of the northwest. He understands mining from the time of prospecting until the property is a shipper; all the various stages of development are familiar to him, and he has been and is in practical touch with every phase of the industry. He has large interests in some valuable copper properties on the east bank of the Salmon within a few miles of Whitebird. These properties consist of two groups, one of ten claims and one of six claims. The former has a ledge of sixteen feet, running sixteen dollars per ton, and can be tapped at a depth of one thousand feet; the other group lies near this and has a splendid showing of a large iron dyke, forty feet wide, which assays fourteen dollars in copper and gold. The companies are doing large development work on these properties, and it is expected that in a short time they will both be shippers. In addition to this, Mr. Olson is heavily interested in the Eureka Mining, Smelting & Power Company, one of the rich and heavy companies of the northwest. The company owns some very valuable properties and Mr. Olson is the expert in charge.

John Olson was born on November 22, 1859, on the island of Bornholm, Denmark. His father is a wealthy farmer in Denmark, and now living, in his seventy-ninth year. His mother died in 1895. Our subject is the fourth of a family of five children. His oldest brother is in Denmark, one brother is in Clinton county, Iowa, another is in Australia, while he has a sister in the old country. Mr. Olson received a good education in the agricultural college of his native place, then served two and a half years as bugler in the Royal Guards. In 1887 he landed in New York, went thence to Catawba county, North Carolina, and from there to Clinton county, Iowa. In 1889 he was in Black Hawk, Colorado, mining. Then he was engaged in the smelter in Denver and also in the refining works. After this he was night foreman in the Buckeye mine, then went to Prescott, Arizona, in the same capacity in the Diamond Joe mine. Subsequent to this he was timberman in the mines in Park City, Utah, then went to Silver City, New Mexico. After this he worked at Jerome, Arizona, in the Uni Verdi copper mines. At this time he made a visit east, and in 1901 came to Lewiston and took the position which he now occupies. Mr. Olson became a member of Scandia Lodge, I. O. O. F., in Black Hawk, Colorado, and is still in good standing in this lodge. He is more or less intimately acquainted with all the mining camps in the west and is a man of great experience and skill.

PAUL F. CORBETT is a prosperous merchant and capable business man at Kamiah, where he handles in addition to his mercantile business a grist mill, saw mill and ferry.

Paul F. Corbett was born in Kamiah in June, 1877, the son of Felix and Deborah Corbett. The father was born at Kamiah in 1838. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was a Canadian, and came into this country shortly after the Lewis and Clark expedition. He was in the employ of the Hudson Bay Company as a hunter and trapper, and married a Nez Perces woman, who died in 1899, aged one hundred years. Our subject was raised at Kamiah and in 1891 went to Carlisle and received a good educational training. He also learned the blacksmith trade and returned to Kamiah in 1896. Two years previous to this time he had purchased, with his father, the government ferry which they are still operating. They also bought the saw and grist mill of the government, and he and his father operate them now. In addition to this, Mr. Corbett and his father own one-half of the telephone line to Stuart. Mr. Corbett also owns twenty acres of land at Kamiah, where he has a beautiful residence. He is the possessor of two allotments in addition to the property mentioned, one at Genesee and one at Lapwai. Mr. Corbett has two sisters,—Hattie Amara and Priscilla Frank,—both at Kamiah.

On September 25, 1897, Mr. Corbett married Miss Lydia A., daughter of Philip and Suzan Smith. Mr. Smith was born in Iowa, came to California in 1849, mined at Florence and other Idaho camps and was a well known pioneer. Mrs. Corbett was born in Lapwai on February 17, 1878. She was educated at the Desmet school by the sisters and then took a course in Carlisle. She has one brother, William, at Lapwai. They have the following children: Frank F., born December 7, 1898; Josephine M., born May 10, 1901; Lillian, born January 28, 1903.

Felix Corbett, the father of our subject, says that his mother, who was over one hundred years old when she died, told of a Nez Perces woman, named Wat-Hoo-Wis, who went to the coast to see the whites and learn their ways. When she returned the tribe named her as above, the signification of the name being "Who returned." This woman was with the greater part of the Nez Perces tribe on the little Camas prairie on the Lolo trail, gathering camas, when the Lewis and Clark expedition came along. The men had beards, and the Indians were about to kill them, as they deemed them evil spirits. Wat-Hoo-Wis told them what good things the whites had, as tea, sugar and other edibles, and they at once became friendly. The Indians conducted the expedition down the north branch of the Clearwater to the main stream, and there Mr. Clark cached a large amount of provisions, and when he returned a year later all was in good shape.

SAMUEL R. LIBBEY. The important position of postmaster at Cottonwood is held by the subject of this sketch, who also operates a jewelry store, being a skilled jeweler.

Samuel R. Libbey was born in Washington county, Ohio, on August 7, 1858, being the son of James M. and Susan (Goddard) Libbey. The father was born in New York in 1812. The grandfather of our subject built and operated the first grist mill in Ohio, the same being on the Muskingum river, in Washington county. The property is still in the family and has since been supplied with modern process and is operated by an uncle. A great-uncle of our subject owned the noted Libbey prison, which was taken from him by the south and operated by them, contrary to the will of the owner. The father of our subject volunteered to fight for the Union, but was rejected on account of disability. He was present at the capture of Morgan, the raider. The mother of our subject, who died February 7, 1901, was born in Pennsylvania, in 1818, of German ancestry; her parents settled in Ohio in a very early day. Our subject was but seven when his parents came to Laclede, Missouri. Later they went to St. Catherine, where the father died. The widow went with her children to Bethel, Illinois. Samuel labored there and also studied, did carpentering and then fired on the C. B. & Q. R. R. Later he went to Keokuk and took up the jewelry business. In 1883 we see him in Ellsworth, Kansas, where he continued his trade, operated a grocery store and owned a rock quarry. In 1885 Mr. Libbey went to Lincoln Center, remaining seven years. Then he bought a jewelry store in Plainville, Kansas, and in 1895 he went to Marquette. There he worked in a drug store, all the time handling his trade, the last two years did also a dry goods business, and in April, 1898, he landed in Lewiston. On June 10, 1898, he located in Cottonwood and acted as salesman for S. Goldstone, the well known merchant, and later opened his present business. In 1900 Mr. Libbey was appointed postmaster, and since then he has continued in the office with general satisfaction to all.

In 1876, at Ft. Madison, Iowa, Mr. Libbey married Miss Susan, daughter of Simon and Caroline (Weiser) Broker, natives of Germany. Mrs. Libbey was born in Scott county, Illinois, in 1859, and has four brothers and three sisters. Mr. Libbey has the following named brothers and sisters: William S., James B., Henry H., Ella White, Sarah S. Thompson, Ethel L. Six children have been born to this couple,—Rosa V., Nettie M., deceased, Nellie G., Harry W., Benoni A., Marie E. Mr. Libbey is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. O. U. W. He is a Republican and active and influential in the campaigns, while in school matters he is an advocate of the best advantages possible and is a member of the school board. Mr. Libbey is a progressive and enterprising man and stands well in the community.

SWEN J. PETERSON is proprietor of the Cottonwood brewery and also conducts a saloon. He was born in Sweden, in July, 1856, being the son of Peter and Hannah (Swenson) Peterson, natives of Sweden and born in 1824 and 1827, respectively, and now live in the native place. The father is a prominent man and has been sheriff of his division. Our subject grew to manhood, was educated and learned the miller's trade in his native land. When twenty-four he decided to try the new world, and soon was in Chicago. He took work on a farm in DeKalb county and then went to the iron districts of Michigan, where he was fireman for six months, after which he returned to Chicago and came direct to Portland, Oregon, in 1883. He soon came thence to Lewiston, and then to Camas prairie and took land south of Cottonwood. He continued handling this property until 1896, when he traded it for the property mentioned above, and which he is handling at the present time. Mr. Peterson is a good business man and is one of the influential men of the town.

In June, 1901, Mr. Peterson married Miss Ella Carlson, a native of Sweden, where her parents dwell now. One child has been born to this union, Anna. Mr. Peterson has the following brothers and sisters: Sophia, Anna, Malina Gustaf. Politically our subject is a Republican and takes an active part in the interesting campaign work. He was sent to the state convention in the fall of 1902, for his county. He is an ardent advocate of the best educational facilities and has been a member of the city council.

JOSEPH M. ELLER, better known as Frank, is a man of energy, enterprise and sagacity in the affairs of life, while uprightness and integrity have given him a good standing among his fellows, and industry and business push have gathered for him a good holding of worldly goods. He is one of the substantial men of Idaho county, and it is fitting to grant to him a representation in the history of northern Idaho. At the present time Mr. Eller is handling the Cottonwood livery stables in that town, and is doing a good business.

Joseph M. Eller was born in Buncombe county, North Carolina, on March 11, 1835, being the son of Joseph and Sarah (Kirkland) Eller, natives of North Carolina, and now deceased. The father came of German and the mother of English extraction. The former was born in Buncombe county and was never out of it but twice in his life. He died in 1862. Our subject left home at the early age of eleven and went to Georgia and clerked in a grocery store for three years. He then went home, and a few months later went to Tennessee and then to Missouri, Chariton county. When the war broke out he joined Price's army and fought under him for several years, or until the battle of Pea Ridge. He was then under Cooper and belonged to the cavalry. Mr. Eller was wounded in the thigh, the side, the head and in one foot. He was captured several times and escaped every time but one. He participated in many battles, among some of which were Sedalia, Shelby, Lone Jack and skirmishes. Following the war he returned to Chariton, and in 1866 Mr. Eller married Miss Susan, daughter of James and Tabitha (Ashby) McFerran. Her mother's brother was Major Ashby and well known. Mr. McFerran was born in Virginia, and was a pioneer in Missouri. The parents are deceased. Mrs. Eller was born in Chariton county, Missouri, in June, 1851. Mr. Eller is the last of fourteen children, being also the youngest, the others all being dead. After the marriage they lived in Missouri until 1875, then removed to Arkansas, remaining there seven years, after which he came west to Idaho county and took land. This was the family home until 1900, when Mr. Eller took the stage contract from Kamiah to Cottonwood and later took charge of the livery barn where we now find him. He sold his ranch and stock for about four thousand dollars and is devoting himself to his business with good results, having a good patronage.

Mr. Eller is a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type, well established in his belief and is an influential man in the party. Mrs. Eller is a member of the Methodist church. They have nine children,—Allie, James N., William H., Joseph and Mattie, twins, Henry H., Charles W., Fannie V., Thomas Jefferson.

JAMES H. ARAM, who lives about one mile south from Grangeville, is one of the substantial stockmen and farmers of the Idaho county, and is really a product of this county, having spent nearly all his life here. He was born in Portland, Oregon, on July 7, 1863, the son of John and Sarah (Boar) Aram. The father was born in New York in 1825, and died in October, 1901. He crossed the plains to California in 1854, settled in Portland later, and in 1864 moved to Idaho county. He was a progressive and active man of excellent standing. The mother was born in Genesee county, New York, in 1832. She had two brothers in the Civil war and her parents were pioneers of Ohio. Our subject was reared and educated in this county, and his life was largely spent in the saddle in the stock business. He was in partnership with his father for many years. He has three sisters,—Mrs. Henry Johnson, Mrs. Delia Auchimballe and Mrs. Clara Fitzgerald. He is a member of the W. of W. and an active Republican. Mr. Aram owns six hundred acres of land and handles stock and does general farming.

Mr. Aram was fourteen at the time of the Indian war and remembers the time distinctly. They were notified about four-thirty on the thirteenth, and went at once to Mt. Idaho. The Indians had been growing independent and saucy for a long time, and their acts were watched with apprehension. Mrs. Overman was at the home of Mr. Aram at the time of the notification and accompanied them to Mt. Idaho. The people were killed on the prairie on the night of the thirteenth, and our subject remembers distinctly of their being brought in on the morning of the fourteenth. Day had gone before they arrived in Mt. Idaho. The next morning after their arrival in Mt. Idaho our subject saw West and the Indian, Foo-Culla-Ka, start. Mr. Aram is one of the substantial men of the county, has manifested commendable skill in his labors and uprightness in his walk. He has the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

GEORGE V. HAWLEY resides about one mile north of Whitebird, on a good farm which he took as a homestead in 1892, and where he has bestowed his labors with gratifying results since that time. His place has a good dwelling, large barn, plenty of outbuildings, shop, orchards and necessary fencing, and is one of the valuable estates of this section. In addition to handling this he devotes considerable attention to raising stock and owns a band of cattle. George V. Hawley was born on June 15, 1863, at Buffalo, New York, the son of William and Harriette A. Hawley. William Hawley came to Carbon county, Wyoming, in a very early day and was sheriff of that county for two terms. In 1883 he came to Lewiston and engaged in stock raising. Two years later we see him in Grangeville, and in 1888 he bought the Jersey house, operating the same for four years. Then he sold the hotel and came to Whitebird, where he took up stock raising, in which he continued until the time of his death, in 1900. He had a quarter section adjoining our subject's ranch, and a large band of stock. The mother is living in Grangeville, and is in her sixty-sixth year. When our subject first came to this country he started for himself, and was variously employed until he took his homestead, as mentioned above. Mr. Hawley is a member of the W. of W. and his father belonged to the I. O. O. F.

In 1899 Mr. Hawley married Miss Cleoria Beadford. Her parents came from South Dakota in 1898; her mother is dead, but Mr. Beadford is living in Grangeville. To Mr. and Mrs. Hawley have been born two children,—Alice Irene and George M. Mr. Hawley has one brother living in Grangeville,—Rufus W. Hawley. His father enlisted in the Twenty-second Illinois Cavalry and served through the war, under General McClelland.

NILS PERSON, who now owns a farm about two miles north from Lowe, has demonstrated himself to be a man of enterprise and industry, while he has had broad experience in traveling over this country and handling various enterprises. He was born in Sweden, on March 15, 1864, the son of Per Monsson and Anna Pearson, both natives of Sweden. Our subject has two brothers, Per and Magnus, and two sisters, Elis and Yohanna. Nils attended school from seven to fourteen and obtained good training, and then started in to do battle with the world on his own account. He worked on the farm, then served in the artillery for three years. In 1880, determining to try his fortunes in the United States, he was soon in Boston. There he sawed wood all winter, then went to New Hampshire, two months later to Illinois and after a short service in the Pullman shops came on to Minnesota and a little later pushed ahead to the little Missouri, in Dakota. From here he went back to Chicago, worked in a lumber yard and then migrated to Hebron, Indiana. Next we see him in St. Paul, Nebraska, then came a journey to Colorado, and two years later he was in the Sunset state farming. After returning to Colorado he soon went on to New York, then crossing the ocean to Sweden, he visited old friends and sought again the scenes of his youth. A year later we see him embarking again for the new world and his first stop was in Nebraska. He soon came on to Wyoming, and eight months later we find him in Montana for two years railroading. He soon made his way from there, at the end of his labors, to Idaho county, and on March 10, 1898, Mr. Person anchored himself to a homestead, where we find him at the present time. On May 13, 1901, he bought forty acres more, which gives him a fine estate. Mr. Person has devoted himself to building up his place and improving it in good shape. He has done well and will soon have a large and valuable farm all under cultivation. He now has buildings, orchard, some stock and other improvements, and is one of the reliable men of the community.

HENRY A. GREVING is a leading merchant of Idaho county, a heavy property owner in different lines and a prominent citizen of Stites, where he is doing business. He was born in Munster, Westphalia, Germany, on May 10, 1851, the son of Henry J. and Gertrude (Freckman) Greving, born in Grevenbeck on October 28, 1818, and at Holthausen on May 17, 1823, respectively. The father was a prominent citizen and a leader among his fellows. His death occurred at Beerlage on June 16, 1900. The mother died on June 24, 1901. Our subject was brought up in his native place and well educated in the high school. After this he learned the cabinet maker's trade and then wrought at this trade and on his father's farm until he came to the United States. He was twenty-nine when he landed at Dyer, Indiana, where his uncle, Bernard Greving, lived. Eight months later he went to Marysville, Kansas, then to Melrose, Minnesota, after which he visited various places and finally settled at Hanover, Washington county, Kansas. He bought land, rented it, wrought at his trade, went to Germany, got married, then came to his land and for ten years was engaged in tilling it. In February, 1892, he rented his land and came to Spokane, then went to Moscow, where he bought a team and came to Idaho and took a homestead at Keuterville, after which he built the second store in Keuterville, and engaged in general merchandising. On July 1, 1901, he removed to Stites and opened the largest general merchandise store there. He carries a stock of twenty-two thousand dollars worth of well assorted goods. His place is headquarters for the miners to outfit who are en route to Thunder mountain. Mr. Greving does a fine business, and in addition to this owns his farms. He has the following brothers and sisters: Antonia, Barney, Max, August, Johanna Frieling and Anna.

On March 15, 1883, at Boghorst, Germany, Mr. Greving married Miss Pauline, daughter of Joseph G. and Anna M. (Spiekermann) Osterholt, born on October 11, 1814, and in 1818, respectively. The father died on December 19, 1887, and the mother died in August, 1801. Mrs. Greving has the following brothers and sisters: Frank, died from wounds received in the Franco-Prussian war; Anna Broeker; Hobart; Bertha, deceased; Louis; and Barney. Seven children are the fruit of this union,—Lillian, born June 7, 1886; Paul, born February 26, 1888; Johanna, born February 26, 1890; Leo, born October 18, 1891; Louis, born July 18, 1893; Amalia, born July 7, 1895; Clara, born October 5, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Greving are members of the Catholic church and are of excellent standing in the community. Mr. Greving is to be congratulated on the abundant success which his sagacity and enterprise have wrought out in the business world.

GEORGE W. MOUGHMER. Six miles south of Keuterville is the estate of our subject, and by his thrift, industry and sagacity in managing his affairs he has made it a valuable farm and one of the productive places in the community.

George W. Moughmer was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, on February 26, 1856, being the son of David and Sarah (Hamilton) Moughmer, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was born in Blair county, in 1825, and died in 1890. He was a blacksmith. Our subject's grandfather was born in Germany, and his great-grandfather was also a native of Germany and fought for the American independence in the Revolution. The mother of our subject was born about the same time as her husband, and died in 1867. Her parents were also born in Pennsylvania, and their ancestors came from Ireland. Our subject was thirteen when the father removed from the native place to Trempealeau, where he continued the trade of blacksmith, taking also a farm. George W. was well educated in the schools of the day, grew to manhood there and assisted in the care of his father's farm. When twenty-one he went to farming for himself and continued uninterruptedly in this occupation until 1897, when he came to Idaho county, whither some of the family had preceded him. He selected his present place and settled to the basic art of agriculture and since that time has been one of the substantial men and progressive citizens of the county. Mr. Moughmer has never left the charms of the bachelors' life. He has four brothers and one sister,—Thomas, Louise Bixel, William, Jacob, David E. Politically Mr. Moughmer is allied with the Republican party and takes a keen interest in the campaigns and the questions of the day.

FOSTER RICHARDSON is a man of sterling worth and first class capabilities, as is evidenced by his career, an epitome of which we are pleased to append herewith. The date of his birth was December 4, 1844, and Mercer county, Ohio, his native place. His parents, Erie and Eva (Grant) Richardson, were also born in the same county. He went with them to Clinton, Missouri, when a child, and soon thereafter went to Fulton, Arkansas. In 1864 he crossed the plains to Salt Lake City and the next spring returned to Lee county, Iowa, whither his parents had removed. In 1869 he crossed the plains again, to Red Bluff, California, where he did timber work and mining. He visited several of the mining sections of that state and was also engaged much in hunting. Mr. Richardson has accomplished the difficult feat of starting three deer at once and killing them all. He is almost a sure shot, being able to kill birds on the wing with his rifle. In 1875 we find him in Hope county, Nebraska, and the following year he was in the Black Hills. He soon returned to Nebraska and remained there until 1885. In that year he again visited the Black Hills, where he took up dairying until 1889. Next we see him at Old Mission, Idaho, and in 1890 he took up a homestead two and a half miles from Whitebird. General farming, mining and stock raising have occupied him since that time. In 1902 Mr. Richardson purchased his present place of one hundred acres adjoining Whitebird. The farm is splendidly improved with buildings and orchards, and is especially adapted to fruit and vegetables, being a very valuable place.

On October 15, 1876, Mr. Richardson married Miss Trinville M., daughter of Captain Preston Berry, who served as captain in both the Mexican and Civil wars. The marriage occurred in Hope county, Nebraska, and eight children are the fruit of the union, named as follows: Harry, Mrs. Bertha Lyons, Edith, Iva, Ethel, Lenly, Edward and Hazel. Mr. Richardson is a member of the I. O. O. F. He has always taken an active interest in religious and educational matters and is a leading and prominent man of his community. Mr. Richardson is heavily interested in mining, both quartz and placer, and has recently sold some properties but still owns some very good mines. It is interesting to note by way of reminiscence that in the fall of 1901 Mr. Richardson had a hand to hand conflict with a wounded bear and barely escaped with his life.

DAVID YATES is an enterprising and stirring business man of Denver, being now engaged in farming and stock raising. He was born in Roanoke county, Virginia, on August 23, 1868, the son of William and Eliza (Shafer) Yates, natives also of Roanoke county, and born in 1842 and 1844, respectively. The father was an early pioneer in Clinton county, Missouri, and died in April, 1879, in Ray county, that state. The mother now lives in Benton county, Arkansas. As the father died when David was young, he had little opportunity to gain an education, but soon learned the hardships of work and made the most of his scanty privileges. In 1886 he left Missouri and came through Lewiston to Mt. Idaho, where he worked for Ben Morris, and in 1890 he took a homtstead which later he sold. He gave his attention to raising and handling stock and now has about seventy-five head of cattle and some horses, owning excellent trotting stock, has land in Vineland and other property besides. Mr. Yates has the following brothers and sisters: Lewis, Charles, Susan, Catherine, Edward, William, Josie K. Wood and Alice.

On December 7, 1890, Mr. Yates married Miss Belle, daughter of James H. and Jane (Hagan) Tipton, born in Ohio on March 1, 1844, and in Missouri, in 1848, respectively. Mr. Tipton came to Camas prairie in 1883 and now dwells at Vineland. Mrs. Yates was born on June 12, 1872, in Douglas county, Oregon, and died on April 12, 1902, at Rockyford, Colorado. She had one sister, Lizzie Chase, now deceased. Two children were born to this union,—Herman B., born September 10, 1891; William, born January 31, 1897.

Mr. Yates is an active Democrat and is affiliated with fraternal orders as follows: I. O. O. F., M. W. A. and W. of W. He is also a member of the Presbyterian church and a good supporter of the faith.

PATRICK E. HAYDIN lives four miles north from Denver, where he has a generous estate of one-half section and rents five hundred acres of land from the Indians. He is a thrifty and progressive agriculturist and stockman and is one of the leading citizens and substantial men of the section. He was born in Waterford county, Ireland, whence come so many of our stirring and good citizens. The date of his advent into life was March 11, 1850. The father, John Haydin, was born in the same county in 1825. He came to the United States in 1852 and settled in Iowa, where four years were spent. In 1856 he removed his family to Rice county, Minnesota, where he remained until 1878. Then he went to Bigstone county, the same state, and there on September 22, 1901, he passed from the scenes of earth. Our subject was brought up in Minnesota and there educated. He remained with his parents until of age and then he went to Minneapolis and opened a boot and shoe store. In 1878 he sold out and went to Bigstone county and there farmed eight hundred acres until 1893. In that year he went to the vicinity of Edmund, Alberta county, where he farmed and raised stock. He also bought stock for the Kootenai Meat Company on commission. It was 1898 when Mr. Haydin retired from this business and came to Spokane. December 15th marks the date of arrival there, and he left the family there until he selected a place. After due investigation, he located on his present place and at once opened in the agricultural and stock line, in which he has been engaged since that time. Mr. Haydin has the following brother and sisters, Thomas, Ellen, Mulvaney, Margaret, Mary.

On September 11, 1874, Mr. Haydin married Miss Margaret, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Grady) O'Laughlin, natives of county Clare, Ireland. The father was born in 1813 and the mother in 1821. The father came to Maine, where he took up the lumber business, which he followed until the time of his death in 1864. The mother was married in Ireland and came to Cherryfield, Maine, with her husband, where she died on February 4, 1894. Mrs. Haydin was born in Cherryfield, on August 9, 1855, and has two brothers, Thomas, Patrick, deceased. Seven children have come to crown this union, May, born November 5, 1875; Charles E., born August 25, 1877; Cecelia, born December 10, 1880; William P., born September 10, 1882; Joseph, born October 29, 1884; John F., born April 22, 1887; Bernard, born August 2, 1891, and died August 10, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Haydin are stanch Republicans and have both held various offices. They are members of the Catholic church.

FRANCIS D. SPRINGER, who resides one mile south of Canfield, although not one of the earliest settlers of this county, is quite deserving of mention in this volume, both because of his enterprise manifested in various places and ways and also because of his substantial worth and integrity. He was born in Buchanan county, Iowa, on April 3, 1852, the son of James and Eliza (Peters) Springer, natives respectively of Illinois and New York. The family removed to Franklin county, Iowa, when the country was very new and in 1868 they crossed the plains with teams. In 1870 we find them in California raising stock. Our subject had been educated in the common schools and in due time began life for himself. While in California he was an expert nimrod and had some very thrilling experiences with wild hogs and grizzlies. Mr. Springer resided in various places in California and in 1877 came to the Willamette valley and the following year to eastern Oregon and there participated in the troubles with the Indians. He was employed variously until 1880, when he took up sawmilling in Dayton, Washington, after which we find him farming near Pomeroy, and in 1890, like many another one, he was forced to the wall financially. He replenished his exchequer by raising stock, then went to Huntsville and later returned to Dayton. Mr. Springer has had great experience in handling sheep and shearing them, having operated all through eastern Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. In the fall of 1902 he took his present homestead on Doumecq plains. Mr. Springer still owns his property in Dayton and has other interests also.

In January, 1874, occurred the marriage of Mr. Springer and Miss Ruth Bradley. She was left an orphan at an early age and was reared in the family of Mr. Mitchel. She was born September 3, 1858, in Arkansas and went with the Mitchel family to Texas, later to Colorado and finally to Tulare county, California. The following children have been born to this marriage, Lillie L., wife of William Moody, of Alto, Washington; Baney D.; Florence E.; Guyon D.; Lelia P., wife of Len. Jackson, of Dayton; Clinton C.; Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Springer are members of the Christian church and they are consistent followers of that faith.

On May 27, 1897, Mr. Springer was in a railroad wreck at American Falls in which he sustained some very severe injuries.

JOHN T. HALE, one of the leading business men of Cottonwood, is at the present time handling the livery and feed stables, which are the headquarters of the Lewiston and Cottonwood stage line. Mr. Hale owns the property, does a good business and is popular in the community, being a man of uprightness and sound business methods.

John T. Hale was born in Kosciusko county, Indiana, on July 14, 1851, being the son of Riley and Maud (Widopp) Hale. The father was born in Ohio in 1830 and is now living in Oregon. He was a pioneer in Indiana and had two brothers in the Civil war. The mother was born in North Carolina and died in 1868. Her ancestors were an old family of North Carolina. Our subject was reared in his native place, gained a good education and worked on his father's farm until he arrived at his majority. Then he inaugurated independent action and in 1875 he went to Michigan, after which he spent a year in Kansas and in 1877 was in Oregon. He visited his uncle, Louis Hale, who had settled in the Web-foot state in 1853. He remained there off and on for about six years, and in 1890 sought out a place in the vicinity of Moscow, where he gave his attention to farming until February, 1897, when he came to Cottonwood and for a time took up farming. In February, 1898, Mr. Hale bought the barn where he is now doing business and commenced operations in the livery line. He has had success from the start. His care for all details, for the comfort and safety of his patrons, his geniality, his good business methods have made him popular and drawn to his stables a first class patronage. He has good rigs, and the business is well appointed in all departments.

Mr. Hale has the following brothers and sisters, William, George, Cyrus, Henry, Eliza, Nancy, Maria. Mr. Hale is a member of the Continental Casualty Company of Chicago. He has served on the school board and in politics holds with the Republicans.

OSCAR F. CANFIELD, who lives at Canfield postoffice, is one of the prosperous and leading citizens of Idaho county, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant an epitome of his career in this connection. He was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on March 8, 1838, the son of William D. and Sallie A. (Lee) Canfield, natives of Birmingham county, Vermont. From Mercer county they removed to Iowa and in 1847 came across the plains with the largest train that wended its weary way over desert and mountain to the western Mecca. In 1844 they had settled in Iowa and laid out the town of Oskaloosa, where they did a hotel business for some time. The ancestors were prominent Americans and fought in the Revolution for independence. They were six months journeying from twelve miles west of St. Joseph to the Whitman, between which places no white persons were dwelling. The father engaged as a blacksmith to Dr. Whitman and at the time of the massacre, he, with one other man and the following children, our subject, Albert, Ellen, Clarissa, Sylvia A., were all who escaped. The father was wounded in the back. Then they went to Polk county, Oregon, and in 1849, made their way to San Francisco. There they mined and later settled in Sonoma county, where our subject received his education and remained until 1880, when he journeyed to Colfax. Later he was in the Coeur d'Alene country, where a butte is named for him. He came to Camas prairie in 1889 and soon thereafter removed to his present place at Canfield, where he owns a section of fine land. Mr. Canfield was one of the very first to settle on Doumecq plains. He has a good dwelling, fine orchard and other substantial improvements.

On January 14, 1868, Mr. Canfield married Miss Cynthia A., daughter of John and Ellen (Jeffries) Maple. The father died in 1894 but the mother who is now living with this daughter, is hearty and well preserved at the age of eighty-six. Mrs. Canfield was born in Ohio, in 1845, came to the territory of Iowa and in 1856 crossed the plains to Sonoma county, California. Seven children have been born to this marriage Sherman, in Idaho county; Oscar B., on the Snake; Charles O., also on the Snake; Joseph, at Canfield; Mary R., wife of Wm. Ferrell on the St. Joe; Augusta L., wife of Isaac Cooper, of Coeur d'Alene; Lottie, wife of Jasper Booth, of this county. Mrs. Canfield comes from a family noted for its longevity and they are both substantial people of the county. Mr. Canfield was a soldier in the Cayuse war under Captain Nesmus. Mr. Canfield's genealogy dates back to 1350 A. D.

SILAS M. CRAMER is a substantial and industrious tiller of the soil, whose home is five miles northwest from Kooskia, where he owns a well improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres. He was born in Franklin county, Ohio, on May 15, 1843, the son of William H. and Christine (Fritz) Cramer, who were born in Pennsylvania on August 24, and April 4, 1811, respectively. The father was a millwright and a natural mechanic; on September 8, 1861, he enlisted in the First Wisconsin Light Artillery and served eight months, being honorably discharged on account of disability. Our subject has the following brothers and sisters: John W., William H., Jacob, Henry F., Daniel B., Samuel T., Cicero, Lucinda, Nancy A., Mary Ann. Our subject was forced to school himself and gained his education by hard toil. When the war broke out he enlisted in the First Wisconsin Light Artillery and served three years. Returning home after his service he made a short visit and then enlisted in the Hancock Infantry and fought for his country a year more. After the war he went to Minnesota and farmed and in 1888 he came to Whatcom county, Washington, and took property in Port Angeles, in 1890. In 1896, he came to Lewiston and wrought at carpentering, then contracted and did building in Grangeville and on March 1, 1898, he came to his present place and located a homestead. In addition to developing the farm, Mr. Cramer has devoted considerable time to carpenter work. He has a good farm —the famous Fort Misery being located on his land. He owns some cattle and horses and thirty hogs.

On January 13, 1866, Mr. Cramer married Miss Martha E. Riley, in Houston county, Minnesota, and to them were born three children: Charles H., born in Minnesota on January 26, 1870; Etta E., born in Minnesota, on July 17, 1868; Elizabeth, born in Iowa, on April 24, 1872. Mrs. Cramer was born in Illinois on December 27, 1850. At Osage, Iowa, on October 3, 1876, Mr. Cramer married a second time, the lady becoming his wife on that occasion being Ida E. Richards, who was born in Illinois, on June 4, 1858, the daughter of David J. and Elmira (Riley) Richards. The father, who was born in Pennsylvania, on February 14, 1832, was a carpenter and was last heard of in the Klondike excitement. The mother was born in Ohio, on November 3, 1835. Mrs. Cramer has the following named brothers and sisters: Corbin E., Jesse W. S., Charles H., Albert G., George, Frederic J., Mary A., Perl J. and Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. Cramer have two children, Arthur B., born in Kansas, on September 24, 1877; Lottie Bell, born in Nebraska on December 27, 1882. Mr. Cramer was a Republican in the time of Mr. Lincoln, but now votes with the Democrats.

JAMES L. MILLER. This well known and substantial agriculturist and stockman, whose labors here for many years have always been for upbuilding and improvement, is residing about four miles north from Denver, where he has a fine farm and handles considerable stock. He was born in eastern Tennessee, on April 27, 1854, the son of Jerry M. and Mathilda (Hickey) Miller, born in eastern Tennessee in 1820 and 1824, respectively. In 1862 the father enlisted in the Thirteenth Tenneesee under Colonel J. K. Miller and rendered excellent service in various engagements, but while on a furlough at home he was killed by a squad of rebels, December 24, 1864. The mother was married in 1843 and died in March, 1899. She was of English and Irish extraction. Our subject was raised in his native place and educated there. When eighteen he went to Missouri and clerked in a drug store until 1875, when he came to San Francisco by rail and thence by steamer to Portland. He farmed in Polk county, Oregon, and in 1881 removed to Dayton, Washington. He farmed there and also engaged in the sheep industry with his father-in-law until 1884; then he sold out and came to Idaho county. This was in May and he took a homestead and purchased as much more, since which time he has given his attention to producing the fruits of the field and raising stock. He has a quarter section, owns a hundred head of cattle, as many hogs, some horses and also town property in Asotin and other property. Mr. Miller has the following brothers and sisters: William R., Nancy Smith, Betty Ellis, deceased, Balis K., Cicero, Kossuth. William R. is a veteran of the Union army and carries the marks of a wound which he received when fighting for his country.

On December 12, 1878, Mr. Miller married Miss Phœbe, daughter of Jackson and Luvisa (Wilhoit) Lowe. The father was born in 1832, in Illinois, removed to Iowa with his parents, came to Oregon in 1851, remained in Polk county fourteen years and in 1865 went to Pilot Rock, Umatilla county; in 1880 he came to Dayton, Washington. The mother was born on November 22, 1841, in Missouri. Her parents were pioneers in the Willamette valley and her father located the well known Wilhoit soda springs in Clackamas county. Mrs. Lowe was married on August 23, 1857, and died January 17, 1869. Mrs. Miller was born in Polk county, Oregon, on November 6, 1862, and has the following brothers and sisters: Samuel W., Mary L. Pomeroy, Isaiah A., deceased, Lucy E. Miller. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller: The first was born April 4, and died April 27, 1880; Clifton J., born November 8, 1881; Charles P., born August 28, 1883; Iva A., born September 1, 1885; Edith, born October 15, 1887; Katie M., born April 22, 1892; Ruth E., born November 5, 1894; J. Laughton, born November 2, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are both Republicans and he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. They also belong to the Christian church. Mr. Miller was census enumerator in 1900. He states that he has seen land raise from a nominal value to twenty or thirty dollars per acre since coming to Idaho county.

JOSEPH M. WOLBERT, now handling insurance, collections and loans, in Cottonwood, is a well known speaker, newspaper man, and politician, whose influence has been felt over the entire northwest. He was born in Harrison county, Indiana, on April 20, 1853, being the son of William P. and Louise (McMullen) Wolbert. The father was born in Gloucester county, New Jersey, in 1808, and remembers the soldiers of the war of 1812. The paternal grandfather of Joseph M. built a house in Gloucester county, New Jersey, and raised it the day the Declaration of Independence was signed. The mother of our subject was born in Philadelphia in 1811 and died in 1885. Her ancestors were early settlers in the Keystone state and came of the Scotch and Irish races. The parents of our subject settled in Indiana in 1832 and manufactured ship buckets. They removed to various places and finally settled in Wisconsin, where our subject was educated and raised. He also learned the carpenter's trade and studied medicine. When twelve he enlisted in Company D, Fifty-second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, as drummer boy and was soon appointed orderly, being the youngest one in the army. He was mustered out on July 25, 1865, and returned to Wisconsin and railroaded. Later we see him as master carbuilder in Wells, Minnesota, and then he came to Spokane, where he contracted and did building, then moved to Moscow. There he organized the Silver Federation which was used in the silver wave that swept the northwest. Later Mr. Wolbert went to Dayton and took the platform on political economy and was a power in politics. In 1895, he came to Cottonwood, bought the Report, a local paper, and boldly took the stand for reform and economy in county expenses. He had the satisfaction of seeing the warrants come from far below par to par, the indebtedness largely wiped out, and things reconstructed. His paper was a sheet of marked vitality and distinct merit and wielded great influence. He was nominated for the legislature in 1898, but did not take the field and went down with the ticket. Mr. Wolbert sold the paper in 1901 and has since devoted himself to his present business with gratifying results.

In 1894, at Genesee, Mr. Wolbert married Miss Ida, daughter of Leander and Mervina (Kelly) Swift, natives of Tennessee and Missouri, respectively, and now living at Johnson, Washington. Mrs. Wolbert was born in Springfield, Missouri, in 1870, and has the following brothers and sisters: Harry, Edward, Mrs. Walter L. Hunter, Mary Kollenburn, Nellie Swift. Mr. Wolbert has four brothers: Henry, William R., Acquilla D., James. To Mr. and Mrs. Wolbert three children have been born: Clara, Hal, Ray, aged eight, six and one, respectively. Mr. Wolbert is a member of the K. P., and for twenty-seven years has done considerable lodge organizing. He is also a member of the G. A. R., and was adjutant general of the state of Idaho in 1893-94. He is an active and influential Republican and has recently been re-elected to the office of justice of the peace. Mr. Wolbert is also a notary public and is active in the interests of educational facilities.

JESSE M. DIXON. In the related occupations of farming and raising stock, Mr. Dixon has been engaged in different places of the west for many years and is a pioneer of Idaho county and one of the substantial men. Recently he purchased a half interest in the Elite saloon in Cottonwood and gives attention to managing the business, but he is still engaged in handling stock and owns the land which he secured as government land when he first came here. Mr. Dixon also owns residence and business property in Cottonwood and is one of the heavy tax payers of the county.

Jesse M. Dixon was born in Ash county, North Carolina, on May 27, 1860, being the son of Alfred and Narcissa (McMillen) Dixon, natives of North Carolina and now deceased. The father served in the Civil war from North Carolina, and later moved to Missouri, thence back to North Carolina. Our subject grew to manhood and was educated in his native state. Then he inaugurated independent action and came to Denver, where he spent several years lumbering and related occupations. His next move was to Grant county, Oregon, where he commenced raising stock and farming. Five years in that country and Mr. Dixon came with his stock to Idaho county, where he settled and gave his attention to handling his herds. He was successful in his enterprises and in 1900, the people called him from private life to take up the duties of the sheriff's office. He entered that office with the same care and faithfulness displayed in his every day walk, and for two years discharged the responsibilities incumbent upon him to the satisfaction of a discriminating constituency.

On December 25, 1885, Mr. Dixon married Miss Laruah, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Howell)

McGuire, natives of North Carolina, where also Mrs. Dixon was born. The wedding occurred in eastern Oregon. Mrs. Dixon has one sister, Monrova. Mr. Dixon has the following brothers and sisters: John, Nancy Hill, Catherine Williamson, Rena Baker. One child has been born to this union, Verner, at home. Mr. Dixon is a true blue Democrat and is an influential figure in his party and a power in the campaigns.

LAWRENCE C. CHADWICK, superintendent of the Consolidated Hydraulic Mining & Development Company, of Lucile, Idaho, is one of the foremost men of the mining interests of Idaho county and no compilation which represents the people and interests of this county could well fail to grant consideration to this gentleman. He was born in Chautauqua county, New York, July 20, 1858, the son of Benjamin F. and Maria (Rowe) Chadwick. The father was born in New York in 1819 and now lives in Pennsylvania. His father, Archibald H., was a patriot in the Revolution and came of English ancestry. The mother of our subject was born in Warren county, Pennsylvania, in 1826, and died in 1891. Our subject grew to the age of eighteen in New York and worked on a farm and was well educated and then began teaching, taking his first school when he was sixteen. He taught then in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, for two years after eighteen. Then he was in the general merchandise business and was postmaster for a time. Later he returned to New York and took charge of the old homestead, his father being too old. In 1884, Mr. Chadwick was installed as head of the Pennsylvania Tract Company's business and was five years treasurer and general manager. Then, in 1889, he was elected president of the International Tract Company. He had general charge of twelve hundred solicitors in all parts of the world and when he entered on the duties of this important office, he had to handle annual sales of one hundred thousand dollars; and two years later, owing to his successful business methods and vim, he had brought the sales up to five hundred thousand dollars annually. He had reorganized the entire business and put it on a new basis. During this time, Mr. Chadwick had visited South America, twenty-four islands of the West Indies, African colonies, Portugal, Spain, England, France, and many other places, being two years on the trip. He returned home in 1893 and entered the ministry of the Baptist church and was ordained January 31, 1894. He was pastor for the White Pigeon church in Michigan until 1899 and then went to Detroit and took up mission work. One year later he organized a successful church there and then on account of failing health he came west to be out doors more. He has given his attention to mining since coming here and has organized the present company of which he is superintendent. They own property near Lucile and also near Freedonia. They have a total of eight claims in operation at the present time and last year he expended judiciously twenty-five thousand dollars in the propositon.

Mr. Chadwick has one daughter by his former marriage, Mrs. Marie Wolgamwod, of Chicago. In February, 1902, Mr. Chadwick maried Leona L., daughter of George W. and Sarah (Rogers) Robbins. The father and his father were pioneers in Cass county, Michigan. Mrs. Chadwick has one sister and four brothers, Lena, L. G., L. M., L. H., L. N. Mr. Chadwick has no living brothers nor sisters. Mrs. Chadwick was born in Cass county, Michigan, in 1869, is a graduate of the state normal, spent some years in teaching and also was three years a trained nurse. Mr. Chadwick is a member of the Masons, the I. O. O. F., the A. O. U. W., and the Maccabees. He has always been active in educational work and is a thorough Republican. Mr. Chadwick has investigated the mineral resources of the Salmon river for some time in a wise manner and he is thoroughly convinced that it is one of the best mineral deposits in the country, and believes that in the near future it will be the centre of great development work.

AMANDUS P. KING. At Woodland, six and one-half miles northwest from Kamiah, is the home place of the subject of this sketch, which was taken from the wild and is now being improved in a becoming manner. Mr. King has displayed energy and industry, dominated with wisdom, since coming here and has wrought well for general improvement as well for the development of his farm.

Amandus P. King was born in Logan county, Ohio, on November 30, 1861, the son of Isaac and Rebecca (Yoder) King, who were born in Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, on July 1, 1821, and in Wayne county, Ohio, on August 21, 1830, respectively. The father came to Ohio with his parents when he was twelve and in 1867, he migrated to Missouri, having married in 1850. Our subject attended district school for a period of nine years and when twenty-one started out in life for himself, having the capital of two good strong hands and a courageous heart. He farmed in partnership with his father for nine years and in 1884 made a trip to the Willamette valley. Later he returned to Missouri and remained until 1899. In that year he had the misfortune to lose his health and the doctors advised a change of climate. Acting on their advise he traveled in the various sections of the coast and on June 13, 1899, Mr. King settled on his present place, a tract of land numbering one hundred and twenty acres. The land is all fenced now and a portion in cultivation, while he has erected a commodious dwelling of seven rooms, a large frame barn and made various other improvements. Mr. King has some stock and is one of the progressive men of the section. He has two brothers and four sisters, John M., Isaiah G., Elizabeth, Miriam, Emma, Charity.

On December 23, 1891, in Holden, Johnson county, Missouri, Mr. King married Miss Mima, daughter of David and Lydia (Stutzeman) Morrell. Mr. Morrell was a Mennonite minister for many years. Mrs. King was born in Noble county, Indiana, on September 18, 1866, and she has the following brothers and sisters, Emmanuel S., David M., Anna M., Sarah E., Etta L. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. King, Vera M., born in Missouri, on May 2, 1893; Forest A., born in Missouri, on November 30, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. King are members of the Mennonite church and stanch people. He votes the Republican ticket and is well informed on the questions of the day.

JOHN C. DOSS is a prosperous and industrious farmer and agriculturist dwelling about three miles south from Denver, where he has a generous estate of four hundred and forty acres of fertile land. He has increased his holdings from one hundred and twenty, which he first took as a homestead, to the present domain and during the years of arduous and sagacious labor, has increased his holdings in personal property in a commensurate manner, having now nearly one hundred head of cattle, and turning off each year from one to two hundred head of hogs besides other stock.

John C. Doss was born in Marshall county, Alabama, on January 14, 1851, the son of Richard and Theresa (Pearson) Doss, natives of Alabama, and born in 1812 and 1813, respectively. The father was killed by guerilla bands in 1863, who were plundering the country and robbing and murdering. The mother died in 1859. Our subject was raised in Alabama, lived with the parents until their death, and then remained on the old homestead and farmed until 1879. He started out in the world for himself then and walked to Little Rock, Arkansas, and thence to Ft. Smith. Later we see him in Muskogee, Indian Territory, then in Kansas City, San Francisco, Portland, Vancouver, and finally at Hood river in Oregon. He herded sheep for Farney, Lamge & Poore, who failed and thereby entailed on him the loss of his wages and one hundred and fifty dollars besides, which he had deposited with them. In the spring of 1881, Mr. Doss came to Camas prairie and took a homestead of one hundred and twenty acres, which was the nucleus of his present fine estate. Since that ime Mr. Doss has always been found prosecuting his business with vigor and skill and is counted one of the leading stockmen and agriculturists in the country.

Mr. Doss has the following brothers and sisters: Mattie Blackford, Amanda Downey, Victoria Horton, Missouria Roden, James P., Samuel H., Reuben C. Mr. Doss is a Democrat and intelligent in the issues of the day while he is always allied on the side of progress, good schools, good roads and general improvements.

SAMUEL A. WILSON is a genuine westerner, a typical pioneer and a successful miner. He has devoted most of his life to mining and is one of the active and enterprising ones who have materially opened up different sections, now promising and profitable camps. He has followed this occupation most of the time since and has visited the famous camps of the country. He has mined in California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, old Mexico, Montana, Utah and Idaho. From Wood river he went to the vicinity of Wilbur and took a homestead. He was one of the first ones to prove up and had it well cultivated and rented. Mr. Wilson helped to blaze the trail from Thompson Falls to Murray and operated there considerably, as also in the other camps of northern Idaho, where he still has claims. Elk, Florence, Warren, Buffalo Hump and other camps have been the scenes of his labor and now he is putting forth effort at the Rainbow district where he is heavily interested in some valuable copper claims. The camp is new, with many good showings in evidence and will without doubt be one of the prosperous camps soon. Mr. Wilson is putting out considerable capital with others in this section and soon there will doubtless be some shippers. Mr. Wilson is a member of the K. P., and is of excellent standing. He has borne the hardships and suffering incident to mining life in the wilds and also has met many dangers from the Indians but he is a man whose courage and endurance were always equal to the occasion.

JAMES E. FERREE. Among the prosperous, substantial and industrious farmers and stockmen of Idaho county there should not be failure to mention the gentleman whose name it at the head of this article and whose estate of four hundred acres of fertile land lies about four miles southwest from Denver, where the family home is at the present time.

James E. Ferree was born in Monroe county, Michigan, on May 6, 1855, the son of Frederic M. and Deborah A. (Watkins) Ferree. The father was born in Maryland in 1820 and removed with his brother to Seneca county, Ohio, and then to Michigan, where he married. He wrought at carpentering and blacksmithing, and in 1865 went to Seneca county again. In 1867 he removed to Ray county, Missouri, and there farmed. Finally, on account of ill health, he went to Eureka Springs, Arkansas, and at Berryville, Monroe county, Arkansas, he died on April 26, 1888. The mother of our subject was born in New York state on January 18, 1830. Her parents were pioneers in Monroe county, Michigan. She died in Kansas on July 14, 1901. Our subject was reared and educated in the various places where the family resided, and at the age of twenty-four went by rail to San Francisco and thence by steamer to Portland, up the rivers to Lewiston, and by stage to Mt. Idaho. He worked at various employments for a few years; in 1879 took up a preemption, and in the fall of 1885 he secured a homestead, where he has dwelt since and has given his undivided attention to producing the fruits of the field and stock; the result is that his skill and arduous labors have been rewarded with a goodly holding of property. He handles from one to two hundred head of hogs each year and also other stock.

Mr. Ferree has the following named brothers and sisters, Boyd, Mary Odell, Eva, deceased, Hall, Milton Guy, Annie Tucker.

On January 1, 1896, Mr. Ferree married Miss Ida M., daughter of David and Mary E. (Kelly) Nickson. The father was born in Monroe county, Michigan, on July 19, 1839. His parents were pioneers from Ireland there in 1837. He was reared in Illinois, came to Oregon in 1860 and after ten years in Benton county, he came to Camas prairie, took land and farmed until his death, on November 10, 1890. Mrs. Nickson was born March 17, 1845, in Vandalia, Illinois, and her parents were natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Ferree was born February 11, 1867, in Madison county, Illinois, and has the following brothers and sisters, William S., John A., deceased, Emma, deceased, Celia, Clarence D. One child, Edna Margaret, was born to this couple on May 15, 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Ferree are solid Democrats and intelligent in the questions at issue. He is a member of the M. W. A. and the I. O. O. F.

JOSEPH T. MORRISON is the proprietor of the Cottonwood house, a well appointed hostelry and popular stopping place for the traveling public, where he does a good business and has the confidence and esteem of all, being a young man of reliability and enterprise.

Joseph T. Morrison was born in Lee county, Iowa, on April 4, 1874, being the son of Murray and Lizzie (Balm) Morrison, natives of Pennsylvania, and born in 1830 and 1844, respectively. The father died in March, 1902, near Colfax, whither he had come in 1890. He was a pioneer in Osborne, Kansas, settling there in 1878. The mother still lives near Colfax. Our subject was but four years of age when the family went to Kansas and there he grew to manhood and received his education. He came west to Colfax with his parents and remained at home until the fall of 1895 when he came to the Nez Perces reservation in Idaho county and took land. He farmed and improved that until recently when he removed to Cottonwood and took charge of a hotel which he has since sold. Mr. Morrison still owns his farm and oversees it.

On November 27, 1901, near Westlake, Mr. Morrison maried Miss Maggie Milam, step-daughter of C. B. Fetters. Her mother's name is Lucy (Gamble) Fetters. Mrs. Morrison was born in Knox county, Illinois, on February 22, 1885, and has no brothers nor sisters. Mr. Morrison has two brothers and one sister, Lewis E., Laura L. Oliver, Asa F. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., Cottonwood Lodge. While Mr. Morrison is a Republican, still he reserves for himself the right to choose the man and is independent in thought.

HON. WILLIAM S. M. WILLIAMS is one of the intrepid pioneers who footed it from Umatilla to Lewiston and thence to Florence in 1862, making his way alone through the wilds of the country. He has remained in this section since and has been a veritable builder of Idaho county in several senses. He has wrought with a show of industry and stability in its mines, has made a good record in its farming and stock raising interests, has served faithfully in its offices, and was one of the prominent ones in the legislature to establish its boundaries.

Mr. Williams was born in Monroe county, Tennessee, on October 16, 1837, being the son of William and Sarah M. (Steele) Williams, natives of Virginia. The mother was of Scotch ancestry and died when our subject was a lad. Her mother's name was Machesney. The father was born in 1812, wrought as a carpenter and cabinet maker, fought the Indians, held prominent positions in his county, and died in 1876 in the home county. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and then began life as a clerk in a store. In 1860 he came to California via the Isthmus and went to Dutch Flat, then to Nevada City and mined. Two years later he heard of the great Florence and Salmon river excitement and came thither via San Francisco, Portland, Umatilla, Lewiston and on to Florence, which, when he landed in May, 1862, was a town of ten thousand people, the streets being jammed with gold seekers. Flour cost one dollar per pound and freight fifty cents per pound, it being brought largely on snow shoes. When Mr. Williams footed it from Umatilla to Florence he passed over thousands of acres all wild, now the richest of farms. He mined and prospected until August, then went to Warren, just discovered and did well mining. He worked there until 1871 also doing some mining in Washington and Payette Lake counties. All the country when Mr. Williams came was Washigton territory and he has seen all the development of the country and changes wrought by civilization. In 1871 he came to Camas prairie, took land and commenced to raise stock. He also mined some and in 1877 he helped to organize the Grangeville Volunteers to fight the Nez Perces under Captains Bloomer and Ruby. He was also first lieutenant with a Grangeville company that operated with General Howard. He was at Misery Hill when the savages made a night attack and stampeded the horses, thus entailing the necessity of going after mounts. He was superintendent of the Grangeville mills and could not in person be on the field all the time. At the close of the war the volunteers kept their guns for fear of other outbreaks and when the Bannock war came on a stockade was built at Grange Hall where the women and children were protected. Even after Joseph's capture the people were incredulous and for years a sharp lookout was kept. In the fall of 1878 Mr. Williams was chosen county recorder and clerk of the board of commissioners and served two years. He returned to his farm and in 1884 he was elected to the legislature from Idaho county and succeeded in getting the boundary of the county established, also put through some excellent laws regarding hogs. He returned to his farm after the service rendered and was then appointed deputy sheriff under Cyrus Overman, serving two years after which he was elected sheriff of Idaho county. Following his term in this office Mr. Williams went to his old home in Tennessee after an absence of thirty-nine years. Returning to Idaho county Mr. Williams was appointed deputy sheriff under Jesse Dixon and completed this service in 1902. Mr. Williams has the following named brothers and sisters, Samuel Y. B., James W. D., Taylor, Gideon, Joseph, Andrew J., Beunavista Bicknell. Mr. Williams is a Master Mason and a man of unquestioned standing and ability and it is very fitting that he should be especially mentioned in the history of the county which he has so materially assisted to build.

JOSEPH S. VINCENT, the faithful and efficient deputy sheriff of Idaho county, is one of the men whose life has all been spent in northern Idaho. Born in Lewiston, on April 24, 1866, and dwelling there and in adjacent sections until the present time, he has become so thoroughly associated both with the development and the history of the country that no work of this character would be complete without mention of him. His parents were Joseph K. and Elizabeth M. (Leland) Vincent. The father was born in Salem, Massachusetts, on June 26, 1822, went to California in 1849 and there mined and raised stock. He fought in the Indian war of 1855 and 1856 and then came to Lapwai. He mined in all the early camps and was the first tax collector of Nez Perces county. He held various county offices, as sheriff, probate judge and so forth. After 1886 he came to Idaho county and operated a hotel in Cottonwood. He was elected probate judge when no other Republican was elected. He now dwells at Mount Idaho. Mrs. Vincent was born in Rhode Island October 8, 1840, being the eldest daughter of Hon. Alonzo Leland, a prominent Idaho pioneer. Our subject grew to manhood, was educated, and learned the printer's business in Lewiston. He served from nineteen to twenty-three and in 1891 he started the Gazette at Kendrick. This was the only Democratic organ in Latah county for a long time and he conducted it from 1891 to 1901, making it a sheet of distinct vitality and merit. In the year last mentioned, Mr. Vincent was taken with a severe typhoid fever which necessitated a change of residence and he accordingly leased his paper and came to Grangeville. He was a member of the board of trade in Kendrick, was appointed by the governor as committeeman to the exposition and since coming to Grangeville has been deputy auditor, tax collector, and is now deputy sheriff of the county.

On June 23, 1892, Mr. Vincent married Miss Alice R. York, whose father, J. B. Springer, of Salem, Oregon, is a well known pioneer of the Webfoot state, and was born in Ohio. He built the St. Charles hotel of Portland. Mrs. Vincent has two sisters: Mrs. W. W. Brown, of Grangeville, and Mrs. George H. Lake, of Lewiston. Mr. Vincent has the following brothers and sisters: Alonzo P., Letitia R. Scott, Seth E., Alida Briscoe, Henry G., Tammany C., William. . One child, Katherine M., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vincent, at Kendrick, Idaho, on March 10, 1895. Mr. Vincent is a member of the K. of P. and the W. W. He was chosen grand chancellor of Idaho and has a magnificent badge presented to him by the state lodge. He has been a member of grand lodge since 1896. Mrs. Vincent is a member of the Presbyterian church and her husband of the Episcopalian. Mr. Vincent lived within three miles of Grangeville at the time of the Nez Perces war and was here when the first house, Grange Hall, was built in 1876.

HENRY MEYER is one of the popular residents of Idaho county, a heavy real estate owner, a prosperous and enterprising agriculturist and stockman and an upright and capable man. He was born in Bremen, Germany, on July 28, 1852, the son of John H. and Anna (Methameyer) Meyer, born in Hanover, Germany. The father was a prominent farmer, hotel man and brick manufacturer. On account of political differences after the revolution of 1848 he came and settled in Indiana, then went to Wisconsin and in 1850 returned to Germany and manufactured brick on a large scale. In 1872 he built a hotel and continued in its operation until his death, on December 31, 1882. The mother died in 1852. Our subject was reared in Bremen and received a good high school education. In 1873 our subject came to the United States and settled in Cook county, Illinois. Later he went to Lake county, Indiana, and then to Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas and thence to California. He worked in Butte county there until 1879 and with wagons and teams came to Camas prairie in that year, passing through southern Oregon, Walla Walla, and Lewiston. He took a preemption and homesteaded where he now dwells, about four miles southwest from Denver. He erected the first house between Cottonwood and Grangeville on the prairie, and Cottonwood was simply a stage station. Mr. Meyer has devoted himself to his business with an energy and skill that have given him abundant success, for he now owns six hundred and ninety acres of fine land, has nearly a hundred head of cattle, raises annually one hundred and fifty head of hogs, besides other stock. A commodious and handsome residence of eleven rooms and all modern conveniences is the family dwelling and all the estate is improved in a becoming manner. Mr. Meyer has the following brothers and sisters: Herman C., Catherine R., Ratchgen, Margaret.

On December 21, 1884, Mr. Meyer married Miss Minnie, daughter of John H. and Sophie (Rathe) Von Berg, natives of Hanover and born on January 8, 1840, and June 13, 1842, respectively. The father came to the United States in 1848 with his parents and settled in Cook county, Illinois, and in 1880 he came to Camas prairie where he is farming and raising stock. Mrs. Meyer was born in Cook county, Illinois, on December 15, 1862 and has the following named brothers and sisters: Henry F., Emma, Mathilda, Anna, Addie, Emilia McGrane, Helena Haager. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer have become the parents of the following children: Metha, born June 26, 1888; Sophie, born July 26, 1890; Franz, born September 10, 1892; Carl, born September 17, 1894; Alvina, born July 19, 1900. Mr. Meyer is a strong Republican and was county commissioner from 1890 to 1892. In 1902 he was candidate on his ticket for the state legislature from Idaho county and lacked only two votes of winning the day. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and a prominent and capable man of excellent standing.

ALONZO Z. RHOADES is interested in agriculture and also in business in Denver where he owns an interest in the meat market and also owns half of the livery barn with his brother. He was born in Mercer county, Missouri, on February 21, 1868, the son of Daniel B. and Elizabeth (Odneal) Rhoades, natives of Missouri and born in 1832 and 1834, respectively. The father's parents were pioneers in Kentucky with Daniel Boone and came to Missouri in an early day. He came to California in 1850 with other members of the family and settled in Sacramento valley. Later he returned to Missouri, via the isthmus, and then went back to California in 1875. In 1880, he came to Spokane and in 1895, to Green creek and took land which was sold later; he dwells on the little Salmon now. The mother died in 1875. Our subject was reared in Missouri and Washington and received a good education. When twenty-two he went to do for himself and in 1895 he took a home on Green creek, which he still owns and utilizes for general crops and stock raising. Mr. Rhoades built a fine residence and good barn in Denver, in which town he now resides. He has the following brothers and sisters, Rushia, Lafayette, Lee, Jay, Oscar, Eria, Underwood, Bertha Howell, Bert and Maud.

On November 14, 1897, Mr. Rhoades married Miss Clemmy S., daughter of Isaac and Corilla J. Zehner, who are mentioned in this work. Mrs. Rhoades was born in Christian county, Missouri, on January 20, 1878. To this marriage there have been born the following children, Cecil, born October 2, 1901, and died January 2, 1902; Eldred, born February 2, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Rhoades are Democrats of the Jeffersonian type and well informed upon the issues of the day. They are members of the Presbyterian church.

WILLIAM CORAM has a fine estate of one section of land in partnership with his brother, which lies about seven miles north from Grangeville. He devotes his attention to general farming and to raising stock and is very succesful, being counted one of the leading property owners of the prairie.

William Coram was born in Bristol, England, on March 29, 1844, the son of William Coram. He came with his brother and parents to Hamilton, Canada, and soon went thence to Dawn. The mother died when he was small. In 1864, our subject went to New York city and thence via Nicaraugua to San Francisco. He arrived in that city, January, 1865. Then he engaged in steamboat engineering and followed it until 1868, in which year he came to Mt. Idaho. He at once went to the mining camps and continued there and in packing much of the time. He was mining at Florence when a friendly squaw came and told them of the outbreak and with fourteen companions, Mr. Coram volunteered to fight the Indians. This was June 14, 1877, and they then went to Slate creek. On the sixteenth they came to Mt. Idaho and our subject went with the soldiers to the skirmish on Whitebird, the first of the war, where several soldiers and citizens were killed. While there, a woman came from the brush carrying an infant, and it proved to be Mrs. Belle Benedict and the child is now Mrs. Addie Brown. Mr. Coram caught a loose horse and brought them to Grangeville. He then took a trip to Lawyer's canyon and then one to Cottonwood. On the latter trip they found H. C. Brown and his wife hid in the brush. These were rescued and in all these undertakings, Mr. Coram faced great danger. After the war he returned to the mines and in 1884 came out of the mines and entered in partnership with his brother and they purchased their present place. They are prosperous and do a large business, handling stock and farming. Mr. Coram started in life with no means and his success is entirely due to his own energy and skill. He has endured great hardship in the various frontier experiences, which have been plentiful in his life and he has faced them all with fortitude and courage. He has packed his blankets over the snows of the mountains and faced the savages, and wrought in many places and ways for general advancement and to open up the country. In political matters, Mr. Coram is a Democrat but is independent in his decisions.

JOHN H. VON BARGEN is one of the early pioneers of Idaho county and has labored here with faithfulness and sagacity for its upbuilding and improvement and his industry and thrift have given to him the meed of a good holding in substantial property and placed him as one of the prosperous men of the county. He was born in Dornbusch, Hanover, Germany, on July 7, 1851, the son of Koepke and Rebecca (Schlichting) von Bargen, born in 1820 and April 10, 1824, respectively, both being native to Hanover. The father was an ocean sailor and captain later of a river boat. He died in September, 1872. The mother died in May, 1900, in Hamburg. Our subject was well educated in his native land and soon began operations on the river Elbe; five years later, being nineteen, he went to sea, visiting England, Brazil, Spain, Chile, and other countries. In 1878 he left the ocean and became captain of a craft on Lake Alstar, Germany. In 1880, he came to America and soon found his way to Camas prairie where his brother Herman was. He took a homestead and at once began farming and stock raising. To these related occupations he has given his attention since and has been prospered. He turns off annually about one hundred and twenty-five hogs and a number of cattle. His farm is well improved and his residence is of eight rooms and modern in every respect. When Mr. von Bargen settled on his place, now about four miles southwest from Denver, the country was new and his wife was the only woman in many miles. Mr. von Bargen has the following named brothers and sisters, Mary Jaenke, Peter, Herman, August.

On November 27, 1877, Mr. von Bargen married Miss Anna H. C., daughter of Henry and Anna C. (Dickoff) Schiviebert. The father, who was born in 1824, in Rottenburg, Hanover, was a carpenter and cabinet maker. He moved to Harburg in 1865 and died there in 1867. The mother was born on September 8, 1821, in Rottenburg, and died September, 1901. Mrs. von Bargen was born in Rottenburg, on September 18, 1851, and had one sister, Marie Stroemer, who died in Harburg, Germany. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs von Bargen, Anna, deceased; Peter, born February 17, 1880, now deceased; Rudolph, born September 12, 1882, now deceased; Henry, born October 30, 1884. Mr. von Bargen and his wife are active Republicans, while he is a member of the I. O O. F., and she of the Lutheran church.

THOMAS W. BALES & ROBERT H. JONES. In mentioning the salient points in the careers of these well known and leading business men of Idaho county, we desire to particularly note the items of importance in their individual lives and then relate together the labors of the partnership.

Thomas W. Bales was born in Greenfield, Missouri, on August 28, 1872, the son of Stephen H. and Matilda C. (White) Bales, natives of Indiana and Tennessee, respectively. They now both live near Greenfield, Missouri, aged fifty-seven, and fifty-eight, respectively. Thomas W. attended the public schools and then spent three years in the Ozark college. At the age of seventeen, he came west on account of poor health. He weighed ninety-seven pounds when he landed in Whitman county, Washington, but now tips the beam at two hundred and seven pounds. He soon engaged in farming in Washington and remained there until he came to Camas prairie in 1891. Then he took up stock raising on the Snake and did well. This was continued until 1899, when the partnership was formed.

Robert H. Jones was born on a farm one mile north from Grangeville, on August 28, 1872, the son of Seth and Jane (Castle) Jones, of Grangeville. He attended the home schools until 1890, when he went east to Lombard university in Galesburg, Illinois, where he took a three-year course. Upon his return here he bought and sold stock, and did real well on several train loads that he shipped to Chicago. On October 9, 1895, Mr. Jones married Miss Jessie, daughter of John and Jane Pollock of Lewiston, Illinois. Mrs. Jones died February 11, 1897, at her old home in Illinois, leaving one child five months old, Lillie Esther. On November 9, 1900, Mr. Jones married a second time and on this occasion Miss Pearl Bales, the sister of his partner, became his wife. She died January 3, 1901, at Boise, Idaho, where she was taken for treatment, leaving one child three weeks old, named Rolland Robert. Mr. Jones has his children living with him.

In 1899, Mr. Bales and Mr. Jones engaged in partnership in the stock business on the Salmon river and prosperity attended them in every detail, having in December, 1902, sold their large holdings there for twenty-seven thousand dollars. In December, 1901, they had bought their present place, a mammoth estate of about fifteen hundred acres eight miles north from Grangeville. It is all choice land and is one of the best stock farms in the entire country. They have a good residence, excellent outbuildings, orchard, and a barn, second to none in the county. They do a general farming business and raise cattle and hogs. They are raising, buying and shipping more stock than any other firm in the entire northern part of the state and are veritable leaders in the stock business. Mr. Bales and Mr. Jones are wide awake business men of ability and are of the best standing, being young men to whom great credit is to be given for the financial success that they have achieved. Beginning in the battle of life without any property at all, they have steadily risen, by reason of sagacity and industry, to be leaders in this stock country and are the recipients of the esteem and good will of all. They were born on the same date and have made an excellent showing in their careers.

Mr. Jones is to be commended for the manner in which he has cared for his motherless children. Through his struggles he has at all times kept his children with him, securing a nurse to assist in looking after their welfare.

HERMAN VON BARGEN. Among the worthy pioneers who assisted to open up Idaho county and bring it to its present state of prosperity we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, who is now one of the heavy real estate owners of the county and a leading and capable citizen.

Herman von Bargen was born in Dornbusch, Germany, on September 28, 1855, the son of Koepke and Rebecca (Schlichting). von Bargen, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. He was brought up and educated in his native place and remained with his parents until he was eighteen. In 1873 he bade farewell to the home circle and his native land and came thence to America. He settled for a year in Minnesota and then went to Butte county, California, where he farmed until 1879 when he came with seven companions overland by way of Goose lake, Canyon City, Walla Walla and Lewiston to Idaho county. He took a timber claim and a pre-emption on Camas prairie and at once inaugurated action in farming and raising stock. Prosperity came to reward his industry and skill in labor; in 1896 he bought another quarter section and in 1900 still another quarter, making him a magnificent estate of one entire section. This is well improved and is a model farm. He has two hundred and twenty-five hogs to turn off annually, raises sixty head of cattle and owns about a score of horses. Mr. von Bargen is one of the substantial men of the county and a leader in his line of labor.

On November 29, 1889, Mr. von Bargen married Miss Mary, daughter of Joseph and Anna (Dierks) Dierks, natives of Germany. The father was born in September, 1824, and died in December, 1865. The mother was born on January 20, 1834, and died on January 24, 1879. Mrs. von Bargen was born in Herrenburg, near Lubeck, Germany, on October 8, 1864, and has one brother and two sisters, John H., Caroline Wortmann, Catherine Timermann. Four children have been the fruit of this union, named as follows, Mathilda, born July 5, 1893; Clara, born April 21, 1895; Otto, born August 9, 1897; Walter, born September 3, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. von Bargen are true blue Republicans and well posted in the questions of the day. He belongs to the I. O. O. F. and they both are members of the Lutheran church.

MOSES H. RICE. Among the very first to enter the region now embraced in Idaho county and one who has continued in this section in labors for its unbuilding and advancement since, it is fitting that Mr. Rice should be granted especial mention among the worthy pioneers who came and opened the way for civilization to follow.

Moses H. Rice was born in LaPorte county, Indiana, on March 23, 1836, the son of James E. and Nancy (Bear) Rice. The father was born in Canada, on February 18, 1812, and came to the United States when quite young. He lived in Indiana and Missouri and in 1844 came to the Willamette valley over the Whitman trail and with the second emigrant train. He settled three miles south of Hillsboro in Washington county and took a section as a donation claim and remained there until 1858 when he removed to Douglas county, whence he went in 1887 to Camas prairie. In this last place he remained until his death. The mother was born in 1818 in Ohio and died on September 4, 1902, at Mt. Idaho. Our subject was brought up and educated in the Willamette valley and remained with his parents until 1858. Then he went to do for himself and made his first move to Walla Walla and there remained until 1861 when he was with the rush into the Florence country. After one year digging for gold he went to packing and packed from Lewiston, the supply point, to all the principal mining camps tributary to it. This continued until 1865 when he sold his outfit and bought sheep. Two years in this industry and then we see him in 1867 farming in partnership with Mr. Sam Phiney at Lapwai, continuing until 1873. In 1870 Mr. Rice took a pre-emption and also a homestead and upon this land he made his home until 1896. He was successful in farming and raising stock and in the year last mentioned Mr. Rice sold his interests in this line and removed to Denver and retired from more active business to enjoy the competence which his skill and industry had accumulated. At present he is dwelling in Denver. He was here during the Indian war and assisted to guard Mt. Idaho, being one of the volunteers. Mr. Rice has the following brothers and sisters, John N., Charles L., Russell H., James H., Frank W., Margaret Holbrook, Ann Harness, Eliza Ronn, Nancy McGee.

On July 28, 1872, Mr. Rice married Miss Ellen, daughter of Alonzo and Rachel (Bliss) Leland. Mrs. Rice was born in Portland. To this couple the following children have been born, Nancy Bowman, in Denver; Viola Rhaat, at Stites creek, this county; Elreda Hunt, at Lowe, Idaho; Miles H., in Elk, Idaho; Bailey F., at Lucile; F. Leland, in Idaho county. Mr. Rice is a Republican, is a member of the Pioneer Association at Grangeville and he and his wife are members of the Christian church.

ALBERT WEBBER is a prosperous and leading stockman and agriculturist of Idaho county and his estate of two hundred acres lies about eight miles northeast from Grangeville. He devotes his attention exclusively to general farming and raising stock and has made a good success because of his wisdom and thrift. He was born in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, on August 7, 1857, the son of John and Elizabeth Webber, natives of Germany and now living near this son. The father came to this country in 1856 and is a veteran of the Civil war. Our subject went with his parents from the native place to McCloud county, Minnesota and in 1871 the family went to Madison valley, Montana. In 1874 they journeyed on to the Willamette valley and in May, 1877, they came to their present place. As they were all the time on the frontier our subject received little opportunity to acquire schooling and so gained his education from personal research and reading. Mr. Webber has one brother, Lewis, and two sisters, Mrs. Mary Edwards and Mrs. Matilda Rumpf. When the family arrived in the Camas prairie country and barely got settled the Indian outbreak came and they suffered the loss of all their goods. Despite this misfortune they went on and are all now possessors of good properties. The sons went to raising horses in partnership and since that time have continued in partnership and are leading citizens and substantial property holders.

On March 4, 1885, Mr. Webber married Miss Nellie, daughter of James and Elizabeth Allen, natives of Arkansas and Tennessee, respectively, and now living at Harpster, this county. Three children were born to this union, Ralph, born June 14, 1897; Lena, born March 2, 1899; Mable, born May 14, 1901. Louis Webber, the brother and partner of our subject, was born March 24, 1866, in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, and made the various trips with the rest of the family did and is now living adjoining our subject's farm. He was married on February 25, 1894, to Oleva Allen, a sister of our subject's wife. They have three children, Arthur L., born March 24, 1895; Mary O., born December 31, 1897; Ethel N., born March 18, 1900.

ALBERT C. LANNINGHAM with Henry Elfers operates the Pioneer livery barn in Grangeville, which is the leading establishment of its kind in the town and is headquarters for some of the stage lines coming to Grangeville. Mr. Lanningham is a man of thorough business principles, handles his barn in a first class manner, having fine stock, excellent rigs and gives careful attention to the comfort and convenience of his patrons. All this combines with his geniality and kind ways to give him a liberal patronage.

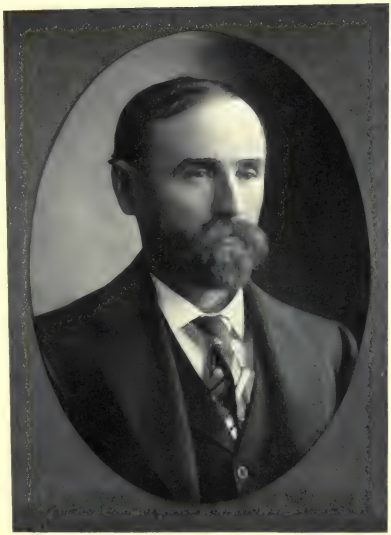
Albert C. Lanningham was born in Plattsmouth, Nebraska, on November 28, 1861, being the son of Henry and Louise (Cox) Lanningham. The father was crossing the plains to the Pikes Peak country and his train was attacked by the Indians and it is supposed that he was killed as he was never heard from since. The mother died when our subject was small and he and his sister were taken by Mr. A. H. Dolph, with whom he stayed until he was fourteen, gaining a common schooling. He was in Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota and Kansas and in 1882 came to Idaho. He took a ranch on Camas prairie near Craig mountain and proved up on it. He dealt in horses, rode the range and was interested in stock raising until 1890, when he went to Spokane. He operated a livery there for a short time then went to the coast and finally to Postfalls where he worked in a shingle mill. He returned to Grangeville in 1892, worked as night watchman for a time, drove the Salmon river stage and in March, 1899, in company with Henry Elfers, bought his present business. Since that time Mr. Lanningham has devoted himself to the prosecution of his business with vigor and wisdom and has had the gratification of seeing it prosper exceedingly.

In May, 1889, Mr. Lanningham married Miss Adelaide, daughter of Henry J. and Catherine M. Elfers, natives of Germany. Mrs. Lanningham was born on the Salmon river, in Idaho county, in 1873. She has the following brother and sisters, Henry, Katherine, Mamie. Four children have been born to this couple, Clarence, Laura, Lester, May. Mr. Lanningham is a member of the K. of P. and the W. O. W. He owns mines on the Salmon river, in the Buffalo Hump country and in other localities. Politically he is allied with the Republicans but is not partisan.

ED JOHNSON is one of the doughty and courageous men who have pressed into the wilds of the country to open it for settlement and in his labors for improvement and advancement, he has manifested great enterprise, energy and skill.



Ed Johnson was born in Minnesota, on May 25, 1874, the son of Ole A. and Carrie (Carlson) Johnson, born in Norway on January 6, 1836, and in Wisconsin, on February 6, 1847, respectively. The father is a mechanic and farmer while the mother's parents came to this country from Norway and took land in Minnesota where they farmed. Our subject had little opportunity to attend school and at the early age of fourteen he commenced for himself. After his parents came west he remained a time with them and in 1888 came to Palouse where he studied some more. Then he worked in the sawmills for seven years and on January 31, 1896, he located his present place, three and one-half miles northwest from Kooskia. He has devoted his energy to subduing and improving the farm and has a good showing. Eighty acres were laid under tribute to crop last year; he and his brother brought the first selfbinder and threshing machine into this section. Mr. Johnson has thirty odd head of cattle, some horses and colts; his cattle are good Shorthorn grades. His nice orchard and good buildings make his place one of the fine ones of this section. He has six brothers and four sisters, Carl, Peter, John, Oscar J., Martin J., Albert A. J., Martha C., Ellen, Mary E. and Clara,

On April 1, 1900, Mr. Johnson married Miss Gustava, daughter of Cyrus E. and Mary A. (Daugharty) Kidder. The father is a sawmill man and stockman. He is now serving as justice of the peace and is a veteran of the Civil war, serving in Company G, Nineteenth Wisconsin for four years, four months, and two days. The mother of Mrs. Johnson was born in Wisconsin, on August 23, 1849. Mrs. Johnson was born in Missouri, on April 29, 1883, and has the following sisters, Hattie, Martha M., Cora F., Vennie R. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, Esther C., on December 23, 1900, and Madoline, on May 11, 1903, both in Idaho county.

JOHN W. TURNER, M. D., is one of the strong and prominent men of northern Idaho. Without doubt the issues of life and death are more intimately handled by the medical fraternity than by any other class of men and therefore it is that popular sentiment demands that the physicians of today be men of ability, probity, unquestioned integrity and thoroughly fitted for the responsible position to which their profession calls them. It is well known that Dr. Turner fulfills these requirements in every particular and his standing is unquestioned.

John W. Turner was born in Monroe county, Indiana, on February 12, 1861, while his parents were visiting there. His father, Andrew J., was born in Indiana in 1828, settled in Iowa in 1854 and in Kansas in 1856, was a member of the Kansas Militia and is still living in that state. The mother, Maria L. (Whitson), was born in Indiana in 1827 and still lives in Kansas. John W. was raised in Miami county, Kansas, two miles from John Brown's home. He was educated in the common schools and from his early days began the study of medicine. When twenty-four, he secured a position in a drug store in Osawatomie, where he remained two years. Then came a time of study in the Eclectic Medical Institute in Cincinnati, from which he came to Cottonwood in 1888, when but four or five houses marked the place. He returned to the Institute and graduated in the class of 1891, taking second honors of the class. Dr. Turner now came back to Cottonwood and took up his practice, since which time he has continued steadily with ever increasing patronage, which at the present time is large and lucrative.

On April 11, 1883, in Indiana, Dr. Turner married Mary A. Brown, whose parents, George L. and Caroline Brown, were born in Indiana. Mrs. Turner was born there also, the date being 1859. She has two sisters and four brothers, as follows: William, Norvetta, Iva, McClelland, Cora and Walter. Dr. Turner has the following brothers and sisters, Frank, Andrew J., Emma, Margaret, Florence, Althea. Three children have come to gladden the household, Eunice, Maude, Lloyd. Mrs. Turner is a member of the Methodist church. Dr. Turner is serving his third term as coroner of the county and in 1896 was chosen to the state senate and while there he made his influence known for salutary laws, being the advocate of the state medical examing board. He was appointed a member of the first board but on account of a technicality the law was declared unconstitutional but the next legislature promptly passed it and it stands today. Dr. Turner is a member of the state medical society and state board of medical examiners, and was appointed a member of the Idaho advisory council of the Eclectic school at the World's Fair at Chicago, 1893. Dr. Turner is a man of ability and sound principles, has the confidence of the entire community and is one of the leading men of the county.

JOHN W. TURNER M. D.

MAGNUS J. DURANT. How stirring and eventful is the life of the real pioneer, guide, miner, trapper and with what interest are the accounts of these lines of life read by all parties. Could the events in the career of the subject of this sketch be outlined in full they would doubtless make a very interesting and thrilling volume. It is with pleasure that we append a review of the same.

Magnus J. Durant was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, on December 29, 1873, the son of William J. and Julia (Longstreet) Durant. The father was a veteran of the Civil war. Our subject had scanty opportunity for education but so well did he improve the odd moments that he secured a good fund of information and needed training. When eighteen he started to do for himself and worked the first year for ten dollars per month. In 1892 he came west, landing in Spokane with seven dollars as his cash capital. He went into the woods and at that work and sawmilling he spent nearly three years. Then we see him in Delta, mining, and in 1895 he came to Brown creek. Mr. Durant always possessed the real frontiersman's spirit and he soon gratified his ambitions by turning from mining to trapping and for several winters he did well in that line. He caught bear, otter, mink, beaver and other game and continued in this fascinating employment until 1898. On June 2, of that year, Mr. Durant bought the improvements of another man on his present place, which is about five miles north from Gregg on Rattle Snake ridge and he at once began to improve the place. He has spent much of the winters in the mountains and on several occasions his knowledge and skill in these mighty barriers of nature have been brought into requisition by tourists and he has guided various parties through the most intricate regions of the Bitter Roots. He has demonstrated himself a trusty and skillful guide and doubtless Mr. Durant will lead many parties in these entrancing mountains as he is more widely known.

On one occasion when forty miles up the Wetass, Mr. Durant dug a canoe from a pine log and loaded it with provisions and attempted the dangerous descent of the stream. It was too much for mortal to do without accident but although they got wet and suffered from the cold, he succeeded in getting to the settlement below. Mr. Durant has six brothers and four sisters. His farm presents evidence of his labors and he is a man of good standing. Mr. Durant recently guided a party through the Locksaw and the Sellway country and he is a typical mountaineer.

William J. Durant, the father of our subject, was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, on January 15, 1844. He enlisted in Company H, Sixty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on September 7, 1861. Being mustered out on the seventh of the following October, he reinlisted on January 1, 1863, at Hilton Head, South Carolina. On August 23, 1865, he was discharged at City Point, Virginia. During this time he was in a skirmish at Harrisburg, Virginia, later he was guard for an ammunition train, after which he suffered from typhoid fever in the hospital. Following the hospital days he joined his regiment in South Carolina and took part in the engagements at Norris Island and Forts Wagner, Gregg and Sumter. Then he was part of the victorious army that figured in the last campaigns just preceding Appottomax Court House. After the war he returned to Zanesville, Ohio, and remained with his parents on the farm until March 4, 1867. On that date Mr. Durant married and began operations for himself. Mrs. Durant was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, on August 22, 1843. John Durant, the father of William J., was born in Alsace, France, in February, 1809, and died at Zanesville, Ohio, on August 21, 1891, aged eighty-two. This venerable gentleman had married Margaret Zorn, who was born in Alsace, France, in August, 1821, and died in Zanesville, Ohio, on October 2, 1899, aged seventy-eight.

JOHN W. CREA is one of Idaho county's substantial and prominent stockmen and agriculturists and is one of the heavy landowners of the county as well. He is a man of excellent business qualities and in addition to his business mentioned, he is a first class miller and has wrought in this capacity much in this county and adjacent sections.

John W. Crea was born in Centerville, Appanoose county, Iowa, on April 12, 1859, the son of James Crea. The father was born in England in June, 1836, and came to the United States in 1852 to dwell with his uncle and aunt, the well known family of Crea in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. When twenty-one he came to Appanoose county, Iowa, took a half section of land and farmed it for seven years. In 1864 he came to Harrisburg, Oregon, bought land and remained seven years, in 1871 was in Dayton, Washington, and in 1872 came to Camas prairie. Here he remained until the time of his death on June 29, 1882. At the time of the Indian war, he assisted to bring in the bodies of Norton, Moore, Mrs. John Chamberlain and her child, whose tongue had been cut. Our subject was brought up in the various places where the family lived and was also an attendant at the school in District No. 2, from which the schoolhouse was moved to Grangeville. When nineteen he entered the Grangeville flour mills and wrought for seven years. At the time of the Indian war he joined Company B, Second regiment of Idaho Volunteers and was guard for Mt. Idaho and Grangeville. In 1883 Mr. Crea took up a half section west from Denver four miles and now he has over a thousand acres, owns two hundred head of cattle and other stock, besides having his farm well improved and owning property in Grangeville. In October, 1883, Mr. Crea was miller for the government at Kamiah and continued until December, 1886. In July, 1888, he took a position for the government at Lapwai as miller and continued until November, 1892, and from 1897 to 1900 he was in the Denver mills, but during all this time Mr. Crea has continued his stock and farming enterprises. He has the following brothers and sisters, Thomas D., William, James, Robert, Henry, Mary Holbrook.

On February 14, 1882 Mr. Crea married Miss Emma V., daughter of George L. and Mary C. (McLean) Bowman. The father was born on November 1, 1832, in Augusta county, Virginia. He lived there and in Indiana until his death, which occurred in his native state on September 23, 1861. Mrs. Bowman was born in Indiana on September 16, 1836, married August 9, 1855, and died April 2, 1879. Mrs. Crea was born in Augusta county, Virginia, on September 6, 1857, and has two brothers, Francis M. and William W. Six children have been born to this union, James B., born December 20, 1882; Edward B., born June 20, 1885, and died August 21, 1890; Raymond F., born August 14, 1887; Rose E., born November 19, 1890; May E., born May 18, 1893; William J., born July 28, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Crea are Republicans and he belongs to the I. O. O. F., and the M. W. A., while she is a member of the Christian church.

HOLSEY WICKAM lives five miles north from Grangeville upon a good estate which he has caused to produce the fruits of the field in abundance for a number of years. He is a man of reliability and is in the best of standing in the community. He was born in the vicinity of Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, on October 14, 1850, the son of Holsey and Nancy J. (Manning) Wickam, natives of New York. The father came to Pennsylvania, then to Ohio, and thence to Miller county, Missouri, and finally to Douglas county, Kansas, where he enlisted in Company B, Twelfth Kansas Infantry and served until his honorable discharge. In 1867 he returned to Miller county and there died in 1878. The mother was married in New York and is still living in Miller county, being ninety years old and hearty and strong. Our subject is the eighth of a family of twelve children, six boys and six girls, seven of the twelve now living. Our subject staid at home and worked with his father and attended school until 1872, then went to Texas and the next year took back a drove of cattle. In 1874, he came via San Francisco, to Portland and on to Douglas county. In 1877, he settled in Tammanay hollow near Lewiston and in 1889, he removed thence to his present place. He bought a half section and has it well improved. A good dwelling, fine barn and out buildings, with excellent forest grove of ten acres besides orchard and other improvements make the estate one of beauty, comfort and value.

On March 13, 1888, near Lewiston, Mr. Wickam married Miss Mary S., daughter of L. P. and Rachel (Baird) Clark, who came from California to Lewiston. Mrs. Wickam was born in 1858 and died in June, 1893. She left one child, Iva F., born February 4, 1889, and is now living with her mother's parents. She is receiving a good education and is a bright child.

GEORGE A. COWGILL, the intelligent and leading agriculturist and dairyman, whose labors in Idaho county have been conducted with skill and enterprise, is deservedly classed as one of the substantial men of the county and a real builder of its interests and wealth. He was born in Columbia county, Wisconsin, on October 22, 1861, the son of Abraham and Esther (Roberts) Cowgill. The father, a shoemaker, was born in England in 1820, came to the United States in 1853 and settled in Wisconsin, where he did farming and bred fine stock. He owns and operates the Sunnyside stock farm in Wisconsin. The mother was born in England in 1822 and died in 1866. Our subject was reared in Wisconsin and in 1885 graduated from the Northwestern Business College and Academy. He commenced to teach in 1880 and continued while studying in the above institution. In 1885 he went to Jordan valley, Oregon, to visit his brothers and later we see him in Pendleton, where he was engaged as salesman with Dusenberry Brothers. The next spring he took up the work of the educator at Alba and for three years followed it steadily. He had charge also of the warehouse at Warren, near Pendleton. He reamined here until 1894, and then quit teaching on account of failing health. After this he came to Camas Prairie and bought a quarter section, where he now lives four miles west from Grangeville, later adding two hundred and eighty acres more. He at once took up farming and stock raising and handles thoroughbred Poland China hogs, having about one hundred and fifty. He also started the Eagle Dairy, which he has made a paying and popular instituiton. Mr. Cowgill handles the business with skill and acquired wisdom of the present day, while his untiring care and modern and improved methods give the choicest results, which have made his products sought after in the market. He has all the best buildings needed in his work and has made a flattering success. Mr. Cowgill has four brothers, William, Thomas R., Mark, John C. F. Mark is deceased and the others are in Malheur county, Oregon.

On January 29, 1893 Mr. Cowgill married Miss Grace, daughter of William O. and Mary (Argo) Warren. Mr. Waren was born June 9, 1840, in Illinois, of pioneer parents. They crossed the plains in 1853 to the Willamette valley, settling in Linn county. He was reared and educated there and when eighteen came to Lewiston and took up prospecting, and was one of the original discoverers of gold at Florence. He did mining, raising stock, farming and so forth at various times and now dwells at Warren, Umatilla county, Oregon, where he owns half a section of land. The mother of Mrs. Cowgill was born in Bourbon county, Kentucky, on February 5, 1843. Her parents were pioneers in Missouri and later in the Willamette valley, whither they came in 1852. Mrs. Cowgill was born in Linn county, Oregon, on May 27, 1869 and has the following brothers and sisters: Kate McAlexander, Marion, Bert, Georgiana, Fred, Iona. To this happy marriage there have been born four children, Myrtle V., born May 19, 1894; Clara E., born January 5, 1897; George D., born September 5, 1898; Norma, born March 26, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Cowgill are solid Republicans. He is clerk of district No. 3 and is a member of the W. W.

GEORGE D. SMITH, one of Grangeville's best known and most substantial citizens, who is now proprietor of the Wiltse house, a leading and popular hotel of the county, is certainly entitled to representation in the history of his county, because of his faithful and wise labors here for its upbuilding, because of the prominent place that he holds and has held in its councils and among the people, because of his own real worth and integrity, having always in his walk here manifested those virtues of sound principles, integrity, and uprightness.

George D. Smith was born in Roseburg, Oregon, on January 4, 1854, the son of Thomas and Arthusia E. (Lynn) Smith. The father was born in England, February 12, 1824, came to the United States in 1830, was in Rochester, New York, Cleveland, Ohio, and Laporte, Indiana. In 1847 he came to the wilds of Oregon with ox teams, accompanied by his brother William. He located the North Umpqua ferry on the river of that name and took a half section donation claim. Stock raising and farming occupied him and on October 21, 1852 he married Miss A. E. Lynn, whose parents were natives of Germany. She started across the plains with them in 1850, but her father died of cholera at Ft. Laramie, Wyoming, and she and her sister walked the balance of the way to The Dalles. This was a distance of sixteen hundred miles. The parents still live in Roseburg and have celebrated their golden wedding. These venerable pioneers and worthy people have done much to bring civilization in and bore the burdens of the day without a murmur. The father has been probate judge, county commissioner, and president of the State Agricultural Society of Oregon and is a prominent and capable man, highly esteemed by the people and of excellent worth. Our subject grew to manhood in Oregon and finished his education in the Wilbur Academy in that state. He spent a short time in California in 1873 and made his way to Idaho county on September 5, 1873. Since then he has been one of the leaders and builders. He engaged in stock business and in 1878 took land. This was near where Grangeville is now but no town was here then. Mr. Smith continued steadily in the stock business until 1897, when he sold out and opened the hotel he now handles in Grangeville. He also owns other property.

On August 5, 1878 at Roseburg, Oregon, Mr. Smith married Miss Martha J., daughter of Harden and Iva J. (Morton) Davis, pioneers of Oregon in 1850. They have celebrated their golden wedding and still dwell in Roseburg. Mrs. Smith is next to the oldest of twelve children and Mr. Smith is the oldest of twelve. She has seven brothers and three sisters living, all in Oregon but John N., an attorney in Kansas City. Mr. Smith as four sisters and five brothers living, Lynn, Lee, Nathan, Ralph, Thomas, Mary, Emma, Helen, Grace. Mr. Smith is a Mason and has been master three times in the Grangeville lodge. He is also president of the Pioneer Association. In 1884 Mr. Smith was nominated for sheriff and although he was a strong Republican and the county Democratic, he was defeated by only a few votes. He has been supervisor of the Bitter Root forest reserve. Mr. Smith has numerous mining interests and other property. He is one of the substantial men of the county, has labored long and faithfully to bring about its present development and prosperity and great credit is due him for his achievements.

ROBERT N. WALKER is one of the heavy land owners of the Camas parairie country and is also one of the leading citizens, being a good substantial man of capability and integrity. He was born in McDonald county, Missouri, on March 30, 1852, the son of Robert F and Mary (Falls) Walker, natives of eastern Tennessee. The father being in the Civil war, was killed near his home in 1864. The mother died in McDonald county in 1898. The following children, besides our subject, were born to this union: William, Hugh L., Mrs. Carrie Browning, Mrs. M. E. Clark, Mrs. Martha E. Davis. Robert N. was reared and educated in his native place and when fourteen went to Fannin county, Texas, and herded cattle. Returning to Missouri in 1871, he went to Monterey county, California and two years later returned to Missouri. In 1886 Mr. Walker jorneyed to Whitman county and there farmed until 1891, when he came to his present place, four miles north from Grangeville, and bought four hundred and forty acres of good land, which he has improved and cultivated with skill since that time. He has one of the finest farms of the section, well cared for and embellished with fine buildings, and other valuable improvements, as eight-room residence, good wind mill, plenty of running water which is piped into the house.

Mr. Walker started the battle of life with nothing and has now a competence for the balance of life, the result of his hard labor and skill in management. Mr. Walker is a member of the W. W.

On June 29, 1873 Mr. Walker married Miss Mary E., daughter of Robert and Cynthia (Rice) Prater, natives of Morgan county, Kentucky. The father died July 4, 1896 in his eighty-ninth year. The mother was born in 1820 and still lives in her native county, well and hearty. Mrs. Walker was born in Morgan county, May 22, 1855. Ten children have been the fruit of this union, Rosa, deceased; Frederic, Robert O., Mrs. Lulu Costly, Cynthia C., William C., Hugh C., Lillian, Nellie, James.

JESSY B. THOMPSON is a farmer and stockman whose well tilled and productive farm lies one mile northeast from Tolo, was born in Wapello county, Iowa, on July 15, 1865, the son of David and Margaret Thompson, born in Indiana, on August, 1820, and in 1827, respectively. They were pioneers of Iowa and the father died in October, 1888, and the mother died in 1878. Our subject remained at home until fifteen and then went to Nebraska and dwelt with a brother. He entered the Methodist college at York and graduated in 1885. Then he came to Camas prairie via Pendleton, Walla Walla, Lewiston and by stage the balance of the way. Two years later he took government land and engaged in farming and raising stock. Later he sold this property and bought where he now lives. He owns a quarter section, raises cattle and hogs and general products.

Mr. Thompson has the following named brothers and sisters, Oscar, John, Dan, Amanda Barton, Mary Steers, David, Matheus.

On November 9, 1890, Mr. Thompson married Miss Melinda, daughter of Joseph and Martha Fehner. Mrs. Thompson was born in Illinois, on July 12, 1871, and she has four brothers and sisters, Lucy Mitchell, William, Wesley, John N. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson there have been born five children, Claude, born May 8, 1892; Maud, born February 14, 1894; Roy, born May 5, 1896; Vera, born October 5, 1898; Winifred, born November 19, 1900; Marvin, born April 19, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are active Republicans and are well posted in the issues of the day. He is a member of the W. W.

HARRY V. MARKHAM is a product of Idaho county that does credit to his birthplace and his uprightness and enterprise have won him a good standing and the confidence of the people. He dwells on a farm about one mile north from Grangeville and is prosperous in his labors.

Harry V. Markham was born on the farm where he now lives, on October 29, 1868, the son of Nathaniel and Fannie (Smith) Markham. The father was born in Ohio, in 1830, and crossed the plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley in 1852, settling near Roseburg. The mother was born in Laporte, Indiana, on September 7, 1835, and started across the plains with her parents. The father died in Saint Joseph, Missouri, and the rest of the family came on. Her brothers, Ernest and Marion, took charge of the journey. She married Mr. Markham on September 3, 1855, and in 1868 they removed to Camas prairie and settled on the present homestead. Nine children were born to this couple, Frank, Mary, Alma, Susan, Amos, Harry, Edith, Robert, Anna. The first and last are deceased. The father died on February 21, 1898, but the mother still lives with our subject. The ancestors of this worthy couple came from England. Mr. Markham was an upright, capable and kind man and had the respect and confidence of all and at his death the Masons buried him, he being the oldest Master Mason here. Our subject grew to manhood here and received a good education and then worked for a New York cattle firm on the Salmon and was foreman for seven years. At present Mr. Markman is not only engaged in farming but is in partnership with his brothers, Amos and Robert, in raising stock and they have a goodly herd. He also owns a good house in Grangeville.

On October 5, 1890, Mr. Markham married Miss Mary J., daughter of Charles F. and Mary (Loomis) Brown, mentioned also in this work. Mrs. Markham was born in Seward, Nebraska, on October 23, 1870. Her mother died when she was two years old and an aunt raised her. When fifteen she accompanied her father to Grangeville. She has one brother, William G., and one sister, Ada F. Keller. Mr. and Mrs. Markham have four children, Allan R., born September 25, 1891; Addie May, born January 5, 1895; Charles E., born October 3, 1897; Oren W., born June 24, 1900. Mr. and Mrs Markham are deeply interested in the religious and educational welfare of the community and are upholders of all moves for the general advancement, being progressive and capable people.

HENRY T. SMITH. Among the pioneers of the Glover country we should mention the subject of this sketch, who is one of the enterprising young men ready to take hold with his hands and perform with his might the things to be done.

Henry T. Smith was born in DeKalb county, Missouri, on February 16, 1876, the son of Anderson B. and Fanny (Ashby) Smith, natives of DeKalb and Grundy counties, Missouri, respectively. The father was born on April 19, 1836, and served two years in the Second Missouri Volunteers. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Vicksburg and after nine months of this life he took the oath of allegiance and was released. Mr. Smith had a brother in the same prison and when they were released from the Chesapeake bay prison, they walked almost all the way to Salt Lake City, Utah. The mother of our subject was a school teacher and one of her brothers, William Ashby, was a captain in the Confederate army. Our subject was trained in the district school and then by his own exertions he put himself through a course at the Northwest and the Wesleyan colleges in Missouri. He completed these courses when twenty and then spent two years at home. After this he went to Oklahoma, this being 1898, and for two years he bought and shipped cattle after which he took the fever and left that country. We next see him in Kansas City, whence he came to Spokane and in the spring of 1901 Mr. Smith came to his present place and bought the improvements of another man. He has devoted himself to the improvement of his place since that time and in time will have a beautiful and valuable farm. Mr. Smith has some stock and is preparing for fruit raising. He is a progressive and enterprising young man and is a strong advocate of good schools. He has three brothers and two sisters, Ernest A., Ahira V. J. S., Beatrice, Blanche. Mr. Smith has never left the charming life of the bachelor and single handed is fighting the battle of opening a farm and making a home.

DAVID SCHNEIDER is a man whose labors and skill, coupled with tenacity of purpose and pluck, have placed him in a prosperous condition. He has a good farm about three miles northeast from Westlake and in addition to opening this from the wild sod, he has done much freighting and is now possessed of a good property.

David Schneider was born in Russia on June 2, 1850, being the son of George S. and Lizzie (Schick) Schneider, natives of Russia. The father was born on January 19, 1818. Our subject has the following brother and sisters: Kathrena, Susie, Fred. At the age of twenty-six, Mr. Schneider came to the United States and farmed for a period of eleven years in Kansas and Washington. In 1880 he went to Los Angeles and for a time he was in hard financial circumstances there. Although anxious for work, he was forced to abandon a job with a circus on account of the rough crowd. Later he secured employment and then came to Seattle, where he was soon engaged, as it was immediately after the great fire. He worked by the day for a time and then took a contract for unloading brick and made about eight dollars per day. Later he was in Tacoma and then came to the Palouse country where he farmed for a time and was swamped by the hard times and wet of 1893. He clung to the property and traded until he saved some and at the opening of the reservation Mr. Schneider removed hither and although it was a struggle to open up a farm and care for a large family, he succeeded and now has a good property. He owns twenty cattle, eleven horses, seventeen hogs, and one hundred and forty acres of grain. He has comfortable buildings and is one of the thrifty farmers of the vicinity.

On January 8, 1883 Mr. Schneider married Miss Caritine, daughter of Chris and Lottie Hagen, natives of Russia and born on August 26, 1835 and July 21, 1833, respectively. The wedding occurred in Marion, Kansas, and Judge B. T. Broockett officiated. Mrs. Schneider was born in southern Russia on May 3, 1863 and she has the following brothers and sisters: Lottie, Katie, John, Lizzie, Mary Nettie, Minnie, Daniel, Lydia. The first three were born in Russia, but the rest were born in Kansas. To Mr. and Mrs. Schneider there have been born the following children: Clara, born July 24, 1883 and died February 27, 1887; David, born March 15, 1885; Samuel, born March 1, 1887; Mattie, born February 17, 1889; Esther R., born February 15, 1893; Mary L., born August 20, 1895; Kassa, born July 24, 1898, and died May 22, 1899; Herbert, born April 11, 1899. The first three children were born in Kansas, the next in California, the next in Washington, and the rest in Idaho. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider are adherents of the Lutheran church.

HUGH BRADY is one of the thrifty stockmen and farmers of Idaho county. He dwells about three miles south of Denver and has a quarter section of land which he acquired by homestead right.

Hugh Brady was born in Clinton county, New York, on February 27, 1862, the son of John and Ellen (O'Mara) Brady, born in county Cavin, Ireland, on March 12, 1835 and in county Cork, Ireland, in 1841, respectively. The father came to this county when a child with his parents and is now a farmer in New York. Our subject was brought up and educated in his native place. In January, 1880, he left for Leadville, Colorado, where he worked in the mines for two years. In 1882 he was in New Mexico and railroaded. July of that year found him on his way, via San Francisco, to Oregon and Washington, where he did railroad work also. He landed on Camas prairie finally in 1884. After working out at various employment for a time, he took his present place and since that time has devoted himself to building a good property and making a comfortable home and valuable improvements. Mr. Brady has the following named brothers and sisters: Mark T., William, Phillip, John, Nora E. Murphy.

On June 27, 1895 Mr. Brady married Miss Lizzie M., daughter of Orren and Biddy A. (Johnson) Bentley. The father was born in Illinois in 1841 and served in the Civil war. He came to Kansas, and in 1884 thence to Camas Prairie. He now lives six miles west from Tolo. The mother of Mrs. Brady was born in Illionis in 1847 and now lives in this county. Mrs. Brady was born in Illinois on February 20, 1878 and has the following named brothers and sisters: Hugh, Viola, Leila, John, Ernest, Minnie. Two children have been born to this couple, Alta, born June 15, 1896; Ray, born March 15, 1898. Mr. Brady is a member of the M. W. A.

CHRISTOPHER F. KEEFER has not been in Idaho county as long as some of the earliest pioneers of this section, but his enterprise and stability coupled with thrift and uprightness, have made him one of the substantial and prominent citizens of this section. He was born in Stuttgart, Germany, on November 6, 1867, the son of Joseph D. and Appolonia D. (Pfaler) Keefer, natives of Germany. The father, who was a prominent man of his section, being chief of police, was a first lieutenant in the Franco-Prussian war and fought through the struggle and was wounded. He came with his family to the United States in 1887, his wife dying in Chicago the next year; he returned to Germany with his daughter and there died October 24, 1901. Four children were born to this marriage, Christopher, Mary, Charles, Amelia. Our subject was educated in the various places he lived during his chilhood and come to Denver in 1891, then journeyed to Montana and later to Spokane, where he followed the butcher trade. While in Montana he was one of party of eight who rescued an emigrant train from the Indians in the Big Hole basin.

On October 2, 1901, Mr. Keefer married Mrs. Luella M. Markham, daughter of Myron D. and Martha J. (Love) Greene, natives of western New York. They removed to Minnesota and then came to Camas prairie where they now live. Mrs. Keefer was married to Frank Markham February 14, 1886, who was an early pioneer of this prairie. He was born September 3, 1857 and died May 24, 1896. He took the homestead where Mr. and Mrs. Keefer now live. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Markham, Alma Mable, born May 11, 1887, and died January 13, 1889; Chester A., born October 10, 1888; Lora B., born August 10, 1891; Eunice L., born December 6, 1895. Mrs. Keefer has one brother and two sisters, Myron D., Marion Augusta, Mary Isadore. Mrs. Keefer was born May 10, 1866, in Dakota county, Minnesota, was educated in the Hamlin University in St. Paul and taught for some years. Mr. Keefer is a member of the I. O. O. F.,, of the Maccabees and the Redmen.

HON. JAMES DEHAVEN holds the position of United States commissioner, having been apointed in 1897 and reappointed in 1901. He is one of the leading atorneys of the county of Idaho and has manifested those qualities of sterling worth which coupled with capability and carefully acquired erudition have given him a first class clientage and an unexcelled standing among the people.

James DeHaven was born in Humboldt county, California, on June 18, 1854, the son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Wells) DeHaven, born in Ohio in 1815 and 1823, respectively, and died in 1863 and 1856. The father was a pioneer in California in 1849 and came to Boise basin in 1863, where he died. Being thus early deprived of his parents, our subject was reared by Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Barber until he was eighteen. He received a good education and then started for himself and when nineteen commenced the study of law. In 1876, we see him in Lane county, Oregon, and two years later he came thence to Nez Perces county and took land near Genesee, devoting himself to the basic art of agriculture and stock raising. In 1892, he could have sold his property for twelve thousand dollars but after the panic and flood of 1893, he quit the following year with two thousand dollars of debt. In 1886, Mr. DeHaven was chosen to represent his county in the fourteenth territorial legislature, which enacted the code of 1887, the revised statutes of the state. He was re-elected in 1888 by a satisfied constituency at which time was passed the Alturas County Bill, which was later declared constitutional by the supreme court of the United States. Following the financial depression of 1894, Mr. DeHaven went to Lewiston and read law with E. O'Neill and continued there until April, 1896, but was admitted before the supreme court in October, 1895. In 1896, coming to Grangeville he located for practice and here we find him now, having continued steadily in the pursuit of his practice with an ever increasing clientage until the present. At first Mr. DeHaven was associated with Frank E. Fogg and later with Charles H. Nugent but in 1901, he formed a partnership with Charles T. McDonald; in April, 1903, this firm was dissolved by mutual consent.

In 1884, Mr. DeHaven married Miss Kate H., daughter of Thomas H. and Louise F. (Rouse) Mason, the wedding occurring near Genesee. Mr. Mason kept the stage station on Mason creek on Craig mountain in 1866 and continued until the Indians drove him out. Mason prairie is named from him. He was born in England and died in 1902. The mother was born in New York and still lives. Mrs. DeHaven had one uncle, Harry Mason, who was killed by the Indians in 1877. She was born in Albany, New York, and has one sister, Nellie Shilts, in Roseburg, Oregon. Mr. DeHaven has one brother, John J., United States district judge in San Francisco. Six children have been born to this couple, John, Harry M., Ernest, Mary, Louise and Francis. Mr. DeHaven is an active Republican and in 1898 was nominated for county attorney but went down with his party. He is an influential and leading citizen and an upright and capable man and attorney.

JOHN A. SWARTS, familiarly known as "Gov. Swarts," is one of the leading and capable men of Idaho county and has lived the life of the pioneer in this and other western localities and has done a noble part in the opening and developing of the country. He was born in Frederick county, Virginia, in the valley of the Shenandoah, on May 1, 1822, the son of Lewis and Elizabeth (Jones) Swarts, natives also of Frederick county and born March 1, 1800 and 1807, respectively. The father was a companion of Daniel Boone and died in 1855; the mother died in 1862 and both families were pioneers of Virginia. Our subject there grew to manhood, received an education and when twenty-one went to Iowa, later he was in Ohio and in 1852 came across the plains with his wife and two children. He arrived in California in five months and four days and went to mining in Nevada county, where he wrought eighteen years. He did well and in 1862 came with a company of California miners to Florence. He wrought two years and then returned home where he remained until 1870. Then came a trip to Oregon and three years were spent in the Willamette valley. Next we see him in Idaho county where he took a half section of land and bought more where he now resides, six miles northeast from Grangeville. He has devoted himself to raising stock and general farming, in which he has prospered.

On June 12, 1845, in Mason, Warren county, Ohio, Mr. Swarts married Miss Mary, daughter of Lucas and Maria (Mason) Leonard, natives of Maine and Ohio, respectively. The father died in 1832 of cholera. Mrs. Swarts was born in Warren county, October 24, 1828, and has two brothers, Francis, deceased, and William. She has always been careful to minister to the sick and needy and her skill and kindness have made her a veritable ministering angel in many places on the frontier, where she is a true mother in Israel. Mr. Swarts is the oldest of four children and the only one living. Four children were born to this union, Della Gelbach, in Grangeville; Bertha Longs, near Grangeville; Theodore D., and Marion Calkins, deceased, on the Salmon. Mr. Swartz calls himself a black Republican and urges, as the reason, that he has been out in the world.

During the Indian war Mr. Swarts was here and the first intimation he had of trouble was when he was hauling lumber, he saw an Indian riding swiftly, another one following, and their actions aroused his suspicions. Coming home he found Mr. Fenn had been sent by Mr. Brown of Mt. Idaho to warn them. He unhitched and later heard horses approaching rapidly, which proved to be his son and John McPherson, who called forcibly to him to get to Mt. Idaho at once. Hurried action soon made them ready and they sped thence as fast as possible. They took in a neighbor woman and could see as they journeyed, flashes of light, which proved to be the Indians shooting settlers. About midnight they got to Mt. Idaho and the next morning Mr. Swarts started home, meeting Lena Bowers on the way who told of the awful murder on the prairie and as other men rode up, Mr. Swarts sent her to Mt. Idaho with them, then also returned and assisted in caring for the wounded. Mrs. Swarts also being skilled in nursing, cared for the wounded, until Dr. Morris came the next night. Later, when Mr. Swartz and others went to his farm to see about the crops and goods, a man rode up telling him of the murder of the volunteers on the Cottonwood and they all sped to Mt. Idaho. When Maggie Manuel was brought in Mrs. Swarts set her arm, while she told a straight story of the awful tragedy and how in coming to her mother she had stepped in the blood with her bare feet.

Mr. Swarts is a genial and kind gentleman and he and his estimable wife are deserving of the high esteem and respect received by them from all.

FRED TAUTFEST. Russia has contributed many of her sturdy sons to make excellent citizens of this fair Republic and among this number we mention the subject of this sketch, who is a thrifty and well-to-do farmer dwelling about three miles northeast from Westlake, where he has made a good farm from the wild land taken by homestead right and is one of the leading citizens of his community.

Fred Tautfest was born in Russia on October 24, 1860, being the son of Jacob and Sophia (Huffman) Tautfest, also natives of Russia. They had two children besides our subject, David and Jacob, both born in Russia. Our subject started out a poor boy, made his way through college in his native land, then came to America and settled in Kansas where he farmed for seven years. Next we see him in Oregon, a year later he came on to Washington and after working at various occupations for some time he came to Idaho county and tok his present farm as a homestead. He has the estate all fenced, half in cultivation, thirty-one head of cattle, plenty of horses, hogs and so forth and good substantial buildings. The farm is supplied with fine spring water in abundance and also has sufficient timber for use on the estate.

Mr. Tautfest married Miss Katie Fischer, who was born in Russia, on September 21, 1865. The wedding occurred on December 13, 1883. Mr. Fischer was born in Russia on March 15, 1843, and took as his wife, Katie Wagner, who was born on October 12, 1844. Mrs. Tautfest has the following brothers and sisters, Lizzie Geis, Adam, John C., Mollie Lawbach, Jacob W., one of the Rough Riders in the Spanish war and still in the service; Hannah Dumler, Mary, Henry. To Mr. and Mrs. Tautfest the following children have been born, Emma E., born in Marion county, Kansas, December 10, 1885; Edward, born in Kansas, July 22, 1887; Benjamin F., born in Albina, Oregon, February 15, 1889; George W., born in Walla Walla, on November 27, 1891; William C., born in Walla Walla, Washington, on May 12, 1893; Elsie M., born in Walla Walla, on April 6, 1895; Laura L., born in Idaho county, March 12, 1898; Melvina L., born in Idaho county, May 20, 1900; Katie S., born in Idaho county, May 23, 1902. Mr. Tautfest is a strong Republican and also a warm advocate of good schools.

JOHN M. & FREDERIC BERNTHAL are well known and prosperous stockmen and farmers in Idaho county and their present home is on their large estate of five hundred and sixty acres of land, one hundred and sixty acres to farm and the rest in pasture about three miles southwest from Denver. Their parents are Frederic and Margaret (Reiff) Bernthal. The father was born in Bavaria, came to the United States with his parents when young and settlement was made in Frankenmuth, Saginaw county, Michigan, where he farmed. He learned the trade of tailor in the old country. Frankenmuth was his home until his death in the spring of 1861. The mother of our subjects came to America from Bavaria with her parents and is still living in Michigan with her children. John M. Bernthal was born in Saginaw county, on December 22, 1855 and there was reared and attended school. He remained with his parents until twenty-eight and in the fall of 1883 went to Texas and joined his brother. After a year or so there, on August 1, 1885, he came to Lewiston and two years later came to Camas prairie where he took land. Since that time he has continued here in farming and stock raising.

Frederic Bernthal was born in Michigan, on May 18, 1858 and like his brother was raised and educated in the native place. He left Michigan in 1881 and went to Texas. There he followed the bakery business which he had learned previously. He remained in Texas until 1888. On December 15, of that year he landed on Camas prairie and bought out a preemption. He at once turned his attention to farming and stock raising and since that time has continued with good success. The brothers own five hundred and sixty acres of land, have twenty-five head of cattle, raise over fifty hogs each year and are prosperous and well-to-do. They also own property in Denver. They have the following named brothers and sisters: John W., Len, Mary Berlein, Maggie Ruprecht, Doering Baldas, Jacob, Adam, all in Michigan. Our subjects are members of the Lutheran church and in political matters are solid Republicans and active in matters of general welfare.

WALTER HICKERSON, of the firm of Hickerson and Hohaus, hardware merchants of Grangeville, is one of the well known and capable business men of the county, having wrought here with display of energy, stability and sagacity, for a decade and being now established in a remunerative business which is being handled with manifest ability.

Walter Hickerson was born in Harrodsburg, Kentucky, on September 16, 1870, the son of George D. and Maggie J. (Patterson) Hickerman, born in Kentucky on December 25, 1846 and June 26, 1852, respectively. The father died in 1880. He was from Scotch ancestry and his father came direct from Scotland to Kentucky in an early day. The mother of our subject comes from Holland Dutch extraction, her ancestors settling in New Jersey in colonial days. She is still living with her son, Walter. Our subject grew to young manhood and was educated in Kentucky, completing his training in the Harrodsburg academy. At the early age of fourteen he commenced the battles of life and when eighteen, went into a railroad office in Florida. In the spring of 1890, he left Jacksonville, and journeyed to Denver, whence one year later he came on to the coast. Later we see him in Palouse City, Washington, and in January 1892, he came to Grangeville. He at once engaged with Alexander and Freidenrich, where he continued steadily until June, 1900, when he entered into his present partnership and opened in the hardware business. The firm started out well and have done a good business since that date.

On November 29, 1896, at Grangeville, Mr. Hickerson married Miss Cora, daughter of George and Margaret (Frise) Bingman, of German extraction and now dwelling near Kooskia. The father was a pioneer here and endured the Indian troubles of the seventies. Mrs. Hickerson was born in Michigan in 1872 and has two sisters, Mrs. Ed Cowley in Grangeville and one in Ohio. Mr. Hickerson has the following brothers and sisters: Cliff, Mrs. Viola Krakrow, Josephine Graves, a half sister, Robert Graves, a half brother. Mr. Hickerson is a member of the W. of W. and he and his wife belong to the Women of Woodcraft. Mr. Hickerson is a member of the city council and is an active Democrat, always attending the caucuses; in 1900, he was sent to the National convention in Kansas City.

CHARLES F. BROWN lives two miles south from Grangeville where he owns a fine farm of a quarter section, raises general crops, handles stock and also operates a mill. He is one of the early settlers here and is a man of industry and good business ability, all of which have been manifested in the years of his careful and wise labor in our midst. He was born in Green county, Wisconsin, on November 15, 1846, the son of William G. and Clarissa (Bartley) Brown. The father was a millwright, born in Jefferson City, Missouri, and in 1849 crossed the plains to the Golden state and mined on the Dutch flat until 1879 when he came to Idaho, where he died on September 24, 1898. The mother was born in Ohio in 1817 and died in March, 1899. Her father was in the war of 1812.

Our subject went to California at the age of thirteen, accompanying his father and there mined. He enlisted in Company D, Seventh California Infantry, in October, 1864, and went to the border of Arizona and New Mexico to resist the French. He was mustered out in May, 1866, then returned to Green county, Wisconsin, and came to California again in 1876. Three years later he came to Idaho county and took land where he is now located. His place has the first mill built in the county, which was erected by Peter Walters in 1868.

On November 22, 1877, Mr. Brown married Miss Almira, daughter of Charles M. and Almira (Cochrane) Tuck. The father was born in Kennebec county, Maine, in 1817, of English parentage and the mother was born in Middlesex county, Massachusetts, in 1816, of Irish extraction. Mrs. Brown, who was born in Penobscot county, Maine, in 1849, has two sisters and one brother, Charles H., Anna Harper and Martha Pulman. Mr. Brown has one sister and two brothers, Fardelia Michael, Edwin R., Franklin. Three children have been born to this union, William G., Ada Keller, Jennie Markham, all in Grangeville. Mr. Brown is a member of the G. A. R. and is an active Republican.

BENJAMIN F. ZEHNER, a well-to-do farmer and stockman dwelling about two miles northeast from Tolo, is one of the substantial citizens of Idaho county and because of his worth, industry and public spirit is entitled to a place in the volume that gives the history of his county. He was born in Lawrence county, Illinois, on March 7, 1863, the son of Joseph and Catherine (McHewen) Zehner. The father was born in Ohio on January 9, 1829, and died on May 3, 1898. The mother was born on April 15, 1828, and died on November 4, 1864. Our subject was raised in Illinois until eight when he went with the parents to Missouri and afterwards to Stone county, Arkansas. He remained under the parental roof until he was eighteen years old, working on the farm and attending school, when he came by wagon across the country to Pomeroy, Washington, later to Lewiston and finally on to Camas prairie. The first year he rented and then took forty acres pre-emption. Since Mr. Zehner has given his attention to farming and raising stock and now owns four hundred acres of land and about forty head of cattle, one hundred hogs and other stock.

On October 18, 1885, Mr. Zehner maried Miss Missouri A., daughter of John S. and Sarah (Mathews) Feaster. The father was born in Washington county, Tennessee, on August 9, 1821. His parents came from Pennsylvania and then went to Benton county, Missouri, where he was raised. He married and farmed there until 1864, then went to Arkansas and raised stock until 1898. Then he went to Missouri and in 1902 he came to Denver, this county, and there lives at the present time. The mother was born on February 19, 1828, and died in 1866. Mrs. Zehner was born in Benton county, Mississippi, on December 8, 1865, and she has the following named brothers and sisters, Arthur, William, Mollie Miller, deceased, Nancy E. Derrick, Marinda Sturgis, James, Jossie Sowvel, Alice Baysinger, Oma Feaster, Frankie Wall. To this worthy couple six children have been born, Jossie, born July 31, 1886; Franklin, born December 29, 1888; Courtney, born February 8, 1891; Nora, born May 8, 1893; Elsie, born May 19, 1895; Hazel, born December 28, 1899. Mr. and Mrs Zehner are good stanch Democrats. They are estimable people and Mr. Zehner has, because of his skill and careful attention to business, gained a fine holding of valuable property.

PETER ASCHENBRENNER has displayed praiseworhy tenacity and pluck in his labors and has demonstrated that he is possessed of courage and ability to surmount obstacles and overcome difficulties and discouragements. He was born in Russia, on July 14, 1858, being the son of Conrad and Kathrena (Haan) Aschenbrenner, natives of Russia, but now dwelling in Idaho. The father was born on February 28, 1827, and the mother on October 15, 1830. Besides our subject they had the following children, Kathrena, George H., Cristena, Philip, Lizzie, Conrad, William, Benjamin F. At the age of twenty-two without means our subject started farming for himself in Kansas where he made a good success for seven years, then went security for another and lost his hard earned property. Then he came west to Washington, secured land and again took up life as at the start. He prospered for awhile and then the wet year of 1893 spoiled all and left him broken in finances again. Not to be daunted, he gathered what he could together and came to the reservation and selected his present farm two miles west from Ferdinand. He had a family of eight small children and eight dollars and fifty cents when he landed and the first three years were filled with great toil and hardship. Mr. Aschenbrenner never wavered but he and his faithful wife labored on, success finally crowning their efforts. They have a fine farm now, a seven-room house, good substantial outbuildings, one hundred and twenty acres in crops, fourteen head of cattle, thirteen horses, forty hogs and much personal property.

Mr. Aschenbrenner married Miss Charlotte, daughter of Christian and Charlotte Hagen, on November 3, 1880, in Marion county, Kansas. Mrs. Aschenbrenner was born in Russia on August 22, 1862. The followig children have been born to this worthy couple, Joseph, born December 13, 1881; Peter E., born September 11, 1883; Hannah M., born August 2, 1885; Katie L., born April 1, 1887; Clara E., born June 6, 1889; Daniel B., born March 27, 1891; William J., born December 11, 1893; Reuben H., born January 6, 1895; Eddie H., born June 6, 1897; Lottie D., born May 16, 1899; Goldie, born August 15, 1902. The first four children were born in Kansas, the next four in Washington and the others in Idaho. Mr. Aschenbrenner takes an active part in school matters, and his wife is a member of the Adventist church.

FRANK D. VANSISE. This sturdy and intrepid pioneer and Indian fighter has had much to do both in subduing the enemies of the whites in this section and also in building up the country, being now a contractor in Grangeville, where he has wrought for many years.

Frank D. Vansise was born in Huron county, Ohio, on January 28, 1850, being the son of David and Olive (Raymond) Vansise, natives of Pennsylvania, and born in 1815 and 1822 and died in 1857 and 1870, respectively. The father who was of German extraction was killed by the bursting of a cannon while firing a Fourth of July salute. Our subject grew to manhood and was educated in Ohio. The mother kept the family together after the father's death and when our subject was sixteen he went to sailing on the lakes. In October, 1868, the family came, via the the Isthmus, to Portland and there they bought school land and farmed it until September, 1871. Then it was sold and Frank came to Camas prairie, where he drove cattle to Warren and did butchering. Later he took land in this county which he afterwards sold. He followed his trade of building in Mt. Idaho and in 1885 settled in Grangeville, where he has dwelt since.

In 1878 Mr. Vansise married Miss Ettie Fountain, whose father was born in Oregon, where his parents were pioneers. His brother, Dell Fountain, is a noted race horse man. Mrs. Vansise was born in Oregon in 1862. Mr. Vansise has one sister, Mary Bartley, in Mt. Idaho. Mr. Vansise is a member of the I. O. O. F., has passed all the chairs, was a delegate to the grand lodge at Pocatello last fall and is now deputy grand patriarch. Mr. Vansise is an active Democrat, always at the conventions and has held the office of constable.

In the Indian war of 1877 he was a volunteer with the Mt. Idaho local forces to protect their homes. A. I. Chapman, who raised a company of volunteers, had an Indian wife and many of them objected to his position of commander. Consequently a petition was gotten up among them and presented to General Howard to appoint D. B. Randall, a veteran of the Civil war and lieutenant of the company, commander. George Riggins and our subject were appointed to to take this petition to Howard south of the Salmon from Mt. Idaho. They sent the petition to him from Whitebird and Randall was appointed. This was July 1, 1877. The next morning seventeen volunteers started across the prairie to assist Cottonwood and while on the way one hundred and forty-five Indians under chief Joseph came up from the gulches on the south and attacked the seventeen. Mr. Vansise's horse was shot from under him and H. C. Johnson took him up behind. They all then charged the Indians and made a stand on a little knoll. Captain Randall and B. F. Evans were killed outright at the start of the battle, D. H. Howser was shot through the body and died in ten days, a young boy, Leland, was shot through the leg, and a Swede, Charles Johnson, was shot in the foot. Eight horses were killed. The volunteers continued to charge the Indians until they retreated. This handful were all old plainsmen and fine shots, and this with their coolness was all that saved them. There were three companies of soldiers, Captain Perry, Captain Whipple and Captain Winters, from the First U. S. Cavalry at Cottonwood at the time of this battle, but in a most unbecoming and disgraceful manner refused to assist their fellows. After the Indians retreated, our subject took Howser's horse, rode to Cottonwood and interviewed the troops and it is to be hoped that his severe reprimand at least brought to their mind the cowardly acts of the officers. Amunition was secured and a man, Shearer, went back with Mr. Vansise, and was wounded in the arm by the skulking Indians. Wagons took in the wounded and Colonel McConville, in command of all the volunteers, hearing the shots came from across the Salmon to assist. He escorted the handful back to Mt. Idaho the next day with the wounded.

Alex Foster, a half breed Nez Perces and Charlie Blewett, who were scouting the day before this battle, were surprised by the Indians and Blewett was slain, but Foster escaped to lead back some troops who in turn were ambushed by the treacherous savages and all were killed, eleven besides Foster. They made a stubborn fight, getting into some rocks and only when their ammunition gave out did the savages come up and in a hand to hand conflict massacred them all.

Our subject was with the volunteers at the encounter on Misery hill when the Indians stampeded the stock. The redskins encamped across the Clearwater from General Howard, asked for a peace talk and then fired at the general and took to the Lo-Lo trail.

LEVI MAGEE is a stirring business man and capable attorney at law in Grangeville, where he has been prominent in these circles as well as in educational matters for twelve years. He was born in Hamilton, Ontario, on August 15, 1864, the son of John and Mary J. (Green) Magee. The father was a farmer, born in New York, came to the Willamette valley in 1868 and died there in 1894. The mother was born in Canada November, 1832, and is still living in Portland. Our subject was four years of age when the family came to Oregon and began study in the common school until 1882 then took a seven-year course in the Willamette University and in 1890 received his diploma, having taught two years prior to his graduation, and also had studied law. On August 15, 1890, immediately after graduation, he came to Grangeville and took charge of the Columbia River Conference Academy, being principal. He was first to formulate a complete course and turned out the first graduates from the institution. After this he was admitted to the bar in Grangeville and commenced the practice of law, but receiving the appointment to the postmastership of Grangeville, accepted the same and in addition to that put in a stock of books, stationery and so forth, later adding groceries, then hardware and general merchandise. For four years he conducted the office with efficiency and faithfulness and then on account of change in administration resigned. He continued to operate the mercantile business until 1902, when he sold it and opened a law office in Grangeville, where we find him at the present time. Mr. Magee owns business and residence property in Grangeville and is building up a good practice. He was nominated for probate judge in 1893 and for state senator in 1902, being defeated by a small majority. Mr. Magee is a strong advocate for the cause of education and he has stimulated much good action in this field. He was instrumental in securing the establishment of a station of the state free traveling library and other benefits.

In 1890, while in Oregon, Mr. Magee married Miss Delia H., daughter of John and Mary J. (Connor) Hobart, pioneers to Oregon across the plains. The father died in 1890 and the mother in 1902. Mrs. Magee was born in Silverton, Oregon, and there educated and later taught in Oregon and in Grangeville. She has three sisters living, Moura Vercler, LaVilla McNeal, Alberta. Mr. Magee has the following brothers and sisters: William, Joseph, Thomas, Mary E. Mann, Walter D. Mr. Magee is a member of the I. O. O. F. and is grand master of the state lodge. He also belongs to the K. P. and the W. W. Mrs. Magee is an active member of the Presbyterian church, the Ladies' Literary Club, and an active worker in social circles. Mr. Magee has recently been elected to a membership in the world's fair fraternal building association on the suggestion of National Chairman Wilkinson.

EDWIN I. CHASE, who is classed rightly with the leading stockmen and agriculturists of Idaho county, dwells about eight miles northwest from Grangeville, where he has a fine estate of two hundred and forty acres which is annualy, by his thrift and industry, laid under tribute to produce abundant returns of the fruits of the field, while also he handles a hundred head of well bred cattle and as many hogs, besides other stock. He was born in the vicinity of Monticello, Illinois, on October 10, 1862, being the son of Edward and Mary (Perkins) Chase. The father was born in Maine, in 1838, removed to Illinois with his parents, where he married and remained until 1862, when he came to Douglas county, Oregon. He farmed and raised stock there until 1881 then came to Camas prairie. He was appointed postmaster at Denver, in 1897 by President McKinley and the next year opened a general merchandise establishment there. In 1899 he was disabled by sickness and resigned his position as postmaster. He was justice of the peace for two years and on December 17, 1902, passed to the world beyond. The mother of our subject was born in Illinois and died in Oregon. Our subject was reared and educated in the Douglas county home and remained with his father until fifteen. In 1879 he came to Camas prairie. He worked for wages until 1881, then took up a quarter as a pre-emption and in 1884 a homestead. Mr. Chase gave his attention to raising stock and farming, in which he has made a good success. He has five brothers, Charles, Oliver, Frank, Albert, William.

On April 9, 1893, Mr. Chase married Miss Mary J., daughter of John E. and Margaret (Burgin) Briscoe. Mr. Briscoe was born in Missouri, in 1839, came to Arkansas when a young man and took up farming. In 1889 he came to southern Idaho and thence to Grangeville, and since then he has farmed and mined. Mrs. Briscoe was born in North Carolina in 1837 and now lives in Grangeville. Mrs. Chase was born in Benton county, Arkansas, on December 23, 1861, and has four brothers, John, George B., James P., William. The fruit of this union is four children, Edgar S., born May 15, 1894; Eva, born May 23, 1896; Effie, born May 23, 1896, now deceased; Archie, born June 1, 1898, also deceased. Mr. Chase is a solid Republican and his wife is a good Democrat. They are good people and of excellent standing. Mr. Chase is a member of the M. W. A.

JOHN R. ADKISON is a prominent farmer and stockman of Idaho county and was one of the early pioneers who opened the country for settlement. He was born in Fulton county, Illinois, on August 1, 1850, the son of Elijah and Mary (Eccles) Adkison, born in Indiana in 1827 and 1829 respectively. They were pioneers in Illinois, Missouri, California, Oregon and Idaho. The father died in 1888 and the mother in 1899. Her ancestors were originally from North Carolina. The family removed to Iowa when John R. was five, then went to Missouri and in 1863 went thence to Shasta county, California. Later they settled in Marion county, Oregon, and in that state and Missouri our subject was educated. He farmed in Oregon and in 1871 settled on his present place, two miles southwest from Grangeville. Since the Mr. Adkison has been one of the leading men of the county and has given attention to mining, farming, raising stock, and teaching school. He was here during the Indian war and fought as a volunteer in Company E, First Idaho Infantry under Captain McConville. He is of the opinion that General Howard was a competent officer and that the Indians were greatly underestimated as a foe. Mr. Adkison believes also that the government was largely responsible for the trouble on account of the breach of faith with Chief Joseph regarding his Wallowa home. Mr. Adkison was at the Clearwater fight and also went with J. M. Adkison, Charles Rice, F. A. Fenn, F. A. Door, J. Crooks, P. D. Adkison, G. Hasshagen on the morning of the fifteenth to rescue those wounded and killed on the fourteenth. He remembers the Norton and Chamberlain murder as on the night of the fourteenth.

In Douglas county, Oregon, on September 7, 1879, Mr. Adkison married Miss Hattie S. Brown, whose father, Hon. H. G. Brown, a pioneer in 1848, was prominent and wealthy man in Oregon. He represented his county three times in the legislature. Mrs. Adkison has one brother, Samuel, and three sisters, Helen, Carrie, and Mattie. Mr. Adkison has the following brothers: James, Perry, Elijah, and George. To Mr. and Mrs. Adkison have been born, Henry, in Idaho county; Loyal, a member of the class of 1904 in the State University and a leader in oratorical lines, winning the Brook medal in 1902; Normal, at the high school in Grangeville, and Carrie, aged seven. Mr. Adkison, who is a member of the I. O. O. F., is a strong Republican. He missed the representativeship by only three votes in 1876 in a county with three hundred Democratic majority. Mr. Adkison is an orator in the political campaigns and is well known as a fluent speaker.

DIDRIECH H. TELCHER, deceased. A biography of this pioneer and leading man of Idaho county in his day is certainly in place in the history of the county. He was born in Lubeck, Germany, on February 22, 1835, where he remained until twelve, when the family came to the United States and settled near Dellville, Illinois. He lived with his parents until eighteen and in 1853 went overland to Oregon, settling on a half section of donation land near Oregon City. He farmed and raised stock until 1855, when he enlisted to fight the Yakimas. He was discharged at The Dalles, from Company C, First Oregon Mounted Volunteers, on October 13, 1855. He returned to his farm and in 1860 came to the Salmon river mines. He mined six years in Florence and Warren and in 1866 came to Camas prairie and took land, later took a homestead. He supplied the mines with beef and vegetables and continued a lucrative business until 1877, when he removed his family to the stockade at Mt. Idaho and took part in defending the post, also assisting to remove General Howard to the Clearwater from Whitebird.

After the war he devoted himself more particularly to farming and continued in abundant success in that line until his death on March 9, 1898, being mourned by all. He left an estate of one section, property in Grangeville, eighty cattle, hogs and other property. Mr. Telcher had one brother and two sisters, Charles, Eliza Weber, Eureka Rauch, deceased.

On May 17, 1870, in Clackamas county, Oregon, Mr. Telcher married Miss Margaret, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Anderson) Rauch. The father was born in Prussia on September 9, 1818 and came to the United States when he was twelve with his parents. In 1853 he came to the Willamette valley, being in the same train as Mr. Telcher. He retired from active life in 1893 and lived in Oregon City until his death, on May 30, 1902. The mother was born on October 19, 1821, at sea, while her parents were coming to the United States from England. She remained with her parents in Philadelphia until sixteen and then came to St. Louis where she married and now lives in Oregon City. Mrs. Telcher was born on July 1, 1848, in Hancock county, Illinois and has the following brothers and sisters: John, deceased; Hanna, deceased; William, Mary Maddock, George, deceased. Five children are the fruit of this union, Henry V., born April 6, 1871, now assessor of Idaho county; Charles, born February 24, 1875 and died on December 14, 1889; Maggie, born January 20, 1880; Ralph, born November 1, 1882, recently graduated from the high school in Grangeville; Myrtle, born November 6, 1886; now attending the normal at Lewiston. Mr. Telcher was prominent in political matters and was a stanch Republican. He was county commissioner from 1878 to 1882, county assessor from 1882 to 1886. He was commissioner for the road from Grangeville to the little Salmon country, connecting the north and the south part of the state. He was a prominent man of worth and integrity.

MARK HOWE. The hotel Revere, one of the excellent hostelries of the county, is operated in a successful manner in Grangeville, by the subject of this article. He is a man of good standing and has won a first-class patronage for his house and hosts of friends among the people of the county and the traveling public.

Mark Howe was born in Washington county, Maine, on February 9, 1855, being the son of Mark and Harriet (Leland) Howe, natives of Maine. The father, who came from the old Puritan stock of Massachusetts and followed lumbering, died before our subject remembers. The mother came from an old New England family and died in 1895. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Maine and followed lumbering in all the prominent camps of the state until 1881, when he came to Minnesota and there followed the same business until 1890, when he sold his interests and came to the Palouse country. He went into the mines on the head of Bear creek and the north fork of the Clearwater. He, in connection with C. T. Cross and Duke Bros., opened the mica mines but they failed finacially, together with the Palouse National Bank. Then our subject took a ranch in the Bear Creek country and in 1896 came to Cottonwood and bought the Cottonwood house. He did a good business there, handling in connection the Lewiston stage from that place. Then Mr. Howe came to Grangeville and opened the Idaho house and one year later took charge of the Revere which he has operated successfully since.

On December 22, 1888, while in Minnesota, Mr. Howe married Miss Luella, daughter of William and Mary (Priestly) Johnson, natives of Maine. Mrs. Howe was born in Wisconsin and taught school for a term, being in that occupation when she met Mr. Howe. She has two brothers and two sisters. Ellen Whitford, Ida Huston, William C., George. Mr. Howe has one brother, Herbert. Two children have been born to them, Herbert, Bessie, the latter one deceased. Mr. Howe is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the W. W. He is an active Democrat, is always at the caususes and conventions and is at present central committeeman. In addition to his other property interests, Mr. Howe is still interested in several mining propositions.

MORTIMER S. MARTIN. The subject of this sketch is one of the industrious farmers of the county and dwells about four miles southeast from Tolo. He was born in Yates county, New York, on February 6, 1848, the son of Joel D. and Caroline Martin, mention of whom is made in this volume. When Mortimer was ten, the family went, via the Isthmus, to Marysville, California, in 1864 they came to San Francisco, thence by steamer, Brother Jonathan, to Portland and up the rivers to Lewiston, whence they hurried to Elk and mined. Our subject mined with his father until 1866, then went back to San Francisco and completed his education by a course in a business college. On January 1, 1868, he came to Elk and mined a year. On May 1, 1869, he was appointed deputy assessor of Nez Perces county. In the fall he returned to the Elk mines and the following year came to Camas prairie, where he farmed and raised cattle. At the time of the Indian war he was living about a mile south from Grangeville; he took his wife and went to Mt. Idaho. Then Mr. Martin joined the volunteers under Captain Ad Chapman, later was under D. B. Randall and then under James Cearley. After the war, Mr. Martin went to Lewiston and remained a year, and then in 1880 located on his present place. He owns two hundred acres, thirty cattle, and other stock.

On February 9, 1877, Mr. Martin married Miss Jennie L., daughter of George Freeman. Her parents died when she was small, and she was adopted into the family of Seth Jones. Mrs. Martin was born in Siskiyou county, California, on January 18, 1860, and has three sisters, Annie Waters, deceased, Georgia Newbegin, Mary Beeson. To this marriage there have been born seven children: Herbert J., born November 9, 1877; Lena C., born November 22, 1878; Olive J., born February 1, 1880; Mortimer S., born January 2, 1882; Elsie E., born September 24, 1884; Estelle E., born November 26, 1886; Harold W., born September 18, 1893. Mr. Martin is an active Republican and was county assessor in 1894.

Mr. Martin was with the twenty-five volunteers who went to Clear creek to attack thirty Indians. Before they were ready to make the attack a company of regulars came under Colonel Whipple and took the lead. However, as they were slow, the volunteers were sent ahead and Chief Lookingglass came for a parley and agreed to surrender. As this was in progress, the surrendering to take place in the middle of the creek, the Indians scattered to the brush and the fighting began. Three savages were killed and some wounded but none of the whites were injured.

EVERETT GEE, the well known proprietor of the news and book store in Grangeville, was born in Dayton, Nevada, on January 10, 1865, the son of William and Celia (Waterman) Gee. The father was born in Ashtabula, Ohio, in 1826, came to California in 1849, via the Horn, and mined and operated a pack train. Later he operated in the stock business on a large scale with headquarters at Sacramento. He was in the Piute and Digger Indian wars and was known as a brave and fearless man in danger and a skillful Indian fighter. In 1883 he came to Walla Walla and later went to Ashland, Oregon, where he died on August 2, 1898. The paternal grandfather of our subject was noted pilot, captain and Methodist minister in Ohio. The mother of Everett Gee was born in Iowa in 1840, crossed the plains with her parents to California in 1850, met her future husband in Visalia, and died in 1879. Our subject was six when his father moved to Sacramento from Nevada, having sold large possessions there to Adolph Sutro, famous for the tunnel and being mayor of San Francisco. Everett was educated in Sacramento and went to do for himself at the age of sixteen. In 1883 he came to Walla Walla and in 1886 he went to Spokane and there operated an express line. Later we see him in Grangeville freighting and in 1898 his wife died and he went to the coast and thence to Nome. Returning from Nome after one summer, he came to Grangeville in October, 1900, and in May, 1902, he purchased his present business and has operated it successfully since. He is also interested with his brothers in the Grangeville dairy.

On February 20, 1900, Mr. Gee married Mrs. Carrie, widow of Tom Aram and daughter of Joseph Moore, mention of whose brave deeds will be made in another portion of this work. He was killed by the Indians during the war and his widow died in 1890. Mrs. Gee was born in Oregon in 1865 and came to Idaho when nine months old. She has five brothers: Homer, Harry, Hugh, Cyrus, Merrill, and one half sister, Belle McPherson, who is living with her. Mr. Gee has two children by his former marriage, Celia and Ethel, at home. Mrs. Gee has two children by her former marriage, Vivian and Chester Aram. Mr. Gee is a member of the W. O. W. and the Circle. He is constable and in politics is a Republican, active and influential.

Mrs. Gee's father was born in New Jersey in April, 1831, the son of Jacob and Phoebe (Brands) Moore, of Scotch and English extraction. He crossed the plains in 1860, settled in Oregon, married in 1863 and came to the Idaho mines at Newsome. In 1875 he came to Camas prairie took a ranch and also operated the Cottonwood house. The account of his tragic death more properly comes in the historical portion of the work.

HON. T. W. GIRTON is surely one of the earliest pioneers of the western coast and a glance at his career is convincing proof that he was one of the enterprising and active men of the time, which he has continued to be since. He was born in West Virginia, in 1832, the son of Dickison and Carrie (Green) Girton, natives of Virginia, as also were their forefathers. The father was a pioneer and operated a carding machine in Laharpe, Illinois. The mother's ancestors fought for the American cause in the days of the Revolution and were true Americans. Our subject grew to manhood and was educated in Illinois. In 1852 he crossed the plains with oxen to Portland and in 1854 was mining in California. In 1857 he came to The Dalles and at the time of the Fraser excitement in 1860 went thither and wrought for the government. In 1861 Mr. Girton was in Oro Fino, the diggings having been discovered the year before by Pierce, J. Bull, Marion, Moore and Rhodes. In 1862 we see Mr. Girton in Florence and in the fall came to Camas prairie and worked for Crooks & Shumway, butchers and stockmen. In June, 1863, he went to East Bannack, Montana, and discovered good diggings. He came from Lemhi twelve hundred miles, via Walla Walla, to Florence to record a ditch on very valuable property. In 1868 Mr. Girton came to Camas prairie and the next year we find him taking his present place, three miles southwest from Grangeville. Since then he has raised stock and farmed, making himself one of the prominent men of the county. He was guard in the Indian war and remembers the outbreak on June 13.

In 1868 Mr. Girton married Elizabeth Shipton, of Corvallis, Oregon, who died in 1872. He has one son, as the fruit of this union, James, in Washington.

On October 12, 1873, Mr. Girton married Miss Lena, daughter of I. and Elizabeth (King) Hinkle, pioneers of Oregon. The father was a prominent sawmill man. Mrs. Girton died in August, 1901, leaving five children, James, Lottie Wilson, Carrie, Elizabeth, Charles. Mr. Girton has three sisters. He is an active Democrat and was chosen by the people as representative to the eleventh territorial legislature. He was also the choice at the second state legislature. Mr. Girton has a good quarter which is embellished with fine and valuable improvements. He remembers voting for I. I. Stevens for territorial delegate in 1861, being then at Oro Fino. The territory at that time was Washington.

JACOB C. GARBER is the present incumbent of the postoffice at Grangeville, where he has faithfully and efficiently discharged the duties of that position for some time and is one of the highly esteemed and capable men of the town.

Jacob C. Garber was born in Rockingham county, Virginia, in 1830, the son of Martin and Magdalene (Mohler) Garber, natives of Virginia. The father died in Ohio and the mother in Iowa. The paternal ancestors were settlers in Virginia in old colonial days and fought for American independence. When a lad, our subject went to Logan county, Ohio, and there grew to manhood and received his education in the common schools. Later he removed to Iowa and in 1854 we see him in California mining, having come via Nicaragua. He was very successful and spent large amounts in developing prospects; he finally started the town of Garberville, in Humboldt county, where he embarked in the mercantile business. In 1862 he returned to Iowa and visited his brothers in the Civil war, Silas, Abram, Joseph, Isaac. The first one was governor of Nebraska later and the last one died in the war. Mr. Garber returned to California in 1863 where he mined and did business until 1878 when he sold out and made his way to Idaho county. He took land and farmed near Cottonwood until the early nineties, when he removed to Grangeville. For a time he was bookkeeper in the store of Henry Wax and later was elected probate judge on the Republican ticket. After this Mr. Garber returned to his first life of mining and wrought around Florence until 1897, when he was appointed postmaster at Grangeville and here he has remained since, giving universal satisfaction.

In the year 1868, while in California, Mr. Garber married Miss Julia A., daughter of Nathan and Susan (Miles) Wheeler, natives of New England and descended from ancestors prominent in the early American wars of independence, but are now deceased. Mrs. Garber was born in Columbus, Georgia, and has one brother and four sisters. F. N., Lucy, Adelia, Lyra Garber, Florence Dale. Mr. Garber is a member of the I. O. O. F., joining in 1853. When in California he held the office of county recorder in Nevada county from 1860 to 1868.

HUGH M. McDERMID. The leading professions are well represented by able men in Grangeville and in no whit behind the most prominent stands Dr. McDermid, the skillfull dentist who has for more than a decade practiced here with that crowning of success which justly comes to the reliable and expert. Personally Dr. McDermid is a man of patriotism, geniality and capabilities and he is the centre of a large circle of admiring friends.

Hugh M. McDermid was born in Nicollet county, Minnesota, on September 12, 1858, the son of Peter H. and Adaline (Kennedy) McDermid. The father was born in Glengora county, Canada, in 1827, settled in Minnesota in 1854, was a prominent man in the county and besides holding various county offices represented the county two terms in the state legislature. He came to Yakima in 1897 and died there in 1902. The mother of our subject was born in Ohio and died in 1881. Her father was in the war of 1812, fighting for the American cause, while her husband's father fought with the English. She also had two brothers in the Civil war. Our subject grew to manhood in Minnesota and received his educational training in the public schools and learned his profession by practical experience in the office in constant work there while he pursued his reading, thus gaining the extra skill and erudition to be had in this excellent manner. At the age of twenty-two he went into the battle of life for himself and in 1891, he came to Yakima, where his brother, Albert, dwelt. Thence he came to Grangeville and opened an office and since that time he has continued here with an ever increasing patronage, and he is the practitioner in the town.

On December 9, 1883, in Minnesota, Dr. McDermid married Miss Clara, daughter of Wiliam and Thersa (Chaffee) Goodell, natives of New York. The father pioneered to Minnesota in 1858 and served in the Civil war. Mrs. McDermid was born in Blue Earth county, Minnesota, in 1862 and she has the following brothers and sisters: Charlie, Inez, Terse, Alice, Abbie, Mabel. Dr. McDermid has two brothers and two sisters, Albert, Helen, deceased, May, Joel. One child, Alice, aged seventeen, has been born to them. Dr. McDermid is a member of the Masonic order, Order of the Eastern Star, W. W., the Circle, and the Artisans. He is a true blue Democrat and takes the interest that becomes the intelligent citizen. Dr. McDermid owns mining interests and some business property in Grangeville. He was sergeant in the Idaho volunteer regiment, Company C, at the time of the Phillipine war, enlisting on May 26, 1898 and being discharged on September 25, 1899. His company sailed on June 26, 1898, and arrived in Manila on August 5. He was transferred on June 14, to the hospital corps and although he sought the field he was held in the hospital on account of his profession all the time.

CAPT. GEORGE M. GALLAWAY, the venerable and esteemed citizen of Whitebird, is one of the substantial and upright men of the county, who has done much here for the upbuilding and growth of the country. He was born in Moulton, Alabama, on September 18, 1826, the son of Britten and Anna (Ponder) Gallaway. The father was an Irishman, born in Georgia in 1795, and died in 1877. The mother was also born in Georgia and was of Scotch extraction. Her people fought in the struggle of 1812. Our subject grew to manhood and received a good education in his native place, then acquired a thorough training for the medical profession. When twenty he enlisted to fight in the Mexican war and was under captain Joel M. Acker and General Taylor. Eighteen months were spent in that war, when he was honorably discharged and returned to Aberdeen, Mississippi, where he practiced medicine for sixteen years. Then came a move to Arkansas and at the time of the Civil war he enlisted in Company B, First Arkansas Infantry, under Colonel John C. Brundy, of Chicago. He served through the war and was commissioned captain. Subsequent to the war, Captain Gallaway returned to Arkansas and was elected twice to the state legislature. In 1876 he removed to Oregon, the following year to the Palouse country in Idaho and spent some time investigating the land question there. About 1882, Mr. Gallaway came to Whitebird and took land, where he has spent most of his time.

In 1852, Mr. Gallaway married Miss Louisa T., daughter of Thomas and Malinda (Ponder) Gilliland, of English and Irish parentage. The following children have been born to this union: Euprasia Belvadier, now Mrs. Manning; George W., in Arkansas; Virginia T. Hador, and Albert B., in Whitebird; Isora I., deceased; Thomas B. and Sherman S., both in Whitebird. Captain Gallaway is a member of the G. A. R. and he is spending the golden years of his life in quiet retirement with his children, enjoying the competence that his thrift and wisdom accumulated.

WILLIAM A. HALL. No man is better known in the county of Idaho than the subject of this article, and he is also of excellent standing, as his worth and valuable labors demand.

William A. Hall was born in the vicinity of London, England, on February 15, 1847, the son of William and Lucy (Atkinson) Hall, also natives of England. The father was born in 1813 and in 1851 came to Walworth county, Wisconsin, where he died later. Our subject grew to manhood in Wisconsin, and the mother married Wm. H. Ambler, who went to fight for the Union, which necessitated our subject to care for the family. This crowded out his chance for an education but his ambition was strong and after the war he commenced studying under private tutors, until he succeeded in gaining a thorough training. From his youth Mr. Hall had a leaning toward the law and he was constantly reading it. In 1866 he came west to Montana and there farmed, then taught and in 1870, was licensed to preach in the Methodist church. He handled circuits in Beaver Head and Bannock counties and then came to Salmon City, Idaho, always preaching with vigor and telling force. In the fall of 1872, Mr. Hall went to Michigan, attending school for a time and then taught for two years. He was called back to Idaho in 1874 and took charge of a circuit in the Bitter Root valley, Montana, and in 1879, he came to Grangeville upon invitation of the presiding elder to take charge of the Columbia River Conference Academy, where he was engaged for eight years. Mr. Hall continued the study of law under the tutorage of Judge Norman Buck and won good success in this line, being a capable and apt student. Being admitted to the bar in 1884 he commenced practice in Idaho county, Idaho, and is the oldest practioner in the county where he has a fine clientage. Recently Mr. Hall has been appointed referee in bankruptcy for the county and has held various official positions. While continuing in these lines of success Mr. Hall has not forgotten whenever occasion presents, to preach the gospel and his services are greatly in demand.

On July 18, 1876, Mr. Hall married Miss Susan M., daughter of William Haynes, a native of Bath, Maine, and of Scotch extraction. The wedding occurred in Deer Lodge, Montana. Mrs. Hall was born in Bath, Maine, on July 18, 1848, was well educated in the seminary and has taught for years. She has the following brothres and sisters: Stephen, Charles D., Mehitabel Hogan. Mr. Hall has one brother, John S., and one sister, Jane Margetts, and one half brother, Robert H. Ambler. This worthy couple have one adopted child, Winifred G. Mr. Hall is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Encampment, and the Rebekahs, being chief patriarch of the encampment. He is a Republican, active in the campaigns and is always at the conventions, where he is a prominent and influential figure. Mr. Hall has practiced with Judge Ailshie and is one of the successful members of the bar here. He was elected justice of the peace for several years, has filled the office of probate judge, county superintendent of schools, and also held these offices in Montana, was United States commissioner for four years at one term and in many ways he has been a prominent and leading man. He is interested in various mining deals and owns considerable property. Mr. Hall served in the Indian war of 1877, being orderly sergeant of the volunteers company in Montana.

On an examination in 1902 he received an honorary diploma from an eastern college with the degree of Doctor of Law. He also holds a diploma for the four years' course C. L. S. C.

CASWELL T. McKINZIE is one of the early pioneers to the Pacific coast and has figured prominently in the various movements from that day until the present; his labors have recently associated him with the Grangeville country, where he is well and favorably known, being now one of the leading freighters out of that town to the various mining camps tributary.

Caswell T. McKinzie was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, on January 23, 1842, the son of Henley and Lulvisa (Philips) McKinzie, natives of Virginia, of which state the ancestors were early pioneers. The father was born in 1792, served in the war of 1812, as colonel, came to Kentucky, later to Wisconsin, whence he came with his family to the Willamette valley, crossing the plains, and in 1868, died in Oregon. The mother died in 1871. Her father was a patriot in the Revolution. Our subject was but ten years old when he came with the family to Oregon and the father took land where East Portland is now located but later removed farther east. When sixteen, Caswell went to do for himself by farming and raising stock. He used his homestead right in 1868 and in 1877 moved to Walla Walla; during the Indian war of that year he was in government employ as a messenger and freighter under Lieutenant Miller. In 1879 we find Mr. McKinzie freighting into Spokane and the Coeur d'Alene country; in 1880 he hauled the first safe that ever came into the city of Spokane. He continued the freighting until 1888 when he removed to Spokane and operated an express line for seven years. 1895 found him in Moscow and the following year Mr. McKinzie located in Grangeville, since which time he has devoted his energies to freighting, and is one of the leading operators in that industry.

In June, 1862, at Portland, Mr. McKinzie married Miss Louise, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Tompkins) Bell, natives of Kentucky. The father was a butcher and died in 1880. He crossed the plains in 1853, landing in Oregon City, September 10, of that year. The mother died in 1857. Mrs. McKinzie was born in Illinois in 1836 and crossed the plains with her parents. She has one brother and three sisters, Captain Bell, Martha Arnspiger, Rachel Arnspiger, Caroline McKinzie. Three children have been born to this worthy couple, Simon H., in Grangeville; Viola Twist, whose husband fought in the Nez Perces war; William, in Grangeville. Mr. and Mrs. McKinzie are members of the church of Christ. He voted for Abraham Lincoln and has stood by the same grand old party since. Mr. McKinzie has eighty acres of land and also owns other property.

By way of reminiscense we note that in 1861, when Mr. McKenzie was going to Walla Walla, the Indians waylaid him where Pendleton now stands and stole his horses, but he succeeded in escaping into the sage brush and for three days lay secreted, finally going to The Dalles with a freighting outfit. His brother, Isaac McKinzie, and John Stevens were instrumental in the capture of old chief Peu-Peu-Mox-Mox with two others in 1857. The brother took the beaded pouch for bullets and also the powder horn and our subject had them for years. They were serving in Company A, Oregon Volunteers under Colonel Wilson. In this campaign they had the distinction of living for one whole week on horse flesh alone. A noted Indian had killed Lieutenant Burris, but was afterward killed by Isaac McKinzie.

ANDREW J. TAYLOR is one of the old pioneers who braved the dangers and endured the hardships incident to opening this vast country and for many years he was engaged in the arduous labor of mining, being acquainted with the main camps from California to British Columbia. At present Mr. Taylor is living two miles west from Tahoe, where he owns a half section of land and does general farming and raises stock. He was born in Brighton, New York, on May 17, 1832, being the son of Andrew and Laura (Ellsworth) Taylor. The father was born in Massachusetts in 1803 and was a prominent man in his place. His parents and ancestors were pioneers of that state. The paternal grandfather of our subject held the rank of captain in the Revolution and was one of the noted minute men. Andrew Taylor settled early in Ohio and in 1855 started for California on the steamer, Sierra Nevada, but died on board and was buried at sea. The mother of our subject was born in New England in 1807 and died in 1892. Our subject was raised and educated in Massachusetts and in 1855 came with his father to California. He had learned the trades of gunsmith and moulder and when he landed in San Francisco he went to mining and prospecting where he operated in Shasta county. In 1865 he came to Boise and mined and later was in Warren and made the trip to Lewiston when the thermometer was forty below. He and his partner, Mr. Watson, who is now residing on Camas prairie, located some fine placers on Allison creek and took good returns from them for four years. During this time Mr. Taylor was injured by a falling tree, from which he has never fully recovered. In 1874 he went to Dixie and was well acquainted with all the old timers there and for twenty years he was one of the prominent mining men of that section. In 1877, when he came to Elk for the mail, he learned of the Indian outbreak and they all went to the fort in Elk until the trouble was past. It was in 1879 that Mr. Taylor located his present farm, taking homestead and preemption. He is one of the esteemed men and substantial citizens of the county and has done a goodly portion for its upbuilding.

PETER KING. A hardy pioneer of the first days, well acquainted with the mining world, from California to the Fraser and Kootenai camps in British Columbia, a faithful laborer in the cause of opening the country for settlement and civilization, and now one of the substantial stockmen and farmers of Idaho county, dwelling a mile and a half north from Clearwater upon a half section of fine land which he secured by rights from the government, Mr. King is to be classed with those who deserve representation as builders of this country and pioneers in the true sense of the word.

Peter King was born in Germany, on February 22, 1832, being the son of Nichols and Mary (Breitwiser) King, natives also of the Fatherland. The father was born in 1800 and in the fall of 1833 came to Baltimore, two years later went to Henry county, Indiana, and in 1840 he settled in Fulton county and bought eighty acres of canal land, which he farmed until his death in 1851. The mother was born in 1810. Our subject was brought up and educated in Indiana and remained with his parents until of age. In 1853 he crossed the plains to California, mined on Nelson creek, in Eldorado county and various other places for ten years. He was successful and especi-

ANDREW J. TAYLOR.

PETER KING.

LAWRENCE OTT.

JAMES WITT.

ally so in Sahara county, where he sold the Blue Lead for five thousand dollars. In 1862 he was in the Cariboo regions with the rush, where he contracted rheumatism and came to Olympia until he recovered. Thence he came to Pierce and prospected all over this section of the country. In 1864 Mr. King went to Boise on Grimes creek and then north to the Kootenai river during the excitement. Then came a trip to the Bitter Root mountains, to the Moose creek region, but he returned on account of the rough country. Mr. King continued on the south fork of the Clearwater until the breaking out of the war and was one of the brave lads who took up arms and dispelled the savages, he being especially detailed to guard the women and children on Slate creek. He was in the Mt. Idaho Guards under Captain Ad Chapman. Later he was with Benson's pack train who was supplying the government troops with provisions. As soon as the trouble ceased Mr. King, with Smiley, Buchanan, James Boyd, Bill Tracy and Charles Martin, went to Chamberlain's basin. They put in a ditch on little Slate creek and piped dirt for three years with reasonable success. In 1881 Mr. King took a preemption and later a homestead which constitute his present estate. He has over sixty head of cattle, a fine house, large barn and other good improvements. Mr. King has the following named brothers and sisters: Nicholas, Jake, Henry, Katie Bunch.

LAWRENCE OTT is a stock-raiser who resides eight miles up the Salmon river on the south side at what is known as the Horseshoe bend. He was born February 19, 1836, in Blair county, Pennsylvania, the son of Lawrence and Maria Ott, natives of the same state. They both died in Blair county. Our subject remained there until 1856 and then went, via New York and the Isthmus, to San Francisco. He mined at Marysville, prospected in different sections and in 1859 went to Virginia City, Nevada. At the time of the Piute war he enlisted to fight the Indians under Meredith and on one occasion half of the little band of 150 whites was killed, the Indians being ten to one. In 1862 he started to Warren with a posse of men and on the head of the Owyhee river they rescued a man and his wife from a band of Indians by killing the Indians. Then he came to Auburn, Oregon, later to Walla Walla, back to Canyon City with supplies, in '64 went to the Boise basin and in '67 came to Warren. He has visited most of the camps in Idaho and in 1872 located his present place. Since then this place has been his headquarters. He has followed farming, stock-raising and mining with good success. He now has three hundred and twenty acres but has retired from active business and is living upon his income. When the war broke out in 1877 he was in Florence, being sick he loaned his gun and ammunition to another but as soon as he was able, he joined Captain Trimble's company. He guided Trimble over the mountains and when they reached Howard they were sent to do guard duty at Slate creek. He guarded some wounded soldiers to Lapwai and did much scouting. Much of his stock was killed at the time of the war. When on the south fork of the John Day in Oregon, five miners were attacked by the Indians and three were killed. Our subject was one of seventeen who thrashed the Indians and recovered the miners. Soon after Mr. Ott settled here a few renegade Indians threatened to kill him if he did not leave. In the encounter which followed he was knocked down by a stone but owing to his having a revolver he had the better of the struggle and after that was left alone. He has been one of the active laborers to build up this country and is a good, substantial man. After the war Mr. Ott did special scouting duty under Captain Lou Wilmot to see that none of the red men were lurking in the hills, finding and destroying many of the Indian caches, until assured that all the Indians had gone onto the reservation.

JAMES WITT. Among the pioneers of Idaho county none came earlier, labored with more assiduity, gained more triumphs because of sagacity and real worth, and stand more thoroughly admired and truly ensconced in the affections of the people than the subject of this sketch, an epitome of whose interesting career we count it a privilege to place upon the abiding records of his county history.

James Witt was born in Jefferson county, Tennessee, on July 7, 1837, the son of Caleb and Margaret R. (Demarcus) Witt. The father was a farmer, sawmill man and later a miner. He was born in Tennessee, on March 8, 1815, and died in Idaho county on February 14, 1882. His grandfather came from England and his father was born in Tennessee and fought in the war of 1812. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee on March 15, 1810, and died in 1856. Our subject was educated and when fourteen worked with his father in the native place. On March 21, 1859, he came with his father to Iowa and there outfitted with oxteams for the purpose of crossing the plains. Falling in with others they formed a train and while they started for Pike's Peak the discouraging reports turned them back toward Oregon and thither they came. The oxen became worn out and they doubled up until the wagons were crowded. They crossed the Missouri river at Plattsmouth at the mouth of the Platte river on May 8th and landed at The Dalles September 8. James worked at the Cascades a while and then joined his father at Portland and in the spring of 1860 he went up the Columbia to Isle Le Pierre rapids. It was in the spring of 1861 that Mr. Witt fitted out ox teams and came to this portion of Idaho. Captain Pierce had married an Indian woman and she piloted him to the diggings around Pierce City where Mr. Witt was going. He came to what is now Greer's ferry and made the first boat for Col. W. Craig to cross the Clearwater and used it as a ferry. In the spring of 1862 he went to Elk City, where rich placers had been discovered by the overflow from Pierce. Mr. Newsome after whom Newsome creek is named, was in the party which made the discovery. Mr. Witt reached Elk on May 17 or 27, 1862, going over twenty feet of snow. He went into partnership with a man who had claims on American river and they made a company and dug a ditch eleven miles long in the Buffalo Hill country. They had scanty capital but sold stock and took pay in work digging the ditch. His father came in about the time the company was discouraged and lifted them up. Many were skeptical but when it was all done it made a real boom. McGruder, the victim of foul murder later, was a merchant then in Elk and he assisted the company with great credit. The completion of the ditch assured the success of the camp. In June, 1863, the water flowed and the spirits of all were exuberant. Mr. Witt continued with this proposition until 1881, continually buying the interests of those going away. He was the last big mine owner on the ditch. He and his father took homesteads on Camas prairie in 1876 and held them in addition to mining. Mr. Witt had also bought the Buffalo ditch and as the ground became poorer he went into the matter deeper, buying out others. Chinese came in and he finally leased the various grounds to them and furnished water from the ditch. In 1881, when he left, there were but eleven white men in the camp. In February, 1882, Mr. Witt's father died and he took as partner his nephew, James B. Sloan. They held over nine hundred acres of land and much stock. This industry continued until January 14, 1902, when he sold the entire property and came to Grangeville to reside, where he has since been. In 1890 the whites began to jump the claims and Mr. Witt was obliged to return to Elk to save his property and he also secured some more valuable additions. Lately the quartz veins have been discovered and the camp is again coming to the front and is bound to assume proportions to command attention and the investment of capital for development. At the time of the Nez Perces war, Mr. Witt was in the Elk valley and all the summer was spent in building fortifications and preparing to resist the Indians, but General Howard headed the savages off and no fatalities occurred. Mr. Witt became a master Mason in 1874 and has frequently been master of his lodge. He has been county commissioner twice and has since refused to accept the nomination. He is a staunch, solid Democrat, has always taken a keen interest in politics and has frequently attended the state convention. Mr. Witt is a self made man and the education of his younger days was limited to careful and continuous reading. Close research and wise weighing of the questions of the day have made him one of the best informed men of the county and his counsel and his words are heeded in his party by all.

CYRUS M. LEE. For more than a decade have the labors of the subject of this article been bestowed in Idaho county with wisdom and telling effect and the result is a goodly holding in property and much improvement and advancement in the county.

Cyrus M. Lee was born in Taylor county, Iowa, on March 21, 1867, the son of Richard H. and Susan (Overman) Lee. The father was born in Cincinnati, on June 16, 1835, was educated and reared in his native place and there on August 25, 1861, he married and came to Iowa when he was twenty-nine. He settled in Taylor county in 1865, among the first, and purchased the first threshing outfit in the county, where he still lives on eighty acres. The mother of our subject was born in Miami county, Indiana, on May 23, 1841, and her parents were among the very first pioneers of Indiana. She was the mother of eleven children, and died on January 4, 1894. She had been a devout member of the Christian church. Our subject was brought up in Taylor county and there also received a good common schooling and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-two. He followed farming there until March 25, 1891, when he came to Camas prairie and commeneced to till the fertile soil here and to raise cattle. He dwells now three and one half miles west from Tolo, and has a good farm, owns about fifty cattle and as many hogs, besides horses and other property. Mr. Lee has the following brothers and sisters. Gladys M. Wise, Effie M. Roberts, Della L. Welch, Charles H., Robert E., William C.

On March 4, 1891, Mr. Lee married Miss Martha E., daughter of George W. and Margaret Ritnour. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1835, came to Iowa in 1874 and now lives in Nodaway, Adams county, Iowa. The mother was born in Pennsylvania, in 1838, and died December 23, 1896. Mrs. Lee was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, on March 7, 1867, and has the following brothers and sisters: Harriet Sykes, James, Ellen Graham, Etta Graham, Henry, deceased, Susie Bellin, Sadie Blum, Minnie McLoughlin, Jake, Carrie, George. Five children are the fruit of this marriage, Charles E., born December 8, 1891; Leslie H., born August 10, 1893; Arthur M., born April 9, 1896; Robert E., born August 31, 1898; William F., born June 22, 1900. Mr. Lee and his wife are both good Democrats and are strongly in favor of good educational facilities and good roads. Mrs. Lee belongs to the Methodist church.

FRANK R. PEARSON is in reality a native of Grangeville, being born September 6, 1871, on his father's homestead, which is the ground where the north half of the town is now located. This was some years before the town was located and Mr. Pearson has spent most of his life in this locality. His father, W. C. Pearson, was a stockman, born in New York and died in 1892. He came here in an early day and took the homestead mentioned above and his father-in-law took the land where the south half of the town is located. He had been in California in the golden days and it was in the fall of 1861 that he made his way to Idaho. He settled here and dwelt until his demise. He was prominent in county affairs and several times was sent to the legislature, where he did faithful work. Being a Republican and the county Democratic, it was a marked distinction to be thus honored. He was an active participant in the measures to quell the savages and was held in high esteem by all. The mother of our subject was Isabelle Crooks, who was born in Iowa and crossed the plains in early days with her parents. Her father was one of the very first settlers on Camas prairie. Our subject's grandfather was one of the original owners of the site of Portland. Frank R. was educated in Grangeville and took a position in Dr. Bibby's drug store, where he spent five years, learning thoroughly the business of the pharmacist. He concluded the examinations in excellent shape and in the spring of 1891 he bought out the doctor and continued in handling the business of the drug store until 1898, having as partner, George Bonebrake. When the Spanish war broke out, he sold his interest to his partner and volunteered to fight for his country. He went to Boise, thence to San Francisco, enlisting on March 26, 1898. He shipped from the Golden Gate on June 27, and arrived at Manila on August 6, just before the Americans took it. He was in that engagement and in all the other leading ones for the year. He returned to the United States on August 29, 1899, and arrived at home on October 2, 1899. He then engaged in mining at Florence for a time and in December, 1901, in partnership with J. A. Wood, opened a drug store in Grangeville; he recently bought out his partner and has devoted himself to his business, having a fine patronage.

PERRY E. SHERWIN, one of the best known pioneers of Idaho county, is now one of its prominent and wealthy citizens and during the years from the early settlers until the present, he has always shown himself to be a man of energy, wisdom, enterprise and integrity and it is fitting to recite a review of his life in the history of the county which he assisted to build.

Perry E. Sherwin was born in McHenry county, Illinois, on September 13, 1858, the son of Edwin R. and Susan (Benson) Sherwin, natives of New York, and born on January 26, 1821, and in 1823, respectively. The mother died in 1898, and Mr. Sherwin died in Grangeville, February 23, 1903, aged eighty-two. He had crossed the plains to California in 1861, and was one of the first settlers on Camas prairie, coming in the spring of 1862. He was engaged at Lapwai some time after coming here, then mined on the Salmon and also engaged in stock raising until it came time to retire from the activities of business to enjoy the rewards of industry. Our subject was fourteen when the family came to join the father at Lapwai. He was educated in the common schools and then took a course in the collegiate institute at Salt Lake City. When nineteen he went into the stock business for himself on the Salmon and with his father and brother he continued in it, also paying attention to mining. Mr. Sherwin operated extensively in these lines until last fall, when he sold much of his stock and mining interests. He has stock on the range still and also much land in various portions of the county, while he owns Court House addition to Grangeville and considerable land adjoining the city. Mr. Sherwin was here during all the Indian troubles. They built fortifications on Slate creek and the families were protected there. Mr. Sherwin was a warm personal friend of Captain McConville, who had command of the volunteers.

On May 14, 1891, Mr. Sherwin married Miss Alice, daughter of J. M. and Martha (Pease) Crooks, natives of Indiana. Mr. Crooks crossed the plains with his wife in 1852 and settled near The Dalles. He took part in all the wars there. In 1861, he came to Florence, bought cattle and operated a butcher shop. He removed his family to the present site of Grangeville in 1865. In the later 'seventies, he, with William Pearson, founded Grangeville, the two owning the ground on which it now stands. He was an extensive cattle man and also owned a thousand horses. Mr. Crooks was a noble and prominent man and was never known to turn a deaf ear to a fellow being in need. He held different county offices and was a faithful laborer for the advancement of the county and town. He died, mourned by all, in 1884. His widow died in 1896. Mrs. Sherwin was born in The Dalles, in 1862, was well educated and taught school for years. She was one of the leading teachers in the Methodist academy at Grangeville for three years. She was here during all the Indian wars and is a true pioneer. She has the following brothers and sisters: Jacob, Mrs. Bell Pearson, John, Mrs. Emma Bentz, Charles. Mr. Sherwin has one sister, Carrie. Five children have been born to this household, Clair C., Edwin R., Guy P., Neil, Elbert. Mr. Sherwin is a member of the I. O. O. F. and he and his wife are both Republicans.

JOSEPH G. GILL is justly entitled to be classed as one of the pioneers of Idaho county as he has been associated with substantial improvement and material upbuilding here continually since his advent. He now owns three hundred and twenty acres of good land, about six miles west from Tolo, handles fifty cattle, sixty hogs, twenty-eight horses and with Mr. Ben Zehner owns a threshing outfit.

Joseph G. Gill was born in Henry county, Kentucky, on June 21, 1843, the son of Washington and Frances A. (Gibson) Gill, born in Kentucky on December 25, 1806, and September 23, 1817, respectively. The father, who was of Irish extraction, was reared and followed farming in Kentucky until 1854, when he went to Boone county, Indiana, to take two hundred and forty acres which he inherited from his wife's father and where he remained until his death, October 3, 1888, being then possessed of an estate of four hundred acres. The mother's father was a saddle tree maker and came of Irish ancestry. She was married March 16, 1836, and now lives in Boone county. Our subject was educated in his native state and Indiana, until eighteen, then spent his whole time in the assistance of his father until of age, when he settled on fifty-four acres given him by his father. He also worked at the carpenter trade. In September, 1870, he came to Camas prairie and took a homestead west from Denver. Two years later he took his present homestead. He has given himself exclusively to farming and raising stock except for half a dozen summers he has mined and prospected. Mr. Gill has six brothers and sisters, Mary J. Airhart, deceased, Robert W., George W., Lucia Reed, Minnie, Samuel.

On November 22, 1866, Mr. Gill married Miss Amanda M., daughter of John McLean. She was born in Indiana, on July 23, 1846, and died on November 20, 1898, leaving the following children: Corrella M. Church, born July 17, 1868; John W., born September 7, 1871; Henry C., born August 9, 1873; Mary E. Rauch, born June 24, 1876; Charles M., born March 14, 1879; Minnie M., born February 2, 1882, and died February 7, 1903; J. Robert, born June 29, 1885; Mellvia, born July 9, 1891. Mr. Gill is a stanch Democrat and active for general improvements. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F.

CHARLES S. GREGORY is a well known citizen of Idaho county, now residing in Whitebird, where he is conducting a saloon. He was born in Bureau county, Illinois, in 1857, the son of Edwin and Catherine Gregory, natives of Ohio. Charles S. came west when thirteen and settled near Denver. For eight years thereafter he was occupied in riding the range, then went to Dakota in the same business and in 1882 came to Idaho county. He engaged in the cattle business on the Salmon for five years, taking up land, and then he went to mining. He did business on Newsome creek and in 1899, we find Mr. Gregory on the way to Nome, he prospected a few months and then returned to Idaho county. He then came to Whitebird and opened his present business, which has since claimed his attention. In 1892 Mr. Gregory was nominated by the Republican party for sheriff, and won the day against A. Talkington, after a hot contest. The county was decidedly Democratic and it was a signal triumph for him. Mr. Gregory has also the distinction of being the only Republican who ever held this position. After this, he was nominated for county auditor, Mr. Talkington winning the day by a scanty majority. The entire Republican ticket went down, with one exception.

In September, 1902, Mr. Gregory married Mrs. Katie Greenfield. Mr. Gregory is an active Republican, being a potent factor in the campaigns as well as in the conventions and caucuses.

WILLIAM H. CASADY, a prominent, and by many conceded to be one of the best campaign orators of the entire state of Idaho, is a leading lawyer in Grangeville, where he stands high in the esteem and confidence of the people and where he has wrought much good in promoting improvements and upbuilding of the different portions of the country.

William H. Casady was born in Warren county, Iowa, on April 22, 1860, the son of Weir and Hannah J. (Hart) Casady, natives of Indiana. The father moved to Iowa in 1847 and died in 1881, aged fifty-two. His brother was a prominent man in Iowa, being judge in the district court, member of the state senate, and register of the United States land office in Des Moines. He also assisted to remove the capital to that city. The mother of our subject was born in 1829 of German extraction and now lives in Iowa. Our subject grew up on a farm and after a training in the common schools, completed a full course in the Oskaloosa college and then took up the real estate business in northwestern Iowa. In 1888 he went to Salt Lake City, there also taking up real estate and devoting himself to the study of the law. He was admitted to the bar and practiced in that state for some years and in June, 1899, he came to Grangeville, opened an office and here he has been in constant practice since. Mr. Casady has demonstrated himself to be a man of excellent ability, naturally endowed for his profession, well fortified by extensive and careful reading, and possessed of a ready perception, keen and discriminating, while much experience has placed him master of the profession and the result is that he is handling a clientage gratifying in its extent and composed of the leading substantial men of the country. He represents several leading mining companies and in addition to this is city attorney, being given the office without campaigning, although it is said, in this line of campaigning he is second to none in the state and has spoken over the state on several occasions. Mr. Casady has also campaigned in Montana and Utah. He was appointed chairman of the state wagon road commission and was the moving spirit that secured the Little Salmon wagon road, also getting an appropriation of six thousand dollars from the Oregon Short Line and P. and I. N. R. R. Companies to complete it.

In 1901, Mr. Casady married Mrs. Dora Crawford, daughter of C. P. Madson of Utah. Mr. Casady is the sixth child of a family of thirteen, all living but one. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. P., and is Chancellor Commander of the lodge.

CHARLES W. STEWART is one of the well-to-do stockmen of Idaho county, and he also does general farming and operates a first-class threshing outfit. He was born in Callaway county, Missouri, on November 16, 1851, the son of James and Ginev (Baker) Stewart, natives of Tennessee. The father was a pioneer of Missouri and followed farming and teaching school all his life. He died in the spring of 1852. The mother was born in 1810 and died in September, 1893. Her father fought in the Revolution. Our subject was raised in his native place until twelve and then took a trip to Iowa alone. He started out finally for himself at the age of eighteen and when twenty-one, he rented land and farmed it until 1886. On March 1, 1886, he sold out and headed for Camas prairie. He took a pre-emption on March 6 and later a homestead. He has paid attention to farming and raising stock since. In 1887 he started to run a threshing outfit which he still continues. A few figures show the different standing of the country then and now. He bought an outfit in that year, did eighteen hundred dollars worth of business and had to borrow two hundred dollars to make up his first three hundred dollar payment. Such was the state of collections. Last year Mr. Stewart bought a new outfit and had a run of thirty-six hundred dollars, of which the cash was all paid to him in fifteen days. Mr. Stewart now owns a section of excellent land, a good threshing outfit, some cattle, two hundred and fifty hogs, and other property to match.

On December 5, 1872, Mr. Stewart married Miss Elizabeth, daughter of William and Christine (Jay) Smith. Mr. Smith was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, in 1804 and in 1853 started to Ohio and died enroute. The mother of Mrs. Stewart was born in Pennsylvania in 1816 and died in 1853 on her way to Ohio. Mrs. Stewart was born in the vicinity of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1850, October 12, and has the following brothers and sisters: Frederic, Catherine Poling, Francis M., John T., Sarah A. Sawyer, William, all in Iowa. These children were raised by a bachelor uncle and maiden aunt of their father. Mrs. Smith's grandfather was in the Revolution.

Mr. Smith has two brothers, Jacob and James. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Oliver B., born December 24, 1873; James L., born January 16, 1875; Catherine, deceased, born January 24, 1879; Ray, born November 14, 1888; Stella G., born April 19, 1891. Mrs. Stewart is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Stewart is a prominent and influential man and his excellent wisdom and qualifications have been shown in his first class success, which he justly enjoys, being a man of energy, hard labor and untiring care of his business.

JAMES R. McCONNELL is one of the men whose labors are for the general advancement of the county of Idaho and whose skill and wisdom put forth in good action, have achieved a gratifying success in the line of stock raising and farming. He was born in Clay county, Illinois, on June 26, 1860, the son of Robert and Elizabeth J. (Morford) McConnell. The father was born in Portsmouth, Ohio, on July 5, 1828, was reared there and engaged in mercantile pursuits with his father. In 1856 he came to Xenia, Clay county, Illinois, and followed merchandising until 1880 and in March of the next year he came to Moscow and on May 24, opened a store there. In May, 1884, he sold out and September 20 came to Camas prairie, bought land and farmed until 1900, when he removed to the Salmon river, where he raises fruit. The mother of our subject was born in Jackson county, Ohio, on April 3, 1836. Her parents were pioneers of that state. She was married in March 27, 1856, and still lives on the Salmon. Our subject was brought up and educated in Illinois and graduated from Olney College in June, 1879. Then he went into the mercantile business with his father and since that time has continued with him. They own jointly, four hundred and eighty acres near Tolo and a quarter on the Salmon river. He gives his attention to general farming and raising stock. Mr. McConnell has one brother and one sister, Frank, deceased; Minnie Barkwell, in Portland, Oregon.

On September 18, 1887, Mr. McConnell married Miss Rhoda L., daughter of Seth and Jane Jones, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. She was born on July 3, 1870, in Idaho county. The following named children have been born to this union: Minnie B., born September 22, 1888; Kennard J., born February 17, 1893; Edna Maud, born April 1, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. McConnell are Republicans and active in the political realm. He is a member of the W. O. W.

JAMES BUCHANNON, a prominent miner and stockman at Grangeville, was born in Ireland on December 16, 1835, the son of John and Elizabeth (Mitchell) Buchannon, also natives of the Emerald Isle. The father died and then the mother brought her family to Canada, in 1845, where she also died in 1864. Our subject was reared in Canada, received his education and learned the shoemaker trade there. When in 1854, he had arived at the state of manhood, he went to Rochester, New York, then returned to Canada a year later and in 1859, came via the isthmus, to the coast and mined in the various camps. In 1863 he was in Virginia City, Nevada; in July, 1864, mined at Boise, where he did well for two years and then followed the search in British Columbia, returning to Lewiston and later went to the Salmon river camps. He mined five years in Florence, doing well, and in 1887 Mr. Buchannon came to Camas prairie, bought one hundred and seventy-six acres and took a homestead adjoining it, and engaged in raising stock. He recently sold this property. He has also paid much attention to mining and now owns some good property. He has one brother and three sisters in Canada, William, Margaret, Elizabeth, Jane. Mr. Buchannon is a member of the Pioneer's Association and regarding the Nez Perces war he relates that he was at Mt. Idaho when the outbreak came and assisted to form a company of volunteers under Captain D. V. Randal, he himself being one of the company. A company of sixty or seventy was formed and on July 5, 1877, seventeen of these volunteers under Captain Randall started from Mt. Idaho in response to a call from the government troops at Cottonwood, over one hundred under Captains Perry and Whipple, to come to their aid. The seventeen brave men leaving in charge of the women and children only about fifty men at Mt. Idaho, started out to assist their fellow beings at Cottonwood, not knowing the full condition of affairs, but only informed that on the Fourth of July the Indians had surrounded the troops at Cottonwood and an engagement had ensued. When these volunteers came within four miles of Cottonwood, coming from the southeast, they discerned by means of a field glass, the Indians coming down Grass creek towards the Cottonwood and making for the open country. They pressed towards Cottonwood to assist the ones there in entrenchments and when within one mile of the place the savages burst on them from the southwest, cutting square across their route. Chief Joseph was in command of one hundred and fifty Indians. Immediately the action commenced and soon the Indians had surounded the volunteers, who spread out so as to avoid bullets as much as possible. The whites were first-class marksmen and frontiersmen of skill and courage, else none would have been left to tell the tale. Instead of the troops coming forth to attack the Indians in the rear, they lay snugly behind their intrenchments and watched proceedings with their field glasses. Bravely the little band charged and charged again and so deadly was their aim that the savages recoiled before them. But they were not to escape without serious loss. Their brave captain was killed, as also were Howser and Ben Evans, while Leland, Charles Johnson and one other were wounded. The horse of our subject was shot and also that of Frank Vansise. Three dead or dying, three wounded, two others dismounted, but nine were left to fight the Indians. But the deadly accuracy of these plainsmen was too much even to satisfy Joseph and he began after the repeated charges to withdraw his men, who carried their dead and wounded, which were considerable, but the exact number has never been found. We should state that the little handful of whites actually broke through the line of the savages, then wheeled and fought them back until, as said, they withdrew. We also shoud state that during this terrible conflict for life on the part of these brave men who were coming to the assistance of the troops in Cottonwood, not one had come to their assistance and the deadly struggle was calmly watched from behind intrenchments. Later two, George Shearer and another man, probably not regulars, came to the assistance of the volunteers. The Indians continued across the county toward Kamiah and the next day the volunters took their dead and wounded back to Mt. Idaho, a sad spectacle of those who in real bravery would have assisted their fellows who lay behind breastworks and saw helpers shot down without raising an arm to repel the foe. Captain McConville came across the country from the Salmon that very night, having heard the shots and the next day followed the Indians. Regarding William Foster, a half breed scout who fell on the fourth of July while scouting and whose grave is now marked with a monument a few miles north from Cottonwood, an account is given in another portion.

ORREN BENTLEY is a farmer and stockman and lives seven miles west from Tolo. He was born in Pike county, Illinois, on May 15, 1842, the son of Gideon and Harriet E. (Wheeler) Bentley. The father was born in New York, on May 4, 1793, where he was reared. His father was a patriot in the Revolution. Gideon Bentley removed to Ohio, thence to Pike county, Illinois, where he took a preemption and farmed. Later he sold out and erected a saw mill, a grist mill and a carding mill. Later he sold these properties and went to Perry, Illinois, where he remained until his death on May 20, 1870. The mother of our subject was born in Maryland, on December 17, 1799, and died August 23, 1885. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and when fourteen went out to work. On August 3, 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain L. French Williams, fought all through the war and was honorably discharged on September 14, 1864. He had been in the army of the Cumberland and participated in the battles of Belmont, Union City, Island No. Ten, Corinth, Chickamauga, Mission, Rocky Face, Resaca, Atlanta and many others besides skirmishes. After the war he went to the Cherokee strip and returned on horseback. Then he worked out and later rented land in Illinois until the fall of 1879, when he went to Pottawatomie county, Kansas, and settled on school land, where he remained until April 12, 1885, when he landed on Camas prairie. He took land, spent two years in the mountains and then settled to farming. He now devotes himself to general farming and stock raising and is prosperous. Mr. Bentley has the following brothers and sisters: Sophrona Conner, Newman, Harriet E. Love, deceased, Mahlon, Elizabeth, William, Lydia A. Hulett, Oscar, Orestus, Lodema Shelly.

On September 12, 1867, Mr. Bentley married Miss Bidsey A., daughter of Jackson and Amanda (Bond) Johnson. Mr. Johnson was born in Virginia, on November 14, 1825, removed to Illinois with his parents, enlisted in Company F, Ninety-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry in 1862, took part in the siege of Vicksburg, went down the Mississippi to New Orleans, where he contracted a pulmonary disease from which he died on June 15, 1885. The mother of Mrs. Bentley was born January 22, 1829, in Tennessee, Shelby county, removed to Illinois with her parents and now lives at Whitebird, Idaho county. Mrs. Bentley was born on April 13, 1850, in Pike county, Illinois, and has six brothers and sisters: John, Minerva Cain, Douglas, Harison, Nellie Thompson, Arminta Schmadeka. The following named children have been born to this marriage: Viola Sidden, born April 12, 1869; Violetta, born March 23, 1870, and died October 4, 1886; Francis H., born October 6, 1872; Lelia Ingham, born May 15, 1874; Lizzie Brady, born February 28, 1878; John A., born April 6, 1880; Ray, born May 10, 1882, died September 27, 1883; Ernest O., born August 13, 1884; Harley R., born September 30, and died January 15, 1891; Austin, born September 24, 1889, and died February 5, 1891; Minnie, born May 19, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Bentley are Republicans and take an intelligent interest in the affairs of the political realm. He is a member of the G. A. R. and they both belong to the Christian church.

TELON E. ECKLAND is one of the leading stockmen of Idaho county; he has achieved his prosperous position by the meritorious labors of his hands and the industry and skill of which he is possessed.

He was born in Sweden, on May 21, 1869, the son of Aderius and Nellie (Nelson) Eckland, born in Sweden, in 1839 and 1837, respectively. They still live in Sweden. Our subject was educated and reared in his native land until eleven and then came to America with an uncle. They located in Iowa, where he attended school for four years more. In the spring of 1884 he came to Camas prairie with his uncle, Nels Swanson. He took his present place as a homestead and has added to it until it is three hundred and sixty acres. Mr. Eckland has devoted his attention to general farming and raising stock until the present time. He has his place well improved and owns one hundred head of cattle, as many hogs and plenty of horses to handle his property.

Mr. Eckland has the following brothers and sisters: Ole, Annie, Pearson, Johanna, Swante. Mr. Eckland is a good Democrat and active in progression in substantial improvements. He is a real worker for better schools and roads.

JOHN A. HANSON. For more than a decade, the subject of this sketch has been in business in Grangeville operating a first-class photograph gallery here and because of his skill and excellent business methods is favored with a thriving patronage.

John A. Hanson was born in Denmark, in 1854, the son of P. H. and Christine (Hanson) Hanson, both natives of Denmark and now living there. The father was born in 1836 and the mother is now aged seventy-two. Our subject attended the public school, graduated from high school and remained in his country until he had grown to manhood. Then being ambitious for the opportunities to be found in this country, he came hither when nineteen. Settlement was made in New York, then a year was spent in La Salle, Illinois, and in December, 1874, he came to California. In Oakland he learned thoroughly the art of the photographer and followed that business in the northern part of the state for some years. He was at Susanville and also traveled during the summers. In 1883 Mr. Hanson married Miss Fannie Strehley, born in Fredericksburg, Virginia. General Hancock had his headquarters on her father's plantation during the Rebellion and she experienced the horrors of war, being in the path of the contending armies. After the war, Mrs. Hanson spent most of her time in Washington, D. C., until coming to California. She has five brothers and one sister, while Mr. Hanson has one sister and three brothers. In 1890 Mr. Hanson came to Moscow and there entered into partnership with Mr. Erickson, the firm being Erickson & Hanson. They had been in partnership in California under the name of Hanson & Erickson. In 1891 Mr. Hanson came to Grangeville, still continuing the partnership and later dissolved the same and opened on his own responsibility. Mr. Hanson has given attention to writing for the magazines and has done much work for illustrating, which gives him a magnificent collection, perhaps the finest in the state. The views are of the noted places in the northwest, scenes and battle grounds of the country and are valuable. Mr. Hanson is a member of the I. O. O. F., and has passed all the chairs. He was a delegate to the grand encampment for three successive years. He is also a member of the Red Men. Mrs. Hanson is a member of the Episcopalian church. Mr. Hanson owns considerable property and is one of the leading business men of the town and stands well.

JOHN A. WOOD. The firm of Pearson & Wood is well known in Grangeville, being leading druggists there. Both of these gentlemen are also natives of Idaho county and are sons in whom the county takes pardonable pride. John A. Wood was born at Freedom, Idaho county, on March 15, 1877, just prior to the stirring scenes of the Nez Perces war. His parents are Charles B. and Elizabeth (Green) Wood, natives of Massachusetts and Maine, and born in 1846 and 1852, respectively. The mother came to the west in the early sixties with relatives and is now dwelling in Grangeville. The father was a merchant and died in 1898, an honored and prominent man. In the early 'fifties he went to California with his father and mined. In 1862 they came to Idaho, he being then sixteen. They soon settled at Freedom and he took up the mercantile business. Mr. Wood, the father of our subject, was in charge of a company of volunteers at Slate creek and built a stockade. It was here that the Nez Perces squaw, Tolo, rendered the valuable service which made her a bright name in history. She notified the whites at Freedom, then rode to Florence and brought a squad of sixteen men to assist in defending the stockade. Our subject's uncle, Charlie Cone, met the three Indians who shed the first blood of the war, having killed Elfers and Breckinridge at the John Day ranch. They told Cone what they had done and advised him to go home and mind his business and he would not be molested. Taking them at their word, he rode away and they did not shoot him in the back, but he was careful to keep an eye on them. Our subject spent the first seven years of his life in Freedom and then the family came to Grangeville, the father entering business there. He was a prominent man and in 1890 was elected sheriff of the county. John A. received a liberal education from the common schools and the Methodist academy and at the end of his school days he commenced the fascinating occupation of mining in the Salmon river country. He was in the various leading camps and in 1898 came out to enlist in the cause of his country in the Spanish war. He was in service seventeen months, being one of the Idaho volunteers. He took part in the capture of Manila and also was in the leading engagements during the time he was there. Mr. Wood was one of the number who held the Guadaloup church, two hundred and fifty of them holding at bay three thousand, five hundred of their enemies. He started home on July 31, 1899, and arrived in San Francisco on September 26. In December, 1901, Mr. Wood formed his present partnership and has continued at this line since. Mr. Pearson is in charge of the business in Grangeville mostly while Mr. Wood devotes his attention to the mining properties of the firm. Mr. Wood has two sisters and four brothers: Anna C. Norwood, Laura E., James G., Charles H., Harry E., Frank. He is a member of the K. P. and also of the Episcopal church. Mr. Wood is an active and well informed Democrat.

A. FRED CURTIS. This genial young man, who is proprietor and operator of the Whitebird ferry, is one of the enterprising men of the valley, conducts a thriving business and maintains an excellent standing in the community. He was born in Riley county, Kansas, on March 12, 1877, the son of George W. and Ella (Waugh) Curtis. The father, who was a merchant, was born in New Jersey, in 1852 and now lives on Rapid river. He crossed the plains in 1879, did saw milling in Montana, operated a hotel in Prairie City, Oregon, and later went to raising stock. He enlisted as drummer boy in the Civil war but his father took him out of the ranks. The mother was born in Iowa in 1857. Our subject was with his parents in their various moves and received most of his education in Oregon and Idaho. He settled in Idaho in 1888 and at once went to riding the range for stock. He selected his homestead, between the ferry and Whitebird, where he now lives. Mr. Curtis rode the range for six years and then went to raising stock for himself. His father established the ferry in 1892, which in 1898 our subject bought and since that time he has paid attention to running it. His homestead is the old worshiping place of the Indians and possesses some ancient fortifications. It is the place where the Indians crossed when pursued by General Howard.

In 1898 Mr. Curtis married Miss Eliza, daughter of James and Mary Nash, of Irish descent and now living in Kansas. Mrs. Curtis was born in Kansas, in 1880. Mr. Curtis has four sisters, Mattie Rossiter, Elva Dorman, Pearl Irwin, Lulu Caruthers. Three children have been born to this marriage, Blanche, Grace, Genevieve. Mr. Curtis is an active and influential Democrat and one of the prominent young men of the section.

FRANK Z. TAYLOR, a substantial and capable business man of Whitebird, is at the present holding the position of justice of the peace and United States Land Commissioner, while also he is a notary public and does a general transfer business.

Frank Z. Taylor was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, on April 5, 1849, the son of John A. and Sarah (McKanzie) Taylor. The father was born in New York in 1825 and now lives in Walla Walla. He is a bridge builder and established a ferry near Portland in 1854, which he operated until 1864, when he established a toll bridge. He represented Washington county there in the legislature several terms. The mother was born in 1825 in Kentucky and now lives in Wallla Walla. The family crossed the plains to the Willamette valley in 1852 with ox teams and the younger days of our subject were spent there, being filled with worthy endeavor as one will notice when we understand that he gained a good education, finishing the same in McMinnville college, and also mastered the brick layers' trade before he was twenty. Then he got married and settled. He has farmed and raised stock in various places since then and has been engaged in different occupations. In 1878 Mr. Taylor left Oregon and came to Walla Walla. Six years later he removed to Pomeroy and worked at his trade. Then we see him in Moscow occupied with mining for two years. In 1894 he came to Whitebird and took land. In 1898 Mr. Taylor opened a hotel there and did a good business until 1903, January 17, when he sold and since then has devoted himself to handling his other business. He owns various properties and some in town.

On August 4, 1869, Mr. Taylor married Miss Mary M., daughter of Matthew Thompson, a native of Ireland and a soldier in the Civil war. Mrs. Taylor was born in Ohio, in 1849. The following named children have been born to this marriage: Frank T., Effie, John M., Walter A., Mrs. Loris Foskett, all in or near Whitebird. Mr. Taylor has three sisters and one brother: Mrs. L. L. Kelly, Mrs. Ella Meade, Mrs. Jennie Wann, John E. A niece, Miss Kelly, is private secretary to President Dole at Honolulu. Mr. Taylor is an active and influential Republican and always is a leader in the conventions and the campaigns. He was chairmen of the convention and while he works for his party, has never sought office, the same coming to him.

BURT L. CROSBY is one of the leading merchants in Idaho county and is carrying on in Grangeville the only exclusive store of ladies' and gents' furnishings in this section of the country. His skill and uniformly deferential treatment of patrons, with stirring enterprise, have placed him in a very successful position and brought to his door a patronage that is both gratifying and the proper reward of honest effort wisely bestowed.

Burt L. Crosby was born in Kasson, Minnesota, on January 12, 1870, the son of William R. and Julia E. (Hackett) Crosby, born in New York in 1836 and in Pennsylvania in 1838, respectively. The father died on January 12, 1888. He had been a pioneer in Minnesota and took part in the Indian wars in that state. His father died in Andersonville prison in the Civil war and his grandfather, the great-grandfather of our subject, was a patriot in the Revolution. The mother of Burt L. died in Minnesota in January, 1898. Her father fought in the Indian wars in Minnesota, being a pioneer; her grandfather was a native of Scotland. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place, was well educated and then took a business course. Following that he became a salesman in a general merchandise establishment, then went to Abercrombie, North Dakota, where he was bookkeeper for a corporation for five years. They handled dry goods, real estate and mining interests. He remained here until 1898, then came to the coast, after which he returned to Minnesota and for a time conducted bankrupt sales. In 1900 Mr. Crosby established his present business in Grangeville with J. Frank Sims. This was in May and since that time Mr. Crosby has conducted a successful business here. Mr. Sims sold out the first of the year, 1903, eastern parties being the buyers. Mr. Crosby holds a controlling interest and is managing the business.

On March 21, 1900, Mr. Crosby married Miss Jennie M., daughter of William Henry, a prominent builder in Winnepeg and now a well known farmer at Hoople, North Dakota. The parents are of Irish extraction. Mrs. Crosby was born near London, Canada, on October 25, 1870, and has the following brothers and sisters: George, David, William, Mrs. Charlotte Mason. Mr. Crosby has the following brothers and sisters, Mrs. J. W. Auchinviole, Walter, J. M., Roy. Mr. Crosby is a member of the Masonic fraternity, of the A. O. U. W., and of the M. W. A. Mrs. Crosby is a member of the Methodist church. They are Republicans in politics and Mrs. Crosby is thoroughly interested in the business her husband is carrying on and ably assists him in his labors.

WILLIAM C. McNUTT is at the present time county surveyor of Idaho county, being elected to that position in the fall of 1902. This was the first occasion that he ever allowed his name to be placed on the ticket and it was here on the Democratic list. Mr. McNutt is a man of great skill and experience in the intricacies of civil engineering and has held some very responsible positions in leading companies in the United States. He was born in Craig county, Virginia, on October 6, 1862, the son of James R. and Ann (Rowan) McNutt, natives of Virginia and born in 1828 and 1832, respectively. The father died in 1863, being killed at the battle of Cedar Creek, while serving under Early. Mr. McNutt was of Scotch-Irish extraction and his maternal uncle, Colonel Hutchinson, served with distinction in the Revolution. The mother of our subject died in 1864. She was of German and English extraction; her brother, John M. Rowan, was state treasurer of Virginia for several terms. This gentleman's son, Andrew S., is now captain in the Nineteenth U. S. Infantry and won marked distinction in the Cuban war. Our subject being left an orphan when two years old, he was reared and educated by his paternal grandparents. From the common to the high school he won his way and then took a thorough course in the state normal and completed his professional studies when he was eighteen; however, he has delved deep into the lore of mathematics since that time. Mr. McNutt at once accepted a position with the Nickle Plate railroad, then wrought for the Grand Trunk, the Michigan Air Line, then with Brown Howard & Company, and later went on to the Burlington and Northern. After this he was with the Northern Pacific and with all these companies was a leading civil engineer, and on the Northern Pacific had charge of much of their work, under C. C. Van Arsdal, the entire Palouse branch as to its tracks and bridges. When this line was completed Mr. McNutt went to Pierce, mined and prospected and in various other districts he continued in this until 1899 and the following year he opened a civil engineering office in Grangeville and has done work for the leading companies of the tributary mining camps. In November, 1902, he was elected county surveyor as said and is giving entire satisfaction in this responsible capacity. Mr. McNutt has two brothers, Robert B. and Rutherford L. He is a member of the K. P. and has always been active in politics and in any movement for the advancement of the welfare of all. Mr. McNutt has considerable mining property; he is a substantial man and a public minded citizen of excellent standing.

JACOB L. WEBER, who lives three miles northwest from Denver, is one of the industrious and intelligent farmers and stockmen of Idaho county. He owns a half section of fertile land and handles it with becoming skill and wisdom which give him abundant annual returns of the fruits of the field. In addition to the general farming mentioned, Mr. Weber also raises about seventy head of cattle, fifty hogs annually, besides horses. He is one of the thrifty and upright men of his section.

Jacob L. Weber was born in Ontario, Canada, on August 30, 1841, the son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Lehmann) Weber, born in Bavaria in 1816 and near Strassburg in 1817, respectively. The father came to Canada when sixteen, worked at carpentering and then commenced to gain land. First he had one hundred acres, later two hundred and fifty and then seven hundred besides fourteen hundred acres in Kansas. He sold as years went on and now lives retired in Ontario, aged eighty-six. The mother married in 1840 and died on May 3, 1892. Our subject received his education in the famous schools of Ontario and remained with his parents until he was twenty-four. Then he rented land and farmed until 1872, at which time he came to Marion county, Kansas, and there farmed and raised stock until 1886, when he made his way to Walla Walla and a year later went to Pataha, whence he came to Camas prairie in 1888. He bought a timber claim and homesteaded it and later acquired more land. Mr. Weber has the following brothers and sisters: Elizabeth Fischer, John, Catherine, Gingrich, Christian, Daniel, Joseph, deceased, Mary Shelley, Louis, Samuel, Menno.

On July 14, 1866, Mr. Weber married Miss Caroline, daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Studer) Jacobs. The father was born in Alsace, in 1820, came to Canada in 1839, and to Kansas in 1873. There he remained in farming until his death, November 9, 1886. The mother was born in 1825, in Alsace, came with her parents to Canada, married in 1842 and now lives in Kansas. Mrs. Weber was born in Ontario, on May 22, 1843, and has the following brothers and sisters: George, deceased, Valentine, John, deceased, Mary, deceased, Diebold, Peter, Henry, deceased, Mike, Louis. The following named children have been born to this couple: John L., born January 4, 1867; Alice L., born March 8, 1868; George F., deceased, born February 27, 1870; Annie M. Anderson, born January 17, 1872; Ezra M., born February 16, 1874, and now deceased; Samuel W., born February 10, 1876, now deceased; Elia J., born January 18, 1878; Jacob L., born November 30, 1879; Louisiana, born July 20, 1881; Edwin W., born March 30, 1883; Marion, born April 28, 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Weber are members of the Methodist church and are always on the side of better schools and roads and general progress.

NELS SWANSON has for twenty years been one of the potent factors in the development of Idaho county and it is with pleasure that we accord him representation in the volume that purports to chronicle reviews of the leading citizens of this county. He was born in Sweden, on November 30, 1844, the son of Susan Johnson and Bettie (Olsen) Swanson, also natives of the same country. The father was born in 1823 and died in 1881. He was a farmer and carpenter. The mother was born in 1833 and died in 1891. Our subject was reared and educated in the native land and after school days were over he gave his attention to farming his father's place until 1880. In that year he determined to leave the native land and accordingly chose Wapello county, Iowa, as his destination. For four years he wrought in that county, and in 1884 made his way to Camas prairie and its fertility and attractive resources led him to locate. He took a quarter section three miles southwest from where Tolo is now situated and since that time has devoted himself to its culture and improvement. Mr. Swanson now has a half section, owns a band of cattle from which he turns off about twenty each year; he also markets about fifty hogs yearly.

Mr. Swanson has the following named brothers and sisters: Andrew, John Aderijus, Annie Crun. Mr. Swanson is a Democrat and is always active for the general welfare and good schools and roads.

OLOF P. MOBERG is one of the well known and stirring farmers and stockmen of Idaho county and now owns a half section about three miles southeast from Cottonwood, where he pursues these related occupations with good success. In addition to his own land, he rents a half section.

Olof P. Moberg was born in Sweden, on June 7, 1842, the son of Jonas and Brita Moberg, born in Sweden, on January 15, 1805, and in 1802, respectively. The father was a lawyer and died in 1869. The mother died in 1887. Our subject received a good education in the common schools of his native place and remained with his parents until he was twenty-six. 1868 was the year in which he came to Kansas City and for four years engaged in operating a saloon. In 1872 he migrated to Colorado, mined at Boulder and also did a contract of furnishing ties to the railroad. In 1875 we see Mr. Moberg in Portland in the lumber business and on April 1, 1877, he came to Mt. Idaho. He at once bought a sixth interest in the Pioneer Mining Company ten miles south of Newsome and devoted himself to mining. At the time of the Indian outbreak, they were warned by Cassius Day, a good scout, and thus being on the lookout were not surprised by the savages. Mr. Moberg continued mining until the fall of 1885; however, the family had settled on his preemption and after 1885 he devoted himself to farming and stock raising and has continued at it since. He has one hundred and twenty-five cattle, two hundred hogs, fourteen horses and much other personal property.

On May 15, 1874, Mr. Moberg married Caroline, daughter of Carl and Ellen (Anderson) Newberg, natives of southern Sweden and born in 1825 and in 1835, respectively. The father was a blacksmith and died in 1892. The mother still lives in Sweden. Mrs. Moberg was born on November 22, 1852, and has the following brothers and sisters: Sarah Anderson, Thilda Johnson, John M., Sophia Watson, Emma, Gustav. To Mr. and Mrs. Moberg the following children have been born: Charles R., born March 19, 1875; Frederic, born September 28, 1877; Oscar, born October 4, 1881; Daisy, born October 4, 1885; Addie, born April 29, 1888; George, born November 19, 1891; Lillie, born June 13, 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Moberg are intelligent Democrats and are interested in good schools and general improvement. He is a member of the Maccabees.

BION C. WILTSE is one of the stirring business men of Grangeville and has for years been recognized as one of the promoters in the advancement and interests of the country and town. He was born in Saginaw, Michigan, on February 1, 1862, the son of Jacob and Climena (Frost) Wiltse, born in Michigan in 1841 and Lucas county, Ohio, in 1843, respectively. They still live in Michigan. The father was one of the first white children born in Saginaw county, Michigan, and has been a prominent man in his section, representing his county in the state legislature and holding other offices. The grandfather of our subject's mother was one of the first settlers in Lucas county, Ohio. Bion C. was reared and educated in Michigan and labored with his father until of age. Starting for himself he took up merchandising at Ashley, Michigan, where he remained until 1891, then sold out and journeyed to Bridleville, Oregon. In that town he took up the real estate and timber business and for eight years he was prospered nicely. Then came another change and he sold out, making his way to Grangeville. This was in February, 1899, and he at once bought a corner lot on Main street and built the Wiltse house. For three years he successfuly operated this hotel, then rented it and engaged in mining and other business until December 1, 1902, at which time Mr. Wiltse formed a partnership with Mr. James Adams and they purchased the M. & M. cash store, which they are now operating with display of the same sagacity and winning methods that have characterized the successful moves hitherto.

In 1884 Mr. Wiltse married Miss Amy Clark, who died in 1900, leaving four children, Herna, Nellie, Gladys, Harold.

In 1901 Mr. Wiltse contracted a second marriage, L. Mae Dice, daughter of Frank and Minnie Dice, becoming his bride. The parents were natives of Michigan but are now deceased. The father was a prominent hotel man in his state. Mrs. Wiltse has two brothers, James and Almon. Mr. Wiltse has two brothers and four sisters: Ida, Bell, Eva, Blanche, George, John. Mrs. Wiltse is a member of the Presbyterian church and Mr. Wiltse belongs to the Masons, to the A. O. U. W., and to the Artisans. He is a Democrat but not partisan and is an independent thinker. In addition to his hotel, his mercantile business and other property, Mr. Wiltse is heavily interested in mining and is president of a company.

FRED A. DAVIS, superintendent of the Idaho Copper Mining & Smelting Company, whose property lies four and one-half miles northwest from Whitebird, is one of the enterprising citizens of Idaho county and his experience in the art of mining all over the continent together with a generous fund of natural ability in this line, have made him one of the best mining men of the section. He was born in Maine, on January 3, 1873, the son of James and Ida (Tomlinson) Davis, born in Nova Scotia in 1847 and 1852, respectively. The parents were of English extraction. The family went to Nova Scotia when Fred A. was six months of age and there he received his education and when thirteen went to work in the mines and continued thus until he was twenty. Then he came to the western mines, working in the old Blue Bell, the oldest mine in British Columbia, it being discovered by the Hudson Bay people. Mr. Davis also wrought in Rossland, Ainsworth, Boundary regions, and in the Coeur d' Alene section, besides various places in Washington. He was foreman and also shift boss in different mines, especially the Rambler. In September, 1902, Mr. Davis came to Idaho and took the superintendency of the present property, which is being well improved and skillfully handled under his wise direction. The mines are gold and copper producers and are very promising properties. The company are erecting large improvements in the way of compressor and smelting works.

At Colville, Washington, on September 10, 1902, Mr. Davis married Miss Marguerite, daughter of John and Harriet Acorn. The father is a sawmill man and a bridge contractor. Mrs. Davis was born in Prince Edward island and is of Scotch descent. She was well educated and spent some time in teaching. She has four brothers and two sisters. Mr. Davis has the following brothers and sisters: Blanche, William, Wesley, Joseph, Fannie, Annie, Bertha, Lewis and Maude. Mr. Davis is a member of the I. O. O. F., Mrs. Davis is an adherent of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Davis is largely interested in mining properties on the Salmon and is a leader in mining circles here. He has spent some time in the past in organizing unions. He owns one group of mining claims, known as Number One Group, situated about two miles north from the Copper Mining and Smelting Company's property.

HIRAM ROBBINS, deceased. This esteemed gentleman was well known in Idaho county both on account of his labors in the educational work and because of his energy and enterprising qualities of worth which were demonstrated in a career of usefulness and intelligent activity. He was born in Watauga county, North Carolina, on November 2, 1843, the son of Leander and Alvira Robbins. He was reared under the parental roof until he was fifteen and then went to do for himself and gain an education. He graduated from the high school of Boone, his native county, and at once went to teaching in his state. This was in 1872, and he continued in educational work until the time of his removal to Idaho county, on May 10, 1884. Here he took up the same line of work and was known as one of the leaders in this realm. He also secured eighty acres of land and devoted part of his attention to general farming and rasing stock. The family home is one-half mile south from Cottonwood and in addition they own property in town. On January 3, 1903, the angel of death summoned Mr. Robbins to the realities of another world and his demise was a time of general mourning, for he was beloved by his friends from every quarter. He had the following brothers and sisters: Thomas, William, James, Larkin, deceased, John, Mary Downs, Mira Green.

On March 28, 1875, Mr. Robbins married Miss Etta, daughter of Solomon and Polly (Elrod) Blackburn. The father, a farmer, was born in North Carolina in 1826, and during the war, as he sympathized with the union, was shot at his own door. The mother was born in the same state in 1824. She was a great student of the Bible, having read it through twenty-four times. After her husband's death, she removed with her children to Arkansas and when seventy-two she went all the way back in a wagon: her death occurred on June 11, 1899. Mrs. Robbins was born in Ash county, North Carolina, on May 5, 1857, and has the following brothers and sisters: William, Louisa and Emma, deceased, Calvin, Phineas, Lafayette, Cornelia Herman. Eight children are the fruit of this marriage: H. Clay, born July 15, 1877; Claudius C., born September 24, 1879; Flora A. Eller, born June 4, 1881; Blanche B. Ogan, born April 8, 1883; Walter S., born April 21, 1885; Oscar W., born May 12, 1890, and died May 3, 1898; Newton L., born June 19, 1893; Ora H., born May 13, 1895. Mr. Robbins has been postmaster four years in Cottonwood, county school superintendent two years, and in 1896 was elected justice of the peace and was also notary public. He joined the Masons in 1863. Mrs. Robbins has displayed great fortitude and courage in assuming the burdens since her husband's death and is one of the highly esteemed ladies of the county.

GEORGE S. STOCKTON, M. D., whose skill and ability as a first-class physician is well established, is at this writing county physician of Idaho county and one of the leading men of the county. He was born in Brant county, Ontario, on November 8, 1864, the son of Andrew and Charlotte (Rochers) Stockton, born in New Brunswick in 1829 and London, England, respectively. The father died in August, 1898. His father came to New Brunswick at the close of the Revolutionary war and then moved to Ontario later and took land. The great-grandfather of our subject on the father's side was a subject of George III and received a grant of land in New Brunswick. The family held real estate in Pennsylvania, but lost all at the time of the Revolution. Our subject's mother came to the United States with her parents when quite young, being a descendant of the Tichburns, who left a large estate in England about which there has been much litigation in late years. George S. received the beginning of his education in the excellent schools of Ontario and then finished a university course in Toronto, commencing it when seventeen. Immediately succeeding that he took a medical course in the university of medicine and later a post-graduate course in one of the leading colleges of medicine in New York. Being thus well fortified for the profession, Dr. Stockton settled near Marquette, Michigan, and began practice. Three years later he came west and spent some time in travel and finally settled in Seattle; after securing a good practice he was burned out in the big fire and lost all. Next we see him in Spokane, where he did well until 1897, at which time he located in Grangeville and at once received a good patronage. He has continued steadily here since and is one of the established business men of the county and enjoys a fine practice.

In Chicago, in 1889, Dr. Stockton married Miss Rena, daughter of Henry and Alice (Robinson) Benton. The father is a wealthy railroad man, a native of New York and is descended from an old and prominent family. The mother of Mrs. Stockton was born in New York, as was Mrs. Stockton also. She is a niece of Mrs. Ross, from whom Ross park was named in Spokane. She has one brother and four sisters. Dr. Stockton has the following brothers and sisters, Eva, William, Charles, Frances, Maude. Two children, Sadie and Andrew, have been born to this couple. Dr. Stockton is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Artisans, the Foresters and the M. W. A. Mrs. Stockton and her daughter belong to the Episcopal church. Dr. Stockton is a Democrat and active. He has been coroner of the county and is always interested in the welfare of the county and town. He owns mining property in addition to his business.

ROBERT WATSON lives about two miles southeast from Cottonwood, where he owns a fine quarter section, which is laid under tribute by his wise labors to produce bounteous returns each year of the fruits of the field. He also devotes much attention to raising stock and is one of the substantial and prosperous citizens of the county. He was born in Tyrone county, Ireland, in December, 1830, the son of James and Ann (Fulton) Watson, also natives of the Emerald Isle. The father was a foundryman and our subject remained at home with his parents until he was twenty, gaining, in the meantime, a good education in the public schools. In 1850 he turned his face to the new world and landed at St. Louis, Missouri, where he wrought at carpentering for some time. In 1854 he went by the Nicaragua route to San Francisco. He was soon thereafter on the divide between the Yuba and American rivers and his search for the precious metal was rewarded by finding good placer grounds. He continued at the occupation of digging gold for some time and in 1864 came to the Boise basin, thence by Powder river to Lewiston, where he wintered. In the fall of 1865 he went to the Coeur d'Alene country and prospected. In 1867 he went to Elk City and continued there until the fall of 1879. At the time of the Indian outbreak he came to Mt. Idaho with his partner, Allen Hugel. Seeing no Indians they returned to Elk, but on the way they met thirty of the redskins with their families and it was only by a skillful parley that they saved their scalps. Then they proceeded to Elk and mined until 1879, when Mr. Watson came and took his present place as a homestead. Since that time he has continued to devote his attention to farming and raising stock, with an occasional trip to the hills. He has a score of cattle, seventy-five hogs, plenty of horses and is one of the steady and solid men of the community. Mr. Watson has two brothers and one sister, Joseph, John, Elizabeth Atwell.

On January 29, 1881, Mr. Watson married Miss Sophia Newberg, whose parents have been mentioned in another place in this work. She was born in Sweden, in 1860. To this union one child has been born, John, born July 6, 1886. Mr. Watson is a Republican and interested in the questions of the day.

JOHN DOUMECQ is one of the oldest pioneers of the Salmon river valley and he is now living three miles southwest from Whitebird, in about the same vicinity that he occupied in the early sixties, when coming first to this country. He was born in France in 1845, the son of Peter and Mary (Laffaill) Doumecq, natives of France also. The father was a government contractor. He was born in 1816 and died in 1890. Our subject received his education in his native land and in 1860 came to San Francisco. He worked in the mines for some time and at the time of the Salmon river excitement he came hither. This was in 1863, and since that time Mr. Doumecq has been one of the steady and energetic workers for the advancement and upbuilding of this country. In addition to mining, Mr. Doumecq has paid considerable attention to raising stock. His homestead, taken in 1880, is the old Henry Moon place, in which Mr. Moon suffered death at the time it was raided by the Indians in 1877. Mr. Doumecq used to range his stock on the plateau northwest from his place and it was thus named Doumecq plains. Mr. Doumecq was here at the time of the Indian outbreak, all his goods being stolen, but the savages leaving his house. His partner, August Vacon, who was nursing Benedict, a man having been wounded by the Indians, was killed, as was also his charge. Mr. Doumecq, Glatiney, Bachalerie and Christian were at the place of the ferry, but having no guns they took to their boat and escaped in the hills. Camp Howard is just across the river from Mr. Doumecq's place and is a pretty place.

In 1888 Mr. Doumecq married Miss Coleman and they have four children, Charlie, Willie, Ernest, Blanche. Mr. Doumecq has one son, John, by a former marriage. Mrs. Doumecq was born in Missouri. Mr. Doumecq owns a quarter section, has considerable stock and also mining interests in various sections. He has a good orchard, a beautiful and well favored place, so located that a grand view of distant mountains and the river canyon are to be had.

ANDREW J. CARLSON lives about five miles southeast from Cottonwood and there owns a quarter section of fine land, which is a good dividend payer, and in addition to handling that he pays attention to raising stock, cattle and hogs, having about one hundred head. Mr. Carlson is one of the builders of this section and has wrought here for twenty years. He was born in Sweden, on August 9, 1853, the son of Carl J. and Caroline (Hed) Carlson, natives of Sweden, born in 1818 and 1824, respectively, and now living in Kansas. They were married in 1847 and came to the United States in 1876 and took land in McPherson county, Kansas. Our subject was reared and educated in Sweden and came with his parents to this country and remained with them in Kansas until January, 1881. Two years later he went to California and thence to Camas Prairie in 1883. He took his present farm as a homestead and has continued in its cultivation and improvement since that time. Mr. Carlson has six brothers and sisters, Charles O., Annie Bergren, Tilda Oak, Gustavus, Johanna, deceased, Otto.

On November 28, 1897, Mr. Carlson married Mrs. Hilda Erickson, daughter of Franz G. and Carolina (Pearson) Carlson. The father was born in Sweden, on March 9, 1839, and lives there yet. The mother was born in Sweden, on June 29, 1845, and died on November 15, 1889. Mrs. Carlson was born in southern Sweden, on March 11, 1869, and she has the following named brothers and sisters, Emma Riddell, Clara Larson, Carl, Ellen Peterson, Werner, Emanuel, Jennie, Agnes, Edith. Three children were born to Mrs. Carlson by her former marriage, Hilga, born February 8, 1889; Carl, born April 23, 1891; Mary, born June 4, 1896. Mr. Carlson and his wife are stanch Republicans and have always shown themselves to be on the side of progress and upbuilding of the country. They belong to the Lutheran church and he is a member of the Maccabees.

ISAAC C. HATTABAUGH is the capable and efficient secretary and manager of the Grangeville Implement Company, limited, and in this capacity is conducting the company in such a manner as to win for them a thriving patronage, while he is one of the prominent business men of the county and of first class standing. He was born in Salem, Indiana, on December 24, 1851, the son of George W. and Sarah (Boling) Hattabaugh, born in Virginia in 1822 and North Carolina in 1824, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Indiana, was of German extraction and a prominent man in his section. He died in 1898. The mother of our subject came from a prominent family that dates back to the Jamestown settlement and many of her relatives were leading personages in the various colonies where they settled; her four brothers, John, Gilbert, Randolph, and Mark, were in the Civil war. She died in 1892. Our subject grew to manhood and was educated in his native place. When twenty he began doing for himself and engaged in the manufacture of draining tiles, owning the plant. He built bridges also and in 1878 sold out and came west, settling in Lewiston. He took up the manufacture of sash and doors, after which he was elected twice as county auditor. He was deputy two terms, then deputy sheriff two terms and when the county was divided he went to Moscow and in February, 1880, he accepted the district clerkship and also opened a set of abstract books and made the transcript of the two counties. In 1892 he was elected county treasurer, while the county was a five hundred strong Republican section, and he a strong and active Democrat. Mr. Hattabaugh was president of the Commercial Bank and although it pulled through the panic years it became entangled in 1895 and went to the wall. Having all his funds in this institution he was left without means. Being appointed receiver he spent eighteen months in settling the affairs of the bank and then took up the implement business with the Elder Brothers. In 1899 Mr. Hattabaugh opened a branch house at Grangeville and is still in charge of this business. Mr. Hattabaugh was president of the board of regents at the time of the completion of the university buildings and was very active in assisting the enterprise to a successful completion.

On December 16, 1875, in Indiana, Mr. Hattabaugh married Miss Allie, daughter of Eli and Maria (Bennett) Miller, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. Mrs. Hattabaugh's mother was born in Indiana. Her brother was Thomas Bennett, governor of Idaho. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hattabaugh, M. Reese, at college in Washington, D. C.; Zonoma, born in Lewiston, in 1879, and attending school in Spokane. Mr. Hattabaugh is past grand master of the Masonic order and belongs to the royal arch and the Knight templar and the shriner departments of this order. He also belongs to the I. O. O. F., the Elks, the K. P. and was district deputy of the Elks for four years. Mr. Hattabaugh is a Democrat of pronounced views and activity, and refused the nomination for state senatorship last fall.

By way of reminiscence we note that he was a member of the posse that went from Lewiston and Grangeville to take the Chinese when they murdered Frazier at Pierce. They caught the celestials but Indians came and wrested them away and hung them forthwith.

FRANK HOGAN, who, with his brother, operates the Hogan Brothers' barber shop, the oldest shop in Grangeville, is a leading business man of good standing, well and favorably known and always allied on the side of advancement in the development of the town and the interests of the country. He was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on November 7, 1865, the son of John and Ellen (Carlisle) Hogan, natives of Ireland and Iowa, respectively. The father came to the United States when a boy and settled in the middle states; in 1862 he crossed the plains to Douglas county, bought land and still lives there, aged sixty-two. He fought in the Civil war a while and also fought the Indians when crossing the plains. The mother of our subject is also living in the Oregon home. She had her dress torn from one shoulder by a shot from the Indians when crossing the plains. Her mother, who is still living, aged one hundred years, is of German extraction, while her father was an Englishman. Frank grew to manhood in his native place, received his education from the common schools and in 1884 came to Grangeville. He returned to Oregon the next spring and in 1892 came hither again and bought an interest with his brother in his shop. Since then he has continued here, owning a fine business and having a first class reputation.

At Grangeville, on December 26, 1897, Mr. Hogan married Miss Maggie, daughter of Michael Behean, a native of Ireland and now a policeman in Chicago. He served in the Civil war, then crossed the plains and was finally at Lapwai. Mr. Hogan has the following named brothers and sisters, Jennie, Russell, William S., America, Minnie, King O., Katherine, John H. To Mr. and Mrs. Hogan one child has been born, Roy F. Mr. Hogan was the first candidate initiated in the Grangeville Camp of the W. W. Mrs. Hogan belongs to the Catholic church. He is a Democrat and attends the caucuses, but is not partisan and maintains the right of independent thought. In addition to his business, Mr. Hogan owns a good residence in Grangeville and some cattle.

RUSSELL TRUITT, M. D. The prestige enjoyed by and the confidence reposed in Dr. Truitt is the result of real merit and manifested skill and integrity, both in his life as a private citizen and as a professional man. It is quite in place that a review of his career be granted space in the history of northern Idaho. He was born in Montgomery county, Illinois, on May 2, 1852, the son of Samuel and Cynthia A. (Carr) Truitt. The father was born in Kentucky in 1820, removed after his marriage in 1836 to Illinois and in 1849 went across the plains to California. His train being surprised by the savages, he was wounded by an arrow in the hip. It was impossible to extract the stone point and the wound healed with it in. He did well in the Golden state and returned, via the isthmus, and settled in Illinois, where he farmed, being prospered. In February, 1863, he went to Memphis to see his son, James Madison, who was languishing in the hospital, and there he fell sick with pleurisy and died in February, 1863. The mother of our subject was born in 1818, in Indiana, was raised in Kentucky, and died June 19, 1894. Our subject was trained in the public schools, then for three years in Hillsboro Academy, then a year each in McKendree and Carthage Colleges. Following this excellent educational course, he taught for some time and in 1874 came to Dallas, Oregon, and taught for a year; in 1875 returned to Illinois and commenced the study of medicine with M. B. Michael, M. D. Later he attended lectures in Miami Medical College and finally took his degree from the Eclectic Medical College in Cincinnati, in 1877. He practiced in Illinois, visited the Willamette valley and in 1880 removed to Walla Walla and later to eastern Oregon, where he lived until 1895 and then removed to Cottonwood, Idaho. Since that time Dr. Truitt has devoted himself to the practice here with a gratifying success and stands at the head of a fine patronage today, holding the high esteem and implicit confidence of the people, of which he is worthy in every respect. The Doctor owns town property and a small farm just north from town. He also has some cattle and horses. He has four brothers, Merryfield, James M., deceased, Warren, Charles.

On August 1, 1878, Dr. Truitt married Miss Louisa A., daughter of John Smith, who was a pioneer in Linn county, Oregon. Mrs. Truitt was born in Linn county, Oregon, in 1854. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Truitt, Norman M., born July 20, 1879; Warren, born June 7, 1891. The Doctor and his wife are Republicans and take a keen interest in the questions of the welfare of the county and state. He is a member of the Masonic lodge and also of the M. W. A., of which latter order he is medical examiner and also of the K. O. T. M. He has a license from the medical boards of Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

JOSHUA S. FOCKLER was born in Richland, Ohio, in 1838, the son of Wendall and Elizabeth (Fox) Fockler, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was born on February 22, 1811, and died in 1902. The mother was born in 1813 and died when our subject was young. The parents came to Wisconsin when Joshua was one year old and settled where Janesville now stands. He was educated in the Janesville Academy and in 1854 came across the plains with his uncle to Eugene, Oregon. Later he went to Corvallis and did mining in various sections with that as his headquarters. During the Rogue river war, on October 8, 1855, he was twenty-one miles below Jacksonville with others when the Indians attacked them and murdered twenty-one. He escaped with his party and then went to fighting the Indians. Following the war he went to California and in 1861 came to Idaho. Nineteen men went up the Salmon to prospect and finding the way so rough they became discouraged and fourteen turned back to what is now Buffalo Hump; five went on and John Healey of this five panned the first pay dirt in Florence diggings, discovering the dust from the upturned roots of a tree. A rush followed, in which our subject participated and also mined there and in other sections until 1876, when he bought a store, with Charles Woods, at the mouth of Slate creek. The land there had been bought from "Capt. John," an Indian, and in 1861 a house had been erected there by Charles Silverman, and it is believed that this is the first house on the Salmon river. Mr. Fockler says he had a nice trade with the Indians and thought them a good class of their people, but they told plainly that they would fight the soldiers when an attempt was made to put them on the reservation. Bands camped there and Mr. Fockler began to feel uneasy lest an outbreak occur and the settlers suffer. About four P. M., June 12, 1877, three Indians, mounted and under twenty-one, came to buy bread and said they were going to get ready to go to the reservation. He supposes these went up to Divine's place and murdered the old man in the night and stole his gun. Then they came down John Day creek and lay in ambush and killed Henry Beckroge, and Richard Bland, as they were going to the hayfield. A little later they killed Henry Elfers, went on down the Salmon, which they crossed at a breakneck speed on the cut off, and Mr. Fockler rode to intercept them to ascertain what the trouble was. They made for a winter camp, where some sick squaws were being cared for by others, but got there and left before Mr. Fockler could catch them. The squaws told him what had occurred and he hurried back, but Mr. Charles F. Cone had reached the store before with the news. Tolo and other squaws told the tale and Mr. Fockler sent Tolo with the best horse to ride to Florence for aid. She rode with all speed and got there before dark, being obliged to walk the last of the way, as her horse was exhausted. She brought back twelve armed men and they went to building fortifications at once. They arrived at break of day on June 14th. That morning they buried the unfortunate victims and remained forted up until the war was ended. They were visited by one hundred and twenty-five Indians after the victory at Whitebird, who wanted to be allowed to pass. The whites refused and then later granted them the privilege of crossing the Salmon unmolested. Mox-Mox told Mr. Fockler at this time that Chief Joseph killed Mrs. Manuel with a knife, and that Joseph had been drinking. Mr. Fockler and his partner gave out about two thousand dollars' worth of goods at this time and they were about ruined at the close of the war, but went to business again and remained with good success until 1902. Then Mr. Fockler sold out and is now engaged in raising stock at Slate Creek, where he owns a half section of land and handles considerable stock. Mr. Fockler has one sister, Mrs. Rosanna Peck, and two half-brothers, Morton and Delvino, and four half-sisters. Mr. Fockler is an active and influential Democrat and has been assessor and county commissioner.

GEORGE SHEER, who is now in the stock business with Mr. J. S. Fockler, is one of the early pioneers of the country and is a man of energy, having wrought well in opening the country and building it up. He was born in Germany in 1827 and came to the United States with his parents, Michael and Kate Sheer, in 1835. They stopped in New York and in 1836 came to Ohio. In 1849 Mr. Sheer went to Kansas City and there fitted out with horse teams and came to Hangtown, California, where he mined for a time. Later he went to the Salmon country in the north part of the state and later packed from Trinidad. In 1863 he came to The Dalles and packed thence to the points in Idaho, Oregon and some in Montana. He wintered at Walla Walla for some years and then chose Slate creek as his winter point. In the spring of 1877 he went thence to Lewiston and was going after a load for the mines when the Indians broke out and he gave his train to serve the government and followed General Howard. He was at the battle of the Clearwater, his train being the one the Indians tried to capture, of which Howard speaks in his report. Three horses and their loads were taken and two of his assistants were killed before the Indians were repulsed. Mr. Sheer received the horses and continued with the army until they reached Judah Basin in Montana and there commenced his journey back to Lewiston. He continued his packing business the next spring and has followed it since. In 1903 he went into the stock business with Mr. Fockler and gives most of his attention to that. He still owns the train and does some packing.

Mr. Sheer believes that General Howard did as well as any one could under the circumstances and he is of the opinion that the whole matter was handled well. He is a Democrat in politics and is a man of sound judgment. He has done a worthy part in the work of the county and has endured much hardship and danger in his travels and packing.

GEORGE M. WOLFE is one of the industrious and thrifty stockmen and farmers of the vicinity of Cottonwood, having a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres three miles east from that thriving town. He also owns considerable stock, having from two hundred head of hogs to twice and three times that many each year, also handling some thoroughbred horses. He now owns two excellent stallions and pays considerable attention to buying and selling stock.

George M. Wolfe was born in Pennsylvania, on May 2, 1837, the son of William P. and Catherine (Mobley) Wolfe, natives of Pennsylvania; the father was born in 1804. The mother died in Missouri in 1845. The father, a miner and farmer, went to western Missouri in 1845. Three years later he went to California, landing in Hangtown in 1850. He prospected and mined for eight years, then went to Mendocino county, where he took land and farmed. In 1882 he removed to Camas prairie, landing here January 20th and on July 5th the same year he went to his final rest. He was a veteran of the Mexican war. Our subject was raised in the various places where the father lived and received his education from the schools of these places. His lot was cast with his father and he engaged in the same lines of operation until 1878, when he came to Camas prairie and took his present place as government land. He at once took up general farming and the handling of stock, sheep, cattle, horses and hogs, and since that time Mr. Wolfe has continued steadily in these lines with the success deserved by the thrifty and industrious. Mr. Wolfe is a Democrat and a member of the I. O. O. F.

In 1856 he was at Susanville, Nevada, where he built the first sawmill and also took part in the movement among the pioneers to quiet the Piute Indians. Although they chased the savages for some time they could not get them to stand and fight.

When a lad of twelve Mr. Wolfe engaged in mining in California and has panned out as high as one hundred and ninety-six in the early fifties. He was in the Gold Lake excitement, suffering all the hardships of the early settlers, having paid as high as two dollars a pound for beef and two dollars apiece for eggs. In December, 1852, Mr. Wolfe was at the Rich Bar, on Feather river, when the camp ran out of provisions. Eighty men tried to reach the outside settlements, but twenty-eight perished before getting out of the snow.

JOHN N. RICE. This esteemed gentleman and worthy pioneer of Idaho is now dwelling on Slate creek, at Freedom, and is handling stock, while he also does general farming. He was born in what is now Washington county, Oregon, on January 16, 1845, the son of James E. and Nancy (Bear) Rice, and was the second white male child born in Oregon. His father, who was a native of Canada, was born in 1812 and died in 1886, crossed the plains to The Dalles in 1844. He was a union man and a Republican. The mother was born in Michigan in 1817 and died September 4, 1902, being of German ancestry. Our subject grew to manhood and was educated in his native place and continued with his father on the farm until he was twenty-six. Then, in 1871, he came to Camas prairie and settled five miles north from Grangeville, where he continued farming and raising stock for fifteen years. In 1890 he moved to Grangeville and engaged in the livery business, which he sold two years later. In 1892 he sold his farm and in 1895 again bought the livery. A year after this Mr. Rice sold the livery and bought his present place near Freedom. He is paying attention to handling stock, and has his farm well improved.

In 1875 Mr. Rice married Miss Sarah E., daughter of James and Catherine (Crusen) Odle. Mr. Odle was one of the first to break sod on Camas prairie and was a prominent man in the county for years. Mrs. Rice was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on February 14, 1857, and has one brother, George, and one sister, Mrs. Mary A. Baird. Mr. Rice has the following brothers and sisters: Moses H., Charles L., Russell H., James H., Frank W., Margaret K., Anna M. Harness, Eliza J. Rhone, Mary N. McGee. Two children have been born to this union, Charles A., Katherine. Mr. Rice is a Mason and a stanch Republican. He is active in politics and held the office of assessor from 1887 to 1890 and was once in the field for commissioner. Mr. Rice was living on Camas prairie at the time of the Indian outbreak and was shearing sheep when Paddy White brought the news. He immediately left for Mt. Idaho and as he had only a shotgun did duty as guardsman, while the men with rifles went out in the field.

SAMUEL GOLDSTONE. A successful merchant now in Cottonwood, a large real property holder, a man of substantial qualities and bright capabilities, one of the heaviest taxpayers of the county and the real promoter of the town of Cottonwood, such in brief is the position held today by Mr. Goldstone; he is eminently fitted to be placed among the leading and prominent men of northern Idaho and one also whose labors for upbuilding have met with brilliant success, both as to his own financial advancement and the good of the community and the county at large.

Samuel Goldstone was born in Hadley, Michigan, on January 25, 1859, being the son of Harris and Golda (Rosenberg) Goldstone, natives of Europe. The father was born about 1809 and died November 4, 1894. He was a pioneer to California in 1860, dealt heavily in real estate and was a leading merchant in Petaluma. The mother died October 3, 1893, aged about eighty-two. Our subject went to

SAMUEL GOLDSTONE.

California with his parents, making the trip via Panama and was educated in Petaluma. At the early age of twelve he started as errand boy for a notion house and then operated in the same capacity for a photo gallery for a time, but soon was installed with the house of Feigenbaum & Company, wholesale notions men. This was September 19, 1871, and for twenty years he held with that house. He entered at very small wages and when he severed his connection, he drew the highest salary that the firm had ever paid for a commercial traveler. His headquarters were in Salt Lake City, Utah.

On April 29, 1890, Mr. Goldstone maried Miss Phoebe, daughter of Abram Binnard, of the well known firm of Grostein & Binnard, pioneers of Lewiston. The nuptials were celebrated in that city. Mrs. Goldstone was born in Lewiston, on March 7, 1871, and was there educated, having taken special courses in music and fancy work at the Sisters' school. In 1892 Mr. Goldstone settled in Cottonwood, then a place of about a dozen houses, and went into business with Mr. Henry Wax, dealers in general merchandise. One year later, Mr. Goldstone went alone in business and since that time he has prospered greatly and is now one of the best known merchants of the county. He has large interests in the town site, owns a ranch of about one section adjoining town, also other land throughout the county and a great deal of other property in Lewiston, Idaho. Mr. Goldstone is operating in real estate for Mr. Proctor of San Francisco, who owns heavy interests in the townsite of Cottonwood. He has three brothers and one sister, all in San Francisco, Jacob and Morris, twins, Daniel and Ella Cantor. Three children have been born to this household, Ellis and Bernice, deceased, and Abram Hirsch Goldstone, living. Mr. Goldstone is an active Republican and is always found in the lead for any movement that will benefit the town and the country, being progressive and public minded, and he is highly esteemed by all.

WILLIAM W. BOWMAN, a sawmill man, residing at Grangeville, was born in Boone county, Indiana, on August 20, 1859, the son of George L. and Mary C. (McLean) Bowman, natives of Virginia and Indiana, respectively. The father enlisted in the Civil war, but died in 1863 before getting into service. The mother died in 1879. Our subject was educated and reared in his native place and when eighteen came with his mother and sisters to Colfax, Washington. In 1878 they crossed the big Potlatch and settled, but the Indians drove them out and in the spring of 1879 they settled in Lewiston and in the fall came to Camas prairie. Mr. Bowman farmed and bought the old water mill above Grangeville, which he operated. He sold this in 1891 and bought a steam mill, which he operated two years, then moved it on the Salmon, where it is still located. Mr. Bowman was in Oregon at the time of the Nez Perces war.

On January 4, 1884, he married Miss Maggie, daughter of John J. and Jennet (Popham) Manuel. The father was born in Virginia; he crossed the plains and married in Warren, Idaho. He made good money in Warren and later, in 1873, sold his hotel and other property and went to Whitebird. He bought the old Chapman ranch there and took up stock raising. Success attended his efforts until the Indians broke them up. Hon. Benj. F. Morris was in partnership with Mr. Manuel. Mrs. Bowman has one sister, Julia Knox, of Grangeville. Mr. Bowman has one brother and one sister, Francis M. and Emma Crea. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, Julia, Emma, Frank, Minnie, George. Mr. Bowman is a member of the W. W. and in political matters he is allied with the Democrats.

Mr. Manuel and his family were the greatest sufferers in the awful Indian outrages and it is well in this place to give an account as Mrs. Bowman recites it now. Mrs. Bowman was born in Warren, on September 8, 1870, was four when the family went to Whitebird and seven when the war occurred. On June 13, 1877, the Indians were encamped on the Whitebird and had been holding great talks and powwows. Mr. Manuel with his wife, his daughter, now Mrs. Bowman, son John, and also George Popham, Mrs. Manuel's father, was at his ranch. At that time Pat Brice and old Mr. Baker, a bachelor residing near, came riding hurriedly up and exclaimed that the Indians had just shot Sam Benedict. They did not know at that time that the savages had already killed Dick Divine and Elfers, and a man nicknamed Bob Long, on that same morning and prior to the shooting of Benedict. Benedict was killed that evening while attempting to escape his murderers, having been wounded in the morning.

Just as soon as possible Mr. Manuel gathered his family and started to Mr. Baker's stone cellar, as a place of protection. Pat Brice and old Mr. Popham stayed at Mr. Manuel's place and hid themselves. Mr. Manuel had gone but a little distance with his family when, upon looking back, Mrs. Bowman exclaimed, "Oh, father, the Indians are coming." Just then an arrow struck her in the arm and another in the head, which latter one glanced and entered her father's neck. Then the Indians shot her father through the hips with a rifle and he fell from his horse, dragging Mrs. Bowman with him as she was sitting behind and clinging to him. The horses stampeded and Mrs. Manuel, who held the baby, was carried in a different direction from the others and was soon thrown off. Her knee cap was broken and the baby was injured. At the beginning of the attack the Indians surrounded Mr. Baker. One of their number thrust an arrow in his face and he wrenched it from the savage's hand. Upon this they filled him with arrows, even shooting them at him long after he was dead. When he saw his case was hopeless he called out to Mr. Manuel, "Good bye, Jack, they've got me," and then died. Mr. Manuel and his little daughter rolled down hill when they fell from the horse which had run away. Thus they got some distance from the Indians and crawled into the brush and hid. The Indians continued to shoot at them and one bullet grazed Mr. Manuel's face. The band captured Mrs. Manuel and took her and the infant back to the house to compel her to give up the ammunition. They placed her on the horse to take her back as she was unable to walk. Soon they left. Although diligent search was made for Mr. Manuel by his persecutors, he succeeded in escaping them and the redskins moved on. The grandfather found them that night and brought the mother to them. It seemed best to leave him there and so they brought bedding, and Mrs. Manuel went to the house with her infant and daughter. Mox-Mox came along then and told Mr. Popham and Mr. Brice to take to the bush or they would still be killed. He also said that Mrs. Brice would not be injured in the house. Mrs. Bowman had come to the house with her mother and that night Joseph came with his band. Mrs. Manuel was sitting up in bed caring for her infant and the little daughter was in another couch, suffering from two wounds in the head, one in her shoulder and an arm broken. Chief Joseph came into the room and this child saw him deliberately stab her mother in the heart. The Indians then dragged the body on to the floor and killed the infant, with its mother. The little daughter was taken to another room and then the Indians left and she went to sleep. When she woke it was dark and she returned where her mother had been and lighted a match which revealed her and the infant clasped in death's chilly grasp. She ran from the house and found Pat Brice in the bush below the barn; her broken arm was dangling by her side as she ran. They remained secreted that night and in the morning the Indians returned. Climbing on to the barn the savages descried them in their hiding place and began shooting at them. Mr. Brice went straight up to them and showed them the cross on his breast and requested Chief Whitebird to allow him to take the little child to Mt. Idaho, promising then to return if they demanded it. Being allowed, he made preparations and started, but not until he had gone into the house and saw the gruesome sight of the mother and child dead. Part of the time Mrs. Bowman walked and part of the time he carried her. They stayed all night at the Harris place, no one being at home. Here he fixed the chair spoken of frequently and they started on their weary journey. From the thirteenth to the sixteenth they were without food, but finally they reached Mt. Idaho and Mrs. John Swartz cared for the suffering child and Dr. Morris, of Lewiston, dressed her wounds and set the arm.

Mr. Manuel laid out for many days and subsisted on berries, dragging himself about and dressing his wounds with cold water. He used his pocket knife to cut the arrow out of the back of his neck. He lived twelve years after that, but never recovered fully from the wound in his hips. Such, reader, are some of the hardships of pioneer life.

JESSE FARMER is one of those genial bachelors whose good nature and skill have made him many friends and plenty of money. He resides four miles north of Lucile on John Day creek. He was born in Tennessee, in 1836, the son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Worthington) Farmer. The father was born in Georgia in 1809 and died in 1897. The mother was born in Tennessee in 1812 and died in the seventies. Our subject came with his parents to Missouri when he was an infant and from there to Arkansas, in which place he was educated and remained until he was twenty-three. The year of 1859 is the one in which he crossed the plains with ox teams to California, settling in Tuolumne county. He mined for a couple of years and in 1863 went to Idaho, taking claims in Warren for himself. He did very well and continued for fourteen years. James Warren discovered this camp in 1862 and John Ramey was one of the active men there in early days. Leopold Huffen was one of the first merchants. In 1877 he went to Miller's camp eighteen miles this side of Warren and was there for nine years, being there when the Indians broke out. They built fortifications at Warren and had no trouble. In 1890 he came to John Day creek and took up land, since which time he has been farming and raising cattle. He has his place well improved and a good irrigating ditch. Mr. Farmer has three brothers, Joseph C., Robert W. and Randolph L. Politically Mr. Farmer is a good Democrat, being of the Jeffersonian type. He is respected by all and one of the worthy pioneers of Idaho county.

JAMES WOODWARD. A good business man, public minded and of first class standing, a patriotic citizen, who showed his zeal and bravery in military service for the Union for years and now one of the substantial and respected residents of Grangeville—such is the subject of this article of whom we are pleased to speak in the history of his county.

James Woodward was born in Erie county, New York, on December 30, 1836, the son of Levi and Hannah (Southwick) Woodward, born in Vermont in 1788 and in New York in 1792, respectively. The father died in 1876. He was of English extraction, came to western New York in 1811 and was near Buffalo when it was burned by the English and Indians. The mother of our subject died in 1862. She came from a family of English Quakers. Our subject was well educated in his early days and when nineteen went to teaching in his native state, then in Illinois and finally settled in Lacrosse county, Wisconsin, and taught and read law. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion, he enlisted as a private in Company B, Second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, under captain Colwell. He was at once sent to the front and participated in the first and second battles of Bull Run, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and other engagements; on August 28, 1863, he was promoted as first lieutenant of a colored company organized in Pennsylvania. At Deep Bottom, Virginia, half of his company was killed and wounded. Out of twenty-one officers, seven were killed and seven wounded. On November 23, 1864, Mr. Woodward was promoted to a captainey and after the close of the war was sent with Sheridan to Texas to demand of the French the evacuation of Mexico. He remained there until August 10, 1867, having been in service nearly seven years.

On November 6, 1866, in Texas, Mr. Woodward married Miss Frances McBride. She was born in Freeport, Louisiana, and died in 1871, leaving one child, L. Augustus, now dwelling in Baker City, Oregon. In 1872 Mr. Woodward married Miss Ella Coates, whose parents were natives of Pennsylvania. Her father was a member of the famous Berdan sharpshooters in the Civil war. Mrs. Woodward was born in Pennsylvania in 1849. To Mr. and Mrs. Woodward two sons have been born, Claude and Russell, both in school. In 1867 Mr. Woodward went to New York from Texas and then we find him in the lumber business in Pennsylvania, which he sold in 1884, and migrated to Idaho county, where he purchased his present farm from his brother, having added eighty acres by purchase since. He devoted himself to raising cattle and farming until recently he sold most of his stock. Mr. Woodward has two sisters and one brother, Eliza Roberts, Lydia Taft, Stephen.

Mr. Woodward has been justice of the peace for ten years, being now in service. He has devoted some time to the practice of law. He is a member of the G. A. R. and is a stanch Republican. In 1898 he was the nominee of that party for state senator, but as it was a year of defeat for the party he suffered with them. He and his wife are members of the Episcopalian church.

JOHN B. FORSMANN has achieved a good success in at least two different lines of enterprise since coming to Idaho county, that of sawmilling and farming and stock raising. He is now the owner of one section of good land, which he has improved in a becoming manner and which bears the evidence of skill and sagacity in every department. Mr. Forsmann also owns considerable stock and turns off about forty head of cattle and one hundred hogs each year.

John B. Forsmann was born in Effingham county, Illinois, on April 28, 1850, the son of Herman and Gertrude (Sietman) Forsmann. The father was born March, 1820, in Hanover, Germany, learned the carpenter trade and came to the United States in 1844. He worked at New Orleans and finally came to Illinois, bought land and farmed until 1856, when he went to Stearns county, Minnesota, and farmed eight years. He returned to Illinois and in 1886 came to Camas prairie, where he died November 21, 1894. The mother was born in Prussia in 1828, came to Illinois with her parents, married there and now lives at Keuterville. Our subject was brought up and educated in Minnesota and remained with his parents until twenty-three. He bought land then in Illinois and farmed until 1886, when he came to Camas prairie with a sawmill, took land and at once went into the manufacture of lumber. He continued with excellent success and later bought land for farming, where he now lives, one mile south from Cottonwood. He added more land as occasion presented and also kept on with the lumber interests. In 1902 he sold the latter and now devotes himself entirely to farming. He has six brothers and sisters, Mary Probst, Catherine Riemon, Annie Uptmoor, Henry, Anton, Gertrude Leitfeldt.

On April 21, 1873, Mr. Forsmann married Miss Elizabeth Striecher. She was left an orphan at an early age. Mrs. Forsmann was born in January, 1848, in Cincinnati, Ohio, and has one sister, Mary Esker. Ten children have been born to this worthy couple, Mary Hattrup, born April 21, 1874; John, born June 2, 1875; Anna Uling, born December 18, 1876; Jerad, born January 22, 1878, and died January 29, 1878; Catherina, born December 21, 1878; George, born September 17, 1880; Joseph, born August 31, 1882, and died February 10, 1883; Madelena, born November 27, 1883; Frank, born August 23, 1886; Clara G., born August 13, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Forsmann are Democrats of the Jeffersonian type and are members of the Catholic church. He was county commissioner from 1888 to 1892.

LEWIS A. BRUNER, a man of industry and intelligence, who dwells three and one-half miles northeast from Cottonwood, has been a leading farmer and stockman on Camas prairie for nearly twenty years. He was born in Logan county, Ohio, on September 27, 1848, the son of John L. and Hannah (Hall) Bruner. The father, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1806, April 28th, was a shoemaker and came to the United States in 1832. He located in Logan county, Ohio, and later took land. In 1851 he came to Linn county, Iowa, and took three hundred and twenty acres, where he farmed until his death on November 15, 1858. The mother was born in 1811, in Pickaway county, Ohio, near Lithopolis, was married in 1832 and died on June 26, 1886. Her father was a prominent business man and a farmer in Ohio. Our subject was reared with his parents until ten years of age and then went out in the world for himself. He gained a common schooling and in 1860 went to Gage county, Nebraska, where he took land and farmed until 1875, in which year he went to Chautauqua county, Kansas, and engaged in farming until 1885. In April of this year he came on to Moscow, Idaho, and the June following was on Camas prairie, where he bought a timber claim. He at once settled to raising stock and general farming and has now four hundred acres of fertile land and plenty of good stock. He has fine improvements, such as a good six room house, fine barns, and other buildings, as well as orchard and so forth. Mr. Bruner also has an acre and a half in the corporate limits of Cottonwood. He has one brother and eight sisters, Annie M. Smith, Christina, deceased, Simon P., Hannah C., deceased, Laura A., deceased, Lavina J. Campbell, Elizabeth M., deceased, Mary M. and Lydia, also deceased.

In Jefferson county, Nebraska, on June 31, 1870, Mr. Bruner married Miss Jane, daughter of William and Mary E. (Munroe) Harding. Mr. Harding was born June 30, 1828, in Kentucky, came to Iowa before the war and in 1861 enlisted in Company F, Eighth Iowa, fought three years and, being discharged, re-enlisted and continued in active service to the end of the war. He was in many battles, among which was that of Shiloh. After the war he lived in Keokuk until 1869, then went to Thayer county, Nebraska, took a homestead and at present is retired and living in Alma, Nebraska. His wife was born in Indiana and died in 1856. Mrs. Bruner was born February 7, 1853, in Washington county, Iowa, and has five brothers and sisters, Harlan P., Elvira Campbell, Mary C., deceased, Harriet Edwards, Leonard. Seven children are the fruit of this marriage, Simon H., born July 15, 1871, and died January 10, 1874; John W., born August 30, 1873; Ralph E., born January 15, 1876; Daisy M. Mobley, born April 15, 1878; Bessie J., born October 17, 1880; Delia P., born January 4, 1884; Gracie M., born January 24, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Bruner are Republicans. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. and his wife belongs to the Rebekahs and also to the Methodist church.

CLAY McNAMEE. Among the professions there is none that has more to do with the issues of the state and thus with the interests of every class of citizens than the legal. From the earliest records we find men of the best brain and most substantial qualities in this important branch of human study and the present day is no whit behind the most brilliant of the past. As one of the leading lights of northern Idaho we mention the subject of this article and feel sure that the excellent record this young man has made in at least three counties justifies the statement.

Clay McNamee was born in Ray county, Missouri, on June 19, 1870, the son of Henry and Josephine (Gilpin) McNamee, natives of West Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. The father was born in 1836, came west to Oregon in 1876 and still lives there. He was a carpenter and fought in the Confederate army, suffered capture, being taken to Texas and at Lee's surrender went to that state. The mother is aged fifty-five; her father, William Gilpin, of Irish extraction, fought in the Mexican war. Our subject was with the family on its journey to the Willamette valley and there was educated, taking his degree from the Pacific University in June, 1889, having spent six years in that institution. He came to Moscow in January, 1890, and commenced the study of law with Freund & Lowry and was admitted to the supreme court in March, 1893. He at once took up the practice there and continued the same until 1898, the firm being known as Claggett, McNamee & Morgan. In 1894 Mr. McNamee was chosen district attorney for Nez Perces, Latah and Idaho counties. At the end of a four-years' term he removed to Grangeville and opened an office, where he has been continuously since.

On May 11, 1895, in Moscow, Mr. McNamee married Miss Effie A., daughter of William and Nancy (Ross) Leasure. The father is a large land owner in Moscow and is a prominent man in his county. Mrs. McNamee was born in Oregon in 1876 and was educated in the university at Moscow. She has one brother and one sister, Frank, Lillie. Mr. McNamee has one half-sister, Fannie Freund. One child has been born to this union, Merle. Mr. McNamee is a Democrat and a potent factor in the political world. His skill and ability in his profession, together with his painstaking and careful study of the deep questions of law, have given him a large clientage and he is enjoying the emoluments of real industry and wisely applied efforts.

EDSON G. PRICE is the owner and manager of the Boss livery in Grangeville. He is a man of geniality and good business qualifications and has a fine barn, well stocked with the best of rigs, excellent horses, which, with his care for the welfare of his patrons, has given him a thriving business. He was born on the Wabash river, in Indiana, on May 28, 1860, the son of William and Lusetta (Brown) Price, natives of Indiana. The father was born in 1822, of Welsh extraction, and died in California in 1896, having gone thither in that year. The mother came of German extraction and died in 1885. When our subject was eleven years of age the family went to Iroquois county, Illinois, and nine years later they went to Woodland and thence to Mendocino county. Edson G. received his education from the common schools and worked with his father until 1883, when he came to Moscow. From that time until 1895 he was occupied variously in different localities, mostly in Latah and Idaho counties. In 1896 he came to Idaho county permanently and took up farming and stock raising until December, 1902, when he purchased his present business and since that time has devoted himself to its operation.

At Moscow, in April, 1885, Mr. Price married Miss Anna, daughters of John and Elvira (Howard) Danly, natives of New York and still living there. Mrs. Price was born in Illinois in 1860 and has one brother and two sisters, Philo, Ella Lyons, Carrie Vanslyke. Mr. Price has the following named brothers and sisters: Wesley, Ella, Mary, Frances M., Jennie, Sumner, Vinton. Four children have been born to them, Clyde, Dirl, Forest, Mabel. Mr. Price is a Republican, but not partisan and is a man of independent thought.

WILLIAM H. HARRIS is one of the real and sturdy pioneers of the Pacific coast and various sections of that country have seen his labors for many years, while for the last eight years he has resided on John Day creek, near Freedom. He was born in Ann Arbor, Michigan, on April 8, 1844, the son of Phiney and Jane (Smith) Harris. The father was a cooper and a school teacher, born in Vermont in 1812 and died in 1867. His father, Noah Harris, was a patriot of the war of 1812, came of English stock, his ancestors being among the earliest colonists of this country. The mother was born in Rochester, New York, in 1826. She comes of Scotch-Irish stock and still lives in Dakota. Our subject grew to the age of twenty in Michigan, where he was well educated. Then he went to California, by the Isthmus, and mined in the Salmon river country for thirty years. He made several large fortunes and lost as many. He was at the head of some of the largest quartz and hydraulic properties in that section. In 1893 he came to Stevens county, where he operated a mining property for four years. Then he came to his present location. In addition to his farm he has some fine placer property and is doing hydraulic mining at the present time. He is interested in the John Day Mining Company and in other properties.

In 1873 Mr. Harris married Genevieve, daughter of William and Lucinda (Murphy) Hughes, pioneers in Illinois. They settled in that prairie country when Mr. Hughes had the privilege of taking all the land he could plow around between Joliet and Chicago. Mrs. Harris was born in Illinois in 1849 and came to California in 1871. They have five children, Florence, Ada M. Larribee, William G. Arthur, Esther J. Grover C. Mr. Harris has one brother, George W., who has been sheriff in Hughes county, Dakota, for many years. Our subject is a full-fledged Democrat and is ever active at the time of the campaign and ready to give a reason for his position. He has acted as undersheriff at several different times.

RILEY RICE is the owner of half a section of Camas prairie fertile land about four miles northeast from Cottonwood, where he dwells now and pays attention to general farming and stock raising. He has his place well improved, sells about sixty head of cattle and a hundred hogs each year and is prospered in his endeavors.

Riley Rice was born in Putnam county, Missouri, on November 8, 1858, the son of Erastus and Amanda S. Rice. The father was born on June 24, 1818, in Pennsylvania, left home when young and for many years followed steamboating on the Mississippi; he fought in the Mexican war, married in 1838 and followed farming and milling until his death, April 22, 1887. The mother was born in Osage county, Missouri, in 1824. Her father was a planter and died January 17, 1872. Our subject was reared in his native place, gained a good education and remained with his parents until 1875. Then came a journey to Nebraska and Wyoming, where he rode the range until 1883. In that year he came to Camas prairie, took land, worked for J. L. Eckert, later sold his pre-emption and bought his present place. Mr. Rice has some fine blooded stock, among which is a Shorthorn bull of exceptional value. He has the following brothers and sisters: William J., Louise McGee, John W., James A., Mildred M. Way, deceased, Melissa J. Perkins and Charlotta R. Carr.

On January 1, 1891, Mr. Rice married Miss Katie, daughter of Joseph P. and Elizabeth (Randall) Code. Mr. Code was born in Ireland, on March 17, 1843, came when a child with his parents to the United States, went to California in 1860 and in 1884 settled in the Palouse country. Three years later he came to Camas prairie and took land north from Denver. In 1898 he opened a hotel in Denver and now resides there. His wife was born December 13, 1845, in Pennsylvania, and now lives in Denver. Mrs. Rice was born March 27, 1869, in San Joaquin county, California, and has four sisters and one brother,—Mary C. Davis, Cora Hinkle, Leona Brown, Ruby and Euclid. Four children have come to bless the home of this worthy citizen,—Arthur L., born November 25, 1892; Lester F., born November 29, 1894; George D., born January 17, 1897; Euclid, born July 2, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Rice are Democrats and active in the realm of politics. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the Maccabees, of the M. W. A., and he and his wife belong to the Rebakahs. He is grand herald of the grand lodge of Idaho. Mr. Rice is chairman of the school board.

HENRY TERNAN, one of the notable pioneers of this section of Idaho, has passed all the stages of the country from the days of roaming savages to its present high state of civilization and advancement. He was born in Ireland, on July 7, 1837, the son of Gregory and Jane (Blakely) Ternan, also natives of Ireland, who, with their family, came to Canada in 1849. Our subject came to Canada when twelve and there and in his native place was educated. Then he toiled with his father until the latter's death and the next year, 1868, he came to the United States. Making his way west, enroute to Elk, he passed through Butte when there was but one house there. Arriving in Elk, he worked for a company, of which his brother William was part owner, for two years. He then bought an interest and steadily kept buying out his partners until he owned the entire claims. It is known as the Ternan mine. He did well in his mining and in 1881 came to the Clearwater and took land. He added to this until he has four hundred and eighty acres of good soil. Some years subsequent to his settlement there he devoted himself to stock raising and farming. Recently he sold his stock and again devoted himself to his mining interests. He remains in the mines during the summers and is to be found at his ranch near Harpster in the winter. Mr. Ternan has some fine quartz properties, among which may be mentioned the General Grant, which he has bonded for $15,000.00.

Mr. Ternan was here during the Indian troubles and was forted up in Elk City. It was supposed that the Indians would cross on the old Nez Perce trail which goes through Elk, but General Howard's timely interference kept them from this. Mr. Ternan was in the battle of the Clearwater and was one of the party who notified Captain Jackson of General Howard's condition, upon which the captain came to the rescue. Mr. Ternan says that the Indians were strongly intrenched in a strategic position between two gulches and had rifle pits extending in semi-circles around, making it a difficult position to approach. Finally General Howard ordered the bombarding of the Indians with the field pieces and this drove them out. Twelve soldiers were killed and about twenty-six wounded. Mr. Ternan says it is his opinion that General Howard did the best that could have been done under the circumstances. He was drilled for a soldier in his early life and realizes the obstacles which had to be overcome. The battle lasted about two hours and was a fiercely contested struggle. That is, two hours after Jackson's command came.

Mr. Ternan has two brothers and one sister, William, Gregory, Jennie Erwin. He is a member of the Episcopal church. In early days he was postmaster of Elk and was also justice of the peace. Josephus Moore, who was killed in the Nez Perces war, was his partner, as was also John Baeur, who was county treasurer and probate judge of Idaho county. Mr. Ternan is a stanch Republican and one of the substantial men of the county.

MORGAN L. MARTIN certainly deserves to be ranked with the heaviest real estate owners in Idaho county and with the foremost stockmen also. He owns a section of fertile land about five miles northeast from Cottonwood, handles annually one hundred head of cattle and about two hundred head of hogs. He is a man of skill in his lines of business and his integrity and worth are no less evident.

Morgan L. Martin was born in Harrison county, Ohio, on March 9, 1848, the son of William and Sarah (Lewis) Martin. The father was born in the Shenandoah valley in 1812, came early to Ohio, and in 1860 migrated to Cedar county, Iowa, and raised sheep. In 1866 he went to Van Buren county, Iowa, and in 1871 he went to Kansas and engaged in the cattle business. He was state representative in 1874. He died in January, 1878. The mother was born in Ohio in 1817, and died in September, 1886. Our subject was brought up and educated in Ohio and Iowa. He remained with his parents until August, 1868, then went to Johnson county, Kansas, for one year, was in Osage county and farmed until 1870. Returning to Iowa, he found his father had gone to Cowley county, Kansas, whom he followed, farming and raising stock until April, 1886, the date of his removal to Camas prairie. He bought four hundred and eighty acres, later added a quarter more and now has one of the fine farms of northern Idaho. Mr. Martin has ten brothers and sisters,—Isaac A., Mary A. Wellmann, Sarah E. Painter, Hertzell H., deceased, Elery C., William E., deceased, Emma Hawkins, Minerva C. Garner, Alice J. Menard, Parker W.

On January 17, 1876, Mr. Martin married Miss Anna, daughter of Jedediah and Maria (Corman) Olmstead. Mr. Olmstead was born in 1833, in Indiana, learned the tinner's trade and went to Kansas in 1850 being the pioneer tinner of that place. In 1874 he went to the southwestern portion of the state and took land, where he abides at present. The mother was born in Pennsylvania in 1838, the daughter of John C. and Margaret Corman, and came with her parents to western Missouri in 1847. She lives in Kansas now. Mrs. Martin was born in Leavenworth county, Kansas, on July 22, 1856, and has the following brothers and sisters: Luella Walker, John C. and Benjamin F. Five children are the fruit of this marriage,—Elery P., born October 30, 1876; Fred L., born May 3, 1878; Archie O., born December 6, 1879; Gertrude E., born April 18, 1891; Carl M., born January 19, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are Republicans and take a keen interest in the measures for the advancement and progress of the country. They belong to the Christian church.

THOMAS W. NICKEL, M. D. It is with pleasure that we embrace this opportunity to relate some of the salient features in the career of Dr. Nickel. He has been one of the prime movers in establishing the first church and the first school in the town of Grangeville, as well as in other lines of endeavor for the general welfare and upbuilding.

Thomas W. Nickel was born in Lawrence county, Missouri, on November 4, 1851, the son of Thomas and Jane (Hall) Nickel, born in Pennsylvania in 1812, and died in 1896, and born in Ohio in 1819, and died in 1896, respectively. The father was a pioneer in Lawrence county in 1833. He had three brothers and two sons in the Civil war. He came of Irish ancestors, who settled early in Pennsylvania, and his father married Charlotte Diamond in Philadelphia. The mother of our subject came of Scotch and English ancestrage, her parents being Joshua and Jane Hall. Mr. Hall was a captain in the war of 1812. Our subject grew to manhood in Missouri, was well educated in the public schools and then completed an academic course. When eighteen he entered the St. Louis Medical College and took his degree in 1873. Following this he returned home and practiced medicine for ten years in Lawrence county, with the exception of one year in Linn county, Kansas. In 1884 he came west and located in Mt. Idaho and began the practice of medicine. In 1885 he came thence to Grangeville, and since that time he has been a warm and powerful advocate for the interests of this town and county. Dr. Nickel has constantly practiced since that date, is at the head of a fine patronage and is firmly established in the confidence and esteem of the people. In addition to his medical practice, the Doctor has given considerable attention to real estate and mining and now has a good farm and mining property. He was elected county physician in 1886 and has filled the office most of the time since, having also been coroner a large share of the time.

On July 28, 1870, in Missouri, Dr. Nickel married Miss Marcia A., daughter of M. W. and Safronia Spragins, born in Pickins county, Alabama, in 1822 and 1828, respectively. The father died in 1889 and the mother still lives in Missouri. Mrs. Nickel was born in Alabama on July 4, 1852, was well educated and spent some years in teaching. She has the following named brothers and sisters: Thomas, Robert, William, Juda, Jennie, Lillie and Effie. Dr. Nickel has brothers and sisters as named below: James A., deceased; John W., Robert S., Melvina, Sarah, Charlotte, Albina and Mary. Five children have been born to this household: Rosa Bunnell, Clyde, Nona, Lulu and Elma. Dr. Nickel is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and his wife are members of the Episcopalian church. Politically the doctor is a solid Democrat, and is an active participant in this realm. He has been state delegate several times.

JOHN DEASY is a stock raiser and rancher, living a mile and a half up John Day creek from Lucile. He is one of the substantial, enterprising and capable young men of the county and has made a good success of his labors in this section. He was born at Gold Hill, Story county, Nevada, in 1871, the son of Michael and Henrietta (Cole) Deasy. The father was a miner, born in Cork, Ireland, in 1835. He died in 1880. He went to California in 1851 and his father, Patrick Deasy, went there in 1849. The mother of our subject was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1844, and comes of a German family. After the death of her husband, in 1880, she married his cousin, Michael, and lived with him until his death, in 1902. Our subject remained in Nevada until eleven years old, where he received the greater part of his education, although he also attended school after coming to Idaho. He came to his present home with his mother and step-father, where he has since remained, engaged in mining and ranching. Mr. Deasy has four brothers living on adjoining ranches,—Michael, William, Harry and Thomas Jefferson. Mr. Deasy is a bachelor. Politically he is a Democrat, attends all caucuses, and is at present a member of the county central committee. The Catholic church claims him as one of her sons, in which faith he is an ardent believer. Michael, the older brother, was married in 1894 to Miss Nettie, a daughter of Benjamin and Agnes Delmage, to which union three children have been born and are at present living,—John, William and Jefferson. All are members of the Catholic church. Michael Deasy is the only Republican in the family. He also owns a ranch, and with his brothers is heavily interested in cattle. William, Harry, Thomas, who is a half-brother, and John are all bachelors. The old homestead is a well improved place and has an especially fine orchard, some of the trees being twenty years old and looking like forest trees. With the exception of Michael, the brothers all live with their mother. All are successful and prosperous in business and are held in high esteem.

HENRY J. ELFERS, Jr., is one of the leading stockmen of Idaho county. He lives near the Freedom postoffice, on John Day creek, where he owns a fine estate of four hundred and eighty acres, besides handling many acres of unsurveyed land. His skill, enterprise and integrity have amassed a good fortune for him and given him a first class standing in the county. He was born on John Day creek, Idaho, May 1, 1874, the son of Jordan Henry and Catherine (Beckroge) Elfers, natives of Germany. The father came to the United States in 1849, participated in the California gold excitement, came to Florence in 1862 and settled on John Day creek in 1863. He established a way station, started a dairy of two hundred cows, operated a mercantile establishment and a large hotel. He was very successful and possessed considerable property at the time of his death. He was assassinated by three Indians on June 14, 1877, at the outbreak of the Nez Perces war. The mother of our subject was married in Germany, Mr. Elfers returning thither from the United States to claim his bride. Our subject received a good academic education at Grangeville, and has spent his life within the precincts of Idaho county. He has been at the head of a large business since he was very young, and has displayed a sagacity and executive ability which are very commendable.

On March 8, 1898, Mr. Elfers married Miss Capitala Brock, daughter of Mrs. Mary Botsford, of Moscow. Mrs. Elfers was born in Des Moines county, Iowa, on September 16, 1872, and was engaged in educational work for eight years. She has one sister and one brother,—Belle E. Hinkle and Edward Brock. Mr. Elfers is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is an active and well informed Democrat. Mrs. Elfers is a Republican. They have two children,—Rosemary, born December 10, 1899; and Lois Catherine, born July 17, 1901, and died March 20, 1903.

JOSEPH SORROW. The subject of this article is one of the foremost mechanics of the county of Idaho, and is at present operating a shop for blacksmith and wood work in Grangeville, where he enjoys a good patronage.

Joseph Sorrow was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, on May 1, 1859, the son of Joseph and Ellen (Lorene) Sorrow, born in Canada in 1826 and 1831, respectively. The father, who was of French extraction, was a blacksmith and died in 1893. The mother was also of French ancestrage, and died in 1875. Our subject was educated and learned the blacksmith trade in his native land, going into the shop when he was thirteen. When twenty he went to Muskegon, Michigan, and two years later was in Deer Lake, that state, working at his trade. Later we see him in Hurley, Wisconsin, then at Ashland, as foreman of the mills, where he learned the millwright trade. In 1894 Mr. Sorrow went to North Carolina and followed that trade for years at Hub. Then we see him in the west, and his first venture was to build a dredge near Elk. Following the successful completion of that arduous enterprise he located in Grangeville, and barring one change of location of his shop he has steadily pursued his trade in the shop since. He is a fine workman and has the run of a large patronage, which is bringing him a good income.

In 1882, at Deer Lake, Mr. Sorrow contracted a marriage with Miss Sarah Maholland, born in Ireland, but who came to this country with her parents when quite young. To this union one child was born,—Josephine. Three years after their marriage Mrs. Sorrow was called away by death.

In 1897, while in North Carolina, at Hub, Mr. Sorrow was married to Miss Cora Rodgers, whose parents, Columbus and Julia (Marks) Rodgers, were born in North Carolina in 1841 and 1842, respectively. The father is of Irish extraction, and the mother of German and English. Mr. Rodgers was in Company D of a North Carolina regiment, and fought at Gettysburg and other large engagements. Mrs. Sorrow was born in Chatham county, North Carolina, in 1873, and has the following brothers and sisters: Frederick W. and Mary L. Mr. Sorrow has nine brothers and sisters,—Edward, Charles, Anna, Virginia, Mary, John, George, Effie and William. Three children have come to gladden this home,—William, born April 13, 1899; Esther, born July 24, 1900; and Joseph, born January 25, 1903. Mr. Sorrow is a Democrat and takes the interest of the good citizen in the affairs of state.

JOHN E. BEEDE, a heavy real estate owner and leading mining man of Harpster, is one of the substantial and enterprising citizens whose labors have done much toward the upbuilding of the county and whose standing is first-class. He was reared among the rugged New England hills and received a careful training from the public schools and the Friends school in Providence, Rhode Island. After leaving the training of this good institution, he took up teaching and made a success of this important work. Later he was allured from this by the opportunities in the mill business and learned the millwright trade, which he has followed in various localities of the United States since. In 1854 Mr. Beede bade farewell to parents, and the old home place in New Hampshire, and made his way to California, via the isthmus. He went from San Francisco to Virginia City, was in Grass Valley and other mining places and sought the precious metal from the sands of various camps. He went down to the Isthmus, was at Dry Town, Eldorado, and had charge of the Seaton property in Amador county and then also opened a store in 1868; during this time he had charge of the Havilah property. Later he was in San Jose, Bakersfield, and then journeyed to Prescott, Arizona, and settled for a time at Flagstaff, where he was justice of the peace for two years. In 1883 Mr. Beede came north to Idaho county and he has mined on the south fork of the Clearwater, at Florence, Elk and other important points. He had charge of the Bulletin for a year, worked on the Blue Dragon and put in the first saw mill near Clearwater. In 1891 Mr. Beede took his present homestead on the south fork, owns business property in Harpster and various other property, while also he has mines in the Elk district and in other places.

On January 11, 1860, Mr. Beede married Miss Eliza Stewart, in Lennox, Ohio. She died in 1874, leaving two children, William M., a physician, in Stockton, California; Ida, also in Stockton. Mr. Beede is a staunch Republican, and has been justice of the peace since 1890. It will be observed that from the isthmus to the British line Mr. Beede has mined and followed his trade with other occupations and has acquired a fund of experience, which added to his natural sagacity and erudition gained in early youth, makes him one of the leading men of this section and his integrity, uprightness and geniality have given him hosts of friends from every rank. To such brave, hardy and true men, whose courage was equal to the awful ordeal of surmounting the difficulties of entering this wild land, facing the dangers and enduring the hardships and privations, we owe a debt of gratitude which should never be allowed to lapse. It is with great pleasure that we have been enabled to grant this slight manifestation of appreciation to the worthy pioneer and place his name upon the abiding records of northern Idaho. From the green hills of New Hampshire came the enthusiastic lad, the strong young man seasoned by many an encounter with the stern realities of life in the west, who is now the sage of the Clearwater, whose labor and worth are appreciated by all and whose standing shows him a man of capabilities and true principle.

John E. Beede was born in Sandwich, Carroll county, New Hampshire, on February 2, 1834. His parents were Eli and Martha (Hoag) Beede, natives of New Hampshire and born in 1801 and 1807, respectively. The father was a descendant of the Pilgrims and died in 1892 after a long and useful life as a millwright. The mother came from the Quakers of early days and died in 1839.

WILLIAM PAULL, one of the prosperous farmers of Idaho county, who dwells five miles northeast from Cottonwood, was born in Pike county, Illinois, on January 27, 1848, the son of John C. and Nancy (Potter) Paull. The father was born December 10, 1816, at Wheeling, West Virginia, learned the blacksmith trade and came to Illinois in 1838, wrought at his trade and farmed. In 1865 he went to Kansas and lived in various portions of that state until 1875, when his death occurred in Montgomery county. The mother was born on February 22, 1823, in Pennsylvania, came with her parents to Illinois, where she married in 1839, her death occurring in March, 1862. Our subject was educated in Illinois and in 1864 enlisted in Company I, Eighteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at Mt. Sterling, and was mustered out in the fall of 1865, at Pine Bluff, Arkansas. Following the war, Mr. Paull went to Kansas, Wyoming and the far west and freighted. In 1870 he took land in Osage reserve, Kansas, later was in Texas, then in Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, also mined in Nevada and Silver City, Idaho. In the fall of 1876 he was in the Black Hills, and later returned to Kansas and farmed until 1880. Then Mr. Paull did railroading and freighting in Colorado, New Mexico, Idaho and various other places until 1885, when we see him in the Yakima country, Washington. In 1889 he came to Idaho county and located on his present place, where he has a quarter section and does general farming and stock raising. He handles about two hundred head of cattle and hogs and is prosperous. He has a new eight-room house and other improvements commensurate therewith. Mr. Paull has five brothers and sisters,—Mary A. Toland, Robert, Martha E., Nancy M. Powell and John F.

JOHN E. BEEDE.

On March 12, 1879, Mr. Paull married Miss Emma, daughter of Ezekiel and Priscilla G. (Sawyer) Lamb. Mr. Lamb was born October 11, 1820, in Stockbridge, Vermont, was married and lived there until 1854. Then he lived four years in DeKalb and also Douglas counties, Illinois, thence going to Coffey county, where he lived two years. In 1864 he went to Bourbon county, Kansas, where he farmed five years. The year 1869 found him in Montgomery county, where he was a doctor and farmer. Thence to Eugene, Oregon, and later went to Nampa, Idaho, where he farmed until his death, April 20, 1890. The mother of Mrs. Paull was born November 27, 1825, in Stockbridge, Vermont, married June 1, 1842, and died in 1896. Mrs. Paull was born February 11, 1860, in Douglas county, Illinois; she has six brothers and sisters,—Elroy, Loraett Smith, Andrew, Romaine, Elsworth D. and Charles. Eight children have been the fruit of this union,—Clarence, born February 12, 1880, and died February 4, 1881; Claudius, born January 20, 1882; Grace, born March 13, 1884, and died November 8, 1897; Lucretia, Stella, born June 27, 1889; Era born November 9, 1891; Madge, born June 6, 1895; Viola, born October 31, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Paull are socialists and he is a member of the Maccabees.

ELLSWORTH D. LAMB has made a good success in Idaho county in the dual occupations of general farming and raising stock. He has also achieved a good reputation as a skillful threshing man and now owns an interest in a first class outfit. He was born on December 12, 1862, in Douglas county, Illinois, the son of Ezekiel B. and Priscilla G. (Sawyer) Lamb, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. Our subject was reared and educated in Kansas and remained with his parents until eighteen. He left Kansas in 1882, came through Wyoming, southern Idaho and on to North Yakima, Washington, where he farmed for some time, until about 1887. Next we see him in Walla Walla, and in 1889 he made his way to Camas prairie and took a quarter section, where he now lives, three and one-half miles north from Cottonwood, since which time he has devoted himself to its cultivation and improvement and to raising stock. In 1898 he took up the added industry of threshing, as mentioned above, and, like his other endeavors, has made a good success of it. He has about one hundred and fifty head of stock and also handles sufficient horses for his various occupations. Mr. Lamb has good buildings on his farm and other improvements in proportion. His brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this work.

The marriage of Mr. Lamb and Miss Rebecca E., daughter of Morgan and Eliza A. (Powell) Williams, was celebrated on July 3, 1892. Mr. Williams was born in Vermillion county, Indiana, on December 31, 1826, his parents being Virginians. In 1860 he went to Arkansas, then to Illinois and in 1873 he removed to Umpqua valley, Oregon, where he bought land and farmed. In 1883 he came to Camas prairie, and here died on February 6, 1901, leaving an estate of three hundred and sixty acres. Mrs. Williams was born June 10, 1826, in Montgomery county, Indiana, married November 1, 1849, and now lives in Idaho county, Idaho. Mrs. Lamb was born in Champagne county, Illinois, on June 3, 1864, and has four brothers and sisters,—Mary Pilkington, Lemuel, William A. and Sarah Gorrell. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lamb, —Arthur, born August 18, 1894; Cressie, born December 5, 1896; Bascom, born May 1, 1898; Gladys, born December 6, 1899. Mr. Lamb and his wife are members of the socialist party and he belongs to the M. W. A.

ERASTUS W. OLIVER is conceded to be one of the best all round business men in the northern part of the state, and the continued success that has been his for years in all lines of enterprise demonstrates this fact, while as a man of worth and integrity he stands high among all.

Erastus W. Oliver was born in Putnam county, Ohio, on February 2, 1841, the son of Richard and Jane (Harden) Oliver, natives of Ohio and born in 1805 and 1812, respectively. The father came from pioneers of Virginia, of Scotch extraction, and he was a pioneer himself. He died on July 5, 1850. The mother of our subject died in 1857. Her ancestors also came from Virginia, and were of Scotch extraction. Our subject grew up in Ohio and all the schooling of his boyhood days could be summed up in one year. Upon arriving at manhood's estate he made a study of everything that came before him, and the result is that he is an exceptionaly well informed and thoroughly practical man. His first job was carrying water on the Wabash railroad when he was twelve, and then commenced his independent career. From that day to this, while taking up anything and everything that came to his hand, Mr. Oliver has been successful, and is now handling stock and real estate in a brokerage business, does farming, raises stock, deals in hay and grain, and is interested in mining. When nineteen he was contracting ties for the railroad in Ohio, later did the same business in Missouri and in 1871 came to Umatilla county, Oregon, and commenced farming and raising stock. He made a success of it, although he knew nothing of the business. In 1880 he went to Whitman county, Washington, where he farmed and dealt in stock on a large scale, and here he reaped a rich reward for his skill and industry.

In 1892 he sold some of his property and came to Grangeville, which he has made his home since.

In 1861 Mr. Oliver married Miss Rebecca, daughter of John and Magdalene (Nittle) Stalters, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Oliver was born in Ohio on January 5, 1842, and has three brothers,—George, John and Ezra. John was in Andersonville prison; and Ezra was also in the war. Mr. Oliver had eight brothers; but two are living,—Nicholas B. and Reuben J. Abraham H. was in the war and received a wound in the battle of Sandpoint. Alexander U. was also in the Civil war; both are deceased. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Oliver,—Abraham N., in Whitman county; John F., Andrew J., Bert H., Abbie J. and Holsclow, all in Idaho county; Olive Haynes, in Pendleton. Mr. Oliver is a blue lodge Mason, and also belongs to the Eastern Star lodge. He is a stanch Republican and has been instrumental in electing numerous of his friends to office, but never would allow his name to be put up for nomination. He is frequently in the state convention, and last year helped to nominate Governor Morrison and Supreme Judge Alchie. Mr. Oliver is one of the heavy taxpayers of the county and is a man of reliability and excellent standing.

PETER BROCKENOUR resides at the present time in Lucile, Idaho, but he has been successfully engaged in business in various places in the county and is well known, always manifesting good business ability and substantial qualities. He was born in Germany on June 1, 1849, the son of George P. and Gertrude (Huger) Brockenour, born in Germany, where also they died in 1864 and in June, 1902, respectively. Our subject came to the United States when nine, direct to a brother in Sacramento, California. He grew to manhood with this brother, Joseph, and when nineteen went to Colusa county and farmed for ten years. In the fall of 1878 Mr. Brockenour came to Mt. Idaho and worked in a livery stable for John McPherson, later buying an interest in the business. After the death of Mr. McPherson he conducted the business in connection with Mrs. McPherson for fourteen years. He had also taken land and purchased more, and successfully managed this property and raised cattle and horses. In 1892 he went to American creek and, in partnership with James Buchanan, Peter Beemer and Joe Hinnelspak, he mined for some time. Two years later he left that district and mined in the Lake creek country for four years. He was favored with good success in both of these ventures, and in 1898 came to Grangeville, which was his headquarters for four years. In the fall of 1902 Mr. Brockenour removed to the mining town of Lucile, where he has continued since.

Mr. Brockenour has the following named brothers and sisters: Joseph, in California; Valentine, a wealthy man in Sacramento; Eva, in Portland; Fredericka and Katherina, both in California; Johanna, in Silver City, Nevada. Mr. Brockenour is a member of the I. O. O. F. and Redmen. In politics he is a Democrat and takes an active interest in the campaigns, being always at the conventions and caucuses.

GEORGE S. ALKIRE is a well known miner, stock raiser and orchardist dwelling two and a half miles north of Lucile. His genial and manly way, his uprightness, integrity and generosity have commended him to all who know him, and his success in a business way speaks for itself. In the two street fairs recently held at Grangeville his quarter section farm captured several premiums on fruits and vegetables in competition with the entire county. Besides this farm, he owns two placer mines, the "Mountain Queen" and "Jack Pot,' and one quartz group, the "North Star," all of which are very promising.

His father, George Alkire, was a native of Illinois, where he was born in 1805. After a long and successful career as a farmer he passed into the life beyond, in February, 1888. He was a schoolmate of Abraham Lincoln at Springfield, Illinois. Crossing the plains in 1850, he settled in Lane county, Oregon, where he took up a donation claim and spent the remainder of his days. In his early manhood he was a Christian minister in Illinois. George's mother was Jaily A. Grant, born in 1812. She died in 1899, after a long useful life. Our subject was six months old when he crossed the plains. He was reared in Lane county and when eighteen went to do for himself. He rode the range in eastern Oregon and in 1879 went to Idaho, taking a ranch in Latah county. Two years later we find him riding the range in Wyoming, whence he came to Idaho and followed the same occupation. In 1895 he quit the range and took up mining. The following year he secured his present ranch and has combined mining and ranching since.

At Grangeville, in July, 1883, Mr. Alkire married Miss Anna B., daughter of David and Elva Cully. Mrs. Alkire was born in Evansville, Indiana, in 1864, and has two brothers and two sisters,—LeRoy, Charles, Laura Roberts and Emma McFadden. Mr. Alkire has the following brothers and sisters: John, William, Isaac, Henry, Robert and Ella Gilbreth. Four children have been born to this marriage,—Elva Kieling, George L., Emma J. and Joshua H. Mr. Alkire is an active and well informed Republican, always in the lead, and a prominent man in his party. Mr. Alkire has always been a very great champion of the cause of education and was the moving spirit in forming this present district; he, himself, got out the logs, furnished the hardware and windows and assisted to build the rude log schoolhouse on John Day creek. He is an enterprising citizen, charitable to his fellow men, upright and well respected.

LEWIS M. SIMPSON was born in Cooper county, Missouri, on February 18, 1843, the son of Francis and Mary A. (Corrum) Simpson. The father was born March 4, 1803, in Clark county, Kentucky, came to Missouri and learned the carpenter's trade. On April 9, 1850, he left that state for the Willamette valley, coming overland with ox teams. He built a saw mill at Hillsboro, then farmed in Linn county, and in 1871 went to Lassen county, California, and there died in April, 1873. The mother was born in Cooper county, Missouri, in March, 1820, of pioneer parents. Later they took the land where Leavenworth, Kansas, now stands. Her father was a veteran of the war of 1812. She now lives at Pomeroy, Washington. Our subject was brought up in the Willamette valley and educated there. When seventeen, in 1861, he came to Orofino, mining there and in Pierce, Elk, Florence and Boise basins off and on for the ensuing five years. Then he bought land in Linn county, Oregon, and farmed. In October, 1871, he went to Lassen county, California, and two years later returned to Linn county, bought sheep and came to Wasco county. He followed that industry for some time, and was finally constrained to remove to the vicinity of Athena, where he bought land; later he was in Adams, serving acceptably as postmaster, also doing a general merchandise business. In 1892 he sold out and came to Camas prairie. He bought his present farm of one quarter section two miles north from Cottonwood, and here has bestowed his labors in farming and raising stock. He handles about one hundred head annually and produces good crops. Mr. Simpson has nine brothers and sisters,—George F., James W., Joseph H., Alford, Mary E. Smith, Thomas B., Sarah Newsome, Benjamin L., Riley H. Mr. Newsome and his brother, John, discovered the Newsome creek diggings.

On March 13, 1867, Mr. Simpson married Miss Emma K., daughter of James and Ruth A. (Boggs) Cochran. Mr. Cochran was born in Kentucky in 1818, came to the Willamette valley in 1850 and farmed there until his death, on August 25, 1863. Mrs. Cochran was born in Missouri on July 2, 1828, and came with her father to Oregon in 1865. She now lives in Woodburn, Oregon. Mrs. Simpson was born on February 29, 1852, in Linn county, Oregon, and has four brothers and sisters,—Andrew J., Pearn A., George W., Elizabeth Settlemiers, deceased. Eight children have been born to this union,—James F., born February 16, 1868; Sarah M. Correy, born August 24, 1869; Lewis M., born April 6, 1871; Johanna Miller, born November 15, 1872, and died September 6, 1901; Emma E. Winder, born April 22, 1875; John L., born December 1, 1877; Nora E., born June 5, 1883; Everett C., born May 29, 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson are well informed Democrats, and she is a member of the Baptist church.

DAVID T. MILLS is one of the business men of Grangeville, being now engaged in handling furniture and feed. He has manifested good ability and integrity since coming here, and has met with deserved success in his efforts.

David T. Mills was born in Adair county, Kentucky, on December 19, 1843, the son of Pendleton B. and Eliza (Tinsley) Mills. The father, who served in the Civil war, was a farmer and stockman, born in Virginia in 1812, and died in 1892. The mother was of English extraction and died when our subject was eight years old. When David T. was an infant the family went to Jefferson county, Iowa, and remained for five years. Then they returned to the Kentucky home and remained for ten years. Our subject was educated in the public schools and early went to do for himself. For a time after his mother's death he lived with with his grandfather, Edward Mills. Later we see him in Kansas City, and in 1860 he crossed the plains to Pike's Peak and soon went on to California. He settled first in Shasta county, where he mined and prospected for a time and then gave his attention to farming until 1887, in which year he came to Walla Walla. Ten years were spent there in farming, and in 1897 we see Mr. Mills in Grangeville and he soon took up his present business. In addition to the items mentioned, he gives attention also to handling second-hand goods, and has done well. Mr. Mills also owns a farm near town. He has the following brothers and sisters: George, Edward, Mary J. Williams and Eliza A.

At Grangeville, in April, 1906, Mr. Mills married Mrs. Mary E. Nickson, daughter of Beal and Kiziah (Harriett) Kelly. The father was a pioneer in Illinois and died in 1849. He was a native of Kentucky. His widow was born in Pennsylvania and died in 1857. She was a pioneer in Illinois and spent considerable time in teaching. Mr. Mills has the following named children by a former marriage: Edward C., in Walla Walla; Harold E., in Spokane; Lora Rimmel, in Buffalo Hump. He is a Mason, while he and his wife are members of the Christian church. In political matters Mr. Mills is Republican, but never strives for personal preferment. Mrs. Mills was born in Fayette county, Illinois, on March 17, 1845. She was married to David Nickson in Illinois on April 27, 1864. They came west to Oregon in 1869 and later to Idaho. Mr. Nickson was a farmer and died in November, 1890. Six children were born to that marriage, named as follows: William L., Ida M., John A., deceased, Emma I., deceased, Celia E., deceased, Clarence D., married on June 3, 1900.

H. S. ARBOGAST, the stirring and skillful contractor whose labors in Grangeville for more than a decade have placed him among the successful business men of the county, is entitled to representation in the history of his county, as he has always labored for its upbuilding and improvement. He is a man of uprightness and integrity and receives the respect of all.

H. S. Arbogast was born in Pendleton county, West Virginia, on March 18, 1847, being the son of Jesse and Susan (Stoner) Arbogast. The father was born in the same place as his son, the year being 1812. He was a prominent man and active in business and politics. He filled all the county offices and was a pioneer in McDonough county, Illinois, in 1853. His death occurred in 1873. The mother was born in Maryland in 1822, and died in 1892. She came of German extraction. Her brothers were John, a captain in an Ohio regiment, and Perry, who also served in the Civil war. When our subject was five the family went to McDonough county, and there he received a good education, completing the same in Brant college at his graduation from that institution. On February 9, 1864, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois. He was veteranized in the fall in Company C, One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and served until January 26, 1866, being in the rear guard of the famous march to the sea. Following the war, Mr. Arbogast returned to his Illinois home and did carpentering there and in adjacent places until 1882. Then he came to Chariton, Iowa, and did building on the railroad and acted as conductor on the C. B. & Q. for a number of years, and then came, in 1886, a trip to Pendleton, the coast towns and finally to Spokane, where he worked for one mill company for some time. In 1891 Mr. Arbogast came to Grangeville and started in carpentering, contracting and general building, and since that time he has continued here with success that merit should win.

On January 11, 1870, in Illinois, Mr. Arbogast married Miss Monetta, daughter of G. W. and Verlinda (Ratdekin) Worden, the father a native of New York and now a merchant in Iowa Creek, Illinois, while the mother was born and raised in Illinois. Mrs. Arbogast was born in 1853 at Swan Creek, Illinois, and has the following brothers and sisters: Joseph, Henry, Lizzie, Rosa and Verlinda. Mr. Arbogast has the following named brothers and sisters: Peter, Douglass, Marion, Sophia, Eliza, Jane, Sarah, Cynthia and Francis. Three children here been born to this couple, —Marion S., in Coeur d'Alene; Ira E. and Donald E., in school. Mr. Arbogast is a Mason and commander of the Hancock post of the G. A. R., in Grangeville. He is an active Republican and takes a keen interest in affairs of import, while he wields a good influence.

EBEN W. BUTCHER is an industrious and skillful miner and prospector living two miles north of Lucile, and is occupied in delving for the hidden treasures. He was born in Macomb, Illinois, on October 1, 1869, being the son of James M. and Lydia (Munson) Butcher. The father was born in Boone county, Indiana, in 1850. He came west to Moscow in 1886, and died the following year. The mother of our subject was born in Illinois in 1847 and is now living in Monmouth, that state. The family came to Carroll county, Missouri, when our subject was eight years old, and in that place he received his education and labored on the farm with his father until he grew to manhood. Then, in 1886, they came to Moscow. In that city he learned the trade of the butcher and operated both there and at Oakesdale, Washington. When twenty he went to California and mined for six years in the placers. Then he came to Idaho in 1897, going first to Elk City, where he located some claims. Two years later he came to the Bluejacket, on the Snake, and Salmon rivers, and in December, 1899, he came to his present place. He bought here the Zebra and the Dandy, both good placer mines. Since then he has been working these mines with good success. Mr. Butcher has four sisters,—Della, Lela, Ola and Millie. Mr. Butcher is a good Democrat.

HIRAM W. STEVENSON resides on his fine estate on the Salmon and Snake rivers, and here he has followed stock raising for a good many years and has met with the success that enterprise, skill and close attention to business deserves, and is now classed with the substantial and heavy property owners of the county. He was born in Hopkins county, Kentucky, in 1838, the son of Samuel L. and Elizabeth (Herron) Stevenson, born in Virginia in 1805 and 1809, and died in 1864 and 1888, respectively. They came to Douglas county, Oregon, in 1853, landing there in September, 1853, and at once took land and bought land and donated five hundred dollars to found the Wilbur academy. He never dabbled in politics, but was always in the van in any public improvement. Crossing the plains consumed six months, and being a strong train they were enabled to beat off the Indians, who were hostile. The parents came from old Virginia families, and the mother was of German extraction. Our subject was reared in Douglas county and received a good education from Wilbur academy. He remembers distinctly hearing General Lane's battle with the Indians on the day they landed in Oregon. In the spring of 1863 Mr. Stevenson came to the Elk and Boise mines and returned the next year, on account of the death of his father, which was caused by a horse. He and his brother, George H., took charge of the estate, which was large, and he remained there until 1887. Then he came to the Salmon river country to recover his health, being attacked with the asthma in the Willamette valley. He located on his present place and at once started to raise cattle and horses. He continued in this line with success until the present, enlarging and increasing steadily.

In 1864, in Douglas county, Mr. Stevenson married Miss Miranda L., daughter of John and Malinda (Dugan) Yokum, natives of Virginia. They crossed the plains in 1849 and settled in the Willamette valley, and both are now deceased. The father was a brother of General Yokum. Mrs. Stevenson was born in Missouri in 1845, and has the following brothers and sisters: Henry, James, Ruby Burgess, Jacob, Newton, Calvin. Mr. Stevenson has eight brothers and sisters,—Elenor, Lane, George, Nancy Party, Mary Ruggles, Lizzie Whitelsay, Macey Carland, Frannie Price, Lydia, deceased. Two children have been born to this union,—James R. and Samuel, both stockmen on the Salmon. Mr. Stevenson is a Democrat of the old type and Jeffersonian doctrine. While he has never sought preferment, he has frequently been offered position, but constantly refuses.

GEORGE R. GETTY, who dwells about four miles north from Cottonwood, is one of the industrious farmers and stockmen of Idaho county, and it is with pleasure that we accord him a representation in the work which holds the history of his county. He was born in Walworth county, Wisconsin, on June 20, 1860, the son of Lewis B. and Helen M. (Brown) Getty. The father was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, on January 2, 1824, came to Wisconsin in 1846, married in 1852, went back to Pennsylvania, in 1864 returned to Wisconsin, and in 1876 he came thence to Dayton, Washington. In 1888 he went to Whitman county, and 1896 found him in Nez Perces county, where he died November 19, 1902. The mother of our subject was born in New York state February 4, 1836, and now lives in Idaho county. Our subject was educated in Wisconsin and then came, when sixteen, with the family to Dayton, and remained with his parents until he was eighteen years old. When twenty-one he visited Wisconsin, returning to Washington and the Coeur d'Alene country in 1883. In 1884 he located a quarter and bought as much more, which was the scene of his labors until 1896, when he came to his present place. He has one hundred and fifty acres, good buildings, one hundred and fifty head of stock and owns part of a threshing outfit. Mr. Getty has one brother,—Andrew G., in Columbus county, Washington.

On October 25, 1885, Mr. Getty married Miss Emma S., daughter of Charles and Mary (Benton) Abraham. Mr. Abraham was born in London, England, in 1827, came to the United States when a young man, followed his trade of tailoring and in 1860 came overland to Oregon. In 1862 he was in Walla Walla and later took land in Columbus county, where he dwells now. The mother was born in Michigan in 1833, crossed the plains, married in Oregon and died December 24, 1882. Mrs. Getty was born in Columbia county, Washington, October 6, 1866, and has four brothers,—Thomas C., James E., Grant and Ray D. Seven children are the fruit of this marriage,—Marlow L., born October 27, 1886; Philip E., born April 22, 1888; Virginia M., born November 21, 1889; Helen M., born December 8, 1892; Mary E., born October 9, 1894; Lucy V., born December 10, 1896; Martha, born May 9, 1902. Mr. Getty and his wife are Democrats of the Jeffersonian type and he is also a member of the Maccabees.

PATRICK H. LEACH. Although the subject of this article has not been in Idaho county as long as some of the worthy pioneers who opened it up, still his excellent labors during the time of his domicile here have resulted in such good development and improvement that he is entitled to representation among those who are the substantial citizens of northern Idaho and who have made the country what it is now. He was born in Joliet, Illinois, on March 31, 1867, and his parents now dwell in that city. He grew to manhood and was educated in his native place, and when eighteen went to do for himself in the whirl of the world's business. He traveled all through Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, and in 1890 we find him in Denver and soon in the mining camps of Colorado, as Leadville, Creed, and so forth. In 1882 he went to Cripple Creek and wrought there until the time of the Buffalo Hump excitement, when he came with a pack train to Idaho and at once went into that well known camp and soon had discovered a fine property. He and his partners, John McLean and E. T. Peachey, located a good group and at once began development work, and they have showed up fine values and a good body of ore. In September, 1902, they incorporated it under the name of the Acacia B. Mining & Milling Company, and it is being developed in a more extensive manner.

Mr. Leach is a member of the Catholic church, and in political matters he reserves for his own decision all questions brought forward, without being tied by any party bands. He is an independent thinker and a man of intelligence.

GEORGE W. SLAYTON, who dwells three miles east from Cottonwood, is one of the intelligent and prosperous farmers of the county and has made a standing and reputation for himself which are enviable.

George W. Slayton was born in Washington county, Oregon, on September 26, 1865, the son of Samuel R. and Eliza J. (Savery) Slayton. The father was born in Woodstock, Vermont, on August 27, 1830, received a good education, taught school and in 1852 crossed the plains with ox teams. He mined in California, went to Oregon in 1852, served in the Rogue river war, came to the Salmon in 1862 and returned the same year to Oregon. Later we see him in Crook county, where he still lives, being one of the heavy land owners and stockmen. The mother of our subject was born on July 22, 1841, in Marshall county, Mississippi. She dwelt in Council Bluffs, Iowa, with her parents, crossed the plains and was married in Oregon on July 1, 1858. She, with her husband, was crossing the Santiam pass when the horses became frightened at a falling tree and backed the carriage over a steep grade into the Santiam river. She was badly crushed, necessitating the amputation of one limb, from which she never recovered. Her demise occurred on October 31, 1901, and her remains rest in Lone Fir cemetery, Portland. Our subject was reared mostly in Crook county, received a first class education in the common schools and the agricultural college at Corvallis. He taught until 1890, mostly in Crook county, and held the superintendency of schools of that county. He went to Ann Arbor and entered the medical department of that institution, but was deterred from completing the course by ill health. Returning to Crook county, he continued to teach there, as well as in Idaho and Texas. In July, 1895, Mr. Slayton went to the Transvaal, South Africa, and operated diamond drills, having been a steam engineer previously. On account of the approaching war there, he returned to this country in 1898, and in the fall of the same year he came to his present location, which he purchased. Since then Mr. Slayton has been engaged here with one exception, when he operated a diamond drill in Stevens county, Washington. Mr. Slayton owns one hundred and forty acres of land, handles stock and is prosperous. He also has a valuable estate in Crooks county. Mr. Slayton has the following brothers and sisters: Edgar T., Robert L., Ada C. Howard, Jennie V. U'Ren and Mabel E. Engs.

On March 19, 1899, Mr. Slayton married Miss Mary E., daughter of Gamaliel G. and Susan (Wood) Newton. Mr. Newton was born in Ohio on November 7, 1839, crossed the plains with his parents in 1848, and now lives in Benton county. His wife was born in Iowa on September 11, 1840, and now lives in Benton county. She crossed the plains by ox teams in 1853. Mrs. Slayton was born October 4, 1866, in Corvallis, Oregon, graduated from the Corvallis college in 1888 and then devoted a number of years to teaching. She has the following brothers and sisters: Diana McCoy, Margaret Cooper, Jennie, Alva, Emory, Cora. One child, Ruth, was born to this couple, January 8, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Slayton are Democrats, and he is a member of the I. O. O. F.,' while both belong to the Rebekahs.

It is of note that the family of Slayton has been prominent in this country for generations and seven of them were in the Revolution and sixty-one were in the Rebellion. The family dates back in unbroken record to Captain Thomas Slayton, born in England in 1682.

HARRY SOUTHARD is the postmaster at Lucile and is a good, substantial citizen and upright man. He has manifested excellent enterprise and energy in his efforts in this locality and is also managing a general mercandise establishment at Lucile. He was born at Berlin, Greenlake county, Wisconsin, on May 21, 1850, being the son of Edward and Martha E. (Wallbridge) Southard. The father was a lumberman. He was born in New York on June 22, 1818, and died in 1899. He served in Company G, Fifth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, for three years in the Civil war, participating in the battles of Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, Yorktown and others. The mother of our subject was born in New York in September, 1819, and died in 1876. Her father was a patriot in the war of 1812. Our subject came with his parents to Dubuque, Iowa, and was educated there and in Wisconsin. At the early age of fifteen he stepped from the parental roof onto the arena of life's battle. For a short time he lived in Iowa and Minnesota, and in 1872 went to Placer county, California, where he mined and farmed. Three years later he was one of a party of twenty-nine which went into the Black Hills. They were promptly removed by Captain Pollock and paroled. Then he went to British Columbia and mined for seven years, after which he went to Nebraska and visited his father. In 1885 he returned to Mendocino county, California, and operated an engine. In 1891 he was in Sacramento valley, whence he went to Portland, remaining there until 1897. The last date marks his advent into Idaho, and he prospected in Warren, Pierce City and other mining sections until February 28, 1901, when he was appointed postmaster at Lucile. He had been the moving spirit in securing this office and has shown marked enterprise in many ways.

Mr. Southard has the following brothers and sisters: Lovilla Collinson, Lillie, Fred and Frank. Mr. Southard is a member of the I. O. O. F., and in the political realm is allied with the Republican party, being an active and potent factor during each campaign. In addition to handling his mercantile establishment and postoffice, Mr. Southard devotes much time to his mining interests.

J. B. CHAMBERLAIN, who is one of the earliest pioneers in this section of Idaho, is one of the leading men of northern Idaho and is well acquainted with the country from the time the first white men settled here until the present, having also taken a leading part in its development and progress. He is a man of fine capabilities, dominated by sagacity and integrity and possessed of that executive force and keen discrimination that are so indispensible for one in the prominent and leading position that he has held.

J. B. Chamberlain was born in North Fredericksburg, Canada, on August 24, 1833, the son of John and Ann (Dettor) Chamberlain. The father was a prominent man in his section and died in 1869. His ancestors were natives of Vermont and removed to Canada in an early day. Our subject received his education in his native place, grew to manhood there and in 1862 bade the familiar scenes farewell and journeyed to British Columbia to Caribou gold fields. He came to Lewiston shortly afterward, and so on to Warren, which was so named from James Warren, the discoverer of the gold there. He took up mining and then opened a butcher shop and in this industry he continued for eleven years. It was his fortune then to be elected auditor and recorder of Idaho county, his name appearing on the Republican ticket. This occurred in the fall of 1880, and he took his seat in 1881. It was a signal victory for Mr. Chamberlain, as the county was strongly Democratic. He was re-elected in 1882. Following this service, he went to Whitebird and engaged in the stock industry and since that time has continued steadily in the same business. Mr. Chamberlain has also been interested in mines and real estate. In 1885 he went back to Warren and continued there for ten years, still following his stock business with his butcher shop. Again he was chosen to fill a public office, this time serving as county commissioner for two terms, which also was unprecedented for a Republican.

Mr. Chamberlain has two brothers,—S. G. and John D. He is a member of the Masonic order. In political matters he is an active and influential man and always adheres to the Republican policy. In early days Mr. Chamberlain taught school at the Aram school house before Grangeville was founded.

Mr. Chamberlain was at Grangeville when the war occurred, and in reference to it he states that it was caused by some stockmen petitioning to have the government transfer the Indians to the reservation.

This being attempted, the savages broke out and murdered many of those who had signed the petition. Mr. Chamberlain refused to sign the petition, and he says that many of those who refused to sign it were warned of the impending outbreak. Those signing the petition claimed that the Indians were troubling their stock and killing them. The Indians had been holding dances and councils at Tolo lake and on June 13 they killed Richard Divine and took his gun, then dispatched Henry Elfers and John Beckridge. This was in the morning, and as they came down the Salmon they killed William Osborne, then Henry Mason and a Frenchman named Francois. In the evening they killed Mr. Samuel Benedict, having wounded him in the morning. They supposed they had killed him in the morning, but only shot him through the legs. He crawled to the house and warned his wife and begged her to go and hide, but she bravely remained with him until the savages came in the evening, and she ran away into the brush with her two little children, and for four days was without food. Mr. Benedict crawled out of the house into the yard when he heard the Indians coming, and there they despatched him. Mr. Chamberlain has passed through all the dangers and hardships and deprivations of the frontier life, has nobly done his part and is now one of the substantial men of the county, and enjoys in full measure the confidence, esteem and good will of all the people.

WILLIAM G. BROWN is the efficient and faithful marshal of Grangeville at the present time. He is a man of excellent abilities in a number of lines, being especially endowed with mechanical talents and having also achieved a good success in farming and raising stock. He was born in Brownstown, Green county, Wisconsin, on December 25, 1868, the son of Charles F. and Mary (Loomis) Brown, natives of Wisconsin. The father who was born in 1846, is a millman and miner. His parents were pioneers in Wisconsin and he came to California in the seventies and to Camas prairie in 1881. The mother died in 1872, aged twenty-six. Our subject grew to young manhood in his native state, gained a good common schooling and it early developed that he was naturally endowed with the mechanical ability possessed by his father and his grandfather before him. When eighteen he came west to join his father in Idaho county and worked on the farm, then did butchering. Three years later he was in the Dixie mines, then down on the Salmon in different mines and then took up stock raising with mining. This continued until 1895, when he came to Grangeville and engaged in carpentering. He spent some time also with his father in the saw mill, and was made night watchman; in the spring of 1902 he was made town marshal.

At Grangeville, on September 25, 1892, Mr. Brown married Miss Addie, daughter of Samuel and Isabelle (Kelley) Benedict. The father was born at Shannonville, Ontario, and came to Idaho in 1862. He was in the early camps and operated a store in Whitebird in 1868. Mrs. Benedict was born at Staten Island, New York, on November 25, 1848. Mr. Benedict was at Whitebird during the time of the Indian war in 1877 and met his death at the hands of the savages. The mother was captured by the redskins. Mrs. Brown was born on Slate creek, in this county, in 1875, and was eighteen months of age when the massacre occurred, and she was with her mother in hiding four days and four nights in the bushes without shelter. She has the following brothers and sisters: Grant, Frankie Schisler, and four half brothers and half sisters,—Emily, Edward, Alice, Robbie. Mr. Brown has two sisters,—Ada Keller and Mary J. Markham. Four children have been born to them,—Hazel, Ralph, Francis and Dale. Mr. Brown is a member of the W. O. W., and the K. P. Mrs. Brown is a Catholic. Mr. Brown owns town property and in political alliances he is an active Republican.

LEVI SHARP is one of the well known and good citizens of Idaho county. He operates a hotel at Lucile and also does considerable mining. He was born in Delaware, on September 11, 1838, being the son of John T. and Elizabeth (Murphy) Sharp, both natives of Delaware. The father was of Scotch parentage, was born in 1815 and died in 1891. The mother died when our subject was very young. Levi was reared in Ohio where he received his education and worked with his father. When eighteen he went to Iowa and one year later to Linn county, Kansas. On October 12, 1861, Levi Sharp enlisted in Company H, Seventh Kansas Cavalry. He was honorably discharged on December 31, 1863. He reenlisted January 1, 1864, in the same company and was discharged September 3, 1865, after a long and faithful service in defense of the Stars and Stripes. He fought at Corinth, Tupolo, Mississippi, was under Grant at Holly Springs and participated in much hot skirmishing. At the close of the war he returned to Kansas where he remained until 1879. Then came a journey to Leadville, Colorado, and at Eagle River we find him later operating a store. He was in Red Cliff, at Glenwood Springs and at Aspen, following various occupations and mining. In the last city he was police magistrate for two years. In 1898 Mr. Sharp traveled with his wife to various localities until June 2, 1899, when they settled in their present location. Sometime was spent prospecting and mining, then the present hotel was built and since then he has devoted himself to conducting it and to mining.

At Leadville, Colorado, on August 15, 1880, Mr. Sharp married Miss Margaret Hollesten, daughter of John H., and Tabitha (Koger) Orr, natives of Lancastershire, England, and Kentucky. The father was born in 1813, came to California in 1849, died in 1895. Mrs. Sharp was born in Davis county, Missouri, December 14, 1857, and has the following brothers and sisters: John S., Thomas L., Robert J., Jane, Mary, Catherine, Letticia, Hester. Mr. Sharp has five sisters: Mary, Kittie, Emma, Fanny, Safrona. Mr. Sharp is a Democrat and deputy mineral recorder. He is a member of the G. A. R. and a man of first class standing.

THOMAS B. GALLAWAY, who has made a commendable success in his endeavors in Idaho county, now dwells four miles northeast of Whitebird upon an estate of three hundred and twenty acres. He has improved his land in first-class shape and in addition to general farming, raises considerable stock. Thomas B. Gallaway was born in Conway county, Arkansas, on February 12, 1866, being the son of George M. and Louisa T. Gallaway. When a child he was taken with the family to Searcy county, Arkansas, and in 1875 they crossed the plains by team. On account of the hostility of the savages, constant guard duty was required but they arrived at Jackson county in safety. In 1876 they went to Yakima county, Washington, and two years later to the Palouse country. In 1883 they came to Whitebird and our subject toiled with his father until 1892, when he inaugurated independent action. This was a difficult time to start in life owing to the panic which then had just begun to sweep the country. However, young Gallaway was equal to the occasion and laid his plans wisely and well. His mode of operation was to take a preemption, where he now lives, and continues in a small way to raise cattle. He had no capital whatever, but he determined to make a success and a success he has made no doubt. He added another quarter section to his estate by purchase and in addition to his land has fine bands of stock.

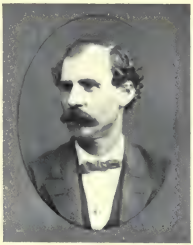
Like his brothers, Mr. Gallaway is an expert with a rifle. From infancy he has handled firearms and has gained such a skill that no game can escape him. On three different occasions he has killed two deer with one shot. He has killed numerous elk and deer, besides one moose, and his fights with grizzlies and cinnamons are too numerous to mention in detail, but suffice it to say that Mr. Gallaway never brought his game to the camp alive and never ran away from a bear.

ROBERT M. BIBB has labored for many years in Idaho county both for the development of its resources and the augmenting of his property holdings and success has smiled on him in all these endeavors and he is now one of the well-to-do and prosperous farmers of the section. He was born in Scotland county, Missouri, on December 26, 1854, the son of David and Nancy (Ewing) Bibb, born in Kentucky, in 1807 and in 1829, respectively. The father died in 1860 and the mother in 1868. Their ancestors were among the earliest pioneers of Missouri. Our subject was brought up in his native place and after a good common schooling finished his education in Lagrange college. He left the home state in 1874 and journeyed to Battle Mountain, in Nevada, where he clerked in a railroad hotel for a year. Next we see him at the Cornucopia mines in Nevada and in 1876 he returned to Wayland, Missouri, where he engaged in general merchandise for seven years. Then he sold and removed to Keokuk, Iowa, and was salesman in a dry-goods house for some time. In April, 1883, he removed to Dodge City, Kansas, then came to the coast a year later and in April, 1885, he landed on the fertile Camas prairie. He took a homestead on Craig mountain and five years later sold it. Then in 1892 after two years of renting he bought land where he now dwells, about four miles west from Grangeville. He now owns two hundred and forty acres of fertile land, well improved, has one hundred and twenty head of graded Shorthorns, one hundred and twenty-five hogs and also other stock and property. Mr. Bibb has one brother and one sister, Mattie Taylor, John W., both in Missouri.

In Clarke county, Missouri, on November 29, 1881, he married Mrs. Mary E., daughter of Abel L. and Mary (Jeffries) Morris. The father was born in Clark county, Ohio, on February 20, 1827, came with his parents to Indiana, thence to Missouri and farmed until his death, July 11, 1890. The mother was born in Kentucky, in 1823 and died in February, 1865. Mrs. Bibb was born in Clarke county, Missouri, on July 11, 1860, and has the following named brothers and sisters: Robert M., Cornelius, Lizzie Barnett, Dorothy Dimond, Sue Biggs, Margaret Longanecker. To this marriage there have two children been born, Lawrence F., born September 23, 1882, and a child died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Bibb are Democrats of the old school. They also belong to the Baptist church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and the W. O. W.

MARK V. JARRETT, deceased. Among the old timers and hardy pioneers of this section there is none better known than was Mark V. Jarrett, who passed from the toils of earth to the realities of another world on August 25, 1900. He was born in Kanawha county, West Virginia, on July 22, 1834, the son of Squire and Sarah (Price) Jarrett. The father was born in the same county, on January 6, 1812, was a prominent man of his place and died June 7, 1887. The mother was born in Virginia, in 1815, married in 1832 and now lives in Kanawha county. Our subject was reared and educated in his native place and was a well informed man. He engaged in mercantile business and was also a natural mechanic. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted in the Nineteenth Virginia Cavalry and served throughout the war without a wound. He was first lieutenant of Company G. After the war Mr. Jarrett came to Montana and thence to Warren. In 1868 he came to the prairie and worked for L. P. Brown, then took a preemption and later returned to West Virginia, where he was married, and returned with his bride to the west. In 1872 he took up a general farming and stock raising and prospered. During the Indian war he took his family to Mt. Idaho and was himself one of the volun-

THOMAS B. GALLOWAY.



ROBERT M. BIBB.

MRS. ROBERT M. BIBB.

MRS. MARK V. JARRETT.

MARK V. JARRETT.

JOSEPH W. DUNN.

MATTHEW H. TRUSCOTT.

ISAAC M. IRWIN.

teer guards. Mr. Jarrett left an estate of a half section, well improved and stocked, besides some property in Grangeville. He had the following brothers and sisters: James M., Edward, French, Mathilda, Minerva Levett, Betty Jackson, Kate Berchie, Levy, deceased.

On October 30, 1871, Mr. Jarrett married Miss Rebecca A., daughter of William W. and Martha H. (Littlepage) Mann. The father, who was born in Virginia, in 1800, was a cabinet maker, removed to White Sulpher Springs, West Virginia, and there died in 1862. The mother was born in September, 1817, raised a family of seven children, which entailed much hardship and deprivation after her husband died. She died on November 19, 1879. Mrs. Jarrett was born on July 7, 1845, at White Sulpher Springs, in Greenbrier county, West Virginia. She has seven brothers and sisters, Francis Carr, Mary C. Porter, Nancy Thayer, Ella Punderson, Virginia Reece, Martha Moore, deceased, William H. Five children survive Mr. Jarrett, Mattie C., born September 12, 1872; Sarah F. Pugh, born December 12, 1873; Mont M., born September 21, 1875; Wallace I., born February 22, 1879; Maria A., born July 7, 1881. Mr. Jarrett was an active Democrat and his wife is of the same political faith. She is a member of the Methodist church.

At the time of the Indian war, Mrs. Jarrett and Mrs. Hanson cooked for the soldiers and fed all hungry men that came to the fortifications and her husband furnished the beef, flour, and so forth. She was a pioneer here in 1872 and was one of the earliest women on the prairie. Mrs. Jarrett has nobly taken up the burdens since her husband's death and in managing the estate in a commendable manner.

JOSEPH W. DUNN is a stirring business man of Denver where he handles a furniture store and by his enterprise and skill, with deferential treatment of all, he has gained a thriving patronage. He was born in Louisa county, Iowa, on October 15, 1848, the son of John and Mary J. (Hiatt) Dunn. The father was born in Ohio, in 1827, his parents being pioneers of that state. He dwelt in Iowa and Illinois and in 1884 went to Kansas and took a homestead in Sherman county. There he died in the fall of 1890. The mother was born in Kentucky, of Welsh extraction, and she died in the spring of 1866. Our subject was educated in the public schools and remained with his parents on the farm until twenty-two, then he visited his uncle in Missouri, returning, he married and settled on his brother-in-law's farm. In the fall of 1877, he removed to Decatur county, Kansas, and took a homestead. He farmed it for thirteen years, also operating a feed store in Oberlin. In connection with these lines of business, Mr. Dunn operated a steam threshing outfit. His health broke down there and he came to the coast. He found relatives in the Willamette valley from searching the donation claim records as they had been there since 1852. Then he set on a search for a brother who had been swallowed up in the west. Failing he returned to Salem and in the spring of 1892 came to Moscow, thence to Denver, where by accident he discovered the brother. Mr. Dunn assisted in the construction of some of the first buildings in Denver and then in 1893 opened a barber shop. He conducted this until January, 1902, when he opened a furniture store and has since devoted his attention to its development. He owns a house and lot in Denver, business property in Oberlin, Kansas, and also a farm there. Mr. Dunn has one brother, John, and one sister, Josephine, deceased.

On January 1, 1875, Mr. Dunn married Miss Sarah R., daughter of Joseph and Martha Wassen. She was born in 1858 and died May 21, 1877. Mrs. Dunn had two brothers and one sister: John, Thomas, Albina. To Mr. and Mrs. Dunn one son was born, on May 6, 1877, Alfred A. He lives in Iowa with his mother's parents. Mr. Dunn is a member of the I. O. O. F., while in political matters he is a Populist.

MATTHEW H. TRUSCOTT is one of the earliest pioneers of this country and one whose labors for all the intervening years have been for general advancement. In the leading industries of Idaho county, he stands today one of the prominent and respected men and the fact that for may years he has held the important position of postmaster of Mt. Idaho signifies the implicit confidence reposed in him by the people.

Matthew H. Truscott was born in England, in 1845, and came to the United States in 1863. His parents, Matthew and Elizabeth (Coad) Truscott, were natives of England and died in 1874 and 1863, respectively. In 1861 Mr. Truscott went to Chile, being then but a lad, and mined there for two years. The year 1863 marks the date of his advent into California and after two years of mining there and in adjacent districts, he came to Elk City, Idaho, where he followed the same occupation until 1870, Mt. Idaho being his postoffice. Then he took up the sawmill business and after twelve years in it he turned his attention to keeping hotel. In 1886 Mr. Truscott was appointed postmaster. In 1893 he added general merchandising to this and now handles a stock of well selected goods. Mr. Truscott was one of the volunteers who fought in the Nez Perces war and also did guard duty at Mt. Idaho. Mr. Truscott coincides with Mr. Rice that the murder of Norton and Chamberlain occurred on the night of June 14.

In June, 1900, Mr. Truscott married Mrs. George M. Shearer, widow of Major Shearer of the Nez Perces war. It was Major Shearer who went to meet the seventeen volunteers at Cottonwood. Mrs. Truscott has one brother, John P. Vollmer, of Lewiston, and one sister, Mrs. A. W. Krontinger, of Lewiston. Mrs. Truscott was born in Indianapolis, in February, 1860, being the daughter of Philip Vollmer, a native of Germany. She was well educated and came first to Idaho in 1873. She returned east in a year and in 1881 came hither again. She married Mr. Shearer in December, 1883, and to them were born three children: Elizabeth V., Philip A., Virginia. Mr. Truscott is an eighteen degree Mason. Mrs. Truscott is a member of the Episcopalian church. Neither one takes active part in politics but still are well informed on the questions of the day and always allied on the side of good government.

ISAAC M. IRWIN is one of the leading farmers and stock men located at Riggins. He pays attention to mining also and is a man of enterprise and ability. He was born in a house that was located on the line between Washington and Oregon, the date of this important event in his life was February 27, 1878. His parents are Isaac and Mary (Riggle) Irwin. The father was born in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1825, came west in a very early day and now resides at Grant's Pass, Oregon. Our subject's parents left Washington and Oregon when he was an infant, settling in Idaho. Boise was the home for two years, then they came to the Salmon Meadows, where the father raised stock for ten years. Our subject was educated in the various places where the family lived and during vacation he broke horses for his father's ranges and for other stockmen. On June 1, 1893, they settled where Riggins now stands, taking a squatter's rights. The father remained there until 1902, and since then the management of the estate has been in the hands of the subject of this article. He and his brother, Noah, have been operating in general stockraising and farming. In 1900 they built a fine residence at Riggins which was the start of the town. Since then they have put up a hotel and blacksmith shop.

On May 16, 1901, Mr. Irwin married Miss Pearl, daughter of George W. Curtis, a merchant at Riggins. Mrs. Irwin was born in Applegate, Oregon, on November 2, 1883, and has one brother and three sisters: Mattie, Helen, Lulu, Frederick. Mr. Irwin has the following brothers and sisters: Rebecca, Henrietta, Emma, John, William, David, Richard, Byron, George, Noah. Mr. Irwin is a man untrammeled by party ties and tenets and solves the important questions of the day best suited to his own judgment. He owns a quarter section of land, part of it being the town site, has thirty acres irrigated, raises fine alfalfa, and is a prosperous man. He and his wife have one child, Gladys, born May 14, 1902.

Mr. Irwin also devotes considerable time to portrait and landscape painting, in which he is very proficient, and as his property holdings will now permit, he intends to take up his art and make it his profession.

RICHARD P. COOPER has resided in Idaho county for nearly a quarter of a century and much earlier than that did he first come to this favored section, and he should surely be classed with the builders of the county and its wealth. He was born in Kentucky, on April 15, 1841, the son of Covington and Cynthia (Moupin) Cooper, natives of Kentucky and born in 1805 and 1810, respectively. The father came to Missouri in 1843 and farmed there until his death in 1850. The mother died in California in 1890. Our subject was educated in the public schools and in 1854 crossed the plains to California, the family all coming then. The next year he started the battle of life for himself and continued to work for wages until he was twenty. Then he took up stock raising and in 1862, he came to Florence, it being the time of the gold excitement. Returning to California he took a preemption and raised sheep until 1880, when he sold out and came thence to Camas prairie. July 17, of that year he landed here and bought a quarter section north of Crooks creek. He sold to Seth Jones in 1885 and removed north from Keuterville, and spent the summers there but the winters on the Salmon. Finally he bought his present place, one mile northwest from Keuterville. Mr. Cooper has two hundred and eighty acres of land and he does a general farming business and raises stock. He makes a specialty of sheep and has some fine specimens, especially of the Rambouillet breed. He has three hundred and fifty head of choice animals and eighty of registered bucks for sale. Mr. Cooper has two rams of this well known breed that are as fine as any in this section of the country and he takes great pains to raise the best of animals and is successful in his efforts. Mr. Cooper has the following brothers and sisters: John, George, Robert, deceased, Joseph, Mary Silvers, James, Adam.

On August 7, 1888, Mr. Cooper married Miss Lodema, daughter of Gabriel and Mary G. (Brown). Church, born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, in 1823 and 1825, respectively. They were farmers in that state and the father died in 1885 and the mother on February 10, 1881. Mrs. Cooper was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, on July 7, 1855, and has the following brothers and sisters: Martha Brown, Levy A., Mary J. Vanoy, Alzina Eller, Ely, Emeline. Six children were born to this union: Mathilda A., born February 26, 1867; Mary E. Rogge, born January 10, 1870; Benjamin R., born July 6, 1875; Ida B., born April 6, 1877 and died in October, 1883; Peter R., born October 6, 1879; Matie D. Andrews, born February 11, 1881. Mr. Cooper and his wife are strong Republicans and he is a member of the I. O. O. F.

SETH JONES has the distinction of being a leader in many lines in this section and he is, without doubt, one of the first and most stanch pioneers of Idaho county. He was born in Allegany county, New York, on April 6, 1833, the son of Stephen and Lydia (Lampheer) Jones, natives of New York. The father died in 1842 and was one of the first settlers in Illinois, coming thither in 1838. The mother died in 1843. Being thus left an orphan early, our subject went to live with his brothers, Phenis and Conley. When sixteen he started in to do battle with the world for himself and was engaged at various employments until 1853, when on April 3, he started across the plains. Portland was reached on August 19, and he wintered at Jacksonville; the next spring was in Siskiyou county, where he mined for four years and then returned home. He married and two years later started across the plains again. On Goose creek, Utah, Indians stole their fine horses, taking fifty out of seventy-five. Five days were spent in following the savages, but no horses were recovered and they then made arrangements with another train to have their wagons pulled at twelve dollars per day. Settlement was made in Scott's valley, California, and two years they dwelt there. On June 1, 1862, they arrived at Florence and came out over the Morse Milner trail. Mrs. Jones was the first white woman over the trail and the gallant Millner would take no fees from the entire train when he knew of her presence. In March, 1863, Mr. Jones settled on Camas prairie; the first logs sawed at the Pete Walters mill made the lumber which Mr. Jones used to build the first settlers cabin on the prairie. Mr. Jones went to general farming and stockraising and has prospered steadily up to the present. At one time he sold six hundred and fifty head of stock for the Montana market and has always had large bands of cattle and horses. He owns nearly thirteen hundred acres of fine agricultural land, has a splendid residence and seven acres in Grangeville, which is the family home, owns excellent stock, having one horse that cost three thousand dollars, and other property in proportion. Mr. Jones is one of the most substantial men of the county and may be rightly classed as one of the real builders. He refused to sign the petition to have the Indians set onto the reservation and so was unmolested. He passed through two large bands of the savages in full war paint on June 13th and was unmolested. Charley Horton was with him and the next day that unfortunate man was slain by the savages about two miles west from Grangeville. Mr. Jones says the war started on June 13th by the killing of Dick Divine, Henry Effers, John Beckridge, Benedict, Baker, William Osborne, Henry Mason, and Francois, the last three being mining men. Mr. Jones took his family to Mt. Idaho for two months during this trouble.

On December 13, 1858, in Illinois, Mr. Jones married Miss Jane E., daughter of Samuel and Jane (Eddy) Castle, natives of Canada and New York, respectively. Her father was in the Civil war and her grandfather was a patriot under George Washington during the Revolution. Mrs. Jones' father died in 1877. She was born in New York in 1837 and has the following brothers and sisters: Orville, Samuel, Louise, Victoria, Melissa. Mr. Jones has the following brothers and sisters: Albert, Samuel, Hannah, and Caroline. To this worthy couple and stanch pioneers have been born the following named children, all solid Republicans in good standing: Asa, Ella, Bell, wife of Charles Cone, and the first white child born on Camas prairie, Samuel, Seth, Rhoda, Robert, William, Jennie Martin, adopted. Mrs. Jones is a member of the Baptist church.

By way of reminiscence it is interesting to note that in early days Mr. Jones had to go to Walla Walla for all supplies and the distance being one hundred and fifty miles it was a hard and tiresome undertaking. Also we wish to note that Mr. Jones was with the party that met the soldiers at the Manuel place after the house was burned.

ADDISON D. SEWELL resides across the river from Lucile and devotes his attention to ranching, stock raising and raising fruits. He was born in Marion county, Oregon, on May 25, 1857, the son of David T. and Elizabeth Morrison Sewell. The father was born in Pennsylvania on November 14, 1814, and was killed by a falling tree on December 3, 1857. He was a music and school teacher and crossed the plains from Des Moines, Iowa, to Salem, Oregon, in 1851. The mother was born in Pennsylvania on August 1, 1824, and died October 4, 1878. Her father was a native of Connecticut; came of the Shaker people. She crossed the plains with her husband in 1851. Our subject grew up in Oregon and received a good education and also learned the carpenter's trade. When twenty he came to Whitman county, Washington, where he resided from 1877 to 1893. He did duty against the savages in the Indian outbreak, and at the date last mentioned came to the Salmon river and there leased the Sherwin mine with his brother. He lived on the Elfers place for a year and a half and in 1894 took his present ranch, where he has remained since.

On December 6, 1885, in Whitman county, Washington, Mr. Sewell married Miss Arrinda, daughter of Jasper and Sarah (Black) Seat. The father was a native of Missouri, came to Oregon in 1865, thence to Cheney, Washington, where he died. The mother was also born in Missouri. Mrs. Sewell was born April 23, 1861, in Missouri, and has four brothers and one sister: Margaret Scott, Wesley, Henry, William, Adam. Mr. Sewell has one brother, Newton, and one sister, Mary Grim. They have three children: Earl, attending school at Spokane, Hubert and Wardford, at home. Mrs. Sewell belongs to the Baptist church. Mr. Sewell is a Republican and a strong one, too. He is always on hand in the campaign and takes a keen interest in affairs. He has a quarter section of land and in addition to general farming is paying much attention to fruit.

EDMOND FITZGERALD, who lives about five miles southwest from Cottonwood, on a good estate, is one of the leading farmers of his section and has demonstrated his enterprise and skill in handling the resources of the county for twenty years. He was born in Ireland on May 27, 1832, the son of Nicholas and Bridget (Butter) Fitzgerald, natives of Ireland. The father was born in 1758. He was a patriot in the revolt against the oppressions of England in 1798, which was led by the noted and beloved Emmett. He died on March 10, 1858. The mother died when this son was young. Edmond was educated in his native land and in 1852 came via the Isthmus to California and was soon in the mines on American river. In 1856 he came to southern Oregon and on April 21, 1862, he made his way to Walla Walla, whence he went to Florence and then to Elk City. He mined in these places and on Clearwater and during the Indian was was in Elk, where the families were all forted up. After the war he mined here and in California and in Arizona and Montana. In 1885 Mr. Fitzgerald came to Camas prairie and took land and engaged in farming and raising stock. He has his farm well improved and owns two hundred acres and is a leading agriculturist of the county. Mr. Fitzgerald pays considerable attention to buying steers and fattening for the market. He also raises other stock and does general farming. Mr. Fitzgerald has one sister, Mary Wolfe, in Ireland.

On September 22, 1881, Mr. Fitzgerald married Miss Katie, daughter of Edward and Kattie (Sullivan) Carmody, natives of Ireland. Mrs. Fitzgerald was born in County Kerry, Ireland, on August 3, 1843. Mr. Fitzgerald and his wife are strong Democrats and are devout members of the Catholic church.

BENJAMIN D. KNORR is one of the younger and popular business men of Grangeville and has manifested his ability and executive force in his operations in our midst, being now owner and operator of the Camas Prairie Roller Mills at Grangeville. He was born in Adams county, Illinois, on August 13, 1874, the son of Christopher B. and Wilhelmina (Borcherding) Knorr, born in Germany on October 2, 1842, and January 26, 1856, respectively. The father came to the United States in 1848 and to Idaho county in 1888 and is a heavy real estate owner and stockman. The mother came to the United States in 1867, and they both dwell in Idaho county now. The family went to Grayson county, Texas, when our subject was a lad and in 1888 came here and finished his education in the Columbia River Conference Academy in Grangeville. On April 26, 1898, Mr. Knorr responded to the call and enlisted in Company C, First Idaho Volunteers and went to the Philippines. He participated in the battles of Manila, Santa Crus, Guadaloupe and many other engagements. He was in the interior of the Luzon and during the year in service endured great hardships and deprivations. He landed in San Francisco on August 26, and proceeded to his home. On account of the hardships endured he was unable to do any work or business for a year after landing here. In 1901, he bought his mill and since that time has given his attention to its operation and has achieved a good success in this line.

On June 11, 1902, Mr. Knorr married Miss Martha, daughter of P. F. Grote, a lumberman in Denver, Colorado, where the wedding occurred. Mrs. Knorr's parents are natives of Germany and are now both living in Denver. She was born in Denver, on January 19, 1884 and has two brothers and four sisters. Mr. Knorr has the following named brothers and sisters: Amelia Mattox, Edward, Fred, Wilhelmina, Matilda, Walter, Clara, Dora, Christina. Mr. Knorr is a member of the I. O. O. F., the W. W. and he and his wife are adherents of the Lutheran church. He was a candidate for representative to the state legislature in 1900 on the Populist ticket but suffered defeat with the other members of the ticket. At the present time Mr. Knorr is an active Democrat.

PHILIP S. PRICHARD is one of the earliest pioneers to the Elk City country and he has also been in all the prominent camps in the northwest, while ever he has manifested those qualities of enterprise and worth which so commend the sturdy pioneers to all people. He was born in Davison county, Tennessee, on July 17, 1837, the son of Samuel Prichard. The father was born in Louisiana and in 1810 went to Illinois and followed civil engineering. He went to Tennessee in 1830 and in 1852 returned to Illinois. He farmed, then went to Nebraska and finally returned to Illinois. Our subject was reared and educated in Tennessee, and in 1858 crossed the plains with teams to Douglas county, Oregon. He mined there and in an early day, just after the discovery of the camp, in July, 1861, he came to Elk City. In the fall of 1862 he returned to Eugene and soon went thence to the Boise basin, visiting the various camps of the region. In 1863 he took a ranch and while that was his headquarters he was engaged in mining in various sections. In 1866 he was with the scouts who assited Crook to subdue the Indians in southern Oregon. In 1868 Mr. Prichard went to Jordan creek and mined and in 1872 we see him in Willow creek camp and Eldorado, in southern Oregon. In 1874 he was in the Pioche excitement in Nevada, and in 1876 he went to the Black Hills, in Dakota, and took part in Crook's campaign against the Sioux Indians. He mined and prospected there also, and in 1876 was in the Big Horn mountains in Wyoming, prospecting. From 1878 for three years he prospected in Lemhi county, on the Wood river, and in the Saw Tooth range. In 1882 Mr. Prichard returned to Idaho county and ranched for two years, and then came to the Elk basin, and here he has operated since. He has interests in many paying properties, and some of them are Laurel Hill group, the Highland group, Number One, Number Two and others. Mr. Prichard is a solid Democrat, and in 1900 he was road supervisor. He stands well and is a man of integrity and worth.

JOHN T. JOHNSON is one of the worthy pioneers who has labored long for the development and upbuilding of Idaho county and is deserving of much credit for his enterprise and sterling qualities. He is now following the dual occupation of mining and farming, owning a ranch two and a half miles south from Lucile. He was born in Fayette county, Kentucky, on December 7, 1824, being the son of Andrew and Jane (Chambers) Johnson, natives of Virginia and Kentucky respectively. The father died in 1886. Our subject was brought by his parents to Logansport, Indiana, when he was but an infant. He remained there for nearly twenty-two years and he received his education there. He saw the first house built in Logansport. On March 15, 1852, he started across the plains with mule teams. In due time he arrived at Placerville, California, and engaged in mining. He prospered and then lost money. Afterward he made more. We see him next in British Columbia. Then he took a whaling voyage to Behring Sea. After that he came to Idaho in 1861 and took a pack train of 103 mules to Florence. On one occasion he packed a ton of gold out of that camp for the Wells, Fargo Company. Then he went to Montana and mined and packed in the Alder gulch region. Five years later he returned to Idaho and followed packing into all the various camps of Northern Idaho for about twelve years. Then he farmed on Camas prairie, and mined on the Salmon river. Mr. Johnson was here during the Indian war and was on the prairie above Mr. Elfers' place when that unfortunate man was murdered. He saw the shots fired but supposed it was the boys killing coyotes. During the war he scouted for General Howard and was at Bear Paw mountain when Chief Joseph surrendered. He was also in the Sheepeater war under Captain McKeiver. He scouted for three summers in these two wars. He was standing by when Sergeant Eagan was killed. Mr. Johnson was in at the christening of Vinegar hill and partook of the beverage. He has three brothers, Edward, Andrew and and Richard, the last two being killed in the Civil war, and three sisters: Catherine Graham, Elizabeth White and Mary E. Kinnaman. Mr. Johnson is a Democrat, one of the good old fashioned Jeffersonian kind, who can give a reason for the hope in them.

LUCIUS L. MORTON, of the firm of Morton & Johnston, leading stock and mining men of southern Idaho county, lives two miles southwest of Lucile. He was born in Tennessee in 1832, the son of Elijah and Mary (Alexander) Morton, natives of New Jersey, pioneers of Illinois in 1833. The father fought in the war of 1812 and also in various Indian struggles in Illinois. Our subject was educated and grew to manhood in the Prairie state, being favored with a course in the academy at Galesburg. His early days were spent in bookkeeping; then he went to Rice county, Minnesota, for three years. Then he came to Illinois and thence to Colorado, mining in all the various and leading camps while there until 1860. Next we see him in the Alder gulch country and he dug gold on the site of the Helena before a white man's habitation was there. The Idaho camps attracted him next and after that he was in South Pass, Wyoming, in the white pine country, Nevada, and then at Baker City, Oregon. 1882 found Mr. Morton mining in the Seven Devils country, which he thinks to be one of the rich sections of the west. Various other camps were visited by him and finally in 1893 he discovered the Blue Jacket on the Salmon river. He has done over a thousand feet of work on it. The same year he went into partnership with Revillo Johnston which relation has continued until the present time. In 1894 Mr. Johnston took his present ranch and in addition to the prosperous stock business which they handle they are heavily interested in mining. They own the Golden Crown group and other property. Mr. Morton has never been back to see his people in Illinois since 1860. He has one brother, Charles, in Oregon, and two, Henry and James, in Illinois. Mr. Morton is a Democrat. After seeing the various mining countries of the west he is satisfied that Idaho county possesses some of the most valuable mineral deposits known and when transportation facilities are better it will be shown to be one of the greatest mining sections yet discovered.

CHARLES P. CONE has spent practically all of his life in this county; he is one of the leading men at this time and a heavy property owner, and it may truly be said that he has always labored for the advancement and upbuilding of the country and its substantial development.

Charles P. Cone was born in Ossipee, New Hampshire, on October 11, 1857, the son of Charles F. and Annie C. (Wood) Cone, natives of New York and Maine, respectively. The father was born on February 14, 1827, and died in 1894. He crossed the plains to California in 1850 and in 1863 settled with his wife and two sons in Idaho county. The mother was born in 1841 and died on June 14, 1902. Her father was a pioneer in California and crossed to Idaho in 1861, where his wife joined him the next year. He bought land from the Indians on Slate creek, Chief Whistle Knocker making the transfer for twelve hundred dollars. This was the first land secured from the Indians, and he was a member of the first legislature, when the capital was in Lewiston.

Our subject was reared and educated in this county, with also a two years' course at Waukegan, Illinois. His father and his grandfather, Wood, opened a store, started a postoffice and also raised great numbers of cattle and horses. Our subject was given stock as soon as he could ride, and since that date he has continued in the industry with good success. He owns now four hundred and eighty acres of good prairie land and also much other property.

In 1884 Mr. Cone married Miss Belle, daughter of Seth and Jane (Castle) Jones, who are mentioned in this work. Mrs. Cone was born on Camas prairie on November 7, 1863, being the first white child born in Idaho county. Mr. Cone has one brother, Harry W., in Grangeville. Two children have been born to this union,—Alvin F., born February 13, 1886; and Robert H., born July 1, 1887. Mr. Cone is a Mason and a member of the W. W. and I. O. O. F. He affiliates with the Republicans and has filled several offices at the hands of the people. Mr. Cone was with his people on Slate creek at the time of the Nez Perce war, there being himself, his parents, his grandparents, his brother and Josh Fockler. Mr. Cone was familiar with the young Indians, having hunted and companioned with them for many years. Among those whom he knew well are Eagle Caps, (Tip-U-Lahna-Caps Caps), Red Leggings, (Sopses-Ilp-Pilp), No Eye, (Chia-Opsin). Mr. Cone is now one of the substantial and public minded citizens, a progressive man and the recipient of the esteem and confidence of all. Mr. Cone has associated himself with Mr. Bonebrake in the drug business, and they are operating this line under the name of The Right Store. Mr. Cone is also a member of the city board of aldermen.

MARTIN WAGNER, who now holds the position of cashier of the Bank of Grangeville, is one of the substantial and worthy business men of our county, and his efficient labors in various capacities have stamped him a man of capabilities and his integrity and uprightness are patent to all.

Martin Wagner was born in Germany on November 29, 1853, the son of John and Katherina (Eichhorn) Wagner, born in Germany in 1826. The father, who followed manufacturing in Germany, came to the United States in 1866 and settled at Portland, where he kept hotel. He died in 1875. The mother died in 1877. Our subject received his education in Portland, taking a course in a business college, after which he accepted a clerkship in a dry goods establishment. He migrated to Walla Walla in 1878, and a short time later came to Lewiston. Here he took a position with the firm of Vollmer & Scott, general merchants. Later he was in Grangeville, and also in Genesee. It was in 1893 that he accepted the position of cashier of the Grangeville bank, and since that time his energies and talent have been devoted in a successful manner to the upbuilding of the interests of this institution. At the present time he is city treasurer in addition to his other duties. Mr. Wagner is a Republican and a potent influence in the affairs of the political realm.

In 1890 occurred the wedding of Mr. Wagner and Miss Carrie, daughter of Bernhardt and Dorotha (Hellman) Pape, natives of Germany, and now dwelling in Portland. Mrs. Wagner was born in Illinois in 1860 and has two brothers and two sisters living in Portland. Mr. Wagner has one brother and one sister,—Peter and Barbara Costendieck, both in Portland. Two children have been born to this union,—Dorotha and Bernhardt. Mr. Wagner is a member of the A. O. U. W., of the W. W. and of the Women of Woodcraft.

SAMSON DILLINGER, of Dixie, is one of the leading old timers and mine owners of the country and has done a remarkable work in the last forty-five and fifty years in the various camps of Oregon, Idaho, and California. He was born in Floyd county, Indiana, on January 28, 1830, the son of Miles and Anna (Hickman) Dillinger, natives of Virginia, and in 1844 and 1842, respectively, they were called hence by death. Our subject was brought up and educated in Orange county, Indiana, and in 1850 he crossed the plains to Oregon City, thence to Portland, whence he soon went to southern Oregon to mine. He was the first discoverer of gold on the Rogue river and only one man, Applegate, who was raising stock, was then dwelling in a house in the Umpqua valley. He also struck good pay gravel at Sterling, but they were forced to leave because the Indians were about to break out. He had been advised of this by friendly Indians. Then he went to Siskiyou county, California, and mined, after which he prospected near Yreka, that state and discovered the Black Bear mine. In 1853 he went to Boise basin and we see him taking out dust at Placerville, then on the Powder river, and in August, 1865, he made his way to Elk City. In 1867 he was on Gold creek and at that date, only Mr. Wagoner lived on the creek. He also worked at Mallard creek where they took thirty dollars per day to the man, but were chased out by savages. Then Mr. Dillinger returned to Elk and Dixie and he has been here constantly since that date. He gave his attention to placer works until 1890 and since that time he has worked on quartz. He erected the first arrastre in Dixie and he now owns the McKinley and Roosevelt claims, which are promising well. He also has other properties and is one of the best miners of the section. At the time of the outbreak in 1877, he was in Dixie and they all repaired to Elk City and there erected a fort which they guarded and remained in until the war ended. Mr. Dillinger is a member of the I. O. O. F. and is a man of excellent standing and enjoys the esteem and good will of all.

HON. JAMES F. AILSHIE. True merit wins the race. It is pleasant to trace the successful career of a man of ability and sagacity and we greet with zest the opportunity to recount the salient points in the life of the well known and highly respected gentleman, whose name initiates this paragraph.

James F. Ailshie was born in Greene county, Tennessee, on June 19, 1868, the son of George W. and Martha (Knight) Ailshie. The father, a farmer, was born in Kentucky. His parents were natives of Tennessee, his mother being descended from Pennsylvania Dutch and his grandfather from Scotch extraction. George W. Ailshie, who was in the Fourth Tennessee Infantry, received a wound in the shoulder and had one finger shot off. He was in the siege of Vicksburg and saw much hard service. The mother was born in Tennessee and died on October 11, 1901. Her ancestors were natives of the same state for some generations back. Her father served in the Civil war and fell a victim to disease contracted in that service. Her mother still lives. Our subject grew up in his native state and after the common school training, took a full course in the Carson & Newman College, coming west in 1887, he took the degree of Ph. B. Then Mr. Ailshie entered the law school of the Willamette university and completed that course. In 1891 he opened an office in Pendleton immediately upon taking his degree. Shortly afterward, Mr. Ailshie seeing the advantages of Grangeville, came hither and openeed an office. This has been his residence since, where he at once took his proper position as a leading member of society and a prominent man in the business realm. He was appointed regent of the state university when the buildings were being erected and proved himself invaluable to the interests of that institution. Mr. Ailshie has always been the head of the minority party, the Republican, in his county and has always been in attendance on the conventions. He was a delegate to the National Republican convention in Philadelphia in 1900 and participated in the nomination of McKinley and Roosevelt. In 1902 the party placed his name in nomination for the supreme bench of the state and a handsome majority in his favor testified the people's pleasure at the polls. Judge Ailshie has taken his position with a preparation and dignity that becomes a man of deep erudition, manifest talent and complete fitness for the responsibilities of this most important office of the state. He still retains his home and interests in Grangeville and in addition to his town property he has various farm interests.

In 1894 occurred the marriage of Judge Ailshie and Miss Lucie, daughter of Rev. J. B. and Angeline Bundren. The parents are of French extraction and the father is a noted preacher of the Baptist denomination, in Tennessee. The wedding occurred in Spokane and Mrs. Ailshie was born in Dandridge, Jefferson county, Tennessee, in 1868 and was well educated in the Newman seminary at Mosey creek. She has one brother and two sisters: William, Vallie, Virginia. Judge Ailshie has the following brothers and sisters: Stephen A., Andrew, Ernest, Alice Haun, Annie Haun, Lilly Bible, Laura, Jessie. Two children have been born to this union: Lucile and Jammie F. The Judge affiliates with the I. O. O. F., has been through all the chairs and is also a member of the grand lodge. He also beongs to the W. W. and he and his wife are adherents of the Presbyterian church. Judge Ailshie is also president of the Grangeville Electric Company.

JOHN C. YOUNG, the well known dairyman and farmer of Elk City, is a man of good standing and has long and active experience in various sections of our frontiers. He was born in Monroe county, Indiana, on September 22, 1830, the son of Joseph and Barbara (Whisenand) Young. The father was born in Virginia and came with his parents to Indiana in 1820, and in 1844 he passed the river of death. The mother was born in Pennsylvania in 1800 and died in Illinois in 1896. Our subject was reared and educated in Indiana and on March 28, 1852, he set out across the plains for the land of the setting sun. He made a successful journey, and soon we see the sturdy pioneer lad in the placer fields of Plumas county, California, searching for hidden wealth. He wended his way to different camps in that state until 1864, and then turned towards the north. He was in southern Idaho, Virginia City, Montana, in Owyhee country, Oregon, on Wildhorse, in British Columbia, thence to Lewiston, and later he was digging gold on the Salmon. He was in Florence and adjacent camps, in Leesburg, Lemhi county, and in 1872 he came to Elk City and took up a farm. Since then Mr. Young has devoted himself to dairying and general farming and now has a good plat of land, several buildings in Elk City, and is one of the prosperous citizens of the section. He has one sister, Martha Straighter, and one brother, Joshua.

In Elk City in October, 1876, Mr. Young married Eliza E. Marston, who was born in England in 1823. She was left an orphan at an early day and for some time was in the family of Lord Byron. She has spent most of her life on the frontier, and since 1862 Elk City has been her home. Mr. Young is a solid Democrat and is a man of influence and worth of character.

CYRUS OVERMAN, whose magnificent domain in Idaho county proclaims him a man of fine business ability, is now dwelling at his family residence in the vicinity of Tolo. He is rightly classed with the pioneers of the county, and is to be congratulated on the successful and happy results of his labor both in personal acquisition and in the development of the resources of the county and its upbuilding.

Cyrus Overman was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, on April 2, 1851, the son of John and Elizabeth (Hoddy) Overman. The father was born in Indiana on September 17, 1816, and still lives in Ottumwa. He came west to Nevada in 1859 and took up mining. He located the Overman mine on Gold Hill near Virginia City, which is one of the leading mines there. He was married at Ottumwa, and after five years returned to Iowa, where he has remained since. The mother died when our subject was four years old. Cyrus grew to manhood and was educated in Iowa. In 1871 he came west and landed the third day of September on a portion of his present estate and here he has remained since that time devoting a naturally sagacious mind and energetic body to the acquisition of a beautiful and valuable estate, which is now nearly fourteen hundred acres. It is divided into two excellent farms, and each is well provided with proper buildings and handled in a commendable manner.

In this county in the year 1874 Mr. Overman married Miss Melinda A., daughter of A. I. and Maria (Shaul) Watson. The father was a native of Indiana and came to California in 1859 and in 1861 he was in Florence. The following year he was on the prairie and took as a homestead the land now used as the experiment station. This he sold in 1871. He was an active participant in the Indian war and is still living in the county, retired from active business. Mrs. Watson also dwells here. Mrs. Overman was born in Indiana in 1854, came west in 1871 with her mother and Mr. Overman, whom she married afterwards. She has no brothers and sisters. Mr. Overman has one half-brother, J. M. Overman. Seven children have been born to this union: John I., present auditor and recorder of the county; Owen H., Arthur V., Reuben W., attending the university, and a leading debater there; Alva, Cyrus, Jr., Susan M. Mr. Overman is a member of the I. O. O. F., and of the W. O. W. In 1895 Mr. Overman was elected sheriff on the Democratic ticket. He was president of the Columbia River Conference Academy for four years. He has also been on the school board for twenty years. He was present during the Indian war and the savages were camped on his ranch at the head of the Rocky canyon, where they had all their councils and dances. He took his wife and child to Mr. Aram's place, and on the night of the thirteenth came in himself to warn the settlers that the Indians were on the war path and he then joined the volunteers and took an active part in the suppression of hostilities.

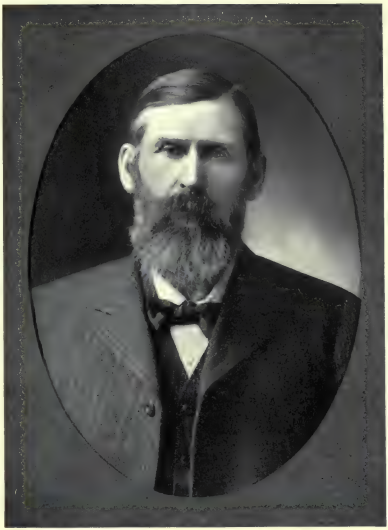
HON. JACOB L. ECKERT has never been what is termed a politician, but the people of Idaho county determined that they wished to be represented in the state senate by a solid and successful business man, and so in the fall of 1902 they placed Mr. Eckert's name in nomination on the Republican ticket for this position and although the county went Democratic on this occasion, Mr. Eckert was elected by a good majority, thus demonstrating his popularity and paying a tribute to his worth in a very emphatic manner.



Mr. Eckert is one of the heaviest property owners in the county, having over eleven hundred acres of fine land under cultivation just north from Cottonwood, where he carries on diversified farming and stock raising. The estate is improved in a very skillful manner, having plenty of commodious buildings. Mr. Eckert was one of the first to place a windmill on Camas prairie. In addition to this magnificent holding, Mr. Eckert has a ten room residence on Normal hill in Lewiston, fitted with all modern conveniences, which is the family home during the school season. Mr. Eckert and his wife also own about one thousand acres of valuable land in Kansas, in addition to other property in various places.

Jacob L. Eckert was born in the vicinity of Lancaster, Ohio, on December 17, 1845, being the son of Henry S. and Ann M. Eckert, both natives of the same place. Jacob grew to manhood on a farm and received his education. In 1868 he came on the first excursion train over the Kansas Pacific railroad to the terminus, Sheridan. He had much experience on the frontier, in his cowboy days; later he hunted buffalo and many of the noble animals, as well as deer and antelope, fell before his trusty rifle. Many times, Mr. Eckert says the buffalo mixed with their herds and caused considerable trouble. On January 1, 1871, Mr. Eckert went to the Little Arkansas river and engaged himself with the stockmen, being installed after one year's work as foreman of the Twenty-one ranch. Five years were spent in this occupation. Then Mr. Eckert went to Wilson, Kansas, where he did a pork-packing and butcher business in company with O. B. Goffe. In 1881 he came, via San Francisco, to The Dalles, bought a band of cattle and drove them to Cheyenne, taking five months on the road. In February, 1882, he came to Kelton, by rail, and thence on the stage to Walla Walla, having a very rough trip. Thence he made his way to Lewiston and went to raising stock and has been there and on Camas prairie, continuously since. Mr. Eckert has manifested rare wisdom and skill in manipulating his mammoth interests and his unbounded success has been but the sure result of such talent and activity. He has introduced excellent Galloway and Shorthorn cattle, and in fact was the pioneer in that line, the county being greatly indebted to him for this excellent labor. While the estate produces much grain, Mr. Eckert is of the opinion that it pays better to keep stock to consume it rather than sell the grain, which he accordingly does. In mentioning the improvements of his fine estate, we should not fail to mention the commodious dwelling of eleven rooms and the excellent system of water works which he has put into use, and which supply both the house and the barns. In fact, his farm is one of the finest in the state and it reflects great credit on the owner. Mr. Eckert is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Cottonwood. In political matters he has always been informed so as to decide the questions of the day with keen intelligence, but the demagogue's methods are entirely unknown to him and the people of Idaho county are to be congratulated in securing the services of a straight-forward and substantial business man whose integrity and capabilities are beyond question.

On December 12, 1882, Mr. Eckert married Miss Sarah M., daughter of Frederick Shaeffer, a native of Pennsylvania and one of the first to settle in Lancaster, Ohio, and take up his business. Three children have been born to this happy union, Helen M., Nell L., and Goffe C.

Mr. Eckert and his cultured wife, who presides with gracious dignity over their elegant home in Lewiston, are among the leaders in that wealthy city and hosts of admiring friends are on every hand. Mr. Eckert has always been an active and aggressive man on the frontier and it is greatly to his credit to say that he has kept aloof from all the vices of the rough pioneer, although he has ever been in the lead for advancement and upbuilding, while his reputation is unsullied and his standing is of the very best.

AMOS CARVER hails from the old Pine Tree state, where he was born on August 3, 1838, the son of Blaney and Sarah (Staples) Carver. The father was a farmer, born in 1796, and died in 1880. The progenitors of the family came to the colonies over two hundred years ago. The mother of our subject was born in Massachusetts in 1800 and died in 1844. She also came from an old and prominent American family. Our subject attended school until he was twelve years old and then followed the instincts of his juvenile mind to try the world for himself. He went to sea for four years and visited Cuba, and many other places, including Honolulu, where he ate in the king's palace. He finally came to California in 1857 and mined at Eldorado. In 1862 he came to Idaho and mined in the various camps for two years. He was personally acquainted with the discoverer of the Warren diggings, and for fifteen years he mined in that camp. The best ground was uncovered in 1864, six miles from the original discovery, and was located by James Warren and Rube Bassey. The camp progressed until 1870 and then began to retrograde. About 1868 our subject was working gravel that paid two dollars per minute per man. In 1877 Mr. Carver's partner, William Osborn, was killed by the Indians while he was mining on the Salmon. Mr. Carver was at Warren during the excitement, forted in the fortification of that place; then he came to the Salmon river claim, and later bought Dick Divine's place, where he raised stock and mined until recently, when he has given his entire attention to stock raising. Mr. Carver has one sister, Mary J. Allen. He is a strong Republican and voted for Lincoln when it cost him a great deal to do so.

HON. JACOB L. ECKERT.

Mr. Carver said that in 1864 while he and Tom Butler were mining on Rabbit creek a bear stole meat from their keg. They hid that and the bear came and carried off the camp kettle while it was hot. Later he came and stole the gold pan off the keg of meat in the tent. They barricaded with brush. The next time the bear came right through the brush and was making off with his booty when Butler shot him. The report of the gun awoke Mr. Carver just in time to realize that a dead bear was lying across him; he awoke and began to yell and scramble out of his trap. Butler made a noise in the brush, and Mr. Carver supposing it to be another bear, called Butler, telling him that the tent and woods were full of bears. Neither one knew the bear was dead that was in the tent, and so to make sure they carefully lighted a candle and held it inside until they could put another bullet in bruin's brain. In his anxiety to hold the light so that it would shine on the bear Mr. Carver had gotten too close to the muzzle of the gun and was severely burned. He supposed he had been shot and more yells followed. The camp finally induced him to keep quiet. As no other bears in the woods were on to the ropes like the dead one Carver and his partner were not bothered any more.

JOHN I. OVERMAN is a product of Idaho county and a son of enterprise who has done credit to his birth place and one in whom the county may take real pride. He has shown his ability and substantiality in his career thus far and is destined to come to the head of important measures and may reasonably be expected to make a name for himself in circles far in advance of clerical.

John I. Overman was born in Idaho county on May 10, 1876, the son of Cyrus and Alice M. (Watson) Overman, who are mentioned elsewhere in this work. His birth occurring one year prior to the important event of the Indian outbreak, he is unable to relate any incidents from personal memory. He grew up in the county, attended the common schools, took a course in the academy in Grangeville, then studied in the university in Moscow, and finally completed his training in the Blair Business College in Spokane. At the close of this study he went into the Fall creek mines for a year in 1899, and the following year his name appeared on the Democratic ticket for assessor of the county, and the voters of the county liberally confirmed the judgment of the convention and he served for two years with acceptability in this capacity. Last fall Mr. Overman was nominated for clerk of the district court and ex officio auditor and recorder of the county; on January 12 he assumed the responsibility of these offices, and in the efficient and faithful discharge of the duites there incumbent on him we find him at this time. He is noble grand of the I. O. O. F., and a member of the W. W. Mr. Overman always attends the caucuses and conventions and is a potent factor in the same. He owns town property and stock and is one of the bright and substantial young men of the county who has the good will of all and richly deserves the esteem and confidence with which he is favored.

CHARLES E. HOLT. The subject of this brief review is one of the most successful business men and highly respected citizens in Idaho county. He has won his way to his present high position through sheer pluck and energy, and as a result is today a partner in the largest cattle raising firm on the Salmon river, Holt & Rhoades, and holds a place of affluence in his county. At his fine estate of three hundred and twenty acres on Race creek, half a mile west of Goff, he is building the best residence on the Salmon, and besides building up a valuable property in both real estate and stock, he is enjoying all the comforts of a pleasant, congenial home. He is a son of James and Sarah (Pilkinton) Holt, natives of England ,and was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1855. His father died in 1854. Charles grew to manhood in Utah and received his education in the common schools, the Deseret University and Morgan Business College. When twenty years of age he took up the struggle in the outside world, going first to Wyoming, and in 1877 to Butte, Montana. Thence he came to Idaho, to Ross Fork, where he was clerk at the Indian agency for two years. This was on the Fort Hall reservation in southern Idaho. He then formed a partnership with W. N. Shilling and engaged in the mercantile business at Ross Fork, where he remained three and a half years, finally selling out and coming to Cottonwood, Idaho county, in December, 1884. Here he engaged in the stock business with his brother James, who died a year later. The business was continued by Charles until 1890, when Joseph Ingram became associated with him. Mr. Holt went to Nevada, leaving Mr. Ingram in charge of the ranch at Cottonwood. This partnership was brought to a sad end in 1893 by the death of Mr.

Ingram in a train wreck, after which Mr. Holt returned and took up the management. In 1897 he again formed a partnership, this time with J. O. Rhoades. They bought their present property on the Salmon, where they have since operated. They own eight hundred head of cattle, and last season fed two hundred and fifty tons of alfalfa, a new departure in this region, where free range has always been so plentiful.

In 1898 Mr. Holt was united in marriage with Rosa A., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Belknap, whose father was a Methodist minister in California. Mrs. Holt was born in Oregon in 1862, was educated at Los Angeles, California, and was a school and music teacher for many years. To this union have been born two children, Cora and James F., the former of whom will be sent to school at Salt Lake City. Mr. Holt has six brothers and sisters, William, John Cook, a half-brother, Wadington, Eliza Wade, Eveline Pratt and Clara Perks. He is a member of the A. O. U. W. and of the W. of W. In politics he has always been very active and very potent, identifying himself with the Republican party. In 1896 he was elected to the legislature on the Silver-Republican ticket, and last year was a candidate for commissioner, a position he missed by the narrow margin of forty votes. Mr. Holt is justly entitled to representation in this compilation, as few have been more active and successful in this life than he.

RICHARD L. IRWIN, of the firm of Irwin & Pipes, sawmill men on Race creek, is an enterprising and successful business man who, in addition to his sawmilling, does general farming and stock-raising. He was born in Nebraska on August 1, 1866, his parents being Isaac and Mary (Riggles) Irwin. The father was a sawmill man, born in Kentucky in 1829. He was a pioneer in Nebraska, Kansas and Montana. Later he came to Idaho and represented Washington county in the first state legislature. He filled the office of sheriff in Kansas and held many other responsible positions. He is a strong Democrat. The mother was born in Indiana in 1839 and is still living in Jackson county, Oregon. They removed to the Pacific coast, and from San Francisco to Walla Walla when our subject was five years old, thence to southern Oregon, later to Boise and finally to Washington county. Richard L. was educated in these various places but when he arrived at man's estate he went into the mines on Wood river. Next he sought treasure in the Warren camp, and should have the credit of locating the first claim on Rapid river. Later he mined on the Salmon and after a visit to Oregon took up his present place. He has a quarter section of land and the firm owns a mill that cuts eight thousand feet a day.

On February 22, 1897, Mr. Irwin married Miss Leona, daughter of Jesse and Julia (Triplett) Pipes, natives of North Carolina. Mr. Pipes was drafted into the Confederate army contrary to his desire, but soon succeeded in getting into the ranks where he could fight for the Stars and Stripes. Mrs. Irwin was born in North Carolina, October 1, 1877. She has one brother, Ollie, and one sister, Martha Hawkins. Mr. Irwin has the following brothers and sisters: Rebecca Clay, Etta Phillips, John, William, David T., Byron, Emma Wisdom, George, Noah, Isaac. Mr. and Mrs. Irwin are members of the Baptist church. He has been justice of the peace several times and is so dominated by sound principles and uprightness that he has the respect and confidence of all.

HARRY D. POYNEER was born in Marshall county, Iowa, on December 23, 1867, the son of David H. and Margaret (Rice) Poyneer. The father is a physician, living in Pomeroy, Washington. The mother was born in 1842 and is still living. Our subject was reared and educated in Indiana, whither the family removed when he was three years of age. He remained under the parental roof until nineteen, then stepped forth to do for himself in the battle of life. In 1886 he came to Pierce and Elk City and prospected, where it was his good fortune to discover the Badger group and also other good properties. He prospected for some time, and in 1899 bought out the Elk Club from Jake Anderson. To the operating of this establishment, since that time, Mr. Poyneer has devoted his energies. He has one sister, Myrtle, in Pomeroy, Washington.

On July 15, 1899, Mr. Poyneer was united in the holy bands of matrimony with Bertha Stolsz, a native of Kansas. Mr. Poyneer is a member of the K. P., Garfield Lodge, No. 25, in Pomeroy. He is an active Democrat and always manifests a keen interest in the campaigns.

HERSHEL H. CLAY, who lives three miles up the north fork of Race creek from Goff, does general farming, raises stock and freights. He is a good substantial citizen and has the respect of all his fellows. He was born in Washington county, Ohio, on October 8, 1853, the son of Nicholas and Lydia (Richards) Clay, natives of Ohio, and born January 1, 1825, and 1828, respectively. The mother died in 1872 and the father in 1900. The father was a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting April 1, 1861, in the Thirty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served three years. He fought under General Grant at Vicksburg and on many other hotly contested occasions. The paternal grandfather of our subject was in the Revolution. Our subject was educated and grew to manhood in Montgomery county, Kansas. At the age of nineteen he commenced life for himself, but remained in Kansas until 1873 and then removed to Fremont county, Iowa. The next year finds him in Walla Walla freighting and in 1876 he went to Rogue River valley, Oregon, and did placer mining. In 1881 he was back in Walla Walla, and in 1882 he was in the Wood river excitement. Four years later he settled on the Salmon meadows in Washington county, Idaho, where he raised stock and did dairying. A quadrennium sufficed for that business and we next find him digging gold on Short's bar on the Salmon. In 1900 he bought his present place of John Knox and has devoted himself as stated above.

On November 14, 1872, in Kansas, Mr. Clay married Miss Rebecca, daughter of Isaac and Mary (Riggles) Irwin, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. Mrs. Clay was born at Greencastle, Indiana, on March 8, 1853; her brothers and sisters are mentioned in another portion of this book. Mr. Clay has one sister and three brothers: Frances Veters, Ezra, John, Daniel. Five children have been born to bless this household: Maggie Rhoades, Harry, Carrie B., Emma, Loren. The first lives at Pollock, Idaho, and the others are at home. Mrs. Clay is a devout member of the Baptist church. Mr. Clay is a strong Republican and takes an active interest in the affairs of the county. He has his farm well improved, and last year from ten acres of land he raised sixty tons of alfalfa, which he sold at ten dollars per ton.

MARCUS E. GAGE is a very prosperous and successful sheep raiser living two miles west of Riggins, where he owns a quarter section of fine land but controls many more acres. He has some of the finest alfalfa fields in the country, as well as excellent orchards, and is situated in one of the best sheep countries in the northwest.

Marcus E. Gage was born in Polk county, Oregon, on February 23, 1856, the son of William and Louise (Gilliam) Gage, born in Missouri in 1826 and 1828, and died in 1891 and 1875, respectively. They came to Oregon in 1844 with old Colonel Gilliam, after whom Gilliam county is named. Colonel Gilliam was killed at the time of the Whitman massacre by the accidental discharge of a firearm. Our subject was educated in the common schools of Polk county, Oregon, and assisted his father until twenty years of age, learning thoroughly the stock business. Then he went to do for himself in Douglas county, later removed to Pendleton, and in 1878 went to Walla Walla, whence he journeyed to the Palouse country and took land. Three years later he was in Crook county, Oregon, then in Grant county for six years in the sheep business. After this he raised cattle in Long valley, Idaho, but met with reverses, losing heavily in the cold winters. He removed to Indian valley, and two years later came to Idaho county, settling on Squaw creek, near the mouth of the Little Salmon. He took up cattle raising again but sold that stock and went to raising sheep, in which industry he has continued since.

In Grant county, in the year 1883, Mr. Gage married Mrs. Josephine Reeves, the daughter of Ellery A. and Cynthia (Sweet) Aldrich. Mrs. Gage was born near Oregon City in 1855. One child, Pearl E., is the fruit of this marriage. Mrs. Gage also has children by her first husband. Mr. Gage is a strong Republican of protective tariff policy. In reference to the section where Mr. Gage lives he remarks that the country is especially adapted for sheep, raises the best of alfalfa and produces fruit finely.

ALEXANDER A. WEBER. This leading architect and builder of Idaho county is a man of skill and a thorough master of his business, as the following outline of his life will show. He was born in Switzerland in 1868, the son of Rudolf and Anna (Probst) Weber, born in Switzerland in 1817 and 1847, respectively. The father died in 1891 but the mother is still living in Bern, Switzerland. The father was a civil engineer and took an active part in the Revolution and was exiled in 1847 but was allowed to come back in 1857. Our subject grew to manhood in his native land and was well educated in the schools of the place. He received a technical education in architecture in Germany and became master of the science. In 1890 he was led by the great opportunities and advantages in this land for an energetic man to come to the United States, and he at once associated himself with such leading architects as Hons Haimer and H. H. Schickil, the former being the man who constructed the capitol at Madison. In 1891 Mr. Weber came to Portland and for seven years that city was his headquarters. He was in the construction department of the O. R. & N. railroad and put up some of the steel bridges on their lines in Washington. In 1898 he went to Spokane and took a position with the N. P. It was 1900 when he came to Grangeville and opened a shop, and since that time has been identified with the town and its interest, making himself a first class citzen and a promoter of the welfare of the country. He has devoted himself to general contracting and building with architectural work and has done well. Mr. Weber handled the court house, making all the plans and supervising the work. In church relations our subject is affiliated with the Catholics, and in political alliances he is a Republican.

CAPT. JOHN D. WOODEN is one of the most enterprising mine operators in Idaho county. His home at the present time is at 817 Fifth avenue, Spokane, Washington, but his interests in mines are largely in this county. He was born in Owen county, Indiana, on March 4, 1842, the son of James and Susan (Shively) Wooden. The father was born in Booneville, Kentucky, in 1793. His father fought the Indians with Daniel Boone. James, the father of our subject, took part in the war of 1812. Following that war he engaged as pilot on the Mississippi until 1830. In 1831 he took land in Owen county and in 1848 crossed the plains to Oregon, and died in Polk county on March 14, 1872. The mother of our subject was born in 1803 in Cincinnati, and died in Indiana on May 6, 1844. Our subject was reared and educated in Oregon, and when fourteen he went to mining. He learned the carpenter trade about this time, and in 1858 and '59 fought the Piutes under Capt. W. W. Kellogg and Kit Carson. In 1861 he was one of a party to explore northeastern Nevada and Idaho, and in 1863 started east to enlist for his country, but instead joined the Second Regiment of Cavalry in California to repel the Apaches, Snakes and Piutes, serving until 1865. Then he went to the Boise basin, returned to Polk county, Oregon, and in 1872 came to the Salmon. He worked in all the prominent camps here and in December, 1876, hearing a rumor of an Indian outbreak in the Black Hills, South Dakota, he joined a company of volunteers in the hills. After this he was employed by Frazier & Chalmers to superintend the construction and afterward to run the Boyle forty-stamp mill. He continued in the quartz mill business in the Black Hills for eighteen months. Then he went to the New York market and sold mines. In 1880 he came to the Northwest and operated in various sections of the United States and British Columbia. In 1883 he went into the Coeur d'Alene country, later took land in the Calispell valley and in 1901 removed to his present residence in Spokane. He had in the meantime taken great interest in the mines in Idaho county, and has extensive interests in various sections. Mr. Wooden has the following brothers and sisters: Henry S., Isabella Lawson, deceased, Mary Stedwell, deceased, Robert M., Anna Woolf, deceased.

On January 23, 1881, Mr. Wooden married Miss Addie, daughter of Cornelius and Emma (La Tourette) Bergen, the wedding occurring in Rathdrum. Mrs. Wooden was born July 30, 1844, in New York. Her father was born in New York in 1831, a descendant of the early Dutch settlers of Jersey City. He was an inventor and mechanic. In 1881 he went to Oregon City. The mother was born in New York on February 6, 1819. Mrs. Wooden was highly educated in Elmira and Cortland Academy, at Homer, New York, and is a lady of excellent literary attainments, her productions finding their way into the leading journals of the northwest. She is of Holland Dutch and French Huguenot descent.

THOMAS H. CAROTHERS. Four miles up the Little Salmon from Goff is the home place of the subject of this sketch, who devotes his energies to raising sheep. He was born in Shelby county, Missouri, in 1849. His parents, Armstrong and Elizabeth H. (Christian) Carothers, were natives of Pennsylvania and Kentucky, respectively. The father was born in 1815 and died in 1860; the mother was born in 1838 and died in 1891. Thomas H. was brought up and educated in his native place. He was still young when his father died and the responsibilities of life thus came early upon his shoulders. He continued to assist in supporting the family until twenty years of age and then went to do for himself. His attention was turned to farming, after which he settled in Shelbina, Missouri, of which he was marshal for nine years. In 1891 he came to Idaho, making his way to the Seven Devils for the purpose of locating mines. Being deterred from this purpose, he went to Garden Valley and operated a threshing outfit. Sometime was spent at Boise; then he came to the meadow, after which he took land on the Little Salmon above Goff, sold it and took a ranch on Race creek. This in turn was sold and then he bought his present farm and engaged in wool growing. The year 1896 marks the date of this venture and since then he has continued successfully at the same business. He owns one hundred and sixty acres but controls much more. Mr. Carothers has done some fine improving since coming here, among which may be mentioned a bridge across the Little Salmon which was built and owned by him.

In 1868 occurred the marriage of Thomas H. Carothers and Amanda J., daughter of William and Avarilla Gear. The father is a merchant, farmer and stockman. Mrs. Carothers was born in Grundy county, Missouri, 1851. She has three brothers, Richard H., Benjamin and Milton. Mr. Carothers has the following brothers and sisters: William, Margaret, Susan and Sarah. Seven children have been born to our subject and his esteemed wife: Nora, deceased; Ollie Irwin, at Clarkston, Washington; Willie and Nellie, deceased, Charles and Ernest in Idaho county; and Frank, at home. Mr. Carothers is a good Democrat and active. In addition to his landed property he has seven thousand, three hundred sheep and in the seven years in which he has handled sheep here has fed them but ten days.

GEORGE F. WASSEM. Many of our most substantial and capable citizens come to us from the land of Germany. Among that worthy number we are constrained to mention the subject of this article, whose labors and integrity have demonstrated him one of the leading men of his section. Mr. Wassem dwells three miles northwest from Denver, where he owns a mammoth estate of four hundred and eighty acres, which his skill, industry and untiring care have made one of the fine farms of the state. He handles about one hundred head of cattle, raises annually as many hogs and does a general farming business, wherein prosperity has been constantly attendant upon him.

George F. Wassem was born in Hessen, Darmstadt, Germany, on December 1, 1836, the son of Ludwig and Elizabeth (Kulp) Wassem. The father was born in 1800 and remained in Germany until his death on December 25, 1854. The mother was born in 1797, married in 1830 and died in February, 1879. Our subject was reared in his native place and received his educational training there. He remained with his parents after school days until July, 1864, when he came to the United States. Six months were spent in Illinois, then he went to Wright county, Iowa, where he bought a hundred acres of land for eight hundred and fifty dollars. Twenty-five years were spent there and in the winter of 1889 he sold out, came to Uniontown, Washington, whence he went to his present place, which he secured by purchase. Since that time, Mr. Wassem has continued steadily in the pursuit of farming and raising stock. He has one brother and one sister, Elizabeth Nichte, deceased. John E., deceased.

On November 4, 1870, Mr. Wassem married Miss Sophie, daughter of Zad and Sophie (Nicholaus) Ricklefs. The father was born April 10, 1812, and

THOMAS H. CAROTHERS.

MRS. GEORGE F. WASSEM.

GEORGE. F. WASSEM.

JOHN J. PULSE.

died on April 8, 1877. His native place was Oldenberg, where he was a merchant. The mother was born in Oldenberg, on March 24, 1818, and died in the spring of 1879. Mrs. Wassem was born in Oldenberg on July 6, 1845, and has two brothers and one sister, Herman, Theodore, Hermina. The following children have come to bless this household: Mary Thiessen, born December 24, 1872; George F., born May 11, 1873; Herman, born September 20, 1874; Elizabeth Thiessen, born April 3, 1876; Franz, born January 1, 1878; John, born March 12, 1881; Kate, born December 30, 1883; Theodore, born December 4, 1886. Mr. Wassem and his wife are active and solid Republicans and also belong to the Evangelical church.

JOHN J. PULSE, the well known druggist in Denver, is one of the enterprising men of Idaho county and has done a large amount toward the upbuilding of the town and county. He is a man of fine capabilities and public spirit and has been a moving spirit in the good work of gaining first-class educatonal facilities as well as for general progress. He was born on May 8, 1862, in Cleveland, Ohio, the son of William H. and Maria A. (Bader) Pulse. The father was born in August, 1833, in Mecklenburg, Germany. He came with his parents to Cleveland, Ohio, and has been for thirty years at the head of a large wholesale millinery store in that place. The mother was born in Brooklyn, Ohio, in 1833 and died on May 8, 1862. Our subject was raised in his native place and after finishing his public school course, he entered the Cleveland school of pharmacy, from which he graduated in 1884. He also studied medicine under Dr. Powell for three years and took lectures in the medical college. In 1885, after an extensive trip through Arizona, New Mexico, California and Alaska as far as Juneau, having intended to go to Circle City, he retraced his steps to Portland and clerked in a drug store in Oregon City and in Portland. Later he was in Colfax, Washington, and in 1888 he operated a drug store in Wardner, Wallace, and Burke, taking considerable interest in mining properties. In 1891 Mr. Pulse removed with his family to Denver and opened a drug store where he has continued since. He has a thriving patronage, a good business building besides residence and other property in the town and also some valuable mining interests in the Coeur d'Alene country.

On August 22, 1889, Mr. Pulse married Miss Maria L., daughter of Thomas and Lucinda Wilkinson. She was born in Oneida, New York, on March 5, 1862, and has the following brothers and sisters: John, deceased; Thomas, Joseph, Sarah Edwards, Hannah Bowley, Ellen King. Mr. Pulse is an active Democrat and was on the board when the first school was opened in Denver. This was in 1891 and he was a prime mover in gaining for the town its present substantial school house. Mrs. Pulse is a Republican and well posted in the political questions of the day. Mr. Pulse is a member of the M. W. A. and the W. W. He is a man of marked capabilities in business lines, is a stirring factor in the realm of improvement and advancement and is a leading citizen of the county.

ELIJAH ADSLEY, of the firm of E. Adsley & Son, general merchants and hotel keepers at Pollock, Idaho, is a man of broad experience, first-class executive ability and with resources both financial and natural which have placed him in a leading position both here and in other localities where he has wrought. Mr. Adsley has also the distinction of being a staunch veteran of the Civil war. Elijah Adsley was born in West Kent, England, on May 7, 1849, the son of John and Anna (Boylan) Adsley. The father was born in West Kent, England, in 1813, came to the United States in 1853, settling in Oakland county, Michigan. October 13, 1902, he was called away by death. The mother was a native of England and died in that country in 1851. Our subject accompanied his father to this country and was educated in the common schools of Michigan, and during his youthful days learned the trade of brick and stone mason. On February 7, 1864, when but fourteen years of age, he enlisted in Company A, Nineteenth U. S. Regulars. He was at Chattanooga, at the battle of Janesboro, and also served clear through the reconstruction period until February, 1867, when he was honorably discharged. He returned to Michigan and then until he was twenty-six he traveled all over the United States. After this he did contract work in Michigan, Dakota, Minnesota and Chicago. In the latter place he built the Devoe block, four stories and basement, with all modern improvements, in six weeks' time. He followed the grocry and butcher business in Chicago for a time and then went to Michigan, returning to Chicago in 1895 he engaged in the same business until 1901. In that year he came to his present location, founding the town of Pollock. The postoffice had previously been at Tom Pollock's ranch up Rapid river. In addition to handling his general merchandise establishment, the hotel and the postoffice, he is deeply interested in mining and is recorder of his district. Mr. Adsley also, as occasion requires, preaches the gospel.

On February 21, 1895, Mr. Adsley married Miss Pauline, daughter of Samuel and Olive (Madden) Hollingshead. The father was a farmer, born in Ontario, Canada, and died in 1893. Mrs. Adsley was born in Oakland county, Michigan, in 1856, being an only child. Mr. Adsley has three brothers, Alfred, Schuyler, Almon. Two children, Ernest and Warren, have been born to this couple. Mr. Adsley is a member of the G. A. R., and he and his wife are devout members of the Baptist church. He was elected deacon of this denomination twice before he became a member. Mr. Adsley is also a Prohibitionist.

Warren Adsley, the son of our subject, enlisted in the Twentieth United States Regulars in the Spanish war. He had gotten as far as Fort McPherson, at Atlanta, Georgia, when he was stricken with the yellow fever. For weeks his life was despaired of. His mother hastened to his bedside and nursed him until he was able to be brought north. Later he came to Idaho, and in 1901 his father came, as stated above, and they have continued in business together since.

RUSSELL H. RICE is at the present time keeper of the poor farm, one mile north from Mt. Idaho. He was born in Washington county, Oregon, on December 18, 1852, the son of James E. and Nancy (Bear) Rice. The father was born February 4, 1812, in Canada, came to the United States when a child, crossed the plains in 1844, and took a donation claim in Washington county, where he raised stock and handled a livery. In 1861 he went to Douglas county, and in 1888 retired from business, dying the same year. Our subject was educated in Douglas county, where he was reared, and when twenty-two came to Idaho county and rode the range. He operated on Camas prairie and in the Salmon region, and in the spring of 1875 he returned to Oregon. In 1880 he came again to Camas prairie and rode for L. P. Brown, engaging in stock raising and farming for himself in 1888. This continued until 1897, when he received his present position. Mr. Rice still owns his stock place on the Salmon river, and is one of the prosperous men of the section.

On January 11, 1881, Mr. Rice married Miss Jannic M. Hogan, whose parents are mentioned in this volume elsewhere. Mrs. Rice was born February 25, 1862. One child has been born to this union, Gertrude Olive, born in Douglas county, Oregon, on October 4, 1882. Mr. Rice is a strong Republican, and is a member of the W. W.

ROY DEPARTEE is one of the leading mechanics of Grangeville, having doubtless the best shop in town and doing a business equal to the best. He does general blacksmithing and also wood work, and has demonstrated himself to be a skillful artisan and a man worthy of confidence.

Roy DePartee was born in Latah county, in April, 1875, the son of James C. and Elizabeth (Holden) DePartee. The father is a blacksmith and was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1845, and came west to Latah county in 1874, and then took land and farmed, but later followed his trade. The mother was born in Sioux City, Iowa. Our subject grew to young manhood in Moscow and learned the blacksmith trade with his father. Then they removed to Salt Lake City, and he there finished his education in a two years' course in the schools of that place. Then they all went to Pullman and the father operated the largest shop there for four years. Then our subject went to Asotin and worked at his trade for a year. Next we see him in Dallas, Texas, and later in St. Louis, working at his trade, and then he migrated to Montana. After that he was in Wallace for a year, then in Kendrick, and in 1896 Mr. DePartee opened a shop in Cottonwood. Subsequently to that venture we find him in Nezperce, later in Kendrick again, and in 1899 he came to Grangeville and engaged at his trade. In 1901 he opened his present shop and from the start he was favored with a good patronage, owing to his skill and dispatch in his craft.

In 1896 Mr. Departee married Miss Emma Cotter, from which marriage one child was born, Amy. In 1901 Mr. DePartee married Miss Agnes, daughter of Samuel and Amanda Hamill, who live near Grangeville. Mrs. DePartee was born in Iowa and has five brothers and three sisters. Mr. DePartee has one brother, W. J., and three sisters, Lorette Roland, Pearl, Maude. He is a Democrat and active in the political field and takes a keen interest in the affairs of the county and state.

ALLEN L. RIGGLE lives one-half mile west of Goff postoffice, and is one of the thrifty and successful young stock raisers of Idaho county. He was born in Thurman, Fremont county, Iowa, on November 21, 1875, the son of Enoch and Lavicia (Woodrum) Riggle. The father was a harness maker, born in Indiana in 1833, and now lives in Shenandoah, Iowa, in which state he was a pioneer. The mother was born in Ohio on November 22, 1836, and died in 1893. Her mother, Neaty Woodrum, died April 11, 1903, aged ninety. Our subject received a good high school education and learned the harness maker's trade in Iowa. Not being able to stand the indoor work, in 1894 he came to Meadows, Idaho, and took up mining in the old Jennings diggings, Ada county, continuing the same for two years. Then he worked for Thomas Clay at the Meadows, and in November, 1900, came to Goff and took up his present claim and began to raise cattle. On March 20, 1902, at Goff, Mr. Riggle married Miss Ella, daughter of J. O. and Sarah (Cox) Levander. The father is the promoter of Goff. Mrs. Riggle was born in Boise valley in 1877 and has the following brothers and sisters: Edward, Emma Hart, Anna Moyer, Homer, Virgil, Celestia. Mr. Riggle has six brothers and sisters: J. C., Elmer, Ezra, Clarence, Bert and Belle. Mr. Riggle is a member of the Eagles and is a strong Republican, being always at the caucuses and conventions. He has one of the best ranches on Race creek and can irrigate forty acres.

LYCURGUS VINEYARD. A leading attorney in northern Idaho, a man of capabilties and erudition that have placed him in a prominent positon in his profession, it is fitting that the subject of this article should be granted representation in the volume that chronicles the history of northern Idaho.

Lycurgus Vineyard was born in Clay county, Missouri, on May 17, 1846, being the son of Elisha and Eliza (Harrington) Vineyard. The father was born in Virginia in 1823. He was a prominent educator and cousin of B. W. Vineyard, who established the Pleasant Ridge College in Platt county, Missouri, and later was superintendent of public instruction in Kentucky. The father came to Oregon in an early day and was prominent in educational work there, where he now dwells. The mother was born in Missouri and died in 1850. Her father, who was a pioneer in Kentucky, fought Indians with Daniel Boone and lived to a good ripe age. The family were pioneers for generations back. Our subject was bereft of his mother when very young, and as his father came to the coast he was left with an uncle to be raised. This uncle was a veteran of the Mexican war and also of the Rebellion. Lycurgus was educated at William Jewell College and then went south and fought with the Confederates until the capture of General Kirby Smith's command, with whom he fought. After the close of the war, in May, 1865, Mr. Vineyard read law a year and then crossed the plains to Oregon. He studied under Judge Strahna and was admitted in 1868. He at once commenced practice and was also superintendent of schools. Then he removed to Corvallis and practiced until 1879. Two years were spent in California, and next we see him in the Wood river country. He participated in the mining excitement and then made Boise his headquarters and commenced practice. He was in several places in the southen part of the state, being called out by his practice; in 1899 he settled in Grangeville. Since that time Mr. Vineyard has been engaged in practice here and is one of the leading attorneys.

In 1888 Mr. Vineyard married Miss Sadie, daughter of Relf Bledsoe, a mining man and a native of Kentucky. He was an early pioneer of Oregon and Idaho, and was also sheriff of Ada county and also in Washington. He is now baiiiff in the supreme court in Boise and is a prominent man in mining circles. Mrs. Vineyard died in 1893, leaving two children, Richard K. and Sadie B., both with Mr. and Mrs. Bledsoe. Mr. Vineyard has passed all the chairs of the I. O. O. F. He is active in politics and is of the Jeffersonian Democrats. Mr. Vineyard is influential and a leading figure in the caucuses and conventions. He was a member of the constitutional convention in August, 1889.

It is of interest that Captain Bledsoe, the father-in-law of our subject, was a captain in the Rogue River war, and did some brilliant work, as is well known to those who are familar with the history of that struggle. At the time of the Civil war he was offered a colonelcy by President Lincoln in the regular army, but he refused.

MURAT W. STOKES located in Pollock, Idaho, in 1901, for the purpose of following his profession, that of dentistry, and also that he might have the opportunity of paying attention to mining in connection therewith. He is a skillful and finished dentist, having received his degree at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor in 1890. Dr. Stokes was born near Greenville, Michigan, on January 22, 1861, the son of Daniel E. and Lois A. (Godfrey) Stokes, natives of Michigan. The father was born in 1835, served in Company G, Tenth Michigan, during the Civil war, and still lives in the state of Michigan. The mother was born in 1840 and died October 28, 1899. She was of English-Irish extraction, and her husband was of English descent. Our subject remained with his father attending school until he arrived at manhood's estate, then took his degree from Ann Arbor, after which he located in Fremont, Michigan, and practiced dentistry for ten years. Then after one years' practice in Greenville he came west and located as stated above.

On October 19, 1879, Dr. Stokes married Miss Clara, daughter of Henry B. and Mary E. (Ammerman) Carter. Her father was a carpenter, born in New Jersey in 1837 and died in 1891. He was a '49er to California, but later returned east. The mother, a native of New Jersey, was born in 1839, and still lives, being of Dutch, Scotch and English extraction. Mrs. Stokes was born in New Jersey August 3, 1862, and has one brother, William, and one sister, Louisa. Dr. Stokes has one sister, Jennie Hanson. Four children have been born to this marriage: Blanche E. Hollingshead, in Pollock; Leonard D., at home; Leona E. Carothers, Dalton R. Dr. Stokes is a member of the Masonic order and is a Democrat. He is interested in the Rankin General Milling Company, which purposes to reduce ores by the nitric acid process. The process is unique and has already created quite a sensation in mining circles. They are now putting the process to a practical test in the development of mines on Rapid river. Mrs. Stokes and daughter were the first ladies in the Rankin camp, and Dalton R. was born there, 6,500 feet above the level of the sea. When the Doctor came in he traveled on snow shoes for twenty miles. Dr. Stokes is a man of good ability, genial and affable and is a real pioneer and an enterprising citizen.

JOHN T. HOLLENBEAK resides one mile south of Pollock postoffice, and is a very successful wool grower. He was born in Davis county, Iowa, in 1853, the son of Benjamin Q. and Melinda (Wilkeson) Hollenbeak. The father was born in Indiana and died in 1881. He was a pioneer in Iowa and came to Shasta county, California, in 1864. The mother was born in 1823 in Virginia and is still living, being of Scotch and Welsh parentage. Our subject came across the plains with his parents and assisted his father in general farming and cattle raising. When sixteen he went to do for himself by shearing sheep. He continued in that country until 1888, then sold out and came to Washington county, Idaho, and went to ranching. A decade was spent there and then, 1898, he sold out and came to Idaho county and located his present place. He started to raise sheep on a small scale and now has nearly two thousand five hundred head.

On July 29, 1877, in California, Mr. Hollenbeak married Miss Mary B., daughter of William and Sarah (Hutchison) Vestal. The father came to California in '51 and settled near Sacramento, where he still lives. He was born in 1823 in North Carolina. The mother of Mrs. Hollenbeak was born in Missouri in 1835. Mrs. Hollenbeak has six brothers and five sisters living and two dead. Mr. Hollenbeak has two sisters and five brothers. Eight children have been born to this marriage: Artie, born in 1878; Elgie Gotzinger, born in 1879; Cleveland, born in 1884; Loyola, born in 1890; William, born in 1897; Teddy R., born in 1901, and two deceased. Politically Mr. Hollenbeak has always been active and is an out and out Republican. He owns a half section of land in addition to his stock and has ascertained that many of the bluffs that are too steep for cattle and which raise the best quality of blue bunch grass, are admirably adapted for sheep raising. He had to pack all his supplies into the place until September, 1901, when a wagon road was built.

On January 28, 1902, while Mr. Hollenbeak was blasting out his irrigating ditch, a sack upon which he had some dynamite caught fire, and in attempting to stamp out the blaze he struck a piece of dynamite, which exploded and destroyed one of his eyes. Soon thereafter through sympathy the sight of the other eye was lost also. In this unfortunate condition Mr. Hollenbeak is still managing his business, his brave spirit and courage causing him to be cheerful and full of hope for the day when darkness shall be done away and there shall be all light.

JOHN HADORN, deceased. In mentioning the leading citizens of Idaho county, we are well aware that the subject of this memorial is to be classed high in the roll of honor. He was a business man of excellent ability, a citizen of patriotic spirit and a man of integrity. John Hadorn was born in Kiel, Germany, in 1844 and when eighteen came to this country with his parents. He stopped a time at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and then settled in Colorado, taking up the stock business. He did well there until 1880, when he made his way to Idaho county and engaged in the same industry on the Salmon. He took land across the river from Whitebird and there he met and later married Mrs. Virginia Brusha. The wedding occurred on March 4, 1886. Mrs. Hadorn was a leader in business herself and managed the four hundred and fifty acre ranch, thus leaving her husband free to attend to the stock. They did well, their wealth increasing until they are considered among the most prosperous people of the county. In March, 1899, pneumonia marked Mr. Hadorn and in a few days he was claimed by the angel of death, his spirit departing on March 15, 1899. The responsibility of their great business fell on Mrs. Hadorn, in which she soon proved herself equal to the emergency, conducting all so well that a good increase followed. On January 18, 1903, she bought the two hotels in the town of Whitebird and merged the properties, also bought the livery barn in connection with the hotel. After operating the business in a first-class manner, she rented the same and has moved back to the ranch. Mrs. Hadorn had previously married Jacob P. Brusha, April 28, 1878, and to that union three children were born, Harriett T. William, Martha J. Henly, Mary E. Canfield. To the second marriage two children were born, John M., and Archie, both at home. Mrs. Hadorn was born in Monroe county, Mississippi, April 7, 1857, her parents being George M. and Louisa T. Gallaway, mentioned in this work, as also are her brothers and sisters. Mr. Hadorn was a member of the Lutheran church and both himself and Mrs. Hadorn active Republicans.

ROLLIN C. BROWN is a prosperous farmer and stockman residing about two miles north from Mt. Idaho. He is the owner of a half section of fine land, well improved and stocked with a good band of cattle and some hogs and horses. Rollin C. Brown was born in Oregon on March 12, 1856, the son of Loyal P. and Sarah I. (Crusen) Brown, who are mentioned in another portion of this work. Hon. Loyal P. Brown is one of the best known and highly esteemed pioneers of all northen Idaho, and his memory is held dear in the hearts of all who knew him. His widow is no whit behind her husband in noble qualities and is one of the beloved people of the county. Our subject was raised in this county and here received his educational training, and in 1876 he commenced the occupation of raising cattle. He took a claim where he now lives and has added since one quarter more, which makes the excellent estate mentioned. At the outbreak of the war, he was shearing sheep, and upon hearing the tidings he turned the stock loose and went to Mt. Idaho. Mr. Brown took part in the struggle in standing guard at Mt. Idaho, in building fortifications and in fighting the Indians. Mr. Brown has two sisters, Ada Hovey, Daisy Smith.

On November 12, 1878, Mr. Brown married Miss Elizabeth J., daughter of Joseph and Lucinda (Slater) Harrison. The father was born in Yorkshire, England, on December 6, 1822, came to the United States in August, 1847, mined in Wisconsin until 1860, then came as one of the first pioneers to the Idaho country, being on the Clearwater during the war. He took land on the prairie and in 1877 sold his mining interests and devoted himself exclusively to farming until his death, on February 24, 1901. The mother was born in Missouri on March 1, 1831, married October 14, 1855, in Wisconsin, and died May 12, 1899. Mrs. Brown was born in Iowa county, Wisconsin, on November 5, 1860, and had the following brothers and sisters: Mary L., Rosetta E., Christopher J., Lilly, all deceased. Three children are the fruit of this union: Loyal P., born May 21, 1882; Rollin H., born September 12, 1887; Alonzo F., born January 15, 1895. Mr. Brown is a strong Republican, a man of excellent qualities and worth and is highly esteemed by all.

CAPTAIN LEVI CASTLE. Western energy, pluck and fixedness of purpose are typified in the subject of this biographical sketch. Levi Castle, captain of Company H, First Idaho Volunteers, in the Spanish war, is now an esteemed business man of Grangeville. He is distinctively a self-made man. He was born near Springfield, Illinois, on March 4, 1860, the son of James H. and Delilah A. (Kirby) Castle. The father was a native of New York and early moved to Illinois. He enlisted in the One Hundred and Eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861 and served until 1863, when he died from the effects of a severe wound. The mother was born in Kentucky of a prominent family and now lives with her son, Lyman W. Castle, in Santa Monica, California. Her father was a veteran of the Mexican war. After her husband's death, she struggled hard to keep the children together and finally in 1871 came to Douglas county, Oregon, where she succeeded in raising and educating them all. In 1875 she married Deloss Carr, and two years later they all moved to Idaho county. Mr. Carr was always a wise counsellor, a warm friend, and a devoted father to the children. Soon our subject was pushed out by an adventurous spirit to undertake for himself, and he at once began to manifest that talent which is useful in this world, namely, the ability to acquire good property. He has now one of the best farms on Camas prairie and is a prosperous and respected citizen of the county.

JOHN HADORN.

On November 25, 1882, Mr. Castle married Miss Martha J. Turpin, and one son was born to them. In April, 1884, the young mother was called hence by death, and the following October her infant was laid by her side.

On August 16, 1887, Mr. Castle married Miss Anna Belle, the accomplished daughter of Richard M. Henley, a pioneer of this country. Seven children have been born to this union: Edith, Alvin, Chester, Benjamin, Ethel, Lora, Lawton. Captain Castle was one of the first to come forward when the late war with Spain was on. He was a private in Company C of the Idaho National Guards at that time, and he rose rapidly from that position to first lieutenant, then to the command of Company E, with which he fought all through the Philippine campaign. He held the command of that company until transferred to the captaincy of Company H. Among the engagements may be mentioned: Manila, August 13, 1898; Paco, February 4, 1899; Santa Ana, February 5; Calocan, February 10 to 12; besieging Maloban, from February 28 to March 27; with Lawton to Santa Cruz, April 8 to 18, besides many others. He was mustered out with his regiment at San Francisco September 25, 1899. Returning home he settled on the farm until, to accord his children better educational facilities, he came to Grangeville, where he is engaged in mercantile pursuits. Captain Castle is an unswerving and strenuous Republican, and always on hand for the best interests of the community in political issues.

JOSEPH H. VICORY is one of the leading farmers and mining men of the vicinity of Mt. Idaho who has labored in these sections since the earliest days of mineral discovery and is a man of great experience and worth. He was born in Clark county, Ohio, on June 29, 1834, the son of Anson and Hannah (Treat) Vicory, born in New York state in 1787 and 1789, respectively. The father was a millwright and one of the first settlers of Ohio. He went thence to Indiana, Laporte county, in 1835, and died there in 1853. The mother accompanied her husband after marriage and died in Iowa in 1879. Our subject was educated in Indiana and there spent his childhood days. When he was seventeen he went to the prairies of Illinois and two years later returned to Indiana. In 1860 he crossed the plains to Shasta county, California, mining and farming on Pitt river. In 1862 he came to Linn county, Oregon, and the next spring came to Florence and then to Warren. Later he returned to Oregon and in 1863 brought a bunch of cattle here. He wintered in Lewiston and Walla Walla as occasion served and mined. In 1865 he was operating a hotel for John Silverwood. In 1867 Mr. Vicory mined in British Columbia and all of the leading camps of northern Idaho and the northwest. In the Indian outbreak of 1877 he did duty against the savages. He was messenger in various trying times and always showed courage and fortitude. In October, 1879, Mr. Vicory took his present land, a fine estate about one mile east from Mt. Idaho, and he has devoted his attention to farming and mining since. He has some valuable interests near Newsome and also has his farm well improved. Mr. Vicory has two brothers, Hiram and Levi.

On January 13, 1873, Mr. Vicory married Miss Lyda M., daughter of William and Julia A. (Bilyeu) Kinder. The father was born in Illinois on June 29, 1814, crossed the plains in 1852 to Douglas county, where he took a donation claim. In 1864 he removed to Linn county, where he died April 19, 1894. The mother was born June 13, 1825, in Illinois, and is now living in Linn county. Mrs. Vicory was born in Douglas county on April 24, 1856, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Alva, Lucinda A. Derr, Mary A. Brummer, Hannah Ray. Mr. and Mrs. Vicory have two children, Herick F., born December 10, 1873; Julia Brown, born June 21, 1875. Mr. Vicory and his wife are Democrats. Mr. Vicory was one of the four men to go to meet Pat Brice when he was bringing in Maggie Manuel.

D. C. VAN BUREN, manager and secretary of the Grangeville Electric Light & Power Company, is a young business man of energy and push and a progressive spirit which are dominated by sagacity and keen discrimination. He was born in Ingham county, Michigan, on December 14, 1864, the son of Martin and Cynthia (Dix) Van Buren, born in Michigan in 1837 and 1843, respectively, where they still live. The paternal ancestors were originally from Holland and were early settlers in New York. Our subject's grandfather was a pioneer in Michigan, settling there in 1830. His great-grandfather was a patriot in the war of 1812. Our subject's paternal grandmother was formerly Miss Wright and came from Yankee stock. Her father, Daniel Wright, was in the war of 1812 also. President Van Buren and the great-grandfather of D. C.

were cousins. Martin Van Buren, father of D. C., was in Company H, Fifteenth Michigan Infantry, under John A. Logan. The mother of our subject was from a New York family, who were pioneers in Michigan. D. C. Van Buren was reared in Michigan, and at the early age of seventeen taught his first school. He was successful and soon was in the state normal, whence he graduated in due time and then took up teaching in Montana, where he was superintendent of the schools in White Sulphur Springs for two years. Then he was superintendent of the city schools in Pocatello for two years. During these years Mr. Van Buren was making the subject of electricity a careful study, and he succeeded so thoroughly in mastering what is known of the subtle power that he was casting about for a place to start a plant. Grangeville presented the proper conditions, and in partnership with W. L. Kimmel he erected the first plant. This was completed on January 1, 1900, and one year later he bought out his partner and since that time has personally managed the business. In June, 1902, the Grangeville Electric Light and Power Company was incorporated, with Mr. Van Buren as manager, secretary and chief stockholder. They are now putting in a water power establishment on the Clearwater, six miles east from Grangeville, which will give them twelve hundred horse power, which they expect will furnish power and light to various places on Camas Prairie.

On July 6, 1902, at Grangeville Mr. Van Buren married Miss Lyda Castle, whose parents are dwelling in Iowa. She was born in that state in 1876 and has been engaged in teaching. She has two sisters and one brother. Mr. Van Buren has three sisters, Nellie, Marion, Lorena. Mr. and Mrs. Van Buren are active members in the Baptist church, and he is a trustee and prominent in Sunday school work. Mr. Van Buren is a strong advocate of progress in educational facilities and is a friend of good schools.

WILLIAM HOGAN is the owner and manager of the Hogan group of mines on the Ore Grande and much credit is due to his enterprise and skill in the development of the country and in bringing to the front good properties. He was born in Chippewa county, Wisconsin, on November 10, 1864, the son of John and Bridget (O'Hern) Hogan, born in Ireland in 1830 and 1832, respectively, and still living in Wisconsin. The father came to this country in 1848 and the mother came with her parents and was married in Ohio. Our subject received his education in his native state and until he was eighteen he remained with his parents. Then he took up the lumber business and in 1892 he went to Montana. He followed mining in various places for some time and in 1899 Mr. Hogan made his way to Idaho county. He located first on the Whitebird near the Salmon, and then explored the Buffalo Hump country. Later he came on to Elk City and here he went to prospecting with the happy result that he is now possessor of the promising and valuable Hogan group of mines. His brother promoted the mines and milling company on the Crooked river, and he has been prominent in mining since. Mr. Hogan has the following brothers and sisters: Mary Sheehy, Johanna, deceased, Patrick R., Michael, John C., Emilia Manning, James M., deceased, Thomas S.

On November 27, 1900, Mr. Hogan married Miss Luella, daughter of Albert and Louisa (Lane) DeBorde, who now live at York, Montana. The father was born in 1849 in Illinois, and the mother was born in Iowa on November 10, 1859, and was married in January, 1878. Mrs. Hogan was born in Nebraska on March 5, 1880. She has the following named brothers and sisters: Jesse, Gladys Williams, Leon, William, Mary, Athea, Carroll, Annie, Earl. On August 29, 1901, at Elk City, a daughter, Helen, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Hogan. They are members of the Catholic church and are of excellent standing in the community.

AARON FOSTER PARKER was born in the city of Wells, Somersetshire, England, on March 16, 1856, and was educated in the grammar schools of the city. At an early age he left the parental home and started on a seafaring career, which he pursued for six years, when increasing deafness compelled him to relinquish his adopted calling. His life on the high seas was mainly spent along the south Pacific coast, near the West India Islands and along Central America. In 1876 he left Liverpool for San Francisco, en route to Idaho. Arriving in Baker City he made his way into Idaho territory by the way of the old Brownlee ferry, on Snake river, below the mouth of the Powder, and for the following months engaged in mining and prospecting until the Indian war of 1877 compelled the residents of the mountains to go into the settlements. For the next few years Mr. Parker served the government in various capacities during the Nez Perces, Bannock and Sheep Eater campaigns. In 1880, after some years spent in mining in eastern Oregon, Mr. Parker took charge of the Nez Perces News, at Lewiston, but sold out in 1883 and joined the stampede then in progress to the Coeur d'Alene country, and was one of the first twenty-five men to invade the fastnesses of Pritchard creek. He served as deputy mineral recorder during the boom and was also postmaster at Eagle City, the first town projected during the rush. The following spring Mr. Baker started the Coeur d'Alene Eagle and continued its publication until the fall, when with the collapse of the mining boom, he left the camp. In 1885 he again assumed the editorial management of the Nez Perces News and continued it until June, 1886, when he commenced the publication of the Idaho County Free Press, which has ever since been one of the foremost advocates of the best interests of the state, and has been a power for good in all directions.

In his public capacity Mr. Parker has served as a member of the board of regents of the state university, and at the date of this writing is one of the Idaho state commission to the St. Louis exposition, from which, however, he expects to resign. In 1896 he was a prominent candidate before the Democratic state convention for the nomination for the governorship of Idaho, and has always been an unbending Democrat of the Jeffersonian school.

In 1890 Mr. Parker was married to Mary Scott Newman, of Omaha, Nebraska. Four children survive, two of them twin girls.

JAMES E. PERKINS is an industrious and successful agriculturist and stockman of Pollock. He was born on the Boise river, Idaho, on November 4, 1866, the son of Basil I. and Eliza (Williams) Perkins, and was the first white child born on the Boise river. The father was a stock raiser and a native of Iowa. He was murdered for his money in 1878 by a desperado in Pine valley, Oregon. In 1849 he came to California and in 1864 settled at Boise basin and was a volunteer in the Indian war of 1866-67. The mother was born in Kentucky in 1843, and her parents were pioneers in California. Our subject went with his parents to Umatilla county when young and three years later moved to the Grande Ronde valley, where they lived until 1878. Then they moved to the Payette valley, Idaho. Our subject was educated in these various places and also learned the barber trade. The mother had married in the meantime Mr. Thomas Vest. When he arrived at manhood's estate, James E. followed his trade and later went to the Indian valley country. In 1890 he came to the Salmon river and took up land. He and his brother secured the contract to furnish all the specimens for the Idaho state house museum at the Columbian Exposition and were successful in gathering a very fine collection. At the time of the opening of the Nez Perces reservation he took a squatter's right, which was sold later. Then he took land on Rapid river, which he recently sold. In 1897 Mr. Perkins married Miss Sophronia, daughter of James and Sarah Jaggers, who now live on the Clearwater in Nez Perces county. Mrs. Perkins, who was born in Illinois in 1880, received a good high school education. She has two brothers and one sister, George, Joseph and Chloe Riggs. Mr. Perkins has two brothers and one sister, Thomas, Frank and Rilla Clark. One child has been born to this marriage, Alma. Mr. Perkins is a Democrat and a good substantial citizen.

CHARLES F. BROWN devotes himself to farming and raising cattle and at the present time is dwelling on his estate about four miles east from Mt. Idaho. He was born in Covington, Kentucky, on June 14, 1856, the son of John I. and Clara E. (Smith) Brown, natives of Boston, Massachusetts. The father's ancestors were patriots in the Revolution. He crossed the plains with L. P. Brown in 1859 and settled near Roseburg, Oregon. In 1861 he packed merchandise into Elk and continued there until 1868 when he came to Mt. Idaho and later took land north of town, remaining there until his death, on October 11, 1874. The mother of our subject is still living on Camas prairie. Our subject came to Camas prairie in 1868 from Roseburg, Oregon, and finished his education at Seattle University, Washington, in 1870. In 1875 he went from here with a government pack train to Cheyenne, and there joined General Crooks to fight the Sioux Indians. After serving as pack master for General Crooks he was promoted to chief pack master and master of transportation for General McKenzie at Fort Clark, Texas; and later under General Lawton at Santa Fe.

He returned to Denver, then went to Wisconsin and later settled in Chicago. In 1885 he came to Camas prairie again and farmed. In 1892 he rented the Mt. Idaho hotel, later he bought the building and operated it until 1898. Then he bought the farm where he now lives and has given himself to raising stock. He has three hundred and twenty acres, an orchard thirty-five years old, a good bunch of stock and is prosperous. Mr. Brown has the following brothers and sisters: Lulu Swarts, Sidney B., Horace V., Lily M. Waggoner.

On December 25, 1883, Mr. Brown married Miss Jennie R., daughter of Andrew and Mary (Higgins) Manahan. The father was born in Ireland in 1814, fought in the Seminole war in Florida and died on May 3, 1880. The mother was born in Ireland on February 23, 1820, came to the United States in 1847, married the following year, and died July 10, 1902. Mrs. Brown was born in Waterloo, Wisconsin, October 31, 1862, and has the following brothers and sisters: Sarah A. Dunn, Mary C. Tool, Julia, Margaret, Ellen Reynolds, Alice, Elizabeth Higgins. Three children have been born to this union: Edna M., born November 29, 1885, in Chicago; John I., born February 4, 1887, in Idaho county; Helen M., born November 29, 1895. Mr. Brown is a Republican and belongs to the United Artisans. He and his wife are members of the Catholic church.

JAMES N. OLIVER is a leading mechanic of Grangeville and operates a blacksmith and wood working shop, where he enjoys a thriving patronage because of his skill and close attention to business.

James N. Oliver was born in Green county, Wisconsin, on September 8, 1854, the son of Milton and Kiziah (Haggard) Oliver. The father, born in Pennsylvania, was a pioneer in Missouri and fought in the Confederate army. He was severely wounded but survived the ordeal. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee and in 1871 passed to the world beyond. The family removed to Texas in 1863 and settled in Wise county and engaged in stock raising. Our subject spent the years there until 1872, gaining his education and learning the blacksmith trade from his father in the meantime. Then he went to Springfield, Missouri, and two years later came to Boise. He was with a regular wagon train of one hundred and eighty teams. Next we see him in Walla Walla and then in Pomeroy; in both places he wrought at his trade. He also spent some time farming. In 1886 he moved to Genesee and opened a shop, making the anvil ring to honest industry and business for nine years. He also operated a farm there. In 1895 he went to Juliaetta, then returned to Genesee and in 1898 Mr. Oliver removed to Grangeville and opened a shop, since which time he has been one of the leading mechanics of the place and is respected and of good standing.

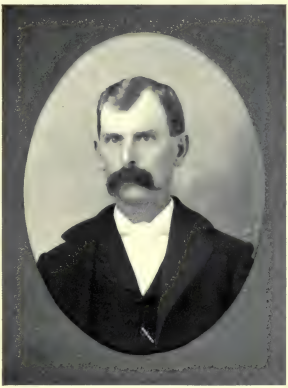
In 1874, while in Missouri, Mr. Oliver married Miss Mary, daughter of John Storky, a native of Mississippi. He was a Confederate soldier. Mrs. Oliver was born in Mississippi in 1860 and has one brother, Samuel and one sister, Sallie Smith. Mr. Oliver has one brother, Campbell B., in Walla Walla. Five children have been born to this marriage, James N., Ola, Eva, Grace, May. Mr. Oliver is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the K. P., and of the Redmen. He was one of the trustees of Genesee for years. Politically, Mr. Oliver is a Democrat, but does not seek personal preferment.

ISAAC ZEHNER was born in Lawrence county, Illinois, on February 20, 1853, the son of Joseph and Catherine (McEwen) Zehner. The father was born in Ohio, on January 9, 1829, and removed to Lawrence county in 1849. Here he farmed and worked at the carpenter's trade until 1867, when he removed to Stone county, Missouri, and bought one hundred and twenty acres of land, which he farmed for twelve years. In 1879 a move was made to Benton county, Arkansas, and in 1889 he came to Camas prairie and took a half section, devoting himself to farming and stock raising until his death on May 3, 1898. The mother was born in Illinois and her parents came from Ireland in early days to that state. Our subject was educated and reared in the various places where the family resided and remained with his parents until twenty-four. Then he went to Christian county, Missouri, rented land and three years later went to Benton county. He purchased land there and farmed until 1886, when he came to Pomeroy, Washington, landing August 11, 1887. The following November he came to Camas prairie and took a half section of government land. Mr. Zehner gave his attention to farming and raising stock until 1894, when he added the industry of threshing, handling a good outfit. In the spring of 1902, Mr. Zehner bought the roller mills in Denver and he now owns them in addition to his farming interests, while also he has a residence and lots in town. Mr. Zehner also raises many hogs and a goodly herd of cattle. He has the following brothers and sisters: Anna E. Reynolds, Benjamin, Owen, Lucy Mitchell, Melinda Thompson, William, Wesley, John.

On December 7, 1876, Mr. Zehner married Miss Corilla J., daughter of Thomas and Cecilia (Rhoades) Howard, born July 4, 1823, in Tennessee, and in 1825 in Kentucky, respectively. The father was a member of the home guards in the time of the war and he wrought at his trades of blacksmithing and carpentering. His death occurred on May 22, 1893. The mother died on September 12, 1865. Mrs. Zehner was born in Stone county, Missouri, on March 15, 1856, and she has the following named brothers and sisters: Mary E. Clayton, Della Fanning, Elizabeth Long, Thomas, John, Bertha Gill, William, Lucy, Robert, Fred and Maud. Three children have come to crown this marriage, Clementine Rhoades, born January 20, 1878; William H., born December 10, 1879; Hattie, born December 2, 1883. Mr. Zehner is a Jeffersonian Democrat and his wife is a true blue Republican. He is a member of the M. W. A. and Mrs. Zehner is a member of the Presbyterian church. This worthy couple have done much for the advancement and upbuilding of this county and section and are highly esteemed and of excellent standing, being people in whom are manifest the virtues of integrity, uprightness and real worth, while their capabilities are patent to all.

PETER H. READY. This well known pioneer and substantial citizen of Idaho county should truly be classed as one of the builders of the county as he has made a record that is enviable and which manifests great capabilities and real worth.



Peter H. Ready was born in Detroit, Michigan, in November, 1849, the son of John Ready. The father was born in Ireland and was a pioneer in Michigan. He married Miss Smith and in 1856 was called to pass the river of death. The mother died in 1854. Our subject was raised by his stepmother until quite a lad and then went to do for himself. He is a self made man and secured his early education by hard application. His first work was in the woods of Michigan and in 1864 he came to Denver, Colorado, and operated in the mines. In 1865 he came to Montana after his labors in Colorado, and participated in the excitement in the Alder gulch region adjacent to Virginia City. He remained there until 1869 and the following year came to Camas prairie. In 1872 Mr. Ready took a preemption claim and later a homestead adjoining it, where he gave his attention to farming and raising stock. Later Mr. Ready sold this land and has bought and sold considerable land in the county since. He has also given much attention to raising cattle with the farming and is now more retired from active business, dwelling in Grangeville. He is now loaning money and also interested in any kind of enterprise that commends itself to his judgment. Mr. Ready has one brother, John, and one sister, Mary A. Hickie. Formerly he was a member of the I. O. O. F. and was representative to the grand lodge but is not a member now. Mr. Ready was constable of his precinct and has always manifested a good interest in the affairs of the county and state; in political alliances is with the Republicans. He was an active participant in the Indian war and was at that time engaged in freighting from Lewiston to Mt. Idaho. His wagons were cap-

ISAAC ZEHNER.

PETER H. READY.

NATHANIEL B. PETTIBONE.

JOSEPH PFEUFER.

tured and robbed, he took his leaders and made for his ranch to secure arms when he discovered the Indians. In other parts of the struggle he was prominently connected and a full account of it is given in the work elsewhere. Mr. Ready is a man whose life of uprightness and good business enterprise has commended him to the people and he has hosts of friends from every quarter and the confidence and esteem of all.

NATHANIEL B. PETTIBONE is the senior member of the firm of Strecker & Pettibone, general merchants of Stites, and in his capacity he is well known; he is also prominent in the townsite company which located and started Stites, being now one of the leading and prominent men of the thriving town, which he established.

Nathaniel B. Pettibone was born in Warsaw, Illinois, on July 10, 1868, being the son of Cephas and Amelia (Belcher) Pettibone. The father died when our subject was four years old. The mother was a native of Cork, Ireland, and died in 1890, in Jacksonville, Illinois. Our subject was the youngest of ten children and was reared in Sciota, Illinois, where he graduated from the high school when he was nineteen. Then he went to New Mexico and mined for a time, coming thence to Idaho, where he wrought in Elk City district. He opened up the Iron Crown and paid dividends for a number of years. He has been interested in some of the leading properties of Idaho and is now owner and part owner of many good properties in Buffalo Hump, Thunder Mountain, Elk, and other districts. He gave himself to mining until 1900 and then organized the townsite company which located and started the town of Stites. He opened the first business house in the town in 1900. Then Mr. Pettibone formed a partnership with Mr. Strecker and they have operated a general merchandise store since. Mr. Pettibone is also in partnership with James Jump and Len McGill, both of Peck, and together they built the telephone line to Grangeville. Mr. Pettibone has four brothers and one sister living: Henry, Hurley, Lee C., Rufus, Ella Mecham.

At Mount Idaho, on July 7, 1897, Mr. Pettibone married Miss Mary E., daughter of Franklin and Elizabeth (Shearer) Shissler, who are mentioned in this volume. Mrs. Pettibone was born in Mount Idaho, on July 27, 1879, and has the following brothers and sisters: Frederick, Harry, George, John, Susie Ingram. Two children have been born to this couple, Franklin T., Levi N. Mr. Pettibone's father was in the Mexican war and received a wound at Buena Vista. Mr. Pettibone is a member of the I. O. O. F., Stites Lodge, No. 87, also of the W. W. Mr. Pettibone is one of the reliable and substantial business men of the county, is respected and esteemed by all and is enterprising and up-to-date; he and his excellent wife are leading members of society and have the good will and admiration of a large circle of friends.

JOSEPH PFEUFER is a leading merchant of Grangeville and has for nearly a decade conducted a successful business here, has made for himself a first-class standing and is a man of ability and stirring energy.

Joseph Pfeufer was born in Comfort, Texas, on April 28, 1859, the son of Veit and Eugenia (Jocke) Pfeufer, natives of Bavaria and born in 1829 and 1834, respectively. The father died in November, 1902. He was educated for the priesthood but changed his mind and came to the United States and took up stock raising in Texas. He sympathized with the Union in the Civil war and rendered it material aid. He settled in Texas in 1854 and became a prominent man in his section, both as a leader and an educator. The mother still lives in Texas and is a woman of culture and excellent education, coming from a literary family. Her father was a prominent editor in Bavaria. Our subject grew to manhood in Texas and received his early education there, being also well trained by faithful instruction from his parents. He followed stock raising with his father until he was twenty-three and then took up the merchant's life. In 1891 he came west and visited various sections, returning home in 1893. The next year he came to Grangeville, opened a general merchandise business and here he has remained since, devoting himself to his business with an assiduity and skill, coupled with uprightness and kind treatment to all, which have brought to his door a thriving patronage. Mr. Pfeufer is one of the substantial men and has always labored for the advancement and growth of the town and country.

In the fall of 1894, occurred the marriage of Mr. Pfeufer and Miss Barbara, daughter of C. and Anna Wunder, natives of Bavaria and now living in Seattle. The father was a pioneer of the Pacific coast, settling in Seattle in 1875; he conducted a furniture business until his death. Mrs. Pfeufer, who was a teacher, was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1869 and has two sisters, Rosa and Gertrude. Mr. Pfeufer has one brother and two sisters: Alfred, Rosa, Lina. Two children have been born to this couple, Philip and Rosa. Mr. Pfeufer is a member of the I. O. O. F. He is an active Republican. Mrs. Pfeufer belongs to the Catholic church and Rebekah Lodge. In addition to his business, Mr. Pfeufer owns the Evergreen mines on the Clearwater, and also other property.

LINCOLN L. PHILLIPS has spent most of his life in northern Idaho and is practically a product of the section. At present he is dwelling in Grangeville and owns and operates a wood saw and a merry-go-round. He is an engineer and pays especial atention to his trade in various capacites. He was born in Blue Earth, Minnesota, on February 22, 1868, the son of William and Fanslina (Merrill) Phillips. The father was born in New York in 1827 and was a pioneer in both Minnesota and Idaho. He enlisted in the Civil war from Minnesota and participated in the wars with the Sioux under General Sibley; in one engagement they fought three days and were entirely surrounded by the savages. He is living at present in Lewiston. The mother of our subject was born in New York in 1837 and died in 1875. Our subject came to Nez Perces county with his parents in 1876 and here was educated and grew to manhood. The father was a railroad engineer and our subject learned the art from him. They settled near Genesee, and during the Indian troubles went to Lewiston. Our subject came to Grangeville in 1890 and since that time he has continued here, following his trade and doing machine work.

On November 25, 1891, Mr. Phillips married Olive Short, the daughter of John and Amelia (Combs) Short. The father was a miner born in Ohio and a soldier in the Civil war. He was wounded in the service and died in 1871. His widow died in 1887. She was a native of Connecticut. Mrs. Phillips was born in Utah in 1867. Mr. Phillips has one sister, Mrs. Alice J. Cox. The following named children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Phillips: Emma, Josephine, George, Williams, Clark, John. Mrs. Phillips has one son, Frank O'Conner, by her first husband. Our subject and his wife adhere to the Seventh Day Adventist denomination. Politically he is a Republican and active in the interests of advancement and progression.

WILLIAM VON BERGE is one of the substantial and active men of Grangeville and has displayed excellent ability to make a thriving and prosperous business from a small start. He is handling the brewery plant which he owns, while he also has five hundred and fifty acres of land in the fertile sections of the prairie. Mr. Von Berge also conducts a brewery saloon in Grangeville and one in Denver. He was born in Cook county, Illinois, on March 16, 1852, the son of Frederick and Magdalena (Rodehorst) Von Berge, natives of Germany. The father was born in 1801, settled where Chicago now is in 1846, and died in 1891 in Idaho county, whither he had come in 1880. The mother was born in 1814 and died in 1880. Our subject grew to manhood in Illinois, where he was educated. He worked with his father and brother in the omnibus business and were getting wealthy and had a a fine business but street car opposition broke them up and from 1874 to 1878 they lost over one hundred thousand dollars in clean cash. Our subject came west in 1878 with a capital of three hundred dollars which he had gathered from the wreck. He took land on Camas prairie and now own the fine estate mentioned. He at once went to work raising the fruits of the field and stock which continued until 1889. In 1887, Mr. Von Berge saw a first class opportunity to start a brewery in Grangeville. To see for him was to act and in 1889 the business had assumed such proportions that he retired from his farms and rented them to give his entire attention to the business in town. He is now placing in his plant an additional steam engine and an ice machine.

In 1887 Mr. Von Berge married Kate Smith, a native of Germany and they have the following named children, Amil, Rudolph, Esie, all attending school. Mr. Von Berge has one brother, J. H. Von Berge, in this county. He is a member of the Red Men and in politics is a stanch Republican. He was nominated by his partly for county commissioner and only lost the day by eleven votes, but the entire ticket was defeated.

HON. HANNIBAL F. JOHNSON is a miner and a poet living ten miles up Rapid river from Pollock postoffice. He was born in Owen county, Indiana, on November 20, 1830, the son of Gabriel and Martha (Jackson) Johnson. The father, who is a physician, born in Kentucky in 1803 and died in 1886, came to Oregon in 1853 and settled near Eugene. His people were patriots in the early American wars. His mother, who was born in Kentucky in 1803 and died in 1881, had accompanied her husband across the plains. Our subject's parents built the first house in Carthage, Missouri, where this son grew to manhood and received his education. He studied medicine with his father but not liking the profession abandoned it. He crossed the plains with his parents, mined in southern Oregon and fought in the Rogue river war in Company E, under Captain Robert Williams. After his first term of enlistment, while he and five others were returning to re-enlist, they were surrounded by one hundred and twenty-five savages; they all succeeded in escaping but one poor unfortunate who was killed. In 1858 Mr. Johnson mined in the Fraser river country, in 1862 he was in Florence and in the same year participated in the first Buffalo Hump excitement. He then went to Warren and thence to Walla Walla and with his cousin and cousin's partner, Daniel Jackson, bought a pack train and took a load to Auburn, Oregon. After this he packed to the Boise basin, over which road he freighted until 1865. In the fall of '65 he loaded twenty-eight animals and went to Blackfoot, Montana. He sold out and went to mining on Carpenter's bar and in California gulch. He says that Mr. Edwards took out $150,000, and the Chaney brothers $400,000 from Confederate gulch. In 1868 he went to Leon creek, then to Robinson bar on the Salmon after which he returned to Shasta, from thence to Willamette valley where he farmed until 1884. Then he came into the Seven Devils country and located the Golden Eagle from which was exhibited the richest ore at the World's Fair. He then made another trip to the Willamette valley, and stayed with his father, who died in 1886. Subsequent to that he returned to the Seven Devils country and in 1892 was elected senator from Washington county by an overwhelming majority. That same year he located the Ablative and Fisher mines from which he has taken assays from twenty dollars to twenty-one thousand, three hundred and eighty-four dollars per ton. He has been offered thirty-six thousand dollars for the claims but refused it. Mr. Johnson has the following brothers and sisters: Mary J. McDaniel, Mahalia Jackson, David A., Pleasant W., Sarah E. Rampy, Pamelia Edwards. Mr. Johnson is a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a free lance in politics. We wish to remark also, as is well known, that Mr. Johnson has achieved considerable distinction as a poet. He is familiarly known as the "Poet of the Seven Devils," and his productions have found their way into some of the leading journals of the country. Mr. Johnson relates that in the early days when men made rich strikes some very ludicrous things occurred. He remembers a man named Wiser who struck it rich in Florence, taking out six thousand dollars and more a day for a time, as being an example of this class. Mr. Wiser hurried to Portland with his new wealth, chartered a ship, hired singers at eight dollars a day and struck for the open seas. Later Mr. Johnson saw the same man packing his blankets back to Florence to seek dust for a grubstake.

JAY O. RHOADES is one of the most prominent stockmen on Salmon river and lives at his fine ranch on Rapid river, a mile above its mouth. Mr. Rhoades was a native of Missouri, having been born in Mercer county on October 31, 1865, and is a son of Daniel B. and Elizabeth (Odneal) Rhoades. The father was a farmer and a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1834. He early emigrated to Missouri and was one of the pioneers of Mercer county. He went to California in 1851, at the age of seventeen, and entered mines, where he speedily acquired a fortune Thence he returned east, via the isthmus and went to Missouri where he invested heavily in land, owning three thousand acres at one time. In 1877, he crossed the plains to the scene of his first mining work, remained there a short time and in 1881 went to Spokane county, Washington. At present he is living with his son Jay. The mother's folks were also pioneers of Mercer county and originally came from the eastern states. She departed from this life in 1878. Our subject received a good education in the schools of Missouri and at the age of seventeen began working for himself. For several years he busied himself in various occupations, but in 1884 commenced driving stage between Mount Idaho and Lewiston, a position which he filled with credit for four years. Then he entered the stock business, taking up land on Camas prairie near Cottonwood and herding his cattle on this fine range. In 1896 the settlement of the reservation forced him with others to seek a less popoulated district, and after traveling through Montana and other famed stock regions, he decided to settle on the Salmon and accordingly, with C. E. Holt, bought the old Hicky McLee place and on his own account took up his present home on Rapid river. Since 1897 he has lived on the latter place, which he has placed in a fine state of development. His herd of cattle numbers between 1,000 and 1,200. Mr. Rhoades is very sanguine over the resources and prospects of his home and believes that there is no finer fruit, stock, alfalfa and minfng section to be found than that on the Salmon. He is one of the largest stock owners in central Idaho and has shipped as many as 1,500 cattle at one time.

July 1, 1900, marks the date of his marriage to Maggie Clay, whose father, H. H. Clay, is a well known stockmen, farmer and freighter living on Race creek. He is a native of Washington county, Ohio, where he was born October 8, 1853. Her grandfather, Nicholas, also a son of Ohio, the place and date of his birth being Columbiana county, January 1, 1825, was a pioneer of Montgomery county, Kansas, a veteran of the Civil war. His father was a patriot of 1776. The maiden name of Mrs. Rhoades's mother was Rebecca Irwin, and the date of the daughter's birth is 1880, the place being Oregon. Mr. Rhoades's brothers and sisters are as follows, Dr. R. R., Lafayette D., Lee, Lon, Erie Underwood, Oscar, Pollock; two half-sisters, Bertha Howe, and Maud, and one half-brother, Bert. Mr. and Mrs. Rhoades' home has been brightened by the advent of a daughter, Thelma Ruth, who is five months old. He is a member of the W. of W., and a very active and prominent Democrat, attending all the caucuses and conventions of his party. At present he is serving as a member of the central committee. Successful and respected, Mr. Rhoades is happy in his fine home beside the Salmon and takes life philosophically.

JOHN O. LEVANDER, who is postmaster and merchant at Goff, on the Salmon river, is one of the earliest pioneers and formost men of Idaho and is intimately acquainted with all the early excitements and the inception of government in the territory. He was born in Sweden, on December 27, 1837, the son of Gustave and Jane (Kay) Levander. The father was a civil engineer, born in Flanders, France, and went to Sweden with Bernadotte, who became King Charles XIV of Sweden and Norway. He was closely associated with the king and held a high position in the army. The mother of our subject was born in London, in 1796, June 24, and is now deceased, as is also her husband. Her father was a lieutenant in the British army. Our subject was educated in Sweden and after his college days he went to sea with his brother-in-law, when he was fourteen. When sixteen he came to the United States and went to Illinois to visit his brother, who was a California miner, having dug gold on Spanish bar, American river. Our subject studied still further in Illinois and became a bookkeeper, then went to Iowa and in 1859 he fitted out six yoke of oxen and started for Pikes Peak but came on to the Willamette valley. He had a hard fight with the Snake Indians at the Malheur river, near the present agency. Later Mr. Levander drove cattle to California, returning to Douglas county and later went to Pierce at the time of the excitement. He mined for Captain Pierce, who discovered the diggings, and then went to Boise basin. He was on the stage with Governor Wallace and attended the first county convention ever held in Idaho, at Pierce; he refused to act as delegate to the territorial convention at the Meadows. At Boise, Mr. Levander freighted and also located a ranch. Three years later he quit freighting and raised stock. In 1884, he removed to the Meadows for his wife's health and there raised stock. He was county commissioner for one term and was a member of the first state convention. In the spring of 1893 he moved to his present location where he secured a postoffice and established a mercantile house, and a road station. Mr. Levander was prominent in getting the wagon road to the little Salmon, building part of the road by his own contributions. He has an excellent stopping place, and is a popular resident of the county.

In 1864, at Boise, Mr. Levander married Miss Sarah E. Cox, of Gentry county, Missouri; this was the first marriage celebrated in the Boise valley and occurred in a tent. Mr. Cox was a pioneer of Oregon. Mrs. Levander has the following brothers and sisters, John, Jesse, Oliver, Elvira Prosser and Martha Teal. Mr. Levander is the youngest of this family and his only brother, Charles A., died recently. Mr. Levander and his wife are members of the Christian church. He is a strong Democrat and from the early days of the 'sixties has always been active in political matters, always being a delegate to the conventions. In 1882 he was chairman of the Washington county convention.

IVAN D. LYON is a well known business man of Cottonwood and is now in partnership with Jesse Dixon, ex-sheriff of Idaho county, operating the Elite Resort, a well appointed saloon. Mr. Lyon has seen much experience in the frontier regions of the United States, especially in the cattle towns and in the cattle business; he has shown himself a man of energy, industry and sound principles.

Ivan D. Lyon was born in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, on September 15, 1844, being the son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Weibly) Lyon, natives of Pennsylvania. The father was born in 1797, and died in 1893. He was a machinist and served in the Mexican war. He descended from German parentage. The mother died in 1844. Our subject grew to the age of fifteen and received his education in the native place. On the fifteenth day of August, 1862, he joined Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and immediately went to the front under General Greeg, Colonel Robinson, and Captain Day, and as his record will abundantly testify, he was at the front all through the awful struggle. Among the many battles in which he fought, we may mention, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Pittsburg Landing, Gettysburg, Cedar Creek, the capture of Richmand, Sussex Courthouse, and numerous others. He was captured at Gettysburg and held three days. He was wounded at Malvern Hill and had a horse shot from under him. He was mustered out between the sixth and the tenth of June at Lynchburg and received his discharge at Fortress Monroe. He immediately went home and in the spring of 1866, went to Kansas, thence to Texas and for twelve years rode the range and was personally familiar with the early cattle towns and the ways of the west; he knew Buffalo Bill, Wild Bill and other border celebrities. Mr. Lyon also engaged in the cattle business himself and in 1878 went to Arkansas and handled a large ranch for six years. Then came a trip to Idaho and in 1884 he settled in Cottonwood, where he raised cattle for several years and also engaged in the livery business; in 1900 he purchased his present business.

In 1877, in Arkansas, Mr. Lyon married Miss Josephine Wood and to them were born one son and four daughters: Lee, deceased, Ollie Robbins, Myrtle, Laura, Minnie. On October 20, 1893, Mrs. Lyon was called from her home and family by death. On November 27, 1902, Mr. Lyon married Mrs. Alexandra E. (Kelly) Woods, who was born in London, England. She has two children by a former marriage, Charlie and Gertrude. Her father, John Kelly, Esquire, was a publisher at 1617 Paternoster Row, London. This publishing business was bequeathed to him by alderman Kelly, Lord Mayor of London. He walked into London with a pack on his back. His wife was Caroline Child. This daughter was born on the day King Edward VII married Princess Alexandra, of Denmark, March 10, 1863. Mrs. Lyon was highly educated, being a graduate of Queen's College, London, after which she spent two years in Germany and one in Paris, taking special courses in music, in which art she is highly talented. In addition to these accomplishments, Mrs. Lyon is a fluent linguist, speaking German, French and English. She came to the United States in 1892. Mr. Lyon is a strong Democrat and an influential man in his party. Although his services amply demand it, still he has never applied for a pension from the government.

WILLIAM H. SHORT lives two and one-half miles up the big Salmon river from Riggings and devotes his attention to mining and stockraising. He was born in Massachusetts, August 16, 1833, the son of Henry Summer and Clarissa (Richmond) Short, natives of Massachusetts. His father was a machinist and also a minister in the Baptist church. The ancestors of the family were patriots in the Revolutionary war. The Old Bay state remained the home of our subject until he was twenty-one years old, during which time he had received a good education and learned the trade of a ship carpenter. In October, 1853, he crossed the Isthmus of Panama to California and mined in Placer, Siskiyou, Klamath and Trinity counties. In 1863 he went to Canyon City, Oregon; thence to The Dalles and the next year came to Warren and engaged in mining. He also delved for gold in Florence and then returned to Warren until 1872 when he journeyed to British Columbia, and mined three years. He spent three winters in Sitka, one winter in Victoria, and one in Portland. In 1876, when he was going to Sitka to winter, the the rest of his party went to San Francisco in the ship Northern and all were lost at sea. In the fall and winter of 1877 we find him in Santa Barbara, California. The next year he returned to Florence and mined. In the fall of 1879 he came down the Big Salmon and bought his present mining claims, which he has worked since. Late years Mr. Short has raised considerable stock. He was part owner in one mine in Warren that produced three thousand dollars a week, for some weeks. He says Bemis, Sanderson Rice and Culver took out more gold than any one else in the early days.

IVAN D. LYON.

In 1893 Mr. Short married Miss Samantha A., daughter of Thomas B. and Catherine (Cartwright) Curtis. The father was born in Tennessee and lives in Meadows, Idaho, where also the mother is living. Mrs. Short was born in Arkansas in 1876 and has five brothers, Charles, James, Richard, Arthur, Samuel. Mr. Short has two brothers, James M. and George R. Two children are the fruit of this marriage, Martha, aged nine, and Clarissa, aged seven. Mr. Short is a Republican and votes it straight. He has one hundred and sixty acres of placer ground and other property.

In the fall of 1865 Mr. Short, James Stratton and Michael Deasy bought the claim where Mr. Short now lives. They started down to John Goff's place, where Goff is now built, and it being the year of the deepest snow known, there were many slides. Messrs. Stratton and Short were in the lead and they slipped down a little pit and just then a snow slide came that caught James Stratton and carried him nearly across the Salmon river. He arose to the top of the snow, faced and then sank to rise no more.

RICHARD L. RIGGINS is proprietor of the Riggins Hotel, conducts a blacksmith shop, runs a feed barn and is postmaster at Riggins, Idaho. He was born near Grangeville, Idaho, May 21, 1876. His father, John T. Riggins, a native of Missouri, was a farmer and blacksmith, who came to Camas prairie in 1869. The mother of Richard was Asenath (Wilmot) Riggins. The native place of our subject was the scene of his early studies and there he remained until manhood's estate was reached. He spent two years in the state university at Moscow, preparing himself for a civil engineer, but owing to stringent financial conditions he was obliged to abandon his project before receiving his degree. In 1895 he went to driving stage on the Salmon route; then farmed and freighted until March, 1901, when he came to his present location, secured a postoffice and started a town.

On June 13, 1897, Mr. Riggins married Miss Ethel Jones. Her parents, Henry S. and Nancy (Crow) Jones, resided near Tolo and were natives of Virginia. Her father served in the Confederate army and died July 29, 1901. The mother is still living. Mrs. Riggins was born in Oregon in 1878 and has three brothers and one sister. Mr. Riggins has one sister and three brothers: Allie McCready, Fred, Arthur, Carl. One child, Henrietta, has been born to our subject and his wife.

Mr. Riggins is a member of the K. of P., is a justice of the peace and in politics is a Republican. He hauled the first wagon load of freight ever brought into Florence for Fitzgerald, the discoverer of the Ozark mine. Mr. Riggins is a member of the Pioneer Association at Grangeville and is a good and substantial man.

ALBERT F. NURSS is the well known ice man of Grangeville, who also owns a good farm, which is the spot on which Howard erected headquarters in 1877 and a part of the edifice is used by Mr. Nurss as a residence. He was born in New York in 1855, and is the son of Jard and Hulda J. (Blakesley) Nurss. The mother was born in 1836 and died in 1902. The family removed to Illinois when our subject was young and he was raised mostly by his relatives. When twenty-three he went to Kansas and worked for a year, then he went to Nebraska and one year later found him in the famous Wood river country of southern Idaho. When he came here in the fall of 1882, there was still excitement regarding the Indians. After renting land and selling the crop he wrote to the land department of the United States regarding this famous camp Howard and finding it subject to entry he took it as a preemption and later filed a homestead right on it. For seventeen years Mr. Nurss has been in the ice business in addition to handling his farm, now having a regular wagon and delivers to the people of Grangeville, enjoying a thriving trade.

In Illinois, in 1877, Mr. Nurss married Miss Nora, daughter of J. M. Davis, a pioneer of Illinois. Mrs. Nurss was born in Illinois in 1860 and has two brothers and three sisters, who are all living in the east except one, in Idaho county, who came as a pioneer here in the early sixties. Mr. Nurss has five brothers and sisters all deceased. The following named children have been born to them: Roy E., Mary McLean, Dora, Gracie Bickford, Allen, Harvey, Effie. Mr. Nurss is a member of the W. of W., of the I. O. O. F., and is a Democrat. He was a member of the school board for seven years. Mrs. Nurss is a devout member of the Baptist church.

EDGAR W. LEVANDER lives at Goff, Idaho, where he does a general farming business, also mines, manages a ferry and runs a blacksmith shop. Mr. Levander is a busy man, one of the prosperous citizens of the county and in excellent standing with all who know him. He was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, on April 16, 1869, the son of John O. and Sarah (Cox) Levander. The father is the postmaster at Goff and devotes his attention to mining. He was a pioneer to Oregon in 1861 and the following year mined at Oro Fino and in 1865 in the Boise basin. He is a native of Sweden and settled in his present location in 1894. The mother was born in Missouri and still lives at Goff. Our subject was but an infant when the parents moved to Idaho the last time, and spent the first fifteen years of his life in the Boise basin, where he gained his education. Then they moved to the Salmon meadows in Washington county, where he assisted his father in handling cattle. When he became of age he commenced operations independently with a fine start of a good bunch of cattle. In 1893 he came up the Salmon and took a claim near Slate creek, where he devoted himself to general farming and stock raising until 1899, in which year he came to Goff and put on the ferry that he is now operating here. Mr. Levander also took a mining claim and built a blacksmith shop.

On July 2, 1891, Mr. Levander married Miss May, daughter of John A. and Minerva (Whited) Richardson. The father was a stockman and a native of Illinois. He was one of the early pioneers to the coast and mined in Florence, Warren and other Idaho camps. His death occurred in 1900. The mother is still living. Mrs. Levander was born in Baker county, Oregon, in 1872 and has four brothers and one sister: George, Clarence, Harland, Clara, Wallace. Mr. Levander has the following brothers and sisters: Emma, Eva, Anna, Homer, Ella, Vergil, Celestia. Mr. and Mrs. Levander have four children: Edith, Edna, Leroy, Hazel. In political matters our subject is a strong Democrat. In addition to his holdings at Goff he has a fine ranch of one hundred and sixty acres near Slate creek besides other property.

ALFRED H. BISHOP is one of the prominent mining men of Idaho county, being president of the Mikado Mining and Mill Company and also interested in many other propositions in Florence and other districts, the properties including both placer and quartz. He was born in Carroll county, Indiana, on October 27, 1839, the son of Walker H. and Rachel (Clark) Bishop. The father was born in Alabama in 1812 and died in 1897. He was a pioneer in Iowa in 1853, Butler county, and participated in the Black Hawk Indian war. He was sheriff of Butler county for twelve consecutive years. The mother was born in Ohio in 1815 and died in 1888. She came of Irish ancestry and her father was born in Ireland. Our subject went to Butler county with his parents, and in that Iowa home he secured his main education and also learned the art of the carpenter and builder. In 1861 he pressed to the front for the defense of his country and enlisted in Company I, Third Iowa Infantry, on June 10. He went in as private and served until February 10, 1863, and received an honorable discharge. He enlisted at once in Company G, Thirty-second Iowa, where he served until July 29, 1865. He was promoted to sergeant in 1863 and to first sergeant soon after. Mr. Bishop served faithfully through many battles and was active during the whole period. Following the war he returned to his home and remained in Iowa until 1874, traveled around some and went to Dakota and in 1881 he located land at Dayton, Columbia county, Washington. Mr. Bishop farmed and did contracting there until 1895, when he made his advent to Idaho county. He at once gave his attention to mining and at this industry he has continued since. In 1900, Mr. Bishop was elected county commissioner on the Democratic ticket and gave a good administration.

In 1862, Mr. Bishop married Miss Rose Poisall, who was born and raised in Richmond, Virginia. Her father, Peter Poisall, was chosen as a juryman to try John Brown, he having removed to Harper's Ferry about the time of the John Brown raid. But Mr. Poisall refused to act. To Mr. and Mrs. Bishop there were born three children, Bell M. Skelton, in Mt. Idaho; Bessie Nesbon; Harry, an electrician in Alaska. Mr. Bishop has the following named brothers and sisters, William C., Charles, Philander, Sophia Sherburn. Mr. Bishop is a man of excellent qualifications, has had a large experience in the affairs of the business world and is one of the substantial and leading citizens of the county.

JUDGE JOSEPH K. VINCENT, ex-probate judge of Idaho county and one of the well known and leading figures in the northern part of the state for years, is now dwelling at Mt. Idaho, where he enjoys the distinction and prestige due for years of meritorious service and an honorable upright walk. He was born in Salem, Massachusetts, on June 26, 1822, the son of Joseph and Lettie (Pease) Vincent, natives of the Bay state also. The father, who was a sailor, was murdered in the West Indies. The mother died in Massachusetts. The ancestors of both sides of the house were of the stanch Yankees who formed and sustained this great nation. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place, received educational training from the public schools, and also learned the art of printing and carpentering there. In 1849 he came to California, remaining until January, 1855, then he went to the Sandwich Islands, thence to Oregon, where he mined and then joined the volunteers to fight the Rogue river Indians. The savages held him captive five days before he was rescued when it was found that his feet and legs were badly frozen. At the time of the Civil war he enlisted again and was stationed at Ft. Lapwai where he did duty for three years and three months. In 1865 we find him in Lewiston, then he was post sutler and later police judge at Lewiston. At the time of the Indian war he volunteered and fought under General McConville and later was provost judge under one of the commanders. In 1888, Mr. Vincent came to Cottonwood and operated the hotel for a couple of years and in June, 1891, came to Mt. Idaho and here operated a hotel for six years. Here he was elected probate judge for two years and was nominated again later but went down with his party. For forty years Mr. Vincent has been justice of the peace and was bailiff of the court for several years.

On December 25, 1865, Mr. Vincent married Miss Elizabeth M., daughter of Alonzo and Rachel (Bliss) Leland. The father was an old Oregon pioneer and was editor and postmaster in Portland for years. He came to Lewiston in 1861 and was a prominent man there. He was born in Vermont and died in March, 1898. Mrs. Leland was born in Rhode Island and died in 1895. Mrs. Vincent was born in Pawtucket, Rhode Island. She has one brother, Charles F., in Grangeville. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vincent, Joseph S., William H., in Mt. Idaho; Alonzo P., in Seattle; Lettie R., in California; Edward S., in Grangeville; Charles F., deceased; Harry G., Alida M., Tamany C., all in Grangeville. Mr. Vincent belongs to the G. A. R., and he and his wife affiliates with the Episcopalian church. He is an active Republican and an influential spirit in the political realm. Mr. Vincent had the contract to transfer the bones of the soldiers to Walla Walla. The remains were exhumed and transferred in the fall of 1890. He believes fifty-six soldiers and three officers were killed in the Indian war.

WILLIAM J. WILSON, a miner at Freedom postoffice on the Salmon, is one of the well known and highly esteemed veterans and pioneers of this country. His career shows ability, courage and integrity and he has ever manifested that uprightness and manliness which commend him to all lovers of good. He was born in Londonderry, Ireland, May 24, 1819, the son of John and Martha J. (Wilson) Wilson, natives of Ireland and Scotland respectively. The father was a stockman on Belahand mountains and he and his wife came to New Brunswick in 1829, both being long since deceased. Our subject was reared and educated in the North American home and in due time was apprenticed to a marble cutter. Just before he finished this trade he came to the United States and enlisted in Company E, Second Missouri, Light Artillery, in 1863, and was mustered out at Washington at the time of the grand review in 1865. Mr. Wilson is rightly a great admirer of the noble man, Lincoln. At the close of the war he came to Montana, then on to Wild Horse, British Columbia. In 1876 he came into Florence and was there at the time of the Indian outbreak the next year. He was one of the twelve men who came with Tolo to the rescue of the settlers on Slate creek. Among others in the company were Philip Cleary, Jim Carey, Ike Orcutt, I. T. Johnson, Griffith Roberts, Mike Deasy, and John Hickey. Our subject is justly called Captain Wilson, for at this critical time he outlined the fortifications which he assisted to construct on Slate creek, which afterward were very well spoken of by military men and owing to their strength doubtless kept the Indians at bay. Mox Mox and Captain John tried to inspect the fortifications, but they were not allowed to do so. Old Mr. Shoemaker brought Mrs. Osborne's child here on his back and told them that Mrs. Osborne and Mrs. Walsh were making their way toward the fort. Captain Wilson immediately volunteered to go and meet them; later Sam Pell went with him and after they had gone a short distance, the others coming to their assistance, they rescued the women. An account of this was published in one of the Walla Walla papers and reflects great credit on Captain Wilson. Mr. Wilson is credited with having discovered the Slate creek mines which yielded twenty-five thousand dollars. He is still mining, having a good quartz claim in Florence, besides other property. He is a Republican and receives from the government a slight acknowledgment of his faithful services in the Rebellion in the form of a pension.

ANDREW HANSEN. Three miles down the river from Lucile, Idaho, is the home of the subject of this article. He is one of the successful miners of Idaho county and in addition to handling this industry, is the official road overseer of his district. He has in charge twenty-three miles of road and twenty miles of trail. Andrew Hansen was born in Denmark, 1835, the son of Hans and Mary (Nelson) Hansen, both natives of Denmark now deceased. When Andrew was twelve years of age he left his home and took up the rugged life before the mast. He sailed in every clime, on all seas and when in Lima, Peru, he heard of the death of his father. His education was received by close personal application in various places of the world. He was in Greenland and in 1849 came thence to the United States. For three years he had headquarters at Cincinnati and operated a river steamer. In 1854 we find him digging in the golden sands of Placer county, California, and they held his labor until 1858. Going to Navada, he worked in the Comstock mine until 1860. We next find him in The Dalles, Oregon, and in the spring of 1861, he, with others, crossed the Blue mountains to the Burnt river district, which he says was the hardest trip he ever experienced during his extensive pilgrimage, at one time paying one hundred dollars for a sack of flour. Then came the pilgrimage to Florence and later to Warren, where he remained until 1871. Mr. Hansen, in partnership with Tom Pollock, was very successful in his mining ventures in Warren. In 1871 he came to Colfax, Washington, and bought six hundred acres of land. He farmed until 1893, in which year, like all the others, his finances were depleted. To add to his discomfort in this trying year, he broke his leg and before the complicated facture was well it had cost him two thousand dollars. Then Mr. Hansen turned his land over to the mortgage company, disposed of his two hundred head of horses and turned his attention to prospecting at Buffalo Hump. He also mined two years in Florence and in 1896 came to the Salmon river. Mr. Hansen is a member of the Lutheran church and a good solid Democrat.

PHOENIX R. BRIGGS. A well and favorably known citizen of early days, a prominent miner at the present, and one fitted for representation in the history of his county, such is the subject of this article. Phœnix R. Briggs was born in the vicinity of Philadelphia on December 21, 1837, the son of Thomas and Margaret (Hamilton) Briggs. The father was of English extraction, born in Ireland, came to the United States in his boyhood and settled in Mercer county, Illinois, in 1842. He died in Kansas in 1887. The mother, who is of Scotch ancestry, is also deceased. Our subject went to Illinois with his parents and there received his education, learned the carpenter trade and grew to manhood. At the breaking out of the war, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, First Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Corps, in August, 1862. He immediately went south and engaged in hot encounters in Kentucky and Tennessee with Bragg and Morgan, being under Buell. He fought at Chattanooga under "Fighting Joe" Hooker and went on the famous march to the sea. He was mustered out in 1865, after the grand review at Washington. He returned to Illinois, and a year later went to Omaha.

In Illinois in 1868, Mr. Briggs married Miss Martha Van Meter, daughter of Asa and Elizabeth Van Meter. The following children have been born to this union: Martha Enders, Harry S., both in Nebraska; David and Thomas, both conductors on the B. & M. railroad. Mr. Briggs has the following brothers and sisters: M. M., D. B., George C., Elizabeth Shull. Mrs. Briggs was born in Illinois. They migrated from Illinois to Iowa, later journeyed to Holt county, Nebraska, and ten years later went thence to the Sound and Portland. Then we see them in Umatilla county, Oregon, later in Okanogan county, Washington, and thence in 1895 they came to Idaho and for two years Mr. Briggs prospected near Mt. Idaho. He located claims in Marshall lake district and in the Bear creek camp. He has two groups, the Sherman and the Mt. Marshall. Mr. Briggs also has placer claims, the Gipsy and the Agate. Mr. Briggs is a member of the G. A. R. and of the I. O. O. F. He was elected county coroner, but refused to serve. He is allied with the Democratic party and while in the army was corporal and sergeant.

SILAS O. WHITING has mined in all the prominent camps on the Salmon and while he has property interests in various places especially around Florence, he has his permanent headquarters at Mt. Idaho. He was born in Somerset county, Maine, between Augusta and Bangor, on April 14, 1837, the son of Leonard and Hannah (Dyer) Whiting. The father, who was born in Maine in 1808, was a stone cutter and his father was a native of Massachusetts, settling in Maine among the first pioneers and was also a patriot in the Revolution. Leonard Whiting came to California in 1852 and settled in Nevada county, where he mined and operated mills for many years. The mother of our subject was born in Maine and died in 1839. Silas O. was educated in his native place and worked on the farm until he was twenty-two, when he came to California, Nevada county; there he remained for thirty years, freighting and mining.

In 1889 he came to the vicinity of Cheney, Washington, then to Spokane and engaged in lumbering three years. In 1895 he removed to Idaho county and went to mining in the Pierce district. Then he came to Camas prairie and rented a farm near Grangeville. Two years later we find him in Florence, where he has operated much of the time since. He was watchman of the Poorman mine and was one year and one-half at the Blossom. In the meantime he was interested in Bear creek country and had a share in the famous Kimberly and Jewell, which recently sold for $65,000. He now owns independent claims in the Jewell group. He also has property on one of the best leads there, has a third interest in the Gold Lake placer in Florence.

In 1864, in Nevada City, California, Mr. Whiting married Miss Maria Buzzell, who was born in Penobscot county, Maine. Four children were born to this union, two of whom are still living, Bertrand D. and Nellie Everland, both in San Francisco. Mr. Whiting is a master Mason, joining the lodge in 1864, and is a Republican. Mr. Whiting has had much experience in the various camps of California and he believes the Bear creek district is ahead of any of them.

EDWARD S. SWEET is justly entitled to the position of one of the real builders of this county and the town of Grangeville. While not here as soon as some of the early pioneers, he has manifested since coming an enterprise, tenacity and skill in business lines which have brought to him a gratifying competence and stimulated much action in others throughout the county.

Edward S. Sweet was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, on February 3, 1859, the son of James A. and Judith (Green) Sweet. The father, of Dutch extraction, was born in Chautauqua county, New York, in 1816, and died in 1891. He settled in Illinois in 1836 and remained on the old pre-emption claim until the summons came for his departure to the other world. The estate is still held in the family. He was sheriff of his county and also held other offices. The mother of our subject was born in Massachusetts in 1826, and died in 1878. She was left an orphan when very young and was raised by Mr. and Mrs. Scott, the parents of the noted missionary of India fame. Mrs. Sweet came of Scotch-Irish extraction. Our subject grew to manhood in Illinois and was educated in the common schools, then finished in college. He had a practical training in handling stock and farms in his youth, from a wise father, and for a number of years managed the family estates. In 1892 Mr. Sweet came to Camas prairie, began to buy land, did a general farming business and raised stock. In addition to this, he owned a saw mill and during the hard times that came after that he was enabled by good business tact and skill to keep the mill running, much to the advantage of the settlers, for it was the only mill in the vicinity that was operated. He was faced with many hard problems and much difficulty in these trying times, when so many good business men went to the wall, but Mr. Sweet was enabled by his practical ability and keen foresight and executive force to weather the storm, and now he is one of the heaviest taxpayers in the county. He has a thousand acres of land, leases as much more, has much town property, raises a large band of cattle on the range and is also heavily interested in the Bargain Store Company in Grangeville. Mr. Sweet is a progressive man and his business energy has done much for the county and towns.

EDWARD S. SWEET.

While in Illinois, in 1880, Mr. Sweet married Miss Elizabeth J., daughter of David and Nancy (Lamb) Miller, natives of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Sweet, who was born in Illinois in 1859, was well educated, and followed teaching for a number of years. Her father died in 1901, but the mother is still living. She has four sisters and two brothers. Mr. Sweet has three sisters and two brothers, named as follows: Sarah, Maggie, Emma, Hiram and Ernest. To Mr. and Mrs. Sweet one daughter has been born, who is now preparing for higher education in both literary lines and in music. Mr. Sweet is a member of the W. of W. and of the A. O. U. W. He was nominated by the Republicans for county commissioner in 1901, but as the entire ticket went down, he was sacrificed with it. At present Mr. Sweet is a member of the board of town trustees, and in this capacity, as in all of his labors, he brings an aggressive policy well tempered with a conservative spirit and due knowledge of existing conditions. He is one of the heavy operators in this part of the state and the success that is his to enjoy demonstrates better than aught else could do his wisdom and worth. In his standing Mr. Sweet is highly esteemed and his friends are numbered by legions. In 1903 Mr. Sweet was appointed by the governor as regent of the State University of Idaho.

WALTER S. RHETT is a native of Idaho county and a son of which the state may be proud. He is one of the enterprising and successful young stockmen on Slate creek near Freedom postoffice. On September 25, 1874, he was born in the house where he now lives, the son of William and Mary (Turner) Rhett. The father is a native of old Virginia, born in 1845. He was a pioneer in the early Florence and Warren excitements and was an active man during the campaign against the Indians in 1877. He secured the horse on which Tolo rode to Florence and as she ruined the animal, he was obliged to pay one hundred and fifty dollars for it. The mother of our subject was born in Oregon in 1842, the daughter of the earliest pioneers of that state. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place and was educated in the public schools adjacent, and in the higher institutions at Lewiston and Baker City. Returning from his studies, he engaged in the stock business, which he followed successfully for a number of years, then sold out. Three years later, 1897, he took up this industry again and has continued the same with his usual success until the present time.

On October 17, 1896, Mr. Rhett married Miss Ola, daughter of Moses H. and Nellie (Leland) Rice. The father is a stockraiser and one of the earliest pioneers in northern Idaho. He is a native of Ohio and served here during the Indian war. The mother of Mrs. Rhett was born in Oregon and died in 1888. Mrs. Rhett was born on Camas prairie on November 27, 1875, and has three brothers and two sisters, Miles H., Bailey F., Leland F., Nancy, and Elfreda. Mr. Rhett has one brother and two sisters, Albert W., Clara J. Grostein, Carrie F. Greer. Three children are the fruit of this marriage, Chester H., Myrtle K., Wallace W. Mr. Rhett is a Republican. He owns a good quarter section, raises alfalfa, has a fine orchard and raises stock. He is a member of the Pioneers' Association at Grangeville and is a good substantial man.

JOHN NEVIN, the popular merchant at Freedom, Idaho, is a bright son of the Emerald Isle, the date of whose birth is April 13, 1871. His parents, James and Nancy (Dempsey) Nevin, were both natives of the same country, where they live now. The first seventeen years of John's life was spent in his native land in the pursuit of knowledge, gained in both the public schools and in the law university. In 1883 he abandoned the legal lore, bade farewell to his loved ones and left the native land for the United States. He worked two years in an iron smelter in Pennsylvania, and one year in West Virginia in the coal mines. In the spring of 1891 he came to Idaho county and settled on Slate creek, where he did placer mining. He also packed to the mines and worked in Josh Fockler's store at Slate Creek. Then he spent two years in Freidenrich's store at Whitebird. In the spring of 1902 Mr. Neven bought Mr. Fockler's place on Slate creek and since then he has devoted himself to doing a fine general merchandise business.

On April 15, 1903, Mr. Nevin married Miss Jennie, daughter of W. A. and Mary E. Newman. The father is a stockman on the Salmon. Mrs. Nevin was born in Dayton, Washington, in 1881. She is well educated and spent some time in instructor's work. She has one sister and three brothers, Bertha M. Davis, Homer, Grover C., Milo. Mr. Nevin has the following brothers and sisters: Daniel, James M., Thomas, Annie, Andrew and William, all in the old country. Mr. Nevin is a member of the Masonic order and is an active and influential Republican, being central committeeman. He owns a fine business, comfortable residence, some land and is enjoying a thriving patronage. Mr. Nevin was naturalized in 1893 at Mount Idaho.

GEORGE R. ODLE is practically a product of Idaho county since he came here with his parents when six months old. He is a son in which his county may well take pride, since his walk has been upright, his labors dominated with wisdom and consummated with skill and enterprise and his standing is justly of the best.

George R. Odle was born in Douglas county, Oregon, on January 22, 1862, the son of James and Catherine (Crusen) Odle. The father was born in Ohio, on July 10, 1823, and died in 1898. He was a "Forty-niner" in California, afterward going to Douglas county, Oregon. In January, 1862, he came to Idaho in the Florence excitement, where he took land and broke the first furrow near Mt. Idaho. He was married August 3, 1854. His wife was born in Illinois and crossed the plains with her parents, who settled in Douglas county, where the marriage occurred. Mr. James Odle was twice representative to the legislature of Idaho. He also held county offices and fought in the Nez Perces war. Our subject came to Idaho county with his mother in June, 1862, the father having come in the January preceding. He grew to manhood on the old homestead, where he now lives, received here his education and has been one of its substantial citizens for years. When he was of age he took a half section of land on Camas prairie and since has continued farming and raising stock. Mr. Odle remembers well the Nez Perces war, being then fifteen. He saw the destruction after the battle on the Clearwater, the effects of the Indians being confiscated and destroyed. At one time a scouting party of Indians came within a half mile of Mt. Idaho.

At Mt. Idaho on March 19, 1890, Mr. Odle married Miss Julia, daughter of James R. and Hannah (Cochran) McCurdy. The father was born in Ireland, came to the United States in his youthful days, and settled in California in 1857, having married in Pennsylvania on March 30, 1852. The mother of Mrs. Odle was born in Pennsylvania on November 29, 1833. Her first husband died, and in 1874 she married Mr. William R. Smith and came to Idaho county in 1881. She died February 7, 1895. Mrs. Odle was born in California on February 3, 1868, and has three brothers and one sister, William E., deceased; John R., Charles S., Margaretta Rice. Mr. Odle has three sisters, Alice Baird, Elfreda Rice, Emma Rice, deceased. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Odle, Alethea, and Margaretta. Mrs. Odle is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Odle is a Democrat and also a member of the Pioneers' Association.

SAM LARGE, who lives at Freedom, is one of the earliest miners in Idaho county and since the first days of fabulous wealth flowing from the hills of the Salmon, he has continued until the present in mining and is now one of the prosperous men of the section. He has a comfortable home on the banks of the Salmon and a fine ditch for placer mining. Sam Large was born in Ireland in 1841, the son of Benjamin and Jane (Clunnen) Large, natives of Ireland, where they both died. The father made a trip to the United States but returned to his native country. Our subject received his education in his native country and came to the United States in 1855. In 1857, he made his way to the Golden state and mined in Tuolumne county until 1861, when he came on the first crest of gold excitement into Idaho. He was personally acquainted with the five men who discovered the Florence diggings and was one of the first ones in the Warren camp. He owned some of the best claims in the camp and continued making money fast until 1875. In 1864 they had a famine and for many days lived on nothing but beans, without even salt to eat. One wag, old Jimmy Joah, became so set against the beans that he seasoned them with spoiled grease which gave them another taste and odor, too. In 1875, Mr. Large bought his present place and since then has devoted himself to working this one claim. He was on the place at the time of the Indian outbreak and went to Slate creek to the fortifications there. Indians came to see how well they were manned but they were warned off. They were forted up five weeks in this place and then three weeks in Mt. Idaho, where he went to buy supplies. Mr. Large has the place where Tolo was with the sick squaws.

On November 4, 1884, Mr. Large married Mary Porsell, a native of Ireland. Her parents were natives of Ireland, also. The father died there, the mother and this daughter coming to the United States. Mrs. Large has two brothers, John and Patrick. The following named children have been born to this union, Mary, Thomas, Benjamin, John and James. Mr. Large is a Mason. He is also a member of the Catholic church. Politically he is an active Democrat. In early days he remembers one man, Mr. Knotts, selling potatoes to the miners at seventy-five cents per pound. This was with the clay on and when they were washed half was taken off in dirt. They were so small that they became famous to every old timer as "Knotts' pills."

HON. LOYAL P. BROWN, deceased. No man was better or more favorably known in Idaho county than the esteemed gentleman and leading citizen mentioned above and it is fitting that a memorial of him be incorporated in the history of northern Idaho.

L. P. Brown was born in Stratford, New Hampshire, on September 26, 1829. He removed to Boston when sixteen and engaged in a mercantile establishment. In 1849 he joined the Massasoit company that fitted and went to California, via the isthmus, arriving in San Francisco on July 12, 1849. Mr. Brown at once went to mining on the middle fork of the American river at Rector's bar and did well. The next spring he went to the mines on Trinity river and opened a store, continuing until 1852. Then he went to Scottsburg, Oregon, and followed merchandising for three years. Then, in response to Governor George L. Clearey's call for men, in 1855, joined the ranks as quartermaster at Roseburg, in the Rogue river war. Then he farmed in Douglas county until 1858 and took his family back to New Hampshire. A year later he fitted out horse teams and made the journey across the plains, being accompanied by many of his relatives. He settled in the Umpqua valley and raised stock until the breaking out of the Salmon river gold excitement, when he came to Idaho county and settled at what is now Mt. Idaho, on July 18, 1862. He laid out the town and has fostered it since until it became the county seat. This was his home until the time of his death. He followed farming, raising stock, milling, operating a hotel and other lines of business. Mr. Brown was a member of the Territorial Council and in 1875 was instrumental in arranging the boundary of the county so that Mt. Idaho became the county seat. He was one of the leading men of the county, always wrought with wisdom and his counsel was instrumental in doing much for Idaho county. Mr. Brown was a moving spirit in the time of the Indian war here and his house and purse were open to sufferers, as scores of benefitted settlers who were forced to flee to Mt. Idaho for refuge will testify. Mr. Borwn wrote the message securing quarters at Lapwai for the refugees and did much to alleviate suffering. Mr. Brown was an ardent Republican and was the most powerful and influential member of his party in the county, but he never let politics interfere with social life.

On October 24, 1854, in the Umpqua valley, Oregon, Mr. Brown married Sarah T., daughter of George W. and Sarah A. (Ridgeley) Crusen. The father was a native of Virginia and crossed the plains with his family, one of which was Mrs. Brown. The mother of Mrs. Brown was born in Maryland and died November 4, 1886, aged seventy-nine. Mrs. Brown crossed the plains with her husband, after returning east by water. She has one sister, Mrs. C. L. Odle, in Lewiston. Mr. Brown had one brother, Alonzo Brown, in Oakland, Oregon. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Rollin C., in this county; Helen K., deceased; Ada Hovey, in Lewiston; Daisey Smith, at Whitebird. Mr. Brown was called to the world beyond on April 9, 1896. He was universally mourned and tributes of respect were offered by all.

FRANK L. TAYLOR is one of the prosperous and leading stockmen of the Salmon valley. He owns a fine ranch three miles down the river from Freedoom and also handles nearly three hundred head of cattle. He was born near Tipton, Iowa, on April 18, 1868, the son of Benjamin F. and Judith (Bradley) Taylor. The father was born in Ohio in 1834, came to the Palouse country in 1872 and had served three years in the Civil war, where he received a serious wound in his thigh. The mother of our subject was born in Iowa in 1845. Frank L. was taken with his parents to Oregon when four years old and was reared and educated mostly in Pullman, Washington. When nineteen he went to do for himself and when twenty-one bought a farm near Guy. He continued there for the intervening years until 1891, then came to the Salmon country and bought his present place of Josh Fockler. He has devoted himself to general farming and raising stock since that date and has been well prospered.

On December 22, 1896, Mr. Taylor married Miss Mary C., daughter of Samuel and Isabella (Kelly) Benedict. The father was a rancher and merchant at Whitebird. He was born in the province of Ontario, Canada, and was killed by the Indians on June 14, 1877. The mother was born on Staten Island and is now Mrs. Robie, mentioned in this work elsewhere. Mrs. Taylor was born in Lewiston, in 1866. Mrs. Taylor's brothers and sisters are mentioned elsewhere in this work. Mr. Taylor has two sisters and one brother, Charles, Mary J., Phoebe Bloom. Three children have been born to them, Addie Maurine, Lester B., and Samuel H. Politically Mr. Taylor is a Republican. He owns a fine place and is one of the substantial men of the county. Mrs. Taylor and her brother, Grant, were attending school at the time of the Indian outbreak and went to Grangeville, which was near to the residence of Wm. Pearson, thence to Mt. Idaho where they were taken care of in the house of Mr. H. Rice, until the mother came.

PETER SMITH is one of the early miners who has continued in the same occupation which was so popular in the balmy days of gold excitement. He is now located eight miles up the Salmon from Whitebird and is partner in the firm of Robie & Smith. He was born in Gotland, Sweden, on the Baltic sea, in 1832, the son of Olif and Anna (Oman) Smith. The father spelled his name Smitt and was a master workman in a shoe factory in his native land. The mother was born in Gotland. Our subject received his education there and when twelve went to sea and was in various parts of the world. He came to the United States when he was sixteen and in 1857 went to California and mined in Eldorado and Placer counties. In the spring of 1862 he came to the Salmon country and dug gold at Florence; at Warren he was one of the owners of the great hydraulic plant. Seventeen years were spent there successfully and in 1877 he sold out and came to the Salmon and bought his present place. He also bought a ranch in connection with Mr. Robie, who was his partner in all his transactions. Mr. Robie conducted the ranch until his death, while Mr. Smith still operates the mine. When Mr. Robie died his wife went on with the ranch. Mr. Smith is a Mason and a good, solid Republican of worth and influence. He has kept little or no correspondence with the old country and therefore knows little of his relatives there; the father died when the son was a lad and the mother marrying again he has half-sisters and half-brothers. Mr. Smith has one full sister, Albertina Fredricka. About three years ago Mr. Smith had a runaway and was thought to be dead, his head being badly cut. He was taken to Grangeville and lay senseless until the physician lifted the skull where it was pressing on his brain. He recovered rapidly and was soon at his post in the mines again.

FRED C. BURGDORF is proprietor of the popular and widely known hot springs at Resort, Idaho county, which he has handled since 1870, having the place now provided with all comforts and roomy apartments. The springs are justly famous, being noted for the curative properties of their waters and the place is filled with guests all the time. Mr. Burgdorf also owns two or three ranches in addition to this and three hundred head of cattle as well, having, too, some extra fine Hereford males, and he has prospered and met with good will and esteem on every hand because of his skill and wisdom and because of his geniality and stanch worth.

Fred C. Burgdorf was born in Germany on November 22, 1839, being the son of Hans C. and Lena (Kohrd) Burgdorf, natives also of the fatherland, where they remained until their death. Our subject grew up in the parental home until sixteen, having acquired a good education, and then went to sea. He was shipwrecked near China and being picked up by an American steamer, he came to San Francisco in 1863. He was very sick and the kind captain placed him in a hospital and secured a doctor. In 1864 Mr. Burgdorf came to Warren and dug gold for three years. Then he spent eighteen months in Lewiston and later returned to Warren. Having loaned $800.00 on the warm springs, he took them on August 20, 1870, to pay his claim and since that time he has devoted himself to handling the property with his other intersets and he has made a brilliant success in financial matters.

Mr. Burgdorf has an excellent building of twenty and more rooms and the place is liberally patronized. The springs flow six thousand gallons per hour. He was here during the Indian war but was unmolested by the savages. On July 28, 1902, Mr. Burgdorf married Janette Foronsard, from Denver. The wedding occurred at Resort. Mr. Burgdorf has one brother in Germany, Conrad, a retired sea captain. Mr. Burgdorf is a solid Republican and committeeman for his precinct. He and his wife belong to the Lutheran church. On his river ranch, known as the Raines ranch, Mr. Burgdorf raises all kinds of fruit. Mr. Raines took it in an early day and the Sheepeater Indians killed him. The Indians were named from their propensity to eat mountain sheep. The mines adjacent to Resort are being developed and it is one of the prominent mining sections of the county.

WINFIELD S. REYNOLDS is well known as the ferryman at the old state bridge near Florence and has been engaged in various other callings in Idaho county. He was born in Virginia in 1848, the son of Stephen J. and Elizabeth (Lohr) Reynolds, born in Virginia in 1812 and 1818, respectively. They still live in their native state. Our subject grew to manhood there and remained with his father in business until he was thirty-five. He was in the Confederate army and had one finger shot off. The father was also in the struggle. In 1896 Mr. Reynolds came west and after a time to Grangeville, he went on to Elk City where he engaged in the stock and butcher business. After two years at this he came to Grangeville and with his brother, Alex T., he opened a large distillery and they operated it for one year. Then Mr. Reynolds went into the saloon business, where he continued for two years. After this venture he came to his present location and started the ferry that he is now operating.

In Virginia, in 1877, Mr. Reynolds married Melvina Fox, daughter of William and Peggy (Hodge) Fox, natives of Virginia. Mrs. Reynolds was born in Highland county, Virginia. Mr. Reynolds has three brothers and four sisters, and is a strong Republican. He owns the ferry where he is living and also a fine farm near Grangeville. He is a man of broad experience and has made good success since coming to this country.

LIEUT. RICHARD H. HARTMAN is both a first-class business man and a man of excellent military qualifications, having demonstrated his ability in both lines, the former in many places and especially in Grangeville, where he has followed painting, decorating and paper hanging, while in the latter his record in the Spanish war leaves no doubt as to his worth and standing.

Richard H. Hartman was born in Saxony, Germany, on August 22, 1864, the son of Richard H. and Martha (Wolf) Hartman, born in Saxony in 1828 and 1832 and died in 1898 and 1891, respectively. The father's ancestors were natives of the same place for generations preceding. He participated in the war between Austria and Saxony in 1866. Our subject remained in his native place acquiring a good education until fifteen and then started out for himself. He travelled one year in Germany and then came to the United States. He spent some time in New York and three years in Pensylvania, then went to Montana, the Coeur d'Alene country and on to Spokane. This was in the spring of 1884, the city then being small. He was soon in Portland, whence he went to San Francisco and in 1886 came to Rock Springs, Wyoming, and was there during the Chinese excitement. After three years he traveled in the east, visited Chicago, St. Louis and other places, then came to Pendleton and finally settled in Grangeville on August 4, 1891. He took up carpentering and later went at his trades of painting and decorating. Mr. Hartman joined the Idaho National Guards on May 15, 1897, as second lieutenant of Company C, First Idaho. On April 28, 1898, he joined the Volunteers and was mustered in on May 13, 1898, as first lieutenant. He left San Francisco on June 27, arrived at Manila on July 31, 1898. He participated in the capture of that place and was given command of his company, the captain having retired, and continued in that capacity until just before his departure. He fought in the battles of Manila, August 13, Santa Ana, February 4, 5, 1899, Coloorcan, February 10, 11, Guadalupe, Santa Cruz and in many skirmishes. He was offered a commission in the United States regulars, but as the climate did not agree with him he refused. When he got out of the hospital he weighed one hundred and twenty-nine pounds. He was discharged on September 25, 1899, at San Francisco and returned to Grangeville on October 4, 1899, again taking up his business, since which time he has devoted himself to it with good success.

Mr. Hartman is a perfect master of the English and also of the mother tongue. He has three brothers and three sisters in Germany. His brother, Emil, is sergeant major in the German army. Mr. Hartman is a member of the Red Men and took the first degree of Masonry in Manila. He is an active Republican and influential in political circles.

RICHARD E. PELL, who resides near Clearwater, owns land but devotes himself almost entirely to freighting. He has become expert in this line of business and has handled goods from Lewiston before the railroad came but now handles form Stites to Elk, Buffalo Hump, and other places. He is a man of enterprise in his labors and does a good business.

Richard E. Pell was born in Linn county, Oregon, on November 24, 1870, the son of John G. and Nancy (Tinley) Pell. The father was a farmer and was born in Clarke county, Missouri, in 1839, January 8. He was a pioneer in Linn county, came to Idaho in 1878 and now lives in Clearwater. The mother was born in Linn county, Oregon, in 1849. His parents crossed the plains in 1848. Our subject come with his parents to Tammany hollow, near Lewiston, in 1878, there received his education and remained until he was nineteen. He learned the art of cooking and followed it in various places. In 1889 he came to Clearwater, in Idaho county, and took a homestead. In 1895 he went to Montana and cooked for two years, but returned to Idaho county, as he was taken sick. Later he retired from the kitchen altogether and gave his entire attention to freighting. At the early age of eleven, Mr. Pell commenced to do for himself and he has been hustling since that time. In politics he is allied with the Democrats, but is not an office seeker. He is one of the substantial wealth makers of the county and has made a good record.

ALVIS A. KINCAID is a miner in the true sense of the word. He knows the business from the time of locating all the way through, and he has given himself to it in later years to the exclusion of all other business. He is a man of deep study in these lines and has accomplished a good showing for the time he has wrought in it. Alvis A. Kincaid was born in Kentucky in 1858, the son of James M. and Olivia (Moss) Kincaid. The father was born in Kentucky, in January, 1830, and died on April 17, 1897. He went to California in 1865, located in Solano county, where he farmed and raised stock. He came to the Palouse country in 1877 and remained until death. He had fought in the Confederate army and was of Scotch-Irish ancestrage. The mother of our subject was born in Tennessee and still lives in Palouse. Our subject was but seven when the family took the long journey across the plains and mountains to California. The time of the burial of a baby brother is distinctly imprinted on the mind of Mr. Kincaid and he well remembers the deep grief of the mother at leaving her babe in the dreary spot. Our subject was educated in Monmouth, Oregon, and in California, and for sixteen years after the school days were ended, he kept books. He has always been in close touch with his family and is looking after his mother now. Mr. Kincaid came to Palouse with the family and did bookkeeping and also was salesman, but during all these years he was more or less interested in mining and made it a careful study. He had purchased stock in various companies and in 1898, he stepped forth and invested for himself on the Clearwater and since then he has been giving his time to the prosecution of the industry of mining. He is superintendent of the Evergreen and Mt. Idaho Mining Company and they are doing some good development work.

In 1878 Mr. Kincaid married Miss Josephine, daughter of Rebecca Davis, of Farmington, Washington, the wedding occurring in Palouse. Mrs. Kincaid was born in Lane county, Oregon and was well educated. Mr. Kincaid has the following brothers and sisters: William M., James M. Jr., John C., G. D., Joseph E., Elizabeth, Lawrence. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kincaid, Mary O., Elbert A., Olivia, Florence, Frank. Mr. Kincaid is a Republican since Mr. Bryan has been shaping the tenets of the other party. Mr. Kincaid has gone into mining to follow it the rest of his life and is putting that fund of wisdom, skill, and enterprise into it which has brought him success in other lines.

WILLIAM H. V. RICKARDS is one of the most stirring and skillful mining men of Idaho county, as is evidenced by what he has accomplished in that line. He has been instrumental in bringing many different properties to the front, and also in interesting capital in this section, which has done much for its advertisement and substantial upbuilding.

William H. V. Rickards was born in New York city on February 4, 1853, the son of Peter H. and Rebecca (Perry) Rickards. The father, who was a sailor, was born in Virginia in 1814, came west to Iowa in 1857, and died in 1892. His father was English and his mother French. The mother of our subject was born in Philadelphia on February 14, 1833, and died in 1892. She came of Dutch extraction and her ancestors came to the new world in colonial days. Her father was a patriot in the Revolution. Our subject was brought to Iowa by his parents when four years old and there he grew to manhood and received his education at Burlington. He learned the art of cooking and followed it for years in Burlington and Kansas City. Then he railroaded on the Burlington road for years in various capacities. In 1891 he came to Dayton, Washington, landing there on April 12, where he continued to live for six years, being engaged in threshing for a time and then sold sewing machines. In 1893 Mr. Rickards engaged in mining at Dixie, Elk and adjacent centers. He made the first discoveries on the Clearwater in 1893 and in these places he continued until 1896. Then he brought his family to Greencreek, Idaho county, went to Moscow and formed the Greencreek Mining & Milling Company and in 1898 he removed to Spokane. He continued to locate and improve properties in the sections mentioned, formed a company in Spokane and the next year brought his family to Grangeville, where they have been since. In 1900 Mr. Rickards went to Thunder mountain, also located more on the Clearwater, secured some asbestos property and later sold the Thunder mountain property to eastern capital. He has mines at Buffalo Hump and in other prominent districts of this favored mining country.

On April 3, 1881, Mr. Rickards married Miss Laura L., daughter of P. S. and Louise (Cocaine) Orr. The father was a pioneer of Iowa, came to Butte, Montana, in 1862. He comes of Irish extraction. The mother was born in Iowa and her father in Wheeling, West Virginia. Mrs. Rickards was born in Iowa in 1865 and has five brothers and one sister, William, Samuel, Elijah T., James, Mary and Charles. Mr. Richards has five brothers and sisters, Cordelia, Nettie, Mary, Rose, Harry. One child, Charles H., aged eighteen, has been born to this marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Rickards are members of the Methodist church and of the Y. M. C. A. He is an active Republican. Mr. Rickards is one of the substantial men of this section and receives the respect and esteem of all.

HON. ANDREW W. MOORE is one of the prominent men of Idaho county in various lines. He is a heavy mine owner and has some properties well under way towards being the leading shippers of their respective sections. He is an able man in the field of politics, although not a politician in the sense of the word usually considered. He is a man of integrity and worth and holds a prominent position among the people of this division, being also of note in the state, as his name is indissolubly connected with some of the best improvements of the entire state.

Andrew W. Moore was born in Belmont county, Ohio, in 1839, being the son of Allison and Elizabeth H. (West) Moore. The father was born in Belmont county also and his ancestors came from the sturdy Scotch, and were among the earliest settlers on the Atlantic coast. He died in 1855, aged fifty-five. The mother was born in Ohio in 1806 and died in 1902. She came from Scotch ancestry who were among the colonists of the new world. Our subject was educated and reared in Illinois and in 1859, aged twenty, came to the Pacific coast and sought his fortune in the golden sands of California. He was among the first quartz miners of that favored mining section and was successful. Later he met with the same good success, owing to his skill and sagacity, in Montana. He was the principal owner of the Silver Bell mine at Missoula and is still handling a controlling interest. In 1861 Mr. Moore returned to Illinois and enlisted in Company G, Seventh Illinois Volunteer. He went in as a private and was soon chosen for first lieutenant. He fought all through the dark and fierce struggle, went on the march to the sea and participated in the grand review in Washington. He was in the active service three years and seven months. In 1866 he returned to California and in the fall of 1877 he came to Idaho. He operated in the Salmon district, organized the Idaho Copper Mining and Smelting Company, put in a diamond drill in the mines of the Miller Point and Indiana groups and has also operated in other mines. Mr. Moore has also charge of the Wise Boy, in the Buffalo Hump country, of which he owns a half interest and his son owns one-eighth interest. This property is now supplied with a ten-stamp mill, is lighted with electricity and will be shipping in April, 1903.

On May 1, 1874, in Chicago, Mr. Moore married Miss Frances E. Clark, a lady of culture and education and to them have been born four children, Avery C., in the legislature from Idaho county; Wilber E., manager of the Wise Boy; Grace E., in Stanford University; Andrew, Jr., in business college in Spokane. Mr. Moore has three brothers and one sister, Avery, David F., William S., Clara Filkins. Mr. Moore is a member of the G. A. R., while his wife belongs to the Methodist church. Mr. Moore is an active and influential Democrat and in 1900 he represented Idaho county in the state legislature and he drew the bill and pushed it to a successful passage which made the appropriaton for the Salmon river road. He never aspired to office before, but saw the chance to do something for the advancement of the county and the welfare of the people and so did it.

JOHN MACKIE is one of the active and capable mining men of Idaho county and has done much for the development and bringing to notice the wealth of mineral in this county. He was born in Port Huron, Michigan, on February 18, 1869, the son of Thomas and Helen (Stone) Mackie, natives of New York and Canada and born in 1834 and 1835, respectively. They both still live in Port Huron. The father served in a Michigan regiment all through the war and participated in the battle of Jacksonville, besides many others. He is an active and influential G. A. R. man. Our subject grew to young manhood and received a good common school education in his native place. When twenty he came to Denver and thence to Boulder, Colorado, where he mined for two years. Then he went to the Salmon City country and for years he prospected there and believes it is a good counry. In 1893 Mr. Mackie was prospecting in Montana and then was in the Fort Steele country. In 1894 he came to Warren and spent four years there. He located some good properties and organized the Fair View Mining Company for development of the prospects. In 1898 Mr. Mackie sold out these interests and went to Buffalo Hump country, he having been in there in the previous year. He was one of the first locators in this district and believes it one of the very best that he has ever visited. He located the Banner, now called the Wisdom, but he sold it before discovering its true value. Mr. Mackie has the following claims: Phœnix, Atlanta, Woncas, Rainbow, Lone Star, besides others and he is now organizing a company to develop them. Mr. Mackie is a Democrat on the money question, but is independent in all the questions of the day otherwise. He has one brother and two sisters, Thomas, Lizzie Johnson, Emma Kennedy. Mr. Mackie is well known and is a man of skill in his calling and has demonstrated himself thus.

JOHN C. HALL is one of the proprietors of the Idaho market and in addition to doing a general butchering business and operating a first-class market, they buy and sell stock for and on the markets. He is a business man of good ability and pays strict attention to his affairs, which gives him the meed of good success.

John C. Hall was born in Des Moines, Iowa, on August 6, 1867, the son of John and Johanna (Griffin) Hall. They were born in Ireland in 1827 and 1828, respectively. The father died in 1897. He was a pioneer in Iowa, settled where the city of Des Moines is now and he owned considerable property there and in other places in the state. 1853 marks the date of his immigration to the United States. The mother still lives in Sibley, Iowa. Our subject grew to manhood in his native place and acquired a good educational training from the public schools. When twenty-two he stepped forth from the parental roof to do for himself and farming was the occupation that attracted him. He continued at it there until 1893, when he made his way to Seattle and worked for wages for a time. Then he went to Walla Walla and operated an electric light plant for a time. Later we see him in Klickitat county on a homestead and in 1896 he came to Idaho and devoted himself to mining in and about Dixie. He prospected and mined for three years and still has some fine properties adjoinging the Apex. In 1899 Mr. Hall came and took part in the Idaho market and since that time has devoted himself continuously to its success and operation.

Mr. Hall has four sisters and three brothers, Maggie E., Thomas and Mary, twins, William, James, Lizzie, Alice. He is a member of the K. of P. and the United Artisans. In political choice Mr. Hall is allied with the Democratic party.

ALBERT D. FOSTER is a well known and a prominent man in Grangeville, where he has done a successful business for a number of years. He is at present one of the proprietors of the popular Idaho market and enjoys a liberal patronage from the people of the town and surrounding country. He was born in the vicinity of Syracuse, New York, on August 26, 1857, the son of James S. and Frances (Ripley) Foster. The father was a real estate dealer and commissioner of immigration for Dakota for years and also held other important offices. He was acknowledged one of the most spirited and enterprising workers in the state. He was born in 1827 in Salisbury, Connecticut, and died in Dakota in 1892. The mother was born in New York in 1833 and now lives in Dakota. She, as also her husband, were descended from Scotch ancestry and her forefathers were among the first settlers in the United States in colonial days. Our subject came to South Dakota in 1864, when the family came, and here attended school, and grew to manhood. He followed surveying for many years and was also engaged in raising and handling stock. He followed that business in the state for many years and met with flattering success until the panic of 1893 drove him to the wall, as it did all others. Then he spent some time in traveling in the west and in British Columbia. In 1894 he decided to locate in Grangeville. He opened a restaurant and operated it successfully until 1902, when he sold it. During this time, Mr. Foster had also been conducting a butcher shop but in 1901 he sold that also. The next year he bought an interest in the shop again and in this position we find him at the present time.

In 1882, while in South Dakota, Mr. Foster married Miss Hattie, daughter of Orville and Eliza (Sutton) Wheeling. The father was a blacksmith and farmer. He was born in the same place and the same date as the father of our subject. He served in the Rebellion, enlisting from Iowa, was wounded in the battle of Shiloh and died in 1902. Mrs. Wheeling was born in Kentucky. Mrs. Foster was born in Iowa in 1864 and taught school before she was married. Mr. Foster has four sisters and one brother, Carrie Carney, Cora Miner, Fannie Foster, T. Maxom. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Fannie E. and Clara B., both attending school. Mr. Foster is a member of the M. W. A., is chairman of the city council and is an influential and active factor in the political realm, being a solid Democrat.

FRANK BROWN is manager of the famous Jumbo mine of Buffalo Hump and is one of the best posted and most skillful mining men in the county. He was born in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, November 1, 1861, the son of Michael and Anna (Steffins) Brown. The father was a shoemaker and a native of Germany. He came to the United States when young and served his country in the war of the Rebellion. He went into service in 1861, was taken prisoner and knew the horrors of Libby. He continued until the war closed and then went to Colorado and has since remained there operating in mines. The mother was born in Wisconsin in 1840 and died in May, 1878. Her ancestors were among the first settlers of Wisconsin. Our subject went to Colorado with his parents when he was six and there grew up and was educated. He early began the industry of mining and in 1882 he went to Wyoming and Montana where he mined for two years. He was interested in the Cumberland, which is now a great mine. He spent two years in the Blue Point mines in California and in 1890 he came to Idaho. Before coming hither he had had much experience in the places mentioned and also in New Mexico and Arizona, and he is an expert in judging ores and handling mines. Mr. Brown was one of the first at Buffalo Hump and handled a store to furnish supplies to the prospectors. This was in 1898 and in 1900 he sold the store and has since devoted himself to mining. He has a heavy share in the famous Jumbo and also has interests in thirty other prospects and mines in the district.

In 1894 Mr. Brown married Miss Florence, daughter of William and Mary Marlatt. The father was a native of France and mined here in Florence in early days. Mrs. Brown was born in Dayton, Washington, in 1874, and has nine brothers and three sisters. Mr. Brown has the following brothers and sisters: John W., Mary McCullough, Lizzie Moffitt, Katie Adams, Maggie Moore. Three children have been born to this marriage, Lottie, Florence, Benjamin. Mr. Brown is a member of the W. W. and was county commissioner for two years of this county. He was condidate for auditor in 1902 but the Democratic majority of the county was not quite overcome. He is a strong Republican and has always been a wheel horse. Mr. Brown lives in Mt. Idaho and in addition to his mining interests he owns property in Lewiston and in the Hump.

FRANCIS E. McMILLEN. A real westerner in the true sense of the word, a man of experience equal to the famous characters of frontier literature and one whose constant life of prospecting, mining, hunting, guiding, and out-door existence has conformed to the real things of life and made him one of the most substantial and stanch citizens of the state of Idaho,—such is the subject of this article and it is with unfeigned pleasure that we are privileged to chronicle the points of his interesting career.

Francis E. McMillen was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, on November 5, 1864, the son of Robert T., and Matilda E. (Miller) McMillen. The father was born in Harrisonburg, Pennsylvania, in 1828 and died in 1886. His father was in the Revolution and he having a large government contract at the time of Civil war was freed from military service. The mother of our subject, born in Virginia in 1832, still lives in Ohio. Her ancestors, as were her husband's, were of the sturdy Scotch and served in the Revolution, being some of the earliest settlers in the new world. Our subject attended school in Ohio until thirteen and then came overland to Boise in 1877. He handled the bell mare of the train that went into Warren and he mined, and later went east, returning to Tuscarara, Nevada, where he sold a mine. The next we see him in the Boise basin placer mining and selling claims. He did well and in 1883 he was in the Indian war at Bruno. He was shot through the thigh and several of the others were wounded by the Indians. He was under Captain Mitchell. A Mr. Hawes and Mrs. George T. Miller were massacred by the Indians. Mr. McMillen mined south of the Humboldt mountains, then came to the Wood river district and did well. In 1883 he wintered in Boise and then came north into Idaho county. He was in search of the famous Gates mine, from which Mr. Gates took rich ore in the time of the Sheepeater war. Before the excitement into Thunder mountain, Mr. McMillen located claims there. In 1885 he was in the Sea Foam camp and a prominent locater there. He located property in all the leading camps of this section and now owns good property in all the camps in this county and in many others. He was also one of the diligent searchers for the lead which produced the float which has led so many in tours, but Mr. McMillen thinks it came from the Kimberly group. Mr. McMillen is still searching the mountains, which he knows as the seaman does the sea, and still takes great pleasure in the invigorating and stimulating trips to the fastness of nature's treasure vault. In all this time, he has also spent many seasons in trapping and hunting and is a skillful hand in these lines.

Mr. McMillen has the following brothers and sisters: Elmer, John, Clarence, Charles, Dora Montgomery, Martha Coston, Ida Easters. He is a member of the K. P. and W. of W., at Walla Walla. In February, 1894, Mr. McMillen went to the far away fields of Alaska and returned in the following June. He went again in the spring of 1898, but was forced out by pneumonia. Mr. McMillen is a firm Presbyterian and a man of honor and integrity.

PART IV.

HISTORY OF LATAH COUNTY

CHAPTER I.

SETTLEMENT.

The history of Latah county as a political division of Idaho begins in 1888; the history of the people now living within its legal boundaries, of their commercial, industrial and educational institutions, is almost coeval with that of Idaho itself. The territorial government was formed in 1863 at Lewiston, which was even then a growing frontier town. Just across the river on the north, rise the hills of the Palouse. While it was at first thought that these hills were worthless except as grazing lands, it was not many years before settlements were made in some of the small valleys and as early as 1878 Asbury Lieuallen had established a postoffice at Moscow, thirty miles north of Lewiston. The first agricultural settlements made in the county were about Genesee and Moscow in 1871 and 1872. Before its removal to Moscow, Lieuallen's postoffice had existed for some years at what was called Paradise City, one mile east of the present business center of the town. There were pioneer settlements also farther south. The Hall and Caldwell cattle ranch was occupied in 1868; Jacob Kambitsch settled on Cow creek very near the present site of the town of Genesee in 1871 and in 1872 there was quite an immigration of settlers into this valley, the town of Genesee starting but three years later. In the northern part of the county William Ewing settled on Palouse river in 1869 engaging in the cattle business. There are but a few of the earlier settlements. Others coming into Paradise valley about the same time or a little later were G. W. Tomer, W. J. Hamilton, Bennet Summerfield, William Frazier, James and Albert Howard, James Cox, John Russell, Silas Imbler, James Montgomery. This is not the entire list but these are well known to all early settlers as men prominent in the affairs of those times.

Latah being a portion of Nez Perces county until 1888, its early history will be told in the chapter on Nez Perces county, but we will review in this chapter those incidents which have direct bearing on Latah's future development and are of local interest to those who made early settlement within its present boundaries and are still active factors in progress.

No sooner had the first locations been made than there was a demand for a postoffice, which was established early in 1872 at the point described above and V. Craig received the appointment as postmaster. A mail route was at once established between Lewiston and Paradise City postoffice and John Denny was the first mail carrier. It was a pony route and Paradise City was its terminus until about 1875, when it was extended to Farmington. In a short time regular stages were put on the road and such noted characters as Major Wimpsey, Joseph Cox, Felix Warren and Tom La Dow were for several years drivers over this route as well as over routes established to the mining regions on the northeast and east. While stage driving here in early days was not fraught with so many of the dangers that lurked in the way of the stages in many other far western regions, yet the roads were not infrequently cut at dizzy heights along the declivitous sides of gulches and canyons; highwaymen were sometimes met with, and the stage driver had necessarily to be a man of courage and skill. Travel over these routes was never seriously interfered with by Indians. For some time during the Indian scare in 1876 and 1877, travelers entered the stage with more or less apprehension and precautionary measures were taken to insure the safety of passengers and the safe delivery of mails. Drivers were well armed and guards at times accompanied them, especially when packages of great value were being carried. Although the Indian scare and the highwayman are both practically things of the past, some of the old stage routes are still in use, not by pony riders and stages, but by farmers and travelers across the country. They have not yet lost all of their primitive characteristics and the tenderfoot rounds their curves and goes down their sheer declivities with emotions that are more easily experienced than described. Notable among these old highways is the road now in use from Genesee via Uniontown, down the Snake river breaks to Lewiston, where a descent is made from an elevation of over 2,500 feet to an elevation of 600 feet in about four miles. Citizens of Genesee will remember a ride taken over this road a few months ago by two of their number who had recently arrived from an eastern state and settled in their midst. Before starting they were advised by some of their friends who knew the road, to be very good to the driver as there were some steep hills to descend and they would want him to drive slowly. The "friends" had been specific in their advice and consequently when the party started the newcomers had with them two quarts of whiskey with which they at once began to treat the driver. The driver appreciated this unusual kindness, became very much devoted to the bottles and by the time they had reached the breaks was in condition to face any danger and take any risk. Before commencing the descent he took a "long pull" at the stimulants, rose in his seat, and, to the consternation of his passengers, swung the whip across the backs of his horses, gave a wild "whoop" and plunged down the canyon road at break-neck speed. No amount of entreaty or persuasion could induce him to slacken speed. Dangerous curves were rounded in a flash, the hack bounding over rocks and swinging dangerously close to the edge of the almost perpendicular walls falling down from the roadbed; steep descents and ascents were made with the same reckless speed and there was not a moment's pause until the ferry over the Clearwater river was reached at the bottom. The passengers clung furiously to the sides of the hack allowing their hats and parcels to sail away into the air and roll down the rocky canyon sides hundreds of feet to the bottom. In the beginning they rent the air with yells of terror and apprehension but the latter half of the wild ride was taken in death-like silence and when the river level was reached they had to be assisted from the wagon. Once more finding themselves on terra firma they refused to accompany their driver further but found other conveyances into Lewiston, returning eventually to Genesee by another road.

The early mails over these roads were irregular. In the beginning, where everything was carried on horseback, the trips were only made weekly and for some time after the extension of the line to Farmington the weekly schedule was continued. During the summer and fall months the mails came and went with a considerable degree of regularity, but when the muddy or stormy winter season overtook the country Genesee and Paradise valleys were sometimes without mail for two or three weeks. In a speech recently delivered before the Pioneers' Association of Latah county, pioneer A. J. Green, of Moscow, told of the difficulty in getting mail across the Clearwater river at Lewiston. When storms prevented the operation of the ferry, mail was sometimes placed in a basket and hung on the the ferry cable, when it was drawn over the river by a rope kept in place for the purpose. The mail service did not improve much until some time in the 'eighties. As late as 1881 the service was far from being in a state of perfection. When President Garfield was shot in 1881 it was two weeks before the people of Paradise valley were generally apprised of the assassination. The news reached the village of Moscow through a chance traveler from Lewiston; farmers who happened into the village carried it home to neighbors and thus it was gradually spread. With easy means of travel and communication now on every hand it is difficult to realize the full measure of inconveniences and hardships with which the early settlers had to contend. Until 1879 Walla Walla, one hundred miles away, was the supply point for all the Palouse country. Lewiston was nearer but it was next to inaccessible; it was not a produce market and prices were next to prohibitive on every article of merchandise the Palouse farmer needed. Enormous crops of grain and vegetables were raised in 1879 and 1880, but everything had to be hauled to Walla Walla, or to Wawawai and shipped by boat to Portland. The cost of transportation was very great and the margin of profit to the farmers was correspondingly small. A trip to Walla Walla sometimes occupied weeks; the farmer could not leave his crops except at a time when the roads were in bad condition; yet for years, from 1871 to 1879, he must take this long journey annually, for flour, sugar, tea, coffee and other necessities, paying 50 cents per pound for sugar, $1 per gallon for oil, 16 cents per pound for flour, etc. Some of these articles were regarded as luxuries and then the settlers did not always indulge themselves.

In 1876 a sawmill was built by parties named Stewart and Beach at a point about six miles northeast of the present site of Moscow; this was the first sawmill brought north of Snake river. It was a small affair and was only in operation a few months when it was sold to parties at Colfax and taken out of the country. In 1877 R. H. Barton came to the Palouse country and with him were S. J. Langdon and Zack Kump. They came all the way from Corinne, Utah, with an ox team, bringing with them a portable sawmill. Mr. Barton settled at the edge of the timbered foothills, six miles northeast of Moscow, and here on the southeast quarter of section twenty-six, town forty north, range five west, the sawmill was put in operation in the fall of 1877. Zack Kump eventually sold his interest in the mill to Hiram Epperly, and for eighteen months Messrs. Barton, Langdon and Epperly conducted the sawmill, furnishing all the lumber used in Moscow, including that used in the construction of the first hotel, the Barton House.

In a work of this scope there is not space for many interesting details associated with the growth of a settlement or with the development of an industry, depicting individual successes and failures and dwelling on the virtues or vices of the numerous characters in the tragedies, comedies or pastorals of every day pioneer life. This is rather the function of the biographer than of the historian. However, as the history of a community or of a state is the history of its people, the citizen must of necessity be associated in his individual capacity with the history of the industries and institutions of the community in which he resides or has resided. The pioneer of husbandry, of commercial industry, of political or educational institution is held in high esteem by his followers and is entitled to a place in the records of his commonwealth. From various sources we have gathered detached items of information that are worthy of record in the annals of Latah county, showing as they do the spirit of the people and associating individuals prominently with the pastoral, social and educational life of the early days. At a Fourth of July celebration held at the foot of Moscow mountain in 1878, S. J. Langdon was president of the day: Mrs. Epperly, Mary and George Langdon furnished music for the occasion, while speeches were made by R. H. Barton, S. J. Langdon, G. W. Tomer and Dr. Blake. At this meeting it was stated by one of the speakers that the first Paradise valley school house was on the southeast corner of the preemption claim of L. Haskens and the first school was taught by Noah Lieuallen. The building was put up in 1871. During a speech made by R. H. Barton before the Pioneer Association in 1892, the speaker exhibited a stool used by the teachers in this school house; it was all that was saved when the house was burned in 1880. The stool was made from a section of tree split in half. In one of the halves had been fitted three pegs which served as legs. It is still preserved by the Pioneers' Association. Quoting from this speech of Mr. Barton's, we learn that William Ewing located on the Palouse river in the northern part of the county in 1869 and a year later Thomas Tierney located on Thorn Creek. These were among the very first settlers in the county. Quoting from a speech made before the Pioneers' Association December 28, 1894, by J. L. Naylor, of Moscow, we learn that Dr. Blake and G. W. Christie were pioneer justices of the peace and that William Groat, S. J. Langdon, William King and G. W. Tomer were pioneer members of the territorial legislature. The first frame houses in the county were erected by Henry Trimble, David Allen and E. N. DeLong, near Moscow, and the first sod turned over with a plow in this great agricultural county was turned a few miles southeast of Moscow by Henry Trimble.

The following is an extract from a speech made at a pioneers' meeting June 14, 1893, by Hon. Willis Sweet: "I remember well the ruin of the stockade that stood back of Charles Moore's place. In the early 'eighties it was a conspicuous relic of the exciting days when Joseph and his hostiles carried ruin and death to so many homes in northern Idaho. That cruel extremity you were spared; but your hardships were many compared with the surroundings you now enjoy. You traveled to Walla Walla for your flour and many other household necessities. And such roads!" The following is the history of the stockade: In June, 1877, came the Joseph Indian war. At the first alarm the settlers with their families sought safety in temporary forts and stockades that were hastily constructed as a protection against the raids of the treacherous redskins. The first stockade was built near the residence formerly occupied by J. S. Howard, who died in the early 'eighties. The permanent stockade was built where part of Moscow now stands, back of the residence of John Russell and now the residence of Mrs. Julia A. Moore. The stockade was built of logs from six to ten inches in diameter, set on end in the ground close together. They were hauled from the mountains six miles distant and at a time when it was taking a man's life in his hands to make the trip. These old posts may yet be seen along the road to the south of the Moore residence. Here about thirty settlers and their families spent many anxious days and night. The greatest danger was from the Coeur d'Alene Indians of the north joining their forces with those of the wily leader of the Nez Perces and making a raid on the settlers who were very poorly supplied with arms and more poorly supplied with ammunition. But through the efforts of their chief, who was always peaceably disposed towards the whites, and the timely assistance of the good Father Cataldo, the mission priest, they were held in check. In the meantime the United States troops and volunteers pressed the hostile Joseph and his warriors so hard that they retreated across the old Lolo trail to Montana, where they were finally captured. The very scarcity of settlers in this section caused the savages to turn their attention southward towards Grangeville and Mt. Idaho, where there were more scalps and plunder to be obtained. Greater alarm than would perhaps otherwise have existed was caused by the killing of John Richie, who was shot by an Indian while standing in the doorway of his house in Pine Creek. This apparently confirmed the report that the Spokane and Couer d'Alene Indians would join the Nez Perces in a general war against the whites.

At the time of the Bannock Indian war in 1878, Latah county citizens prepared for emergencies by organizing two companies of volunteers who held themselves in readiness to respond to any call that might be made for their services. Moscow had a company of forty or fifty men, officered by W. D. Robbins, captain, and Henry McGregor, first lieutenant. At the sawmill northeast of town was another company equally as large of which S. J. Langdon was captain; R. H. Barton, first lieutenant; H. S. Epperly, second lieutenant, and J. L. Naylor, orderly. Guns were secured from Lewiston for which happily there proved to be no need, as the Indians did not appear in this part of the country.

To show something of the rapidity with which the Palouse country was settled during the 'seventies, we reproduce some correspondence taken from an issue of the old Lewiston Teller, dated June 9, 1881. The author of the correspondence was the editor of the Teller at the time and was on an overland trip from Lewiston to Spokane. The camping places referred to were along the Idaho-Washington state line north of Moscow. "It is hard to describe the changes that have taken place since I camped here nine years ago (1872), when not a solitary habitation could be found within many miles of this place. At that time we had been riding north from Lewiston to find settlers to sign a petition for a mail route from Lewiston north to Spokane Bridge. We crossed at the forks of Hangman's creek then turned and went down the north side and about every half mile found a statue with a shingle nailed to it, upon which was written the name of some man with the announcement that he claimed a tract of land at or near that point. Until we went down the creek about eight miles we found no settler. Then we found the savage family. Further down we found fifteen or twenty persons camped, among them Major Wimpy. They were cutting hay and getting timber in the mountains and making other preparations for the beginning of permanent homes. On our return we found six or seven log structures completed and occupied. We now find almost the entire section within a radius of eight or ten miles absorbed by settlers, save the railroad reserves, and many of these have been occupied and much improved. Good homes have been built, good fences and extensively improved fields are everywhere visible and the acreage under cultivation is large.

A gap in the divide between the two mentioned creeks led us by a good wagon road into the Rock creek valley, which now contains from 125 to 140 voters with their families, which ought to give a population of from 700 to 1,000. When we passed through this country nine years ago over the Indian trails leading from Lapwai to the Spokane, not a solitary habitation was visible throughout the whole vast extent of prairie land from Moscow north. Now Genesee valley, Paradise valley, Strawberry valley and Rock creek valley are settled and the greater portion of the lands occupied."

At the second session of the territorial legislature which convened at Lewiston, November 14th and adjourned December 23d, 1864, the following act was passed and approved: "An Act creating the Counties of Lah-toh and Kootenai. Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Idaho as follows: Section 1. That all that portion of Idaho Territory embraced within the following described boundaries, be and the same is hereby created into, and shall be known as the county of Lah-toh, to wit: Beginning at a point in the main channel of the Snake River at its junction with the Clearwater River; thence running due north along the dividing line between Washington and Idaho territories, to the forty-eighth degree of north latitude; thence east with said degree of latitude until it interesects the boundary line of Shoshone county; thence south with the boundary line of said county to the middle channel of Clearwater river; thence with the channel of said river to its junction with the Snake river to the place of beginning; and the county seat of said county of Lah-toh is hereby located at Couer d'Alene."

At the fourth session of the territorial legislature which convened at Boise December 3, 1866, and adjourned January 11, 1867, an amendatory act was passed redescribing the boundaries of Kootenai county and repealing section 1 of the act of 1864, which created Lah-toh county. In the fall of the year 1878 the people in and around Moscow, and in the northern part of the county determined to organize the county of Lah-toh under the assembly act of 1864. They were for some reason without knowledge of the amendatory legislation of 1867. Meetings were held at Moscow and elsewhere, a petition having the required fifty signatures was secured and forwarded to Governor Brayman with the request that he appoint commissioners. By the old act the 48th parallel of latitude was named as the northern boundary and Coeur d'Alene as the temporary county seat. Governor Brayman had also overlooked the repealing act of 1867 and granted the request of the petitioners, going so far as to appoint commissioners in the persons of Messrs. Canfield, Rankin and Martin, residents in the vicinity of Coeur d'Alene. Governor and people were not long in discovering their mistake, however, and the movement to organize Lah-toh county was for the time dropped. Again in 1881 a petition and communication were forwarded from Coeur d'Alene to Governor John B. Neil asking for the appointment of commissioners for the county of Lah-toh. This the governor replied he could not do under existing laws and cited the petitions to the acts of 1864 and 1867. As the northern boundary line of Nez Perces county had been in the meantime established on the divide between Hangmans' creek and Palouse river by the government survey of the Coeur d'Alene Indian reservation, and as the act of 1867 described Kootenai county as embracing all territory north of Nez Perces county, the petitioners found that they were no longer in the Lah-toh county described by the act of 1864. Upon the return of the papers from Governor Neil, therefore, they substituted the name of "Kootenai" for "Lah-toh" and at once sent them back for his reconsideration. The following extract from a letter published in the Lewiston Teller explains the action of the petitioners at Coeur d'Alene: "Coeur d'Alene, Idaho Ty., July 22, 1881. A. Leland Esq.: Shortly after you left here we received a letter from Governor Neil disapproving of our county organization under the name of Lah-toh. We at once took the necessary legal steps to organize as Kootenai county. The territorial officers have acknowledged us and we are now a de facto and de jure government under the name of Kootenai, etc.," Messrs. Canfield, Rankin and Martin became Kootenai county instead of Lah-toh county commissioners.

In September, 1885, the O. R. & N. railroad reached Moscow, which has remained the terminus of the road since that date. During the summer of 1883 committees from Colfax, Pullman and Moscow visited the farmers along the proposed route of the railway and secured the right of way. All the country needed in order to make it exceedingly prosperous was transportation facilities. It is not our purpose to recount here the history of the building of the railroad. In another portion of this work a special chapter has been devoted to railroad schemes and railroad construction and in this chapter the reader will find details concerning the O. R. & N. and N. P. Railroad. The O. R. & N. reached Moscow about the middle of September and the first cars crossed the Idaho-Washington line and ran into Moscow on the 23d of the month. There was general and great rejoicing; salutes were fired, whistles blown, and speeches made. Wednesday, the day of the arrival of the first train, witnessed a grand celebration and on Friday a grand ball was held which was attended by hundreds. The results following the completion of the road can never be properly estimated. They were not all manifested in a year or in a decade; they are accumulating still and must ever continue to accumulate for the agricultural resources of the county are practically inexhaustible and all industrial interests must grow and keep pace with the gradual development of these resources.

There is an interesting reminiscence entitled to a place here, in explanation of the old railroad grade which runs through the north end of town, but which has never been used. At the time the O. R. & N. was projected, Miles C. Moore, of Walla Walla, and Charles Moore, of Moscow, were joint owners of a tract of land on the north side of Moscow and they induced the company to build their grade through this tract, giving them the right of way. In return for this concession, they demanded exclusive warehouse privileges for a term of years. W. J. McConnell, W. W. Baker, A. A. Lieuallen and others living in the north end of town were also desirous, because of their property holdings, that the road should use this end of town for their terminal equipment. There were those in the south end of town who were not averse to having the road cross their property and as the company was loathe to grant exclusive warehouse privileges to anyone, circumstances rather favored the southenders. Both Field Engineer McClellan and a new chief who had just come upon the ground favored the south end, claiming that if the company ever wanted to extend the line east they could not get out of town by the north end route. The chief and his assistants were boarding at the Barton house at the time and R. H. Barton, accidentally learning their views, at once took steps to push matters to a conclusion. Henry McGregor and James Deakin were the owners of land on either side of the present main street in the south end of town. It was night, but Barton hurriedly summoned M. J. Shields, Henry Durnham and John Kanaley to a special meeting to be held on the bridge south of town. He then located James Deakin and Henry McGregor and piloted them to the bridge. Here the situation was explained to the land owners, and after some vigorous characteristic speeches by Shields and Barton, and promises of an equal distribution of their loss involved in the concessions desired, they readily consented to give the railroad anything they wanted in the way of right of way through their places, provided they would change the route. The party then disbanded and Mr. Barton informed the engineers that if they would survey the line through south Moscow they could have all the land needed there for tracks, depot, etc. The offer was at once communicated to the officials at Portland with the recommendation that it be accepted. On the following day M. C. Moore was in Portland and repaired to the offices of the railroad company to press his claim for warehouse privileges. The officials were independent and refused to make any concession of this character. Some "puts and calls" were exchanged and at the close of the argument, a message was sent to the engineers at Moscow to survey the new route. This was at once done and the old grade was abandoned. This was the sequel to the midnight meeting on the bridge.

Turning again to an earlier period in the history of the county, let us record briefly the work of those who followed the argonauts of the 'fifties, 'sixties and seventies in their quest for golden treasure. These men were not in search of pastoral lands, and had they been, they would not have builded their homes in the Palouse country, for it was not thought possible in those days to produce crops on the hills of Genesee and Paradise valleys, nor on the ridges of the Potlatch. Ten years before a new one considered the Latah country adapted to agricultural pursuits, mining was carried on in various parts of the county. As far back as 1862 placer claims were worked along some of the water courses. Besides the deposits of gold and silver, mica and opals were found in several localities. The exhibit of Idaho opals at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893, came from Latah county. In 1881 a mine of mica was discovered about thirty miles from Moscow by J. T. Woody, and in a short time a number of other locations were made in the same vicinity. The principal placer mines in the county are situated in the Hoodoo district which has been worked for the last thirty-five years. Other mines worked successfully are on Jerome creek, Swamp creep, Gold creek and many others, and in Howard gulch, Garden gulch, Crumrine gulch and others on Moscow mountain. The first quartz mill in the county was operated on a ledge on Moscow mountain and owned by Dr. Worthington and D. C. Mitchell. In 1896 a mill was started in the Daisy mine on Jerome creek, which is now on a paying basis. On Ruby creek is a most valuable gold and silver mine called the Silver King. For years gold has been taken from the ledges of Moscow mountain by the "arrastre" process and if this mountain of wealth were situated in some remote locality, difficult of access it would be considered a veritable Klondyke. The Gold Bug, Golden Gate and the Big Ledge are the principal mines worked there in recent years. The Golden Gate Company has a 200 foot tunnel, and contemplates putting in a mill. Adjoining the Golden Gate is the White Cross mine which has a fine stamp mill.

The Hoodoo mines have had seasons of ups and downs; worked successfully for a time in the early sixties, they experienced a long season of inactivity during the late 'sixties and the 'seventies. Again in 1885 and 1886 there was a season of excitement, many flocking there from all directions with the hope of improving their fortunes. What are known as the Hoodoo mines, comprising four gulches that empty into the Palouse river about 30 miles northeast of Moscow, were first discovered and worked in the years 1862 and 1863 and paid all the way from $20 to $100 per day to the man. At that time all provisions, tools, etc. were packed into the mines on ponies over a very difficult and almost impassable trail from Lewiston, a distance of about eighty miles, which was the nearest trading point. The high prices that were then paid for merchandise in Lewiston, together with the high price also charged for packing, compelled miners to work only claims that would yield the precious dust in abundance. Mines that would not pay at least $20 a day were not considered worth taking. About the time the Hoodoo mines were being worked, there was great excitement raging in the northwest over new discoveries of gold in Montana and thousands of miners packed their blankets and picks and started eastward toward the new Eldorado. The Hoodoo miners, not making any new discoveries on the Palouse, one by one, gathered up their luggage and silently took their departure, following the chant of excitement. Thus Hoodoo was vacated. The pioneer prospectors left their little gold field that but a short time before was rich in its deposits of mineral wealth. Nothing more was heard of the Palouse as a mining district until the year 1870 when gold was discovered on Jerome, Camas and Gold creeks, tributaries of the Palouse. These creeks were worked with very little excitement, and paid equally as well as the old Hoodoo mines. From that time mining has been carried on by a few individuals, more or less, down to the present time. The Coeur d'Alene excitement brought hundreds of prospectors to this region and the result was the rediscovery of gold in the old Hoodoo district. Many claims were opened and the side gulches which were easily mined proved far richer than was expected.

Many will remember the excitement about Moscow during the summer of 1881 over the Roland quartz find in the mountains east of the town. Roland had guarded his secret carefully but while in town for supplies confided in a few personal friends and by the time he was ready to return to the mountains, several parties were ready to follow him. His secret soon became common property and scores of claims were taken up in the vicinity. Assays from Roland's claim returned three to four hundred dollars per ton. A good deal of the development work has been done on this and other claims in the region but thus far no heavily producing mines have resulted.

Prior to the building of the Northern Pacific railroad, Lewiston, the county seat of Nez Perces county, of which the present Latah county was a part, was a very inaccessible point for citizens of Moscow and of all points north of the Clearwater river. The distance is about thirty miles and the roads in those days were, during a portion of every year, next to impassable. It was necessary to go down the Clearwater breaks which is, even today, after years of work on the roads, an undertaking accompanied by a element of risk and danger. Since the building of the railroad to Lewiston it is still necessary to travel fifty-three miles to reach the town from Moscow, making a semi-circle via Troy, Kendrick, Juliaetta, etc. Under these conditions it is not surprising that the citizens of the north half of the county should conceive the plan and endeavor to execute it, of removing the capitol of the county to Moscow. In 1882 a determined effort was made to accomplish this end, first by seeking to create a new county north of the Clearwater. Petitions were formulated which were numerously signed, and a bill was introduced in the legislature providing for the creation of Latah county with Moscow as the county seat. The bill was introduced by William S. Taylor in the council and vigorously supported by G. W. Tomer in the lower house. It was found, however, that the legislature was powerless to act in the matter owing to the existence of a recently passed congressional act forbidding special legislation by the territorial legislature, creating new counties or changing the boundary lines of old ones. Disappointed in this effort Mr. Taylor introduced another bill providing for a special election, submitting the question of relocation of the county seat of Nez Perces to a vote of the people. This election was held in June, 1883, and Moscow, through her citizens, worked hard to secure the coveted prize. She was doomed to a second disappointment, however, as Lewiston was selected by a vote of 922 to 642. At this time the citizens of all this region were praying for annexation to Washington and expected confidently that the union would be speedily consummated. During the county seat contest the friends of Lewiston worked diligently among the voters north of Moscow and inspired them with the belief that when annexation was accomplished there would be a readjustment of the county lines, in which case Palouse City, nearer their section than Moscow, would in all probability be chosen a county seat of some new county. When election day came, therefore, voters in the north end of the county voted with Lewiston and against Moscow, this giving the victory to Lewiston. In another chapter will be found the history of the annexation movement. It is only necessary to state here that the citizens of Latah were almost unanimous for political affiliation with Washington. The principal causes of this unanimity of sentiment was the difficulty experienced in reaching Boise, the capital of Idaho, and the fact that Washington was about to become a state while the prospects for Idaho remaining indefinitely a territory were at that time excellent. It is interesting to note, in looking over the files of newspapers printed during the time of the agitation of this question and after its settlement, up to and after the date of the organization of the state, that sentiment has gradually changed until, at the present time, it would be difficult to find anywhere in the Panhandle, a prominent advocate of annexation. The efforts a few years ago to revive the question by the introduction into the Washington legislature of a bill requesting the appointment of a joint Idaho-Washington commission to consider the question met with no supporting sentiment in northern Idaho and was ridiculed mercilessly in the editorial columns of the press, one edition stating that the panhandle would never again support any move to dismember the proud "Gem of the Mountains." In a speech recently made by A. J. Green, a pioneer attorney of Moscow, at a pioneers' reunion near Moscow, he gives a reason for the final settlement of the question of annexation. We quote his words: "In the early days there was great agitation of the question of annexing to Washington what is known as the panhandle of Idaho. This agitation continued for years and finally both houses of congress passed a bill annexing the panhandle to Washington. Had it not been that President Cleveland vetoed this bill by putting it into his pocket and refusing to sign it, we would now be in the state of Washington instead of in the state of Idaho. The people of Moscow and Latah county, as I have said before, have always been very ambitious. At the time to which I refer we had a new county and a new county seat, but we were not satisfied. The annexation scheme having failed and the question having been settled, as we believed, for all time, we set about getting something for the new county and Moscow. The state university was to be located somewhere and by hard work we secured its location at Moscow. Southern Idaho having more than twice the population of northern Idaho, had always fought the annexation of any part of the territory to Washington; so when a bill was introduced into the territorial legislature to locate the university at Moscow, all southern Idaho came to our support and assisted in making the bill a law, thinking that it would forever settle the question of annexation. And it did; when the university was located at Moscow the annexation question was finally settled."

Before closing this chapter it may be well to mention briefly the last effort on the part of the citizens of Moscow, prior to the creation of Latah county, to secure to their town political honors, and to themselves some of the conveniences enjoyed by the citizens of Lewiston and of all that portion of Nez Perces county south of the Clearwater river. In 1886 an effort was made to secure the passage of an act permitting the county to elect two sets of officers. It was desired only that there be two treasurers, two auditors and two tax collectors, one set with offices at Lewiston and one with offices at Moscow. The citizens of Moscow and of the north end of the county agreed to furnish suitable buildings for the accommodation of the extra officers, free of expense to the county. These were to include a jail and court room as it was proposed to hold a summer term of court at Moscow and a winter term at Lewiston, or vice versa. The scheme was poorly supported, however, and came to naught. Details concerning subsequent action looking to the establishment of a new county will be considered in another chapter.

CHAPTER II.

ORGANIZATION AND SUBSEQUENT EVENTS.

Three times the citizens of northern Nez Perces county had failed in their efforts to lessen the inconveniences to which they were subjected on account of their geographical position with reference to Lewiston, the county seat, and in their efforts to secure to the growing town of Moscow deserved political honors. But they were undismayed and never for a moment rested from their labors. The congressional enactment referred to in the previous chapter forbade them to hope for relief from the territorial legislature. Their last and successful fight was made in the national legislature. Congressman Fred Duboise of Blackfoot, Bingham county, was induced to champion their cause in the lower house of congress, and through his influence Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, looked after their interests in the senate. In the winter of 1887 a bill was introduced in the house of the Fiftieth congress by Mr. Duboise, creating from a certain described tract in the northern part of Nez Perces county, the new county of Latah. The residents of Lewiston and vicinity made a vigorous defensive campaign and sent Attorney J. W. Reid to Washington to oppose the legislation and the consequent segregation of the county. The interests of Moscow and the north were represented at Washington by Charles Moore. The bill met with but little opposition in either house of congress and by the signature of President Cleveland became a law May 14, 1888. This is the only instance where a county in any state or territory has been formed by act of congress. The following is the text of the act:

PUBLIC ACT NO. 91.

AN ACT TO CREATE AND ORGANIZE THE COUNTY OF LATAH.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That all that portion of Nez Perces county, in the Territory of Idaho, lying north of the following line, to-wit: Commencing at a point where the middle line of township thirty-eight north intersects the line between Nez Perces and Shoshone counties in said territory; thence west to Big Potlach creek, where it first intersects the middle line of township thirty-eight; thence down said creek southwesterly to a point where it intersects the middle line of township thirty-seven; thence due west to the line between the Territories of Idaho and Washington be, and the same is hereby, formed and organized into a county, to be known and designated as the county of Latah, with all the rights, powers, and privileges of counties under the existing laws of the Territory of Idaho.

Sec. 2. That W. W. Langdon, J. L. Naylor, and William Frazier are hereby appointed commissioners of said county of Latah, and their annual compensation shall be the same as now provided by law for the commissioners of Nez Perces county.

Sec. 3. That the county commissioners above named are hereby authorized, within twenty days after the approval of this act, to qualify before a justice of the peace and enter upon the discharge of their duties as such commissioners, and are hereby empowered to appoint all necessary county officers to perfect the organization of said county of Latah under the laws of the Territory of Idaho, and the said county commissioners and other county officers appointed as aforesaid shall hold their offices until the next general election provided by the laws of said Territory, and until their successors are elected and qualified according to law.

Sec. 4. That the justices of the peace, constables, road supervisors and other precinct and school officers heretofore elected and qualified and now acting as such, residing in said county of Latah, are hereby continued as such officers in said county of Latah until the next general election aforesaid and until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

Sec. 5. That the county of Latah shall pay to the county of Nez Perce a just proportion or the net indebtedness of said Nez Perce county, the same to be determined as follows, to wit: The county treasurer, recorder, and the present county assessor of Nez Perce County are hereby constituted a board of adjusters, who shall proceed to ascertain the net indebtedness of said county of Nez Perce, which shall be done as follows, namely: Ascertain all the county justly owes in warrants, scrip or other just debts, which amount shall constitute the gross indebtedness of said county, from which deduct the amount of the unpaid portion of the assessment roll of eighteen hundred and eighty-seven and the amount of all delinquent assessment rolls which are considered collectable up to that date, and the amount of all moneys and other credits due the county; and the balance so found shall constitute the indebtedness of said county of Nez Perces; and the net indebtedness of said county of Nez Perces ascertained as aforesaid, shall be divided equally between the counties of Nez Perces and Latah in proportion to the taxable property of the counties as it legally appears on the assessment roll for the year eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, and the said county of Latah shall cause a warrant or warrants to be drawn upon its treasurer payable to the county of Nez Perces, which said warrant or warrants shall take priority in payment over all other warrants, scrip, or other indebtedness of the said county of Latah.

Sec. 6. That the county commissioners of Nez Perces county are hereby authorized and required to furnish to the county of Latah transcripts of all records, indexes and documents and other papers on file and of record in the offices of Nez Perces county, which may be necessary to perfect the records of Latah county. They may contract with the auditor of Nez Perces county to make the above-named transcripts, the compensation for which shall be in addition to his regular salary. The necessary books for the aforementioned transcripts shall be furnished by Latah county, and the expense of making the said transcripts shall be paid by the counties of Nez Perces and Latah equally. Certificates of the correctness of said records, made as aforesaid, shall have the same legal effect as if made by the auditor of Nez Perces county.

Sec. 7. That the county of Latah is hereby attached to Nez Perces County for judicial purposes until the next meeting of the judges of the supreme court of Idaho Territory, when it shall be the duty of said judges to fix a time for holding court in said county of Latah as provided by the laws of said Territory for the other counties thereof. Thirty days after the time of holding said court is fixed as aforesaid, the said county of Latah shall assume and be vested with all the judicial rights, privileges, and powers of a county under the laws of the said Territory of Idaho.

Sec. 8. That the county of Latah shall remain with Nez Perces county for legislative purposes until otherwise provided by law.

Sec. 9. That the county seat of Latah county is hereby located at the town of Moscow in said county.

Sec. 10. That the commissioners of Latah county be, and they are hereby, authorized to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, of denominations not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, running for a term of not less than ten nor more than twenty years, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding eight per centum per annum, with interest coupons attached, which bonds shall be signed by the chairman of the board of county commissioners and the auditor of said county, and be authenticated by the seal of said county.

Sec. 11. That the said board of commissioners are hereby authorized to make sale of said bonds and apply the proceeds thereof to the erection of a court-house and jail, and such other public buildings as may be necessary; Provided, That no bond shall be sold by said commissioners for less than its par value

Sec. 12. That the said board of commissioners and their successors in office are hereby empowered and required to levy such tax as may be necessary to promptly pay the interest on said bonds, and also to levy such tax as may be necessary to pay the principal of said bonds as the same shall become due.

Sec. 13. That in the event said board of commissioners shall issue said bonds as hereinbefore authorized, the interest coupons thereof shall be receivable in payment of the county taxes of said county.

Sec. 14. That the commissioners of Nez Perces county be, and they are hereby, authorized to issue bonds to an amount not exceeding thirty thousand dollars, of denominations not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, running for terms of not less than ten nor more than twenty years, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding eight per centum per annum with interest coupons attached, which bonds shall be signed by the chairman of the said board of commissioners and county auditor, and be authenticated by the seal of said county.

Sec. 15. That the said board of commissioners are hereby authorized to make sale of said bonds and apply the proceeds thereof to the erection of a court-house, jail, and such other public buildings as may be necessary, and for the building of necessary bridges; Provided, That no bond shall be sold by said board of commissioners for less than its par value.

Sec. 16. That the said board of commissioners and their successors in office are hereby empowered and required to levy such tax as may be necessary to promptly pay the interest on said bonds, and also to levy such tax as may be necessary to pay the principal of said bonds as the same shall become due.

Sec. 17. That in the event said board of commissioners shall issue bonds as hereinbefore authorized, the interest coupons attached to said bonds shall be receivable in payment for the county taxes of said county of Nez Perces.

Sec. 18. That the county of Latah shall not be entitled to any portion of the property, real or personal, of the said county of Nez Perces.

Sec. 19 That all acts in conflict with any of the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Sec. 20. That this act shall be in force from and after its ratification.

Approved, May 14, 1888.

That conditions fully warranted the organization of the county at this time is shown by a statement issued December 13, 1888, by County Auditor W. B. Kyle, showing the financial conditions. By this statement it appears that the total revenue, both county and territorial, amounted to $40,783.54; total amount of warrants drawn, $33,130.84, including $20,000 in bonds lately issued under the creating act for building purposes. The $33,130.84, amount of warrants drawn, included warrants for $17,000 issued in favor of Nez Perces county in payment of Latah's proportion of Nez Perces county's indebtedness. The new county was about thirty-six miles square and had a population at that time of 10,000. The number of persons assessed in 1888 for poll taxes was 1629. The division of a county not infrequently inflicts grievous burdens upon the citizens of the new political body through the necessity of special taxes for the support of new officials, the erection of new buildings, etc., but in this case the necessity for the existence of the new county had been of long standing and the people were prepared for the new financial burdens. The new order of things went into effect without disturbance to the affairs of Nez Perces county and Latah at once took rank among the leading wealth producing counties of the territory. The total valuation of property for purposes of assessment in 1888 was $1,168,255, including Moscow's valuation, which was $356,998.

The creating act became a law May 14, 1888, and on May 28th the steps were taken to complete the organization. Minutes of these proceedings are as follows: In accordance with an act of congress approved on the 14th day of May, 1881, entitled, "An Act to create and organize the county of Latah in the Territory of Idaho; appointing W. W. Langdon, J. L. Naylor and Wm. Frazier, commissioners of said county of Latah; the said W. W. Langdon, J. L. Naylor and Wm. Frazier, met at the office of Moore & Langdon in the town of Moscow, I. T., on Tuesday the 28th day of May, 1888, at 9 o'clock A. M. and proceeded to organize the said county of Latah. Each of the aforesaid appointed commissioners qualified before Justice of the Peace John Moore, by subscribing to the oath of office, and the necessary bonds as by law provided for: each was approved and filed by the said Justice of the Peace John Moore on this 28th day of May, 1888. J. L. Naylor was elected chairman and W. W. Langdon, clerk pro tem of the board of county commissioners in and for the said county of Latah and Territory of Idaho.

May 29, 1888, the board made the following appointments for county officers: Auditor and recorder, W. B. Kyle; probate judge, Louis Jain, Genesee; treasurer, W. W. Baker, Moscow; sheriff, Robert Bruce, Deep Creek; district attorney, C. B. Reynolds, Moscow; assessor, L. C. Roberts, Viola; surveyor, S. L. Campbell, Moscow; school superintendent, J. W. Lieuallen, Moscow; coroner, William Gray, Brickaville. For a board of pharmacy the following named physicians were appointed; A. E. Sanders, Moscow; W. C. Cox, Genesee; E. E. Watts, Juliaetta. June 4th, Robert Bruce of Deep Creek declined by letter to act as sheriff and recommended R. H. Barton of Moscow, as his choice for that office. The board accordingly appointed R. H. Barton sheriff. June 7th, Louis Jains of Genesee declined by letter to act as probate judge and recommended Roland Hodgins for appointment. The board accordingly appointed Roland Hodgins probate judge. It was ordered that the salaries for the county officers appointed by the board of commissioners for the remaining term of 1888 be fixed as follows: sheriff, $1,200 per annum; recorder, $600 per annum; assessor, 12 per cent on per capita tax and 5 per cent on all other taxes as provided by law; probate judge, $200; district attorney, $600; treasurer, $300, and school superintendent, $200 per annum. On July 16th the board created ten election districts as follows: Genesee, Thorn Creek, Moscow, Four Mile, Palouse, Pine Creek, Gold Creek, Bear Creek, American Ridge, Little Potlatch. August 2d, R. S. Browne was appointed treasurer in place of W. W. Baker, resigned. September 29th the contract for a court house was let to the Pauly Jail Building & Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, through their agent, James T. Jones, for $20,000. On November 2d the twenty bonds, each of one thousand dollars, bearing interest at eight per cent annually, were sold to the estate of Dorsey S. Baker for $21,700 cash. These bonds were dated November 2, 1888, and were drawn payable twenty years from date. Ten were made payable to M. C. Moore or bearer at the Importers and Traders National Bank, New York City. They were delivered to the First National Bank of Moscow as agents for the estate of Dorsey S. Baker.

The first county officers, appointed by the commissioners served until their successors qualified after the first general election in November, 1888. During this campaign there were three parties in the field, Republican, Democratic and Independent. As this was the first election held as a new county, national politics were not so prominent throughout the campaign as were local affairs. Conventions were held late in the summer and for the more important offices each party nominated a full ticket. The Republican candidates were: For the legislative council, J. W. Brigham, of Moscow; for the assembly, A. S. Chaney, F. E. Mix and J. H. Irvine; for district attorney, A. J. Green of Moscow; for probate judge, William Wilson of Potlatch; for sheriff, R. H. Barton, of Moscow; for coroner, C. C. Carpenter; for assessor, G. J. Parker, of Moscow; for surveyor, S. L. Campbell of Moscow; for recorder, W. B. Kyle of Moscow; for treasurer, R. S. Browne, of Moscow; for school superintendent, T. N. Creekmur, of Moscow; for commissioner, first district, F. L. Bell; 2d district, J. L. Naylor; 3d district, S. D. Oylear.

The Democratic party placed in nomination, for the legislative council, C. A. Leeper of Nez Perces county; for the assembly, James D. Haven, W. T. Thompson and H. J. Bundy; for district attorney, J. C. Elder of Moscow; for probate judge, Roland Hodgins of Moscow; for sheriff, George Langdon of Moscow; for coroner, J. L. Brown, of Moscow; for assessor, Frank Jones of Genesee; for surveyor, Arthur Colburn; for recorder, C. L. Roberts of Moscow; for treasurer, Henry Dernham of Moscow; for school superintendent, J. W. Lieuallen of Moscow; for commissioners, first district, J. S. Randolph; second district, A. Elliott of Genesee; third district, William Gray of Potlatch.

Those running independent were, for district attorney, C. B. Reynolds of Moscow; for sheriff, W. A. Galbreath; for assessor, D. J. Wilcox; for recorder, W. A. Elyea; for treasurer, W. W. Langdon of Moscow; for commissioner of the second district, T. F. Maher of Moscow.

The official report of this first election is as follows: Latah's vote on delegate to congress stood; Fred T. Dubois of Blackfoot, Republican, 341; Norman Buck of Lewiston, Independent, 864; Jas. H. Hawley of Boise, Democrat, 237; Buck's majority in the county, 286. For the legislative council, J. W. Brigham received 1,428 votes and C. A. Leeper 5, Brigham's majority 1423. For the legislative assembly, F. E. Mix received 1138 votes, A. S. Chaney 1406, J. H. Irvine 1244, Jas. D. Haven 194, W. T. Thompson 13, H. J. Bundy 13, J. T. Mitcham 251, and H. B. Blake 21. For district attorney A. J. Green received 627 votes, J. C. Elder 528, C. B. Reynolds 280, Green's plurality 99. For probate judge William Wilson received 670 votes and Roland Hodgins 752, Hodgins' majority 82. For sheriff R. H. Barton received 448 votes, George Langdon 657, W. A. Galbreath 338, Langdon's plurality 209. For coroner J. L. Brown received 464 votes and C. C. Carpenter 394, Brown's majority 70. For assessor G. J. Parker received 709 votes, Frank Jones 498, and D. J. Wilcox 237, Parker's plurality 211. For school superintendent T. N. Creekmur received 672 votes, J. W. Lieualen 615, and H. W. Grubb 156, Creekmur's plurality 57. For commissioners, first district, F. L. Bell received 272 votes, and J. S. Randolph 76, Bell's majority 196; second district, A. Elliott, received 322 votes J. L. Naylor 340, and T. F. Maher 63, Naylor's plurality 18; third district, S. D. Oylear received 233 votes, and William Gray 115, Oylear's majority 118. For surveyor S. L. Campbell received 1008 votes and Arthur Colburn 437, Campbell's majority 571. For recorder W. B. Kyle received 764 votes, L. C. Roberts 471, and W. A. Elyea 211, Kyle's majority 82. For treasurer R. S. Browne received 671 votes, Henry Dernham 395, and W. W. Langdon 349, Browne's plurality 276. The proposition to annex the panhandle to Washington was supported by a vote of 252 for and one vote against.

There was no cessation of activity in Latah county in 1889. The country increased rapidly in population and the towns were growing and becoming more important as business centers. Since the completion of the O. R. & N., Moscow's progress had been continuous and rapid. In 1888 the Northern Pacific from Pullman was completed to Genesee and in 1889 Genesee was ready to incorporate. In the spring of 1889 the court house was completed and accepted by the county commissioners. The full amount realized from the sale of the bonds, $21,700, was expended in its erection.

The total valuation of property for purposes of taxation in 1889 was $2,798,603.

The census of 1890 credited Latah county with a population of 9,176, making it the most populous county in the state. In the work of framing the state constitution and in transforming the territory to a state, the county was represented by W. J. McConnell, H. B. Blake and W. D. Robbins. In September of this year considerable excitement was occasioned by the discovery on the farm of William Leasure, north of Moscow, of a stratum of rock bearing fire opals. The discovery was made while a well was being dug on the farm. The stones were found in pockets, in a porous lava formation, and, on subjection to scientific tests, were found to be genuine fire opals worth from $100 to $500 per ounce. There was, of course, a rush of prospectors to Mr. Leasure's farm and it was soon staked off into more than one hundred claims. As Mr. Leasure had made final proof on his homestead, however, it was not thought that the claims could be held. There was no contest in this matter; considerable prospecting was done and quite a number of stones of value found; but the mining did not prove profitable and the claims were eventually abandoned. Some of the stones mined at this time, as heretofore mentioned, found place in the Idaho exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. During the years 1889 and 1890 the Farmer's Alliance became a formidable organization, including in its membership rolls the majority of the farmers in almost every community. At a meeting held in Moscow on November 22, 1890, they decided to establish an alliance store. Of this organization at the time, J. L. Naylor was president, A. T. Lane vice president, C. A. S. Howard secretary. The plans of the organization were never consummated; a warehouse was afterward erected which eventually passed to individual ownership. In the 'nineties the organization became defunct, its members scattering to the Populist and Free Silver parties, whose platforms endorsed the fundamentals of the alliance.

On the admission of Idaho as a state, Moscow was chosen as the place for holding sessions of the United States court. James H. Beatty has sat as judge of this court since its first session in 1890, and A. L. Richardson has served as clerk. The first United States district attorney was Fremont Wood, who served from 1890 to 1894. Mr. Wood was followed in this office by James H. Forney from 1894 to January 10, 1898, when Robert V. Cozier, the present incumbent, entered upon his first term. Marshals who have served this court are Joseph Pinkham, 1890 to 1894; James F. Crutcher, 1894 to 1898; Frank C. Ramsey, 1898 to 1902: Rural Rounds, 1902 to the present time. In 1892 a session was held at Coeur d'Alene to try the union labor cases which grew out of the riots in the Coeur d'Alene mines. Among the important cases tried at Moscow was that of the United States vs. James Eddy, John Eddy, Newt. Eddy, Emmett Taylor, Charles Scroggins, Frank Freligh, Ike Splawn and Stan. Splawn for counterfeiting five, ten and twenty dollar gold coins. This case was tried at the May term. 1897. The crimes were committed in Idaho county during the summer of 1896. James H. Forney conducted the case for the United States. Attorneys employed by the defendants individually and in parties, were McNamee and Morgan, Lot L. Feltham, Denning & Truitt, and James W. Reid. James and John Eddy and Emmett Taylor were fined on one count $100 each and sentenced to ten years at hard labor; on another count they were each fined $100 and sentenced to six additional years at hard labor. Charles Scroggins was fined $100 and sentenced to six years at hard labor; Ike Splawn received a sentence of eight years at hard labor; Newton Eddy was fined $1000 and sentenced to twenty months without hard labor; Stanford Splawn was fined $1000 and sentenced to two years without hard labor. Another important and famous case tried at Moscow was that of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining and Concentrating Company vs. the Empire State and the Last Chance Mining Companies, for the possession of a triangular body of ore valued at $100,000, the same overlapping the line dividing the properties owned by the two companies in Shoshone county. Attorneys that appeared were, for the plaintiffs, Curtis H. Lindley, John R. McBride, Myron A. Folsom, Albert Allen and James H. Forney; for the defendants, W. B. Heyburn, Lyttleton Price, E. M. Heyburn and A. L. Doherty. The suit was entered in September, 1889, and a final decision was handed down by Judge Beatty, July 3d of the present year, in which he found for the plaintiffs. In this case the court sat as a court of appeals. The majority of the cases heard in this court came from the Indian reservations and are trials on charges of petty offences committed by both Indians and whites.

It was the original intention of John P. Vollmer and the officials of the Northern Pacific railroad, to conduct the road via Genesee to Lewiston. But when Genesee was reached it was found that the original plans were impracticable owing to the topography of the country. The difference in elevation between Genesee and Lewiston is upwards of 1500 feet while the distance is less than fifteen miles as the crow flies. These obstacles in the way of a direct line could not be overcome and the plans of the promoters were abandoned. Two years later, in 1890, the road was extended from Pullman to Lewiston via Moscow, the Potlatch canyon and the Clearwater valley, and this became the main line while the road from Pullman to Genesee became the branch line.

After the completion of the road Vollmer (named later, Troy), Kendrick and Juliaetta, with their industrial and educational institutions, sprang into existence, developed into populous towns and became supply points for extensive and rich agricultural and timbered areas. Following the completion of the Genesee branch in 1888, Genesee valley and the town made rapid progressive strides. The Genesee valley, Paradise valley, and the Potlatch ridges are now famous the country over for their production of cereals and fruits. The credit due the railroad for this wonderful measure of progress can only be fairly estimated and appreciated by a comparison of present conditions with those of the early eighties.

In the political campaign of 1890 the two old parties had the field all to themselves, national issues furnishing the principal topics for discussion at the several political meetings. Republican nominees were as follows: For judge of the second district, W. G. Piper of Moscow; for district attorney, E. O'Neill of Lewiston; senator second district, J. M. Wells, of Kootenai county; fourth district, William Wing of Nez Perces county; fifth district, J. W. Brigham of Moscow; for representatives of Latah county, K. O. Skatteboe of Moscow and J. C. Martin of Genesee; for representative of Latah and Kootenai counties, A. J. Green of Moscow; sheriff, F. E. Mix of Moscow; clerk of the district court, William B. Kyle of Moscow; probate judge, T. N. Creekmur of Moscow; county treasurer Robert S. Browne of Moscow; assessor, J. George Vennigerholz of Genesee; surveyor, E. T. Tannatt of Pine creek; coroner, Warner H. Carithers of Moscow; commissioner first district, J. D. Wilcox; second district, C. C. Carpenter of Thorn creek; third district, A. N. Roberts of American Ridge.

The Democrats nominated for judge, second district, J. W. Poe of Lewiston; district attorney, James H. Forney of Grangeville; senator, second district, Lewis Miller of Latah county; senator, fourth district, Barney Rohenkohl of Nez Perces county; senator, fifth district, Samuel J. Langdon of Moscow; for representatives of Latah county, John H. Irvine of the north side, and A. B. Crawford of Potlatch; for representative of Latah and Kootenai counties, A. S. Chaney of the east side; sheriff, W. T. Griffin of Moscow; clerk of the district court, Eugene Buchanan of Moscow; probate judge, Roland Hodgins of Moscow; county treasurer, William Hunter of Moscow; assessor, Albert McKee of Bear Ridge; coroner, C. E. Worthington of Moscow; commissioner, first district, D. C. Tribble of north side; second district, David Spurbeck of Genesee; third district, D. J. Ingle of Bear Ridge.

The official record of the election is as follows: For governor, the Republican candidate, George L. Shoup, received 1063 votes, a majority of 354 over the Democratic candidate, Benjamin Wilson, who received 709; for representative, 51st congress, the Republican candidate, Willis Sweet, received 1099 votes, while the Democratic candidate, Alexander E. Mayhew, received 655 votes; for represeitative, 52d congress, Willis Sweet received 1097 votes and Alexander E. Mayhew 666; for judge, second district, W. G. Piper received 1072 votes and J. W. Poe 693, Piper's majority 379; for district attorney, E. O'Neill received 955 votes and J. H. Forney 809, O'Neill's majority 146; for senator, second district, J. M. Wells received 1045 votes and Lewis Miller 712, Wells' majority 333; for senator, fourth district, William Wing received 1041 votes and Barney Rohenkohl 712, Wing's majority 329; for senator, fifth district, J. W. Brigham received 1023 votes and Samuel J. Langdon 747, Brigham's majority 276; for Latah county representatives, K. O. Skatteboe received 1033 votes, J. C. Martin 1073, John H. Irvine 698, and A. B. Crawford 731, Skatteboe's majority 335, Martin's majority 342; for representative, Kootenai and Latah counties, A. J. Green received 968 votes and A. S. Chaney 761, Green's majority 207; for sheriff, F. E. Mix received 940 votes and W. T. Griffin 827, Mix's majority 113; for clerk of the district court, William B. Kyle received 1126 votes and Eugene Buchanan 936, Kyle's majority 490; for probate judge, T. N. Creekmur received 895 votes and Roland Hodgins 863, Creekmur's majority 32; for treasurer, Robert S. Browne received 917 votes and William Hunter 838, Browne's majority 79; for county assessor, J. George Vennigerholz received 1150 votes and Albert McKee 618, Vennigerholz's majority 532; for surveyor, E. T. Tannatt received 1077 votes. Mr. Tannatt was the only candidate in the field for the office of surveyor. For coroner, Warner H. Carithers received 1059 votes and C. E. Worthington 708. Carithers' majority 351; for commissioner, first district, J. D. Wilcox received 167 votes and D. C. Tribble 198, Tribble's majority 31; for commissioner, second district, C. C. Carpenter received 498 votes and David Spurbeck 335, Carpenter's majority 163; for commissioner, third district, D. J. Ingle received 214 votes and A. N. Roberts 325, Roberts' majority 111.

June 1, 1891, in the G. A. R. hall at Moscow, the Latah County Pioneer Association was formed. At this preliminary meeting John Russell was chosen chairman and Henry McGregor secretary. At a late meeting the first regular officers of the associaton were elected as follows: G. W. Tomer president, Bennet Summerfield first vice president, Silas Imbler second vice president, James Johnston treasurer and J. L. Naylor secretary. This organization has been faithfully kept up during the succeeding years, and each year it has held one or more reunions, thus keeping alive the incidents of early associations and preserving reminiscent and historical matter for the information and instruction of generations that may people the country in the future. The first annual reunion and picnic was held Wednesday, June 15, 1892, at the pioneer picnic grounds at the foot of Moscow mountain, northeast of Moscow. At this meeting George W. Tomer was chairman and J. L. Naylor secretary. R. H. Barton was orator of the day. The last meeting was held four miles north of Moscow on the school section near the Beasley place, June 19, 1903. At this meeting C. W. Farmer was chairman, J. L. Naylor secretary and A. J. Green, a pioneer of 1877, was orator of the day.

As a matter of record and for the benefit of future historians, we give below the names of the pioneers of Latah county as taken from the books of the association, and where we have been able to obtain the information, the date of their settlement. While there were scattered individual settlers as early as 1869, the home builders began to come in 1871. Those who made settlements in that year were as follows: G. W. Tomer, William Frazier, W. J. Hamilton, William Groat, William Taylor, A. A. Lieuallen, Murdock Cameron, W. R. Tomer, J. S. Frazier, Angus McKenzie, Donald McKenzie, E. N. Beach, J. T. Taylor, David Allen, Charles W. Tomer, L. H. Collins. The year 1872 witnessed the arrival of John Russell, J. S. Howard, Henry McGregor, Arthur Gosselin and Martin Anderson. In 1873 came Silas Imbler, J. G. Edmondson, Bennet Summerfield, Joseph Cox and G. W. Lowrie. In 1874 homesteads were taken by B. A. McGuire, W. G. Ritchie, T. T. Suddreth, C. W. Palmer and C. C. Palmer, Pioneers of 1895 are J. A. Bundy, A. B. Estes, J. W. Wolf and George W. Wolf. Those of 1876 are J. H. McCallie, W. A. Robinett, Charles Kelly, O. H. P. Beagle, S. F. Luper, Riley Knight, J. H. Galbreath, M. A. Corry, Charles Shearer, J. L. Gilbreth, Joseph Gilbert, G. W. Stewart, T. S. Edmundson, G. B. Christie and Joshua Holden. In 1877 the following became settlers: J. Wilson, John Heick, J. L. Naylor, R. H. Barton, John Holden, S. J. Langdon, Jasper W. Wilson, N. M. Hawley, A. J. Green, Y. J. Beall, S. L. Langdon, Abraham Matthis, Charles H. Kelly, John A. Marlatt, Julius Cherpillod, C. T. Stranahan, C. M. Bowers, J. M. Garrison, Jonathan Johnson, George J. Neighbors, C. H. Oderlin, Henry Cummings and William P. Eagan. These were followed in 1878 by James Johnson, W. S. Craig, R. Beasley, A. J. Hedrick, George Langdon, John Paulson, J. H. Maguire, George A. Gilanore, W. J. McConnell, V. Bartle, M. J. Shields, S. D. Oyler, Robert Purnell, Iver Burke, William Kilde, W. M. Buchanan, W. H. Hooper, Ransom Warren and Charles S. Simonson. Arrivals of 1879 were H. M. Rogers, L. Hawley, E. C. Fisher, G. Webber and E. B. Harrison. Later arrivals who are classed with the pioneers are Walter McClintic, who came in 1881, and John Grimes, who came in 1882. John H. Buchanan is said to have come here in 1865, and is probably the earliest settler in Latah county.

The following pioneers have not registered on the books of the association the dates of their arrivals: A. N. Miller, G. W. Oglesby, John Roberts, J. H. Irvine, W. B. McKenzie, Thomas A. Nixon, Benjamin F. Shaw, Silas Shaw, W. D. Craig, William F. Dale, C. F. Groat, N. Rowley, William P. and L. M. McClintic, David McCurry, W. D. Robins, A. A. J. Fry, W. C. Campbell, William Zeitler, Daniel Cameron, W. O. Campbell, F. M. Johnson, John Cummings, A. R. Crow, Ira Knight, Nelson Madesen, W. H. Bundy, Barney J. Olsen, M. L. Dillman, E. N. DeLong, E. F. DeLong, William King, E. C. Fisher, Jefferson Wood, J. W. Ellis, H. L. Land, John Moss, John E. Randall, W. M. Carter, S. H. B. Denny, J. N. Marquis, Germand Olsen, J. W. Clark, L. D. Jameson, Julius Cenduet, C. H. Jones, L. Stanus, Eli Spittler, Ben A. Gorgan, Nathan Buchanan, D. B. Fleener, A. W. Miller, W. H. Leasure, Hiram R. Russell, G. M. Tomer, J. H. Fleener, F. C. McLean, H. K. Moore, D. L. Bangs, S. M. Bangs, Eugene J. Bonhore, G. N. Parker, J. Woodworth, John C. Miller, Joseph W. Huston, Solomon Hasbrouck, P. L. Orcutt, I. A. Staner, J. G. Vennigerholz and Thomas Bigham.

The following are the names of the women who braved the hardships of the pioneer life and who came to Latah county in the seventies with their husbands, parents, or other relatives and who are members of the Pioneer Association.

Mesdames E. B. Frazier, R. M. Groat, Mary E. Imbler, Sarah C. McCurry, Sarah Bundy, Carrie Tomer-Hayes, Mary A. McClintic, Lizzie McClintic, Rebecca A. Naylor, Sarah E. Beasley, Fanny Hawley, Evaline Wilson, L. Robins, Mary Fry, Julia E. McCallie, Margaret Russell, Sarah Lieuallen, Clara L. Campbell, J. R. Staner, C. J. Knight, Sarah Goede, Carrie Olsen, Jennie L. Cox, Nancy DeLong, Olive Fisher, Mary L. Buchanan, Alice J. Wood, Amanda Gilbreth, Jennie Paulson, S. E. Clark, E. B. Tomer, Massia Edmundson, Thyrza C. McGregor, Martha Cary, S. A. Kelly, Addie Denny, Lucinda Jameson, Margaret Vennigerholz, E. F. Tomer, Jennie Burke, Maggie S. Collins, Amanda Wolf, Mary L. Buchanan, Cary Kilde, Susan Matthis, Diana Buchanan, L. L. Ricksicker, Margaret L. Hooper, Millie F. Tomer, Eliza J. Garrison, D. J. Wilcox, Sarah Johnson, F. C. McLean, Ella Johnson, Luella Parker, Lillie Woodward, Donald Ryrie, Luella Durham, Emma Edmundson, Dora Summerfield, Louise Langdon Barton, Viola Knight, Lillie Lieuallen, Hattie Jones, Ninia Jones, C. L. Holden, Fanny Langdon, Julia A. Summerfield.

Misses Maude M. Barton, Maggie B. McCallie, and Anna DeLong.

The assessor's report for the year 1891 showed the county to be in a very prosperous condition. The total valuation of property for purposes of taxation was $3,610,596. There were in the county 8,141 horses and mules, 9,183 cattle, 7,705 sheep and 1,478 hogs. This does not of course fairly represent the extent of the stock industry as the assessor very rarely finds all that are grazed or fed in the county. All industries of farm and city were prosperous this year and many new settlers located in all parts of the county. In 1890 Nez Perces county made demands on Latah for about $2,500 in claims as balances due them, and which they claimed had been withheld at the time of organization, when Latah's proportion of the old county's organization had been cancelled. The commissioners of Latah county refused to allow the amount and the matter was referred in regular form to Judge Piper's court. August 8, 1891, Judge Piper sustained the commissioners in their action and Nez Perces county did not press the demands further.

At the session of congress creating a United States court for Idaho, the state was divided into three districts and a place named in each at which sessions of the court should be held. The counties of Idaho, Nez Perces, Latah, Kootenai and Shoshone constituted one district and Moscow was named as the place for holding court in this district. In August, 1892, Judge Beatty called a special session of the court at Coeur d'Alene City for the purpose of trying the union labor strikers from the Coeur d'Alene mining regions. This action on the part of Judge Beatty stirred up a good deal of feeling among the citizens of Latah county as it was thought if he had the authority to hold court where he pleased Latah county might lose the prestige gained by the selection of Moscow as the court center of the judicial district. Newspapers and attorneys of Latah county found expression of their views and their dissatisfaction in many ways and while there was no interference with the session at Coeur d'Alene City there was never afterwards any disposition shown to hold the sessions of the court elsewhere than at Moscow, where all the regular and special sessions have since been held.

In 1892 the People's party entered the political arena and with the new issues brought forward for discussion there were lively times throughout the campaign. In this campaign Latah county was represented on the state ticket by the successful candidate for governor, Hon. W. J. McConnell, of Moscow, and on the congressional ticket by the successful candidate for congress, Hon. Willis Sweet, also of Moscow. The Republican county convention was held at Moscow, August 11th, with Dr. W. W. Watkins as chairman and G. W. Coutts, secretary. This was the first county convention of the Republican party in Latah county. There was a decided lack of harmony in the convention, owing to strife between factions of the party, but a full ticket was eventually chosen and by the time the campaign was well under way, harmony was restored and the candidates received the loyal support of all factions. After declaring for protection to American industries and for the restriction of immigration, and after endorsing the records of Hon. W. J. McConnell as governor and Hon. Willis Sweet as congressman, they inserted the following paragraph in their platform: "We demand the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver and we demand that each and every paper dollar issued upon either metal shall, with said metals, be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private."

The following ticket was placed in the field: For sheriff, John L. Naylor, Moscow; treasurer, Robert S. Brown, Moscow; probate judge, Harvey R. Smith, Moscow; assessor, David Fairburn, Moscow; coroner, J. Edwin Hughes, Moscow; surveyor, S. L. Campbell, Moscow; clerk of the court and auditor, B. F. Cone, Palouse precinct; representatives Latah county, S. A. Anderson, Swan Creek, and Henry H. Bangs, Troy; joint senator Latah and Nez Perces county, J. Morris Howe, Lewiston; representative Latah and Kootenai, Henry J. Harper, Palouse precinct; representative Latah county, J. I. Micham, Kendrick; commissioners, 1st district, William Kincaid, Palouse precinct, 2d district, E. T. Platt, Genesee, 3d district, A. N. Roberts, American Ridge.

The Democratic convention assembled in Moscow July 30th. J. M. Walker of Kendrick was elected chairman and J. Woodworth, of Moscow, secretary. After endorsing the Chicago platform as adopted June 24th, the convention proceeded to place the following ticket before the people: joint senator, Latah and Kootenai counties, William J. Quirk, Kootenai county; joint senator, Latah and Nez Perces county, Thomas F. Nelson, Cornwall; senator, Latah county, Joe M. Walker, Kendrick; joint representative Latah and Kootenai counties, John Donahue, Kootenai county; representatives, William J. Seat, Troy, George W. Wilton, Palouse precinct; commissioners, 1st district, Dudley C. Tribble, Starner, 2d district, Jerry R. Baker, Moscow, 3d district, Wyman Crow, Kendrick; clerk and auditor, William M. Payne, Moscow; sheriff, Harvey J. Bundy, Genesee; treasurer, Isaac C. Hattabaugh, Moscow; probate judge, W. L. Culbertson, Moscow; assessor, L. D. Martin, Moscow; coroner, Charles E. Worthington, Moscow; surveyor, William P. Nichols, Kendrick.

The People's party convened at Moscow, August 13th. Hiram Eperly was chosen chairman and T. E. Edmundson, secretary. The Omaha platform was endorsed, including the sub-treasury plan and other natural innovations proposed in the national convention. The ticket nominated was as follows: For joint senator Latah and Nez Perces county, John Chenoweth, Nez Perces county; senator Latah county, Marques S. Smith, Genesee; representatives, Aaron T. Lane and George W. Tomer, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, George W. Griner, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Dudley J. Hammond, Moscow, 3d district, Axel Olsen, Troy; clerk and auditor, Frank W. Webster, Palouse precinct; sheriff, C. A. S. Howard, Moscow; treasurer, John Gilstrop, Moscow; probate judge, William A. Comer. Cora; assessor, Thomas L. Childers, Moscow; coroner, Amon K. Biddison, Troy; no candidate was nominated for surveyor.

The following is the official record of the election which took place November 8th: The vote of Latah county for congressman stood, Willis Sweet, 1,420, E. B. True, 622, James Gunn, 722, E. R. Headley, 51, Sweet's pluraliiy, 698. The vote for governor stood, W. J. McConnell, 1,397, J. M. Burke, 694, A. J. Crook, 726, Joseph A. Clark, 46, McConnell's plurality, 671. For legislative and county officers the vote was as follows: Joint senator Latah and Kootenai counties, Bergen, 1,327, Quirk, 937, Bergen's plurality, 390; joint senator Latah and Nez Perces counties, Howe, 1,225, Nelson, 768, Chenoweth, 731, Howe's plurality, 457; senator, Micham, 1,183, Walker, 783, Smith, 762, Micham's plurality, 400; joint representative Latah and Kootenai counties, Hopper, 1,323, Donahue, 931, Hopper's majority, 393; representatives, Anderson, 1,212, Bangs, 1,153, Seat, 711, Wilton, 588, Lane, 600, Tomer, 776, Anderson's plurality, 501, Bang's plurality, 505; commissioners, Kincaid, 1,203, Platt, 1,159, Roberts, 1,345, Tribble, 870. Baker, 790, Crow, 629, Griner, 675, Hammond, 605, Olsen, 684, Kincaid's plurality, 33, Platt's plurality, 369, Roberts' plurality, 661; clerk and auditor, Cone, 1,251, Payne, 858, Webster, 653, Cone's plurality, 393; sheriff, Naylor, 905, Bundy, 906, Howard, 948, Naylor's plurality, 17; treasurer, Brown, 994. Hattabaugh, 1,152, Gilstrop, 665. Hattabaugh's plurality, 158; probate judge, Smith, 1,240, Culbertson, 727, Comer. 668, Smith's plurality, 513; assessor, Fairburn, 1,156, Martin, 827, Childers, 750, Fairburn's plurality, 329; coroner, Hughes, 1,128, Worthington, 863, Biddison, 723, Hughes's plurality, 265; surveyor. Campbell, 1,389, Nichols, 925, Campbell's majority, 464.

The year of 1893 was one of great disaster to Latah county. The story of the financial panic of that year is too familiar to require detailed repetition here. The failure of large banking institutions in the money centers of the east and west involved those of lesser magnitude in smaller towns and these failures brought disaster to farmers, depositors and to those who needed money to conduct or pay for their farms. Many of the large and small commercial houses all over the west went to the wall and the forced payments of accounts by the small debtors had its influence in bringing about oppressive conditions. Latah county escaped none of the disasters and experienced one special disaster that brought many of the farmers to the verge of ruin, from which it took years of patient toil and great privations to escape. The most important failure in Latah county was that of the McConnell-Maguire Company in Moscow, wholesale and retail dealers in general merchandise. This house closed its doors in April. The immediate cause of the failure was the sale of the McConnell, Chambers & Company store at Pullman to Maguire & Browne of Moscow, in which McConnell and Chambers held shares. The Pullman house had invested heavily in wheat and the great depression of the market caused them to sustain heavy losses, which, involving the Moscow house, compelled it to close. The assets of the firm were $280,000, with liabilities footing $216,000. The First National Bank of Moscow immediately got out attachments for $22,343.68; the Moscow National Bank, attachments for $26,343, and other creditors ran the attachments up to $80,839.68. The firm filed papers of insolvency to protect its creditors and its affairs were eventually settled to the satisfaction of all, but the business was never reopened.

In addition to the financial troubles Latah county suffered the loss of almost its entire crop of grain, which was exceptionally abundant, by heavy rains that came during the harvest and before any threshing had been done. This was an unusual occurrence, unheard of before and not repeated since. The grain crops rotted in the fields, almost none being harvested and sold, so that the farmers were placed in the most deplorable condition from which they were many years in recovering. Conditions in 1893 and in the three or four years following can only be realized by comparison with the present conditions. It is doubtful if in any other section of the country there is a more noticeable change during the last ten years than in Latah county. It might almost be termed an advance from poverty to affluence, from depression to prosperity, from general despondency to universal hope, elation and contentment.

Ten years ago the entire country was complaining of hard times, and Latah county was about as hard hit as any other section that found itself hard up and with no apparent way of getting out of the difficulty. The people had little or no money, their farms were mortgaged, back interest was due, small debts had accumulated, their products found poor markets and it was an unusually sanguine man who could see daylight ahead. The land of those who would sell went begging; there was no demand for it. If real estate transfers were reported, it was not because the purchaser wished to buy but because he was forced to do it if he would get what was coming to him. Since that gloomy period the heavy skies have lifted and for several years fortune has favored those who struggled with so much determination against the adversity that spared so few. Many of those who succeeded by great effort in holding their farms have been able not only to raise their mortgages and get square with the world, but also to increase their property and reap larger profits than ever from greater acreage. It is not now a question as to who will buy but as to who will sell. The farmers do not as a rule wish to part with their holdings, but are anxious to add to what they already have. They have done well with their crops and homeseekers from the east, having learned of it, are eager to acquire Latah county land. As a result there is a more general improvement of farms and a more solid movement in farm property than Latah county has witnessed for many years.

There were no changes for the better in the general conditions that prevailed during the year 1894. If anything, the effects of the financial panic and crop failure were more seriously felt than in the year previous. The crops this year were good but the prices were not, and obligations could not be cancelled. The year closed with all lines of business comparatively at a standstill.

While there have been crimes of greater or less magnitude committed in Latah county, there has never been a legal hanging or murder in the first degree and there have been no lynchings. On Tuesday, October 5, 1894, a terrible crime was committe din the county jail, an insane prisoner killing his cell mate in a horrible manner. A soldier named Roberts had, a year or two previously, been arrested at Fort Sherman for killing a brother soldier. He had afterward been adjudged insane and had since been confined in the Latah county jail awaiting the pleasure of the United States marshal. He was not considered a dangerous man and was therefore allowed free intercourse with other prisoners in the corridors of the jail. At this time there was but one other prisoner, a quiet, inoffensive young man about twenty years old, named John Witte, who was awaiting trial in the United States court on the charge of selling liquor to the Indians on the Coeur d'Alene reservation. For more than a year Sheriff J. L. Naylor had been trying to induce the United States marshal to take Roberts out of his custody. No attention, however, had been paid to his requests and for about eighteen months he remained the charge of the Latah county officials. On the date mentioned above, during the absence of Jailer Donahue, Roberts attacked Witte while the latter was sleeping and after crushing his skull with a stove lid, literally hacked his victim to pieces with some dull instrument which could not afterwards be found. On the day following the crime the United States marshal started with Roberts for Washington, D. C., and his victim, being without friends or relatives, was buried in potter's field.

Some time in 1892 George N. Hinckley became deputy auditor of Latah county. He had no sooner acquired a knowledge of the work of the office than he began "raising" county warrants whose face value was a nominal sum, to hundreds of dollars, disposing of the same and appropriating excess amounts to his own personal use. During a period of less than two years he "raised" warrants of a total face value of about $500, collecting thereon about $20,000, which he used in living a high life generally. His operations were discovered in August, 1894, and on a charge of forgery preferred by County Auditor B. F. Cone he was arrested by Sheriff J. L. Naylor and held for trial. His success in continuing these operations for so long a time without detection resulted from the fact that he had absolute sway in the auditor's office. He kept the bank account, receipted for all fees, made out all warrants, made out all certified lists of warrants transmitted to the treasurer, and in all cases where comparisons were made between the records of bills allowed and the warrant book he held the warrant book and reported an agreement of the accounts. His embezzling career was brought to a speedy termination by the action of Auditor Cone. On September 6th Hinckley pleaded guilty to the charge brought aginst him before Judge Piper and was sentenced to twelve years at hard labor in the penitentiary, from which, however, he was pardoned before the expiration of the sentence.

In the political campaign of 1894 the Republicans endorsed the national platform adopted at Minneapolis in 1902, declared for protection and bi-metallism and for the restriction of immigration. The Democrats endorsed the Chicago platform of 1892 and declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and for the repeal of the McKinley tariff law. The People's party endorsed the Omaha platform. The Democrats and People's parties fused in this campaign, nominating the same candidates except for one or two offices. The chairmen of the Populist and Democratic central committees issued a joint announcement of the fusion of these two parties. At the election which took place November 6th, the fusion party was successful, giving their candidates majorities ranging from 13 for assessor to 388 for representative. The Republicans convened August 1st, selecting F. A. David for chairman and W. P. Cattron, secretary. Following are the nominees of the convention: For representatives, Daniel Gamble, Moscow, and Alfred Colburn, Palouse precinct; sheriff, Charles F. Burr, Genesee; clerk and auditor, Benjamin F. Cone, Palouse precinct; probate judge, Harvey R. Smith, Moscow; assessor, Rodney P. Drury, Big Bear ridge; treasurer, LaFayette Williams, Moscow; coroner, William Groat, Moscow; surveyor, William H. Edelblute, Palouse precinct; commissioners, 1st district, William M. Kincaid, Palouse precinct, 2d district, John Paulson, Thorn Creek, 3d district, Richard King, Bear Ridge.

The Populists convened July 18th and the Democrats July 27th. For clerk and auditor the Democrats named Jay Woodworth, of Moscow, and the Populists, Charles A. Niles, of Potlatch. Other candidates on the two tickets were as follows: For representatives, John S. Randolph and John C. Waite; sheriff, Frank Campbell, Palouse precinct; probate judge, Willis N. B. Anderson, Moscow; assessor, Carrie B. Hammond, Moscow; treasurer, John Gilstrop, Moscow; coroner, Charles S. Moody, Kendrick; surveyor, Samuel L. Campbell, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, William W. Young, 2d district, William H. Leasure, Moscow, 3d district, Mamford W. Harlan, Bear Ridge. William G. Piper was the Republican candidate for judge and Stewart S. Denning the Democratic or Fusion candidate. James E. Babb, of Lewiston, was the Republican candidate for district attorney, and Clav McNamee, of Moscow, the Fusion candidate. For state senator, James C. Steele, of Kendrick, was the Republican nominee, and Tannes E. Miller, Genesee, the Fusion nominee. For joint senator of Latah and Kootenai counties the Republicans nominated Robert S. Brown, of Moscow, while the Populists nominated Thomas F. Nelson, of Moscow. For joint senator Latah and Nez Perces counties the Republicans were represented by Daniel C. Mitchell, of Moscow, and the Populists by Henry Heitfeld, of Lewiston.

Record of votes cast at the election of November 6th is as follows: For congressman the vote of Latah county stood, Edgar Wilson, Republican, 1,253, James Ballentine, Democrat, 304, James Gunn, Fusionist, 1,168, Wilson's plurality, 85; governor, W. J. McConnell, Republican, 1,215, Edward Stevenson, Democrat, 423, James W. Ballentine, Fusionist, 1,194, McConnell's plurality, 21; district judge, William G. Piper, Republican, 1,399, Stewart S. Denning, Fusionist, 1,279, Piper's majority, 120; district attorney, James E. Babb, 1,241, Clay McNamee, 1,575, McNamee's majority, 334; senator, Steele, 1,335, Miller, 1,398, Miller's majority, 63; joint senator Kootenai and Latah counties, Brown, 1,295, Nelson, 1,288, Brown's majority, 7; joint senator Latah and Nez Perces counties, Mitchell, 1,360, Heitfeld, 1,448, Heitfeld's majority, 88; representatives, Gamble, 1,325, Colburn, 1,085, Randolph, 1,473, Waite, 1,195, Gamble's majority, 130, Randolph's majority, 388; joint representative Latah and Kootenai counties, Henry, 1,312, VanGasken, 301, Catlow, 1,128, Henry's plurality, 184; sheriff, Burr, 1,364, Campbell, 1,453, Campbell's majority, 89; clerk and auditor, Cone, 1,194, Woodworth, 1,308, Niles, 334, Woodworth's plurality, 114; probate judge, Smith, 1,315, Anderson, 1,497, Anderson's majority, 182; assessor, Drury, 1,319, Hammond, 1,412, Hammond's majority, 13; treasurer, Williams, 1,527, Gilstrop, 1,496, Gilstrop's majority, 169; coroner, Groat, 1,263, Moody, 1,484, Moody's majority, 221; surveyor, Edelblute, 1,266, Campbell, 1,485, Campbell's majority, 219; commissioners, 1st district, Kincaid, 1,250, Young, 1,534, Young's majority, 278, 2d district, Paulson, 1,251, Leasure, 1,561, Leasure's majority, 310, 3d district, King, 1,280, Harland, 1,511, Harland's majority, 231.

In 1895 the outstanding warrants of the county amounted to $54,000. It was desired to get this obligation in better business form and the proposition was therefore submitted to a vote of the people at a special election to authorize the county commissioners to issue bonds to the amount of the outstanding warrants. The election was held August 19th, at which time 480 votes were cast in favor of the bond issue and 279 votes against it. As the law governing the issue of bonds required a two-thirds vote favoring the issue the efforts to so cancel the warrants failed and it was left to future action to dispose of the matter.

At the general election of 1894 John Gilstrop was elected county treasurer. The board of commissioners required of him a bond of $80,000, which he had great difficulty in securing. Eventually he made an arrangement with the Moscow National Bank and the Commercial Bank by which they agreed to go his bond provided he would deposit the county money equally between the two banks. The arrangement consummated, the bond was presented to the commissioners and accepted. In March, 1895, the Commercial Bank failed and through its failure $12,776.95 of the county funds were tied up. Under the law this made the county treasurer a defaulter. The commissioners at once entered suit against Mr. Gilstrop and bondsmen for the amount of the funds he could not produce, but had no intention of pressing the suit so long as there was any probability of the recovery of the funds kept by the Commercial Bank. Treasurer Gilstrop had entered suit against the bank and had attached the bank building to protect the county from loss. The state of affairs was such as to cause a panic among the sureties who had signed the bond with the bank and they withdrew their names. The commissioners then demanded another bond and having every confidence in the integrity and honesty of Mr. Gilstrop, required of him the minimum bond allowed by law, $10,000. After several months' effort, Mr. Gilstrop furnished the bond, but it was found on investigation that only $4,000 of it was good. The commissioners therefore declined to accept it and on September 12, 1895, declared the office of treasurer of the county vacant. Mr. Gilstrop made a statement to the board of commissioners to the effect that he had taken none of the county's money for personal use; that the failure of the commissioners to allow his salary had caused him grievous embarrassment and even suffering; that he had no other source of income than the meagre salary of the office, $83 per month, and being denied this, had been compelled to deprive his family of many of the necessaries of life and had caused them much suffering. This statement was known to be true and there was much genuine sympathy with the treasurer on account of the embarrassing circumstances with which he was surrounded. The commissioners, however, were justified in the course they pursued; it was their first duty to protect the county's funds and there was no course of action left open to them other than the one they followed. The office of treasurer remained vacant for some time, but at a meeting in September the commissioners appointed Burt O. Winslow to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Gilstrop.

Educational matters have always received special consideration from the citizens of Latah county. When the county was formed in 1888 there were in existence fifty-eight districts, in all of which were school buildings. In some of the outlying districts the buildings were of logs, but were commodious. The first schoolhouse north of Clearwater river was erected just east of the present town of Moscow on what is known as the Haskens place, in August, 1879, by George W. Tomer, A. A. and Noah Lieuallen and L. Haskens, who hauled pine logs from the mountains, and themselves did the work of construction. No lumber was obtainable for flooring, so the first school was taught during the fall and winter of 1871 by Noah Lieuallen on a dirt floor. Mr. Lieuallen received fifty dollars a month for his services. The first school board in this district was composed of A. A. Lieuallen, L. Haskens and George W. Tomer. In order to show the extent of progress made in school work we have compiled some statistics from the annual report of School Superintendent L. N. B. Anderson for the year 1895. According to the school census, as enumerated July 1, 1895, there were in Latah county 4,787 children of school age. There were 84 districts, two of which were independent and five of which were graded. The schoolhouses numbered 81, all but one of which were owned by the districts. There were thirty male teachers at an average wage of $35 per month and forty female teachers at an average wage of $34 a month. The total amount paid teachers this year was $24,858, which was a greater amount than that paid by any other county in the state. The total expenditures for school purposes for the year, including the cost for new building and sites, was $34,019. The bonded indebtedness of the district amounted to $60,050 and the total value of school property was estimated to be $94,177.

The event of 1896 in Latah county, as in the whole country, was the great national political campaign in which the Bryan forces entered the field, dividing the Democratic party and bringing forward as a paramount issue the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. Viewed from a present day standpoint the excitement attending that campaign, when we consider the issue, may be said to be phenomenal. Although there are still a few who advocate free coinage, it has ceased to be an issue between the great political parties and if we would refresh our minds on the views of the politicians on this question, we must dig up the old files of newspapers and read the editorials of 1896. At the present day the only visible reminders that tell us of the unparalleled enthusiasm aroused by the silver issue, are occasional signboards on the street, such as "The Free Coinage Meat Market, the Sixteen to One Livery Stable, or the Free Silver Saloon."

Three county conventions were held in Moscow, Wednesday, September 23, 1896, and two county tickets were put in the field. The Democrats and Populists nominated a joint ticket. Conference committees were appointed soon after the conventions were organized and it was agreed that the Democrats should name two members of the legislature and the county treasurer, while the Populists should name the balance. This arrangement was ratified by both conventions. Nominations were made in separate conventions and were afterward ratified in joint session of the two parties. This joint ticket was known during the campaign as the People's-Democratic, and was composed of the following candidates: For representatives, John S. Randolph, Pine creek, John C. Waite, Potlatch, William M. Morgan, Moscow, J. W. Seat, Troy, and John C. Elder, Moscow; sheriff, William Hunter, Moscow; treasurer, Frank E. Cornwall, Moscow; probate judge, William Perkins, Moscow; assessor, Persifer L. Smith, Genesee; coroner, Samuel T. Owings; surveyor, Samuel L. Campbell, Moscow; commissioners, first district, Marques L. Smith, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Hans Knudson, Thorn Creek, 3d district, Manford W. Harland, American Ridge.

The Silver Republicans in G. A. R. hall chose Dr. Harvey, of Genesee, chairman, and George W. Coutts, Kendrick, secretary. The beliefs of the party were embodied in the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Believing firmly that the prosperity of the nation depends upon the immediate restoration of silver to its old place as constitutional money and demanding that the coining of silver should be free and unlimited at the mints of the United States, we favor the election of William J. Bryan as president of the United States. We indorse the action of Fred T. Dubois and other silver senators in denouncing the national Republican convention at St. Louis, which convention violated all former financial pledges of that party."

The following candidates were placed in nomination for the various county offices: For representatives, Rodney P. Drury, Bear creek, Lindol Smith, Moscow, Leonard J. Harvey, Kendrick, Franklin C. McLean and Peter Hoidal, Troy; sheriff, Henry H. Bangs, Thorn creek; probate judge, John B. Easter, Moscow; assessor, Ulysses S. Mix, Mix; coroner, Wylie Lauder, Moscow; surveyor, Henry L. Colts, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, Homer W. Canfield, Palouse precinct, 2d district, George Tegland, Thorn creek, 3d district, John Magee, Kendrick. The Silver Republicans named no candidate for treasurer, but gave their support in the campaign to Burt O. Williams, Kendrick, who ran independent for this office.

The regular Republican convention was held September 30th. Resolutions were adopted along old party lines and the St. Louis platform endorsed. While there was little hope of success at the polls, it was desired to keep the county organization alive and a full ticket was nominated as follows: For representatives, Charles J. Munson, Moscow, Mark A. Means, Genesee, George G. Strong, Cora, Albert J. Green, Moscow, Burtis L. Jenkins, Kendrick; sheriff, William N. Buchanan, Moscow; treasurer, George W. Daggett, Genesee; probate judge, John J. Swartz, Moscow; assessor, Archibald Gammel, Juliaetta; coroner, Louis A. Torsen, Moscow; surveyor, Theodore P. Calkins, Collins; commissioners, 1st district, George A. Sawyer, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Hans C. J. Tweed, Genesee, 3d district, Oscar Larson, Troy.

State and congressional candidates this year were as follows: For governor, David H. Budlong, Republican, Frank Steunenberg, People's-Democratic and Silver Republican, Moses F. Fowler, Prohibitionist. Candidates for congress were John T. Morrison, Republican, James Gunn, People's-Democratic, William Borah, Silver Republican, James T. Smith, Prohibitionist. For state senator the Republicans nominated John W. Brigham, the People's-Democratic party nominated Thomas F. Nelson, and the Silver Republicans nominated Frank A. David.

The results of the election, at which the People's-Democratic party won a decided victory and which took place November 3d, follows: For congressman, Morrison, 1,003, Gunn, 1,440, Borah, 389, Smith, 21. Gunn's majority in Latah county, 27; governor, Budlong, 1,007, Steunenberg, 1,820, Fowler, 21, Steunenberg's majority, 792; state senator, Brigham, 961, Nelson, 1,560, David, 245. Nelson's majority, 354; representatives, Munson, 988, Means, 974, Strong, 964, Green, 948, Jenkins, 954, Randolph, 1,372, Waite, 1,353, Morgan, 1,391, Seat, 1,398, Elder, 1,477, Drury, 452, Smith, 538, Harvey, 421, McLean, 398, Hoidal, 331, Randolph's plurality, 384. Waite's plurality, 379, Morgan's plurality, 427, Seat's plurality, 450. Elder's plurality, 523; sheriff, Buchanan, 1,004, Hunter, 1,266, Bangs, 610, Hunter's plurality, 262; treasurer, Daggett, 858, Cornwall, 1,263, Winslow, 639, Cornwall's plurality, 405; probate judge, Swartz, 949, Perkins, 1,540, Easter, 499. Perkins' plurality, 391; assessor, Archibald Gammell, 989, Smith, 1,300, Mix, 515, Smith's plurality, 311; coroner, Torsen, 1,081, Owings, 1,190, Lauder, 444, Owings' plurality, 109; surveyor, Caulkins, 944, Campbell, 1,446, Coats, 330, Campbell's majority, 172; commissioners, 1st district, Sawyer, 947, Smith, 1,369, Canfield, 404, Smith's majority, 18, 2d district, Tweed, 999, Knudson, 1,388, Tegland, 434, Knudson's plurality, 389, 3d district, Larson, 963, Harland, 1,367, Magee, 448, Harland's plurality, 404.

By the year 1898 the effects of the panic had in a large measure disappeared, though many mortgages were still held by loan companies on farms and city real estate in Latah county. There was a time when the Northwestern Hypotheek Bank, of Spokane, owned property, obtained by foreclosure proceedings, in almost every township in the county, besides business buildings and other holdings in nearly all the towns. But the obligations of the farmers and others had been gradually lessened during the preceding two or three years and some measure of former prosperity had returned. In 1898 there were 346,038 acres of patented lands in the county valued for purposes of taxation at $1,556,336, which was of course far below the market value. The total value of real property, town and country, was placed at $2,237,268. Assessment was made on 1,252,200 bushels of grain, 119 tons of hay, 651,000 feet of lumber, 20 flour and sawmills and on 16,117 head of stock, which included 4,040 hogs. The wheels of progress were turning with tireless energy and the future held every promise of speedy return to the conditions of 1891 and 1892.

In December, 1901, the Moscow Business Men's Association began the agitation of the proposition to construct and operate the Moscow & Eastern Railroad from Moscow to the white pine timber region in eastern Latah county and in Shoshone county. The road was promoted in 1898. Preliminary surveys were made and considerable right of way granted, but for some unknown cause operations ceased in the winter of 1898 and since that time no work has been done on the line. Such a road would prove of great advantage to this section, particularly if pushed through the mountains, making connections with eastern lines. The immediate object is, however, to furnish an outlet for the white pine and other saw timber, of which there is an almost inexhaustible supply that the road would make directly tributary to Moscow. The officers of the road were George Creighton, president; Thomas Grice, vice president; C. O. Brown, general manager; R. V. Cozier, legal adviser; and F. A. Gilbert, treasurer. The first survey was run from Moscow forty miles east to what is known as Warren's meadows, near Collins, on the Potlatch river. Later a branch was surveyed from Warren's meadows down the Potlatch to its forks, thence up the east fork to the mouth of Ruby creek, thence up Ruby creek and over the divide into Elk Creek basin, fifty-five miles from Moscow. The construction of the road would mean the erection of sawmills here at its junction with the two roads now converging at this point. This is a work of great importance that in all probability will be pushed to completion in the near future.

When war was declared against Spain in the spring of 1898 there was an unusual expression of patriotism and loyalty by the citizens of Latah county. A company of Idaho National Guards existed at Genesee and at the State University at Moscow was a company of cadets. When the call for Idaho troops was made in April by President McKinley, both companies tendered their services to the governor and were accepted. That the reader may appreciate the true spirit of the Latah county volunteers and know the full history of their enlistment and service, we reproduce here the story of the University company, written by one of the cadets, and that of the Genesee company, written for the North Idaho Star:

It is difficult to determine just what it is that impels men to go to war. Whatever it be that inspires men with courage to face hardship, privation, death if need be, appeals to the higher self—the noblest characteristics a man possesses. War times, if they be not times that try men's souls, are certainly times when men's souls are raised to their higher possibilities; they are the times that make men truer, braver, nobler. True patriotism is a noble unreason, it accepts whatever comes but scorns to consider issues. When a man volunteers his services to his country he does not think of the dangers he may meet; or if he does, he considers them as possibilities only. He is as invulnerable as Achilles. If he should be among those left on the field—that is well enough, too.

When the war broke out in the spring the boys in the University like the boys throughout the length and breadth of the land, were filled with a desire to enlist in the army for the invasion of Cuba. As the days passed and the regular troops were hurried to the south, and the country was one blaze of excitement, many of the boys, impatient to see service, contemplated enlisting in the regular army. The president's call in the latter part of April, however, made this unnecessary. As soon as it was known that Idaho had been called upon for troops, the boys immediately tendered their services to the governor, which offer was accepted. A meeting was called for the purpose of forming a University company, and when the meeting adjourned, it was found that nearly every able-bodied cadet was a member of the organization.

A physical examination was held to determine the fitness of the volunteers for the hard work they should be required to perform. Many comical incidents are related of tricks resorted to by some to pass the requirements. It is on record that one boy who was several pounds under weight, went home on the morning of the examination and ate heartily of baker's bread and drank as much water as he could hold. When the time for examination arrived his weight recorded three pounds on the safe side. When this cadet arrived in Boise he was rejected on account of being under age.

The successful volunteers met at the Grand Army hall in Moscow to enroll their names. Mr. F. E. Cornwall of that city had charge of the matter and enlisted the following university students: Edward Smith, George Snow, Charles H. Armstrong, Clement L. Herburt, A. J. Macnab, O. S. Hagberg, W. M. Howland, J. E. Jewell, B. E. Burk, E. S. Mautz, G. W. Kays, J. L. Rains, C. Macnab, W. E. Reed, E. P. Martin, P. G. Craig, L. W. Nixon, J. T. Burk, E. I. Foss, R. B. McGregor, P. Teague, S. P. Burr, W. Taylor, J. Gibb, O. L. Brunzell, A. N. Brunzell, J. M. Herman, N. C. Sheridan, W. S. McBride, E. E. Oylear, F. M. Snider, S. Comstock, L. Smith, E. L. Barton, C. Henry, W. Boemeke, I. D.

Schuh. From the town of Moscow the following were enlisted: J. R. Willard, J. DePartee, F. C. McFarland, A. Hagstrom, W. Harris, T. T. Thornton, R. Isaacs, B. Juvenal.

It was a warm, sunshiny day in May when we marched down the main street of Moscow between rows of people who cheered and waved as long as we were in sight. Flags floated from every building, and at every corner the university yell indicated that the institution was well represented in the crowds. At the depot Hon. R. W. Cozier delivered an eloquent address. At its close he presented a beautiful flag which was gracefully accepted by Clement L. Herburt in behalf of the company. Rev. Mr. Ghormley then uttered a fervent invocation. None of those who were present will forget the scenes that occurred as the cadets bade farewell to their relatives and friends and filed into the car.

On arrival at Boise we went into camp on the outskirts of the city. For the first week little attention was given to military discipline and we did just about as we pleased.

On May 11 we underwent a second physical examination. This was a rigid one, but all the Moscow boys succeeded in passing the requirements. Several, however, who were under age, were rejected and returned to Moscow. Soon after this examination we were mustered into the service. About this time the regimental and company officers were named and commissioned and the formation of the regiment actively begun.

It was early discovered that the cadet company as a distinct organization could not stand. Idaho had already furnished more than twice as many soldiers as her quota called for, so the proposed eight-company regiment could not be increased. This was a great disappointment to the cadets at the time, as we had hoped as the representatives of the state university to have a university company. The cadet corps under the direction of Lieut Edward R. Chrisman, U. S. A., had long had the reputation of being the best drilled body in the state. When it was found necessary to combine the cadet company with the state militia company of Genesee the Moscow boys readily assented to the new arrangement, and though it was a great disappointment at the time, experience has proven that the change was not without advantage. That the Moscow boys were not subjected to unsatisfactory treatment is entirely due to the tireless efforts of Mr. F. E. Cornwall of Moscow, whose influence and kindness in behalf of the company are gratefully remembered. The company as now formed was as follows:

Captain, Edw. Smith, Moscow; 1st lieutenant Wells E. Gage, Genesee; 2nd lieutenant, James K. Bell, Genesee; 1st sergeant, Charles H. Armstrong; Q. M. sergeant, Frank C. Harris; 2nd sergeant, Ole G. Hagburg; 3rd sergeant, George A. Snow; 4th sergeant, William Burr; 1st corporal, H. E. Burk; 2nd corporal, J. E. Jewell; 3rd corporal, E. S. Mantz; 4th corporal, J. B. Bell; 5th Corporal, C. L. Herburt; 6th Corporal, T. M. Osburn; Privates: Howland, Nelson, Addison, Badain, Burk, Burr, Carnahan, Caulfield, Comstock, Corran, Craig, Cummings, DePartee, Derbyshire, Foss, Galloway, Gugatt, Ganong, Griffin, Hanson, Harris, Hagstrom, Hays, Herburt, Huber, Isaacs, Jacobs, Johnson, Jottin, Juvenal, Kays, Kennedy, Koenigs, Landon, Lillis, Mallory, Malloy, Martin, McBride, McFarland, McIntyre, Miller, Moore, A. Morton, T. Morton, Nixon, Oylear, Reed, Rickards, Ricketts, A. Ricketts, T. Ricketts, Sheridan, Simms, Senter, F. Snider, Seelig, D. Snider, F. Smith, L. Smith, Teagur, Thornton, Tucker, Vallet, Willard, Wyckoff, Yager.

After the regiment was formed, military rule was instituted and we began the military life in earnest. Some of us were temporarily outfitted from the stores of moth-eaten uniforms in the store house at the capitol building. These uniforms were of such ridiculous cut and make that the caps were about the only part of them that fitted. Big men squeezed into coats that were but half their size, and others donned trousers that made hazardous any movement from the perpendicular. Very few men succeeded in getting both trousers and coat, in fact it did not matter much just so he got some piece of military insignia. We had no guns except when on guard, and these were cavalry guns that had evidently not been burdened with care, and whose chief usefulness was for ornamental purposes. Fortunately our turns at guard duty came but seldom.

On May 18th amidst the wildest enthusiasm ever known in Boise the regiment left for San Francisco where it was to form part of the expeditionary forces to Manila. We arrived in San Francisco on Sunday, May 22d, and went into camp at the old Bay District race track, at that time called Camp Merritt.

The history of Company D and the list of engagements in which it took part, written for the North Idaho Star, is as follows:

Among the many cities in Idaho, which, at the call for volunteers for the Spanish-American war, sent forth a military organization, Genesee has no small place. The martial spirit seems to have prevailed in it from the commencement.

Four years previous to the organization of Company "D," Company "L" was organized with 55 members and the following officers:

Captain, A. A. Haymond; first lieutenant, Bert Winslow; second lieutenant, A. J. Craig.

It saw active service in the Coeur d'Alene region at the time of the strike, in 1892. Thirty-three of its members were there for the period of sixteen days. With all military companies of the state it was disbanded in 1893.

In the summer of that year Company "D," its successor, and in which many of its members were included, was organized, with the following officers:

Captain, Charles H. Hough; 1st lieutenant, J. L. Conant; 2nd lieutenant, P. W. McRoberts.

Later on Conant was appointed major and regimental surgeon, and McRoberts regimental quartermaster; and W. E. Gage and J. M. Arrant were elected to fill the respective offices vacated by said appointments.

The fourth year of the company having expired in 1897, it was reorganized in the winter of 1898 with the following officers:

Captain, P. W. McRoberts; first lieutenant, W. E. Gage; second lieutenant, J. K. Bell.

In spite of the almost insurmountable difficulties in the way of the maintenance of a military organization in a small center of population and without aid from the state it survived.

At the commencement of the war E. A. McKenna, one of its members, was lieutenant colonel of the First regiment of Idaho; and at San Francisco, on the eve of his departure to the Philippines he was appointed by the government to the office of captain in the United States Volunteer signal corps.

At the reorganization at Boise, E. B. Smith, of Moscow, was appointed captain of Company "D" in the place of McRoberts, who was appointed captain of Company "A."

The morning when the company left Genesee for service in the war with Spain will be long remembered. Those who had seen its members during the winter, meeting weekly for drill, and had wondered if they would be so enthusiastic if called on for active service, were agreeably surprised in their eagerness to be at the front.

Bidding adieu to relatives and townsmen they marched away to Moscow, to receive recruits from among the cadets of the State University, and to go whithersoever Old Glory should lead.

Their famous charge over the rice fields of Luzon, in which fell the gallant McConville, whose career was on that advancing crest of battle ended in a blaze of glory, to the admiration of his comrades in arms, and the grateful remembrance of his state and nation, is a matter of perpetual record.

The company returns from over the sea with none lost in battle and but two by disease, namely Ole J. Hagberg and James Ganony. Its record is without stain. Genesee, the place of its origin, and Moscow, which sent so many of its brave sons with it, await its coming, to express in a suitable manner their appreciation.

The First Idaho Volunteer Infantry, to which Company D belonged was organized and mustered into service of the United States at Camp Stevenson, Boise, Idaho, during the months of April and May, 1898, being formed with the Idaho National Guard as a nucleus.

The regiment left Boise on May 18, 1898, and arrived at San Francisco May 21, marching to Camp Merritt, where it remained equipping and drilling until June 27. June 27, embarked on the U. S. transport Morgan City for the Philippine Islands. Landed at Honolulu July 6, and was entertained by the citizens at the "Queens Palace" July 7. Reembarked July 9, and arrived in Manila Bay July 31. August 6 landed at Paranaque, P. I., and marched to Camp Dewey. August 9 and 10 were in the trenches, and on August 13 took part in the assault and capture of Manila. Were quartered at "Quartel de Malate," Manila, from August 13, 1898, to February 4, 1899. On October 11 the 2nd battalion changed quarters to the exposition building, Manila, and on January 2, with Co. "F," changed quarters to the "Cockpit," Paco, Manila, where regimental quarters were maintained until July 29.

From August 13, 1898, to February 5, 1899, the regiment did outpost duty at Ermita, Paco, Singalon and blockhouses Nos. 11, 12 and 13. During this time the regiment was drilled and performed the regular routine duty of barrack life.

On the night of February 4, the regiment was in the support at blockhouse No. 11, and on February 5 took part in the battle of Santa Ana, Companies "F," "H" and "D," under Major Diggins, going to the right of the San Pedro Macati road and "G," "C" and "B," under Major McConville, going to the left. "A" and "E" being on provo duty in Malate, but joined the regiment on February 7.

On February 7 Companies "A," "C" and "B" took part in a scout expedition several miles in front of San Pedro Macati. On February 10 the regiment took part in the battle of Caloocan, and on February 11 and 12 was engaged before Malabon and returned to quarters February 13. On February 14 Companies "D" and "C" were ordered to San Pedro Macati, and on February 15 took part in a scout in front of Guadaloupe. "D" and "C" were engaged at Gaudaloupe February 16, 17 and 18, being under continuous fire for over sixty hours.

On February 19 Companies "A," "C," "D," "E," "F," and "H" were moved to Gumbo Point, where they constructed trenches and remained until June 25, occupying different positions on the line. During this time the regiment was exposed to an irregular fire and took part in several skirmishes.

Companies "B" and "G" were on provo duty at San Mignel, Manila, from February 13 to March 19, when they joined the regiment at Gumbo Point.

On April 8 Companies "D," "F," "C" and "A" and forty picked sharpshooters accompanied Col. Lawton on the Laguna de Bay expedition and took part in the assault and capture of Santa Ana April 8 and 10 and engaged in skirmishes at Pangastan, April 11, Pangas April 12, and Paete, April 13.

On June 25 the Idaho regiment moved to the trenches near San Fedro Inacate and on July 12 was ordered to Manila to prepare to return to the United States.

Embarked on the U. S. A. T. Grant, July 29 and sailed by way of Japan and Inland Sea, July 31.

On the return of the company to Latah county, they were given a fitting reception. There was the wildest enthusiasm over the boys who had helped to win for the Idaho volunteers, by fearless and patriotic service, a name that was given a place of honor in the annals of the war department and shall never perish from the memories of those who cheered them on their departure and again cheered them on their return.

About seven o'clock P. M., December 15, 1899, occurred one of the worst railroad wrecks in the accident history of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The scene of the wreck was Kendrick, twenty-six miles southeast of Moscow. From Howell's station to Kendrick and beyond that town there is a four per cent. grade, a decline of four feet in every one hundred. On the date above mentioned an extra "double-header" train was sent over the road from Spokane, under charge of Conductor W. E. Galbraith, of Spokane; Engineers A. J. Ogden and A. E. Bain; Firemen Earl Bradshaw and Mr. Peterman; Brakemen Benjamin Baker, John Budge and F. O. Lemons. The train consisted of eighteen cars of steel rails, gross weight of each thirty-three tons, one car of gas pipe, about the same weight, and the caboose, twenty cars in all. It was snowing and the snow was melting, making the tracks slippery, and a short distance out of Troy the crew lost control of the train. Conductor Galbraith and Brakeman Baker were in the caboose and when they saw that the train was entirely beyond their control, in order to save their own lives, they pulled the coupling pin and cut the caboose from the train six or seven miles below Troy. The remainder of the train dashed on down the canyon at great speed and left the track, plunging into the Potlatch river at the curve just above the depot at Kendrick. Here locomotives and cars were piled up in an indescribable mass and here engineers, firemen and brakemen met a sudden but terrible death, the two members of the crew who were with the caboose alone escaping with their lives. One brakeman was taken from the debris, torn and mangled but still alive, and removed to a hotel, where he died a few days later. The bodies of the remainder of the crew were rescued a few hours after the accident, with the exception of that of Fireman Bradshaw, which was not recovered until the 22d, when it was found beneath one of the locomotives.

There were two inquests held, one on the 16th over the remains of those first recovered and one on the 22d over the remains of Earl Bradshaw. The inquests were held by Coroner Samuel T. Owings, of Moscow, in the city hall at Kendrick. The first jury was composed of Charles Hamlin, D. E. Thames, W. O. Long, Lewis Hunter, J. H. Ellis, S. Mellison and W. G. Campbell. This jury termed the wreck an unavoidable accident. The Bradshaw jury was composed of L. L. Carmean, Math. Jacobs, John S. Crocker, S. A. Kerr, J. Kasper, T. H. Powell and John Mark. Their verdict was that the deceased came to his death through negligence on the part of the employees of the railroad company. There has always existed a difference of opinion as to where the responsibility for the wreck should rest. The railroad is censured for running such a heavy train down so steep a grade in such weather as was prevailing and with crews that, although they had been over the division a few times previously, were not regularly on this branch and therefore could not have realized as fully as would a regular crew the risks they were facing. The company discharged Conductor Galbraith and Brakeman Baker, on the grounds that had they not cut off the caboose the speed of the train would not have been so great on reaching the Kendrick curve and would probably have passed it in safety. While a number of minor accidents have since occurred to freight trains on this grade, this is the only one of great magnitude since the building of the road in 1890.

The Prohibition party entered the political campaign of 1898 and nominated candidates for most of the county offices. A mass convention was held at the court house, September 17th. E. R. Headley was chosen chairman and W. T. Matthews, secretary. At the afternoon session the ticket was nominated as follows: Auditor, Mrs. Sarah O. Creekmur, Moscow; sheriff, Henry Nelson, Genesee; assessor, H. M. Asbury, Moscow; school superintendent, Mrs. Cora Greenstreet, Troy; probate judge, William Perkins, Moscow; treasurer, Mrs. M. Ida Moody, Moscow; Coroner, Alexander A. Campbell, Moscow; surveyor, George Campbell, Moscow; state senator, Edwin R. Headley, Moscow; representatives, Warren B. Carruthers, N. Beardsley, William P. Matthews, Charles S. Puntenney and Rev. Hewey; commissioners, 1st district, Herbert Haskel, 2d district, H. C. McFarland, 3d district, Charles Yockey. Of those nominated, Henry Nelson, for sheriff, was the candidate on the Populist ticket and George Campbell, for surveyor, was on the same ticket. The nomination for county attorney was left open and a committee appointed to fill the vacancy at a later day. Resolutions were adopted condemning the present license system and recommending prohibition laws in county, state and nation.

The Populists refused to fuse with the other parties as they had done in 1896, but met in convention in July and nominated a full ticket. The Democratic and Silver Republican central committees met June 9th and passed resolutions advocating the fusion of all the silver forces and later nominated a full fusion ticket. The officers of the July Populist convention had certified their ticket to the county auditor as the "People's party ticket." The Democrats and Silver Republicans claimed that their fusion ticket was the People's party ticket and insisted in so certifying it to the auditor. As two sets of candidates could not legally enter the field under one party name, the filing could not be allowed. The candidates on the Populist ticket were then invited to resign, which they declined to do. The law governing resignations from tickets is as follows:

"Sec. 38. Whenever any person nominated for any public office as in this act provided, shall at least thirty days before election, except in the case of municipal elections, in a writing signed by him, and certified to by the registrar of the precinct where the person nominated resides, notify the officer with whom the certificate nominating him is by this act required to be filed, that he declines such nomination, such nomination shall be void."

None of these of the July convention having resigned and the time in which they could legally take their names off the ticket having expired, Auditor Woodworth refused to take off any of the nominees and fill the vacancies with the fusion nominees. He wrote the attorney general for advice, but not receiving it in time, it was finally decided that the matter should be submitted to Judge Piper on a writ of mandate. So on Wednesday, October 12th, Auditor Woodworth, with S. S. Denning for counsel, and Clay McNamee and Willis Sweet for the writ, repaired to Lewiston. Judge Piper granted a hearing that night and with scarcely any deliberation at all ordered the writ to issue in defiance of the plain provision of the statute quoted above. The result of Judge Piper's decision was that the fusion names go upon the Populist ticket. The ticket known in the campaign as the Fusion ticket was as follows:

For county attorney, Clay McNamee, Moscow; state senator, Frank C. McLean; representatives, Lindol Smith, Moscow, George W. Coutts, Kendrick, Manford W. Harland, Kendrick, David Spurbeck, Genesee, and William J. Seat, Troy; clerk and auditor, William H. Clark, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, Alexander A. Anderson, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Orton W. Beardsley, Moscow, 3d district, Nicholas Brocke, Troy; sheriff, James D. Hunter, Moscow; treasurer, Frank E. Cornwall, Moscow; probate judge, Ralph T. Morgan, Moscow; superintendent of schools, Miss Effie E. Plummer, Kendrick; assessor, John F. Brown; coroner, Adolph F. Wohlenberg, Genesee; suveyor, Daniel W. Hannah, Moscow.

The Republican convention was held at Moscow, September 6th, Judge Truitt, chairman, and Dr. Pemberton, of Kendrick, secretary. After passing resolutions endorsing the administration of President McKinley and pledging the party to the support of the Republican national doctrines and a wise administration of county affairs, the convention nominated the following ticket: County attorney, Harvey R. Smith, Moscow; representatives, Burton L. French, Juliaetta, Charles J. Munson, Moscow, Robert Bruce, Palouse precinct, Adrian Nelson, Moscow, and George W. Daggett, Genesee; clerk and auditor, Oscar Larson, Troy; commissioners, 1st district, John H. Horton, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Hans C. J. Tweedt, Genesee, 3d district, A. H. Charles, Troy; sheriff, William Buchanan, Cornwall; treasurer, Elmina E. Fry, Moscow; probate judge, J. R. Strong, Cora; superintendent of schools, Mattie Heading, Moscow; assessor, A. Gammell, Juliaetta; coroner, James Johnson, Moscow; surveyor, Theodore P. Caulkins, White Pine. Congressional, state and judicial candidates were as follows: Congressman, Edgar Wilson, Democrat, James Gunn, People's party, Weldon B. Heyburn, Republican, William J. Boone, Prohibition; governor, Frank Steunenberg, Fusion, James H. Anderson, People's party, Albert B. Moss, Republican, Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, Prohibition; judge second judicial district, Frank L. Moore Democrat, Willis Sweet, Silver Republican, Edgar C. Steele, Republican.

The following is the record of votes cast at the election, November 8th: For congressman, Wilson 870, Gunn 628, Heyburn 1,599, Boone 198, Heyburn's plurality 729; governor, Steunenberg 869, Anderson 565, Moss 1,696, Mrs. Johnson 229, Moss's plurality 817; judge second judicial district, Moore 869, Sweet 886, Steele 1,422, Steele's plurality 536; county attorney, McNamee 1,421, Smith 1,811, Smith's majority 390; state senator, McLean 1,315, Brigham 1,528, Headley 320, Brigham's plurality 213; representatives, Smith 1,456, Coutts 1,377, Harland 1,427, Spurbeck 1,372, Seat 1,321, French 1,879, Munson 1,538, Bruce 1,347, Nelson 1,508, Daggett 1,518, Carruthers 209, Beardsley 250, Puntenney 282, Matthews 268, Towne 269, French's plurality 423, Munson's plurality 91, Bruce's plurality 20, Nelson's plurality 61, Daggett's plurality 71; clerk and auditor, Clarke 1,385, Larson, 1,743, Mrs. Creekmur 215, Larson's majority 57; commissioners, 1st district, Anderson 1,366, Horton 1,552, Haskell 225, Horton's plurality 186, 2d district, Beardsley 1,459, Tweedt 1,520, McFarland 238, Tweedt's plurality 61, 3d district, Brockel 404, Charles 1,552, Yockey, 1,512, Charles' plurality 148; sheriff, Hunter 1,353, Nelson 533, Buchanan 1,539, Buchanan's plurality 186; treasurer, Cornwall 1,394, Fry 1,769, Moody 176, Fry's majority 199; probate judge, Morgan 1,135, Strong 1,410, Perkins 705, Strong's plurality 75; school superintendent, Miss Plummer 1,314, Miss Headington 1,989, Miss Headington's majority 675; assessor, Brown 1,384, Gammell 1,587, Asbury 270, Gammell's plurality 203; coroner, Wohlenberg 1,276, Johnson 1,633, Campbell 254, Johnson's majority 103; surveyor, Hannah 1,409, Caulkins 1,464, Campbell 1,326, Caulkins' plurality 55.

By an amendment to the school laws the offices of probate judge and superintendent of schools were separated and at this election the first regular county superintendent of schools was elected in the person of Miss Mattie Headington. The election was a decided victory for the Republicans, showing that many had already left the ranks of the free silver advocates and had returned to former party affiliations.

According to the census of 1900 Latah county had a population of 13,451. The total valuation of property in 1899 was $4,011,387; this was reduced in 1900 to $3,810,120. The thirty-six miles of railroad in the county were assessed on a total valuation of $233,625; 113 miles of telegraph and telephone lines were assessed at $5,574; grain and hay at $2,452; live stock at $221,698; lumber, saw logs, wood and ties at $8,852; and twenty-seven flour and sawmills at $19,285. Industrial enterprises enjoyed a season of prosperity, crops were good and prices fair, and the county had by this time recovered almost entirely from the disaster of the early 'ninties. A combination of warm weather and Chinook winds early in March precipitated the snows in the mountains, causing a sudden rise in the Potlatch and other streams in the southeastern part of the county and resulted in the loss of a few bridges, some damage to mills and dams, and considerable damage to the road bed and tracks of the Northern Pacific Railroad, both above and below Kendrick. A large force of men were set at work in the canyon and the grade was raised above high water mark, since which time no flood disasters have been experienced.

Every year has witnessed an increase in the attention given to educational matters. The annual meetings of the teachers' association have been events in which all classes have manifested special attention. On April 7, 1900, a convention was held at Kendrick for the purpose of discussing educational affairs. At this convention papers were read by professors from the State University and from the high schools of the county, as well as from teachers in the district schools. By the discussion and comparison of methods, inestimable good has been accomplished and the schools of the county have been raised to a standard of perfection unsurpassed by those of any other county in the state. The enrollment for 1900 was 5,290 pupils, for whose instruction 139 teachers were employed at a cost to the county of $26,540. In the libraries of various schools there were 1,000 volumes. The bonded district indebtedness was $41,625, on which interest was paid to the amount of $9,275. The total expenditure for school purposes this year was $46,848.

The history of the rise and fall of Populism in Latah county covers the years 1892 to 1900, inclusive. The following in 1900 was comparatively small, however, and in the selection of candidates by the fusion conventions the Populists had but little voice. There was in the political campaign of 1900 a Fusion ticket, a Republican and a Prohibition ticket. The remnants of the Silver party and that of the Populists joined forces with the Democrats and placed a full ticket in the field. The election resulted in a victory for the Republicans, although not complete, as the Fusionists elected state senator, three representatives, county attorney, commissioners in the first and second districts, and surveyor. The Republicans elected two representatives, commissioner in the third district, sheriff, treasurer, probate judge, school superintendent, assessor and coroner. The following are the names of those who appeared on the Fusion party ticket: State senator, Frank L. Moore, Moscow; representatives, Anderson B. Crawford, Little Potlatch, John F. Ogden, Troy, William Hunter, Moscow, Henry H. Bangs, Thorn creek, Porter D. Sardam, Palouse precinct; county attorney, George W. Coutts, Kendrick; commissioners, 1st district, Landon C. Irvine, 2d district, Orton W. Beardsley, Moscow, 3d district, Frank Benscotter, Bear creek; sheriff, Michael Driscoll, American ridge; treasurer, Levi T. Hammond, Moscow; probate judge, William T. Griffin, Moscow; school superintendent, Effie E. Plummer; assessor, William R. Belvail; coroner, Peter S. Beck; surveyor, Daniel W. Hannah, Moscow.

The following were the nominees of the Prohibition party: State senator, Charles E. Gibson, Moscow; representatives, Jennie G. Headley, Moscow, James W. Carrick, American ridge, Ernest Thornquest, Mansfield, C. McGrew, Kendrick, Ida Moody, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, Andrew Smith, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Wylie A. Lauder, Moscow, 3d district, Charles W. Yockey, Little Potlatch; sheriff, Henry M. Asbury, Moscow; treasurer, Ella T. Anderson, Moscow; probate judge, Henry C. McFarland, Moscow; school superintendent, John J. Anthony, Moscow; assessor, Colden B. Sanders; coroner, William E. Talbott; surveyor, Gilbert Hogue, Moscow.

The Republicans convened September 5th and placed the following candidates in the field: State senator, William C. Fowler, Genesee; representatives, Burton L. French, Juliaetta, Charles J. Munson, Moscow, Thomas H. Brewer, Genesee, D. W. Driskel, Moscow, C. L. Kinman, Palouse precinct; county attorney, Harvey R. Smith, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, John H. Horton, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Hans C. J. Tweedt, Genesee, 3d district, A. H. Charles, Troy; sheriff, Joseph R. Collins, Juliaetta; treasurer, Elmina E. Fry, Moscow; probate judge, J. R. Strong, Cora; school superintendent, Hattie Headington, Moscow; assessor, B. J. Jones, Palouse precinct; coroner, L. D. Jameson, Moscow; surveyor, Benjamin E. Bush, Moscow.

Congressional and state candidates were as follows: Congressman, John T. Morrison, Republican, Thomas L. Glenn, Fusionist, John F. Stark, Populist, Amanda M. Way, Prohibitionist; governor, Drew W. Standrod, Republican, Frank W. Hunt, Fusionist, John S. Randolph, Populist, William J. Boone, Prohibitionist.

The official account of the election, which occurred November 6th, was as follows: Representative in congress, Morrison 1,996, Glenn 1,920, Stark 34, Miss Way 145, Morrison's plurality in Latah county 76; governor, Standrod 1,981, Hunt 1,934, Randolph 56, Boone 158, Standrod's plurality 47; state senator, Fowler 1,920, Moore 2,049, Gibson 154, Moore's plurality 129; representatives, French 2,112, Munson 1,977, Brewer 1,864, Driskel 1,952, Kinman 1,885, Crawford 1,879, Ogden 1,938, Hunter 2,113, Bangs, 1,962, Sardam 1,934, Miss Headley 144, Carrick 141, Thornquest 140, McGrew 143, Miss Moody 146, French's majority 89, Munson's plurality 39, Hunter's majority 109, Bangs's plurality 10, Sardam's plurality 49; attorney, Smith 1,944, Coutts 2,091, Coutts' majority 147; commissioners, 1st district, Horton 1,935, Irvine 1,948, Smith 160, Irvine's plurality 13, 2d district, Tweedt 1,870, Beardsley 2,059, Lauder 157, Beardsley's majority 32, 3d district, Charles 1,972, Benscotter 1,936, Yockey 148, Charles's plurality 36; sheriff, Collins 2,024, Driscoll 1,970, Asbury 158, Wild Davie 5, Collins's plurality 55; treasurer, Fry 2,178, Hammond 1,825, Anderson 123, Miss Fry's majority 230; probate judge, Strong 2,112, Griffin 1,809, McFarland 141, Strong's majority 162; school superintendent, Headington 2,147, Plummer 1,887, Anthony 115, Miss Headington's majority 145; assessor, Jones 2,036, Belvail 1,916, Sanders 138, Jones's plurality 120; coroner, Jameson 1,962, Beck 1,933, Talboot 134, Jameson's plurality 29; surveyor, Bush 1,906, Hannah 1,994, Hogue 144, Hannah's plurality 88.

About nine o'clock Sunday morning, August 4, 1901, Moscow was the scene of a tragedy fearful in its conception, terrible in its execution. That it was conceived in deliberate thought by a responsible being, however, cannot be confirmed with any degree of certainty. As the perpetrator of the crime was not known to have cause for the acts committed the most charitable view that can be taken of the matter is that the criminal was temporarily insane. On the morning named, William Steffen, who lived with his mother just out of town, rode in on horseback and meeting Dr. W. W. Watkins on the street, drew a revolver from his pocket and shot him through the body, killing him almost instantly. A moment later Steffen shot George V. Creighton in the right arm, and but a few moments afterward, seriously wounded Deputy Sheriff W. E. Cool, who was attempting to arrest him, and who died a few hours later from the effects of the wounds. Leaving Cool, he rode on toward the courthouse. Just beyond the courthouse square, Steffen was accosted by Sheriff Joseph Collins, who for some reason permitted him to escape. A little further on, Steffen encountered Sherman Mix and a running fight ensued, Steffen shooting at Mix four times, missing him, while Mix took several shots at Steffen with equal lack of success. The last shot struck Steffen's horse in the hind leg, breaking the bones. He then deserted his horse and ran to his mother's house, which was within a quarter of a mile. The house in which he had taken refuge was quickly surrounded, while Sheriff Collins went for rifles and more men. Within an hour there were at least fifty men about the place, all armed with rifles and an attempt was made to advance in a body. Steffen then began shooting, the bullets passing within close proximity to the heads of several of the sheriff's posse. Although the posse was driven back to a distance of four or five hundred yards, Steffen for a time continued his fusilade, which was replied to by many of the posse and it is thought that at least 200 shots were fired into the house.

After a time, no further firing being observed from the house, a part of the posse was formed into a charging party and the house was rushed. Steffen's dead body being found in the upper story lying on a floor near the window. It was supposed that, realizing the hopelessness of any further attempt to escape, he shot himself in the left breast, the powder scorched clothing and skin, furnishing evidence of self destruction. At the coroner's inquest held on the body of Steffen, evidence was found that leads to the belief that Steffen had intended to kill not only Watkins, but also a number of others. Written in ink on the envelope on his pocket were the names W. W. Watkins, George Langdon, August Held and E. E. Jolly. On another envelope Steffen had written with pencil, "If the inevitable comes, I want to rest in Pullman." On still another envelope he had written in large letters, "I didn't get the right ones after all."

Just prior to the killing of Dr. Watkins, Dr. Francis J. Ledbrook located in Moscow. He came here the first time about a year previous from Lakefield, Minnesota. Shortly after his first visit to Moscow, he bought some land on Camas prairie and spent a portion of his time attending to property interests there. He had not yet rented an office and settled down to practice his profession when Dr. Watkins's tragic death occurred in August, 1901. He then rented the office that had been occupied by Dr. Watkins and at once stepped into his large practice, most of which he continued to hold. He came highly recommended as a man and physician, was an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal church and rapidly grew in the public esteem. Persons who had known him since boyhood said that up to the time of his settling in Moscow there had been no blot upon his name. On May 12, 1902, this man committed a crime that horrified and mystified the community as nothing had ever done before or has done since. Although a man of family, with a devoted wife, he enticed, by deceit and misrepresentations, one of the most estimable young ladies of Moscow, over whom he exercised hypnotic influence, to Orofino, where, on Monday morning, May 12th, he murdered her by injecting morphine into the arteries at the wrists, supposedly while she was under the influence of his hypnotic power. After the commission of this fearful crime, Dr. Ledbrook then died by his own hand and in the same manner that he had murdered his innocent victim. It will be many long years before the citizens of Moscow can forget this appalling bloody murder that removed from their midst so suddenly and under such mysterious and unfortunate circumstances, a hitherto respected citizen and physician and a much loved and greatly esteemed member of the young people's religious and social circles.

We have yet to record one more fatality to a prominent physician of Moscow, this time and accidental death. A few months after the suicide of Dr. Ledbrook, Dr. C. D. Parsons came to Moscow from Michigan, settling here in the practice of his profession and occupying the same down town office that had been occupied by Drs. Watkins and Ledbrook. In the latter part of May, 1903, a party consisting of Dr. C. D. Parsons, James Canham, G. A. Rubedew and others of Moscow, and Ramsey Walker, of Kendrick, went to Pierce City, and there securing saddle horses, went one day's ride northeast of Pierce into the timbered section for the purpose of locating homesteads. G. A. Rubedew was the locator in charge of the party. On an early morning, after having selected a claim, Dr. Parsons, wishing to hasten back to his practice in Moscow, left the remainder of the party and started alone on the return to Pierce City. When about an hour out of camp he was met by a pack train going into the timber with supplies. When hailed by the driver of the train he was apparently aroused from a stupor and fell from his horse into the brush by the side of the trail. When he was picked up, he was in a dazed condition, evidently not realizing what was happening about him, and a deep cut above one of the eyes showed that he had met with a serious accident previous to meeting the pack train. It developed later that some time after leaving camp, and before being seen by the driver, he had in some manner been thrown from his horse and in falling struck his head against a log or stone and as shown by the autopsy had fractured the skull bone just above the eye. He was first taken back to camp and, the following day, the party started with him to Pierce City, occupying two days in making the trip. Doctors Carruthers and Gritman of Moscow met him at Pierce City and performed a surgical operation in an effort to save his life. It was ineffectual, however, and, after suffering for fully a week following the date of the accident, the doctor died at Pierce City.

By the year 1902 the days of fusion in political matters were over. The two old parties had absorbed the advocates of the "new issues" of the 'nineties and were back in the tracks they had traveled "since the war," each of course expressing platform opinions on the issues of later days that resulted from the breach with Spain in 1898, as well as on the tariff and currency questions. While there was a Populist candidate for governor this year, the county organization of that party had been abandoned and there was no Populist ticket in the field. During the years 1899 and 1900 the Socialists had been agitating the question of organization and in 1902 they were to place a ticket in the field, which they did.

Their candidates for the various offices were as follows: State senator, Peter S. Beck; representatives, Samuel R. Greenwood, Bear creek; Aage M. Hoidale, Troy; Alexander A. Anderson; clerk and auditor, William Perkins, Moscow; sheriff, Amon K. Biddison, Juliaetta; treasurer, Belle Anderson, Moscow; assessor, Sylvester G. Curtis, Moscow; probate judge, William W. Witham, Moscow; school superintendent, Anna Clyde, Moscow; coroner, Thomas J. Bray, Troy; surveyor, Evelyn H. Swan, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, Porter D. Sardam, 2d district, George Sievers, 3d district, Peter Mattson, Troy.

Democratic nominees were: State senator, William Hunter, Moscow; representatives, Henry H. Bangs, Thorn creek, David Spurbeck, Genesee, William W. Young, Palous precinct; clerk and auditor, Samuel R. H. McGowan, Moscow; sheriff, James K. Keane, Genesee; treasurer, Anna Tierney; assessor, Robert G. Plunket, Troy; probate judge, Manford W. Harland, Kendrick; school superintendent, Emma Maude Mix, Moscow; county attorney, George W. Coutts, Kendrick; coroner, William P. Lumpkin, Moscow; surveyor, Daniel W. Hannah, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, Albert E. Daily, Palouse precinct; 2d district, Peter Hagan, Thorn creek; 3d district, Albert C. White, Kendrick.

Candidates of the Republican party were as follows: State senator, J. W. Brigham, Little Potlatch; representatives, Francis Jenkins, Moscow, Richard Price, Princeton, James A. Nelson, Bear creek; clerk and auditor, Axel P. Ramstedt, Moscow; sheriff, Jesse E. Randall: Little Potlach; treasurer, Pauline Moerder, Moscow; assessor, James Langdon, Kendrick; probate judge, Charles M. Lukins, Kendrick; school superintendent, Clara Ransom, Moscow; county attorney, William P. Stillinger, Moscow; coroner, L. D. Jameson, Moscow; surveyor, Benjamin E. Bush, Moscow; commissioners, 1st district, George W. Anderson, Palouse precinct, 2d district, Rees Pickering, Genesee; 3d district, LaFayette Keene, Kendrick.

State, congressional and judicial candidates of the various parties were as follows: Congress, Burton L. French, Republican, Joseph H. Hutchinson, Democrat, John A. Davis, Socialist, Albert H. Lee, Prohibitionist; governor, John P. Morrison, Republican, Frank W. Hunt, Democrat, Augustus M. Slattery, Socialist, DeForrest H. Andrews, Populist, Albert Gipson, Prohibitionist; judge second judicial district, Edgar C. Steele, Republican, Moscow, Wallace N. Scales, Grangeville, Democrat.

Following is the official record of the election occurring November 4, 1902, at which time the Republicans were victorious, but one office, that of sheriff, being held by a Democrat: Representative in congress, French 2,423, Hutchinson 1,183, Davis 218, Lee 59, Frenchs' majority in Latah county, 963; governor, Morrison 2,168, Hunt 1,364, Slattery 217, Andrews 10, Gipson 76, Morrison's majority in Latah county, 501; judge second judicial district, Steele 2,550, Scales 1,036, Steele's majority in Latah county, 1,514; state senator Brigham 2,024, Hunter 1,558, Beck 217, Brigham's majority, 248; representative, Jenkins 2,076, Price 2,029, Nelson 2,089, Bangs 1,417, Spurbeck, 1394, Young 1,362, Greenwood 223, Hoidale 231, Anderson 222, Jenkin's majority, 436; Price's majority, 404; Nelson's majority, 405; clerk and auditor, Ramstedt 2,138, McGowan 1,428, Perkins 229, Ramstedt's majority, 481; sheriff, Randall 1,732, Keane 1,868, Biddison 163, Poyeson (Independent) 21, Keane's plurality, 136; treasurer, Moerder 2,177, Tierney 1,387, Anderson 224, Miss Moerder's majority, 566; assessor, Langdon 2,092, Plunkett 1,371, Curtis 243, Langdon's majority 478; probate judge, Lukins 2,003, Harland 1,458, Witham 227, Lukins' majority, 318; school superintendent, Ransom 2,189, Mix 1,380, Clyde 220, Miss Ransom's majority, 589; county attorney, Stillinger 2,216, Coutts 1,404, Stilinger's majority, 812; coroner, Jameson 2,113, Lumpkins 1,367, Bray 228, Jameson's majority, 518; surveyor, Bush 2,062, Hannah 1,440, Swan 219, Bush's majority 403; commissioners, first district, Anderson 2,025, Daly 1,428, Sardam 220, Anderson's majority, 377; second district, Pickering 2,035, Hagan 1,388, Sievers 226, Pickering's majority, 421; third district, Keene 1,915, White 1,498, Mattson 257, Keene's majority, 160.

In closing this chapter it is a pleasure to state that a more prosperous condition than that now enjoyed by the citizens of Latah county could scarcely be anticipated if desired. Public spirited capitalists, business and profesional men have planned for the future advancement of the general interest of the people. There are railroad schemes and factory plans and mill projects that promise consummation and that will add to the wealth, comfort and happiness of the citizens when perfected and put into execution. But all are to be congratulated on the present propitious state of affairs in the commercial, industrial, rural and educational pursuits. There are 416,469 acres of land now patented in the county, the greater portion of which is under cultivation. There are upwards of 25,000 head of livestock being fed or grazed in the county. There are twenty-six flour and sawmills in operation. The total valuation of property is now $4,238,845. County Auditor Ramstedt reports that during the first quarter of the present year ending April 11th, there were received for record in his office over one thousand instruments, the auditor's office receiving in fees $1,415. During the fiscal year ending April 11th, warrants were issued aggregating $120,080. Warrants were redeemed during the same time to the amount of $107,003. At the end of the year there was cash on hand in the treasury to the amount of $30,741. Of this amount, $25,783 was credited to the school fund. From School Superintendent's Mattie Headington's annual report for the year ending August 31, 1902, we learn that the enrollment this year was 4,676 pupils in the schools of the county. The teachers of the county were paid $32,727; on school bonds and interest there were paid $6,164; the total expenditures during the year for school purposes were $51,410. Everywhere we find figures that represent progress and a very great degree of prosperity.

The pioneers of the 'seventies in Genesee and Paradise valleys and in the Potlatch country can contemplate with pride the wonderful development of this great agricultural and fruit raising county. They did not bring with them the capital that built the railroads, the business houses, the mills, the schools and church edifices and the palatial homes of the present day. They brought with them few of the comforts and none of the luxuries by which they are now surrounded. They came to perform a most difficult and trying task, to open up and make habitable a new and untried country. Willis Sweet in addressing the pioneers of Latah county in 1893 said, "Every age, every nation, every state is the creation of the combined courage, hope and sacrifice of its pioneers." The decade of the 'seventies was a period of experiment, fraught with dangers and fretted with poverty and crude appliances. But those who came at that time had the courage of the adventurer together with the determination of the builder. The prosperity of today is based on the work of the pioneers of the 'seventies; they contributed to the civilization of today years of sacrifice, years of suffering, years of toil; they gave the vigor and daring of their youth and the strength of their manhood to the development of this magnificent county which 20,000 people now call "Home."

All honor to the pioneer.

CHAPTER III.

CITIES AND TOWNS.

MOSCOW.

The pioneer is as a rule not a city finder. He is frequently given to platting townsites but commerce and industry usually ignore his accommodations and busy themselves at other points. Usually they reasoned on conditions that changed with the flying years; they could not foresee the advent of railroads and the distribution of products and merchandise along arbitrary lines and to markets which then did not exist. In almost every county in the state may be found remnants of towns, perhaps but a single ruined shack, about which have centered at one time the business energy and social life of a pioneer community. The railroad eventually came through the county, left the village a few miles to the right or left, the business houses and the homes moved to the railroad, and the shack alone is left as a reminder of the townsite project of the pioneer.

The locators of Moscow must either have been wiser or more fortunate than the ordinary pioneers. The site was chosen after due deliberation and much discussion. No railroads were pointed in this direction and there were no prospects of railroads. When '71 was in its infancy a man in the prime of life left the gold field of the land of sun and flowers for the unsettled plains of Idaho to make a home and grow up with the country. Fate directed him from Lewiston and on a dreary, stormy day he landed and located in Paradise valley, known a little later as "hog heaven." With logs hauled from the mountains on the east, a commodious cabin was hastily erected for the accommodation of his family. Within sight of the cabin was one other, two miles up the valley was another, and five miles down the Palouse was a third. There were no fences, no schoohouses, no churches, no fields of grain, no roads, nothing but the Indian trails that wound over the rolling hills and through the valleys covered with bunchgrass from a foot and a half to two feet high that waved and tossed like the sea in a wind. Indians roamed over the country on the wiry cayuse decked in primitive picturesque fashion, some of them friendly and sociable, other solemn and stoical, resenting in look, if not act, the coming of the white settler to their forage and hunting grounds. A short distance down the valley was their race track, and at nearly all times could be seen their tepees or wickiups in clusters or groups on either side of the valley at the foot of the hills. The prospects were not inviting, but the heart of the sturdy pioneer did not fail him. He had turned his back on the pleasant environments of youth and early manhood, not because he did not love them, but because the promise of better things held out to him by the new west had charmed him from the old haunts and made of him at first an argonaut and eventually a homeseeker. He had put his hand to the plow and nature had so endowed him with the sterner, better qualities of the human kind that there was no thought of turning back. It was the typical honored pioneer, who, undismayed by his isolated location, no railroads in the country, thirty miles from a post-office and supply point, broke the sod and made his home three miles east of the site of the present city of Moscow.

Asbury Lieuallen was the first man in the valley, coming in the summer of 1871. A little later a number of families found their way to locations along Paradise creek, and by fall there were several cabins within sight of each other a few miles east of the Moscow of today. Among these, beside Mr. Lieuallen, were George W. Tomer, L. Haskens, William Ewing, John Russell, Henry Trimble, James Deakin, Henry McGregor, Thomas Tierney, William Taylor, Noah Lieuallen, William Calbraith, John and Bart Niemyer, James and Albert Howard, Reuben Cox, O. P. H. Beagle and James Montgomery. Lewiston was the nearest post-office and was reached over the worst roads that could be imagined. A determined effort was made in the summer of 1872 to secure the establishment of a post-office in the valley. About this time A. Leland, afterwards the publisher of the Lewiston Teller, drove across the country from Lewiston to the Spokane bridge, obtaining signatures to a petition praying for the establishment of a mail route between these two points. In the same summer a post-office was established and George W. Tomer was appointed postmaster, but not wishing to serve, he secured the appointment of V. Craig in his stead. The office was named Paradise, or some say Paradise City, and had an official existence of about three years.

During the winter of 1874 and 1875 the question of establishing a store was agitated in the settlement. The schoolhouse built in 1871 on the Haskens place was used for all public gatherings of the community, and here the question of location was frequently discussed. Some favored the Paradise post-office location and others a site farther down the valley as being more central to the homes of the settlers. On the west side of what is now Main street the land had been taken as a homestead by William Neff. Mr. Neff had opened a small stock of goods late in 1874, but he did not attempt to supply the demands for general merchandise, and the store was unsatisfactory. In the spring of 1875 Asbury A. Lieuallen purchased Mr. Neff's land, put up a small store building and, going to Walla Walla, purchased a small stock of general merchandise with which, in the latter part of May, he opened the pioneer store of Paradise valley and of what is now Latah county. At the time the store was established, or shortly afterwards, the Paradise post office was moved over, Mr. Lieuallen was appointed postmaster and changed the name to Moscow. The pioneers tell us that an ordinary shoe box was used as the receptacle for the mail, and from this box settlers helped themselves when coming to the store.

The energy of man rightly applied can overcome all obstacles and make a prosperous community in the midst of a desert, or make a barren waste blossom like a rose. When the same energy is aided by nature the result is the same in a much greater degree, for man naturally is better repaid for his labor through being relieved from combating sterile surroundings, and consequently finds more in life to enjoy. The ever living energy of man who settled on broad acres, reclaiming them from the wilderness, has made thousands of homes and millions of wealth. Moscow began in a small way. Two wagon loads of merchandise constituted Mr. Lieuallen's stock. But his patrons did not have to waste their energies in the cultivation of a desert, and the rose bloomed by its own efforts. There were difficulties to overcome, but there was energy to perform the task. The Paradise valley settler was full of energy and his farm was phenomenally fertile. The transformation of an unbounded wilderness, a vast, almost unknown expanse, the abode of savagery, the hunting grounds of the nomads of the plains to happy homes, blessed abundantly with the fruits of honest toil, was rapid, but not without its equivalent in the development of Moscow. In one brief decade the character of the immediate surroundings was totally changed; the tepee of the Indian was swept away to make room for the business house, the schoolhouse and the church.

The Lieuallen store and post-office had no sooner been established than Moscow began to grow. The following from the Lewiston Signal, issued August 8, 1874, shows that conditions were improving steadily and prospects were bright, even at that early date:

"From a gentleman who lives in Paradise valley we learn that Henry McGregor, John Russell and S. M. Neff have donated thirty acres of land, one mile from the site of the present post-office (Paradise) for a townsite, and that already there is one store located there and other parties will soon construct a number of buildings. The inducements offered to business men are very flattering and cannot help attracting attention. The town is to be called Moscow, and it is destined to be the business place of the valley. Our informant says new settlers are constantly arriving, and he knows of many more who will come within the next year. Messrs. Neff, Lieuallen, Russell and C. A. Howard afterward became owners of the townsite.

Building material in the early days was furnished for a short time in the spring of 1877 by the Stewart & Beach sawmill, northeast of town, and later by the mill owned and operated by R. H. Barton, S. H. Langdon and Hiram Epperly, also northeast of town. Mr. Barton erected the first hotel in Moscow, in the spring of 1878, with lumber from this mill. In an address before the pioneers in June, 1903, A. J. Green stated that when he came here, in 1877, Moscow was "just a lane between two farms, with a flax field on one side and a post-office on the other." This state of affairs must have been speedily changed, as a Moscow correspondent of the Lewiston Teller, in an issue dated June 14, 1878, said:

"As proof of the fact that Moscow is fortunately situated, look at the advanced condition of the town within the past five months. At the beginning of that time we had only one store and a blacksmith shop; now, in addition to these, we have a general merchandise establishment, McConnell & Company; also one in course of construction; a hardware store, a liquor store, three blacksmith shops, a carpenter shop, two butcher shops and two hotels, owned by W. J. Hamilton and Henry Warmouth."

In 1880 Moscow had a population of 300, business had doubled within the year and real estate values were high. Nothing can give the reader a better idea or more accurate information concerning the development period than articles published in the newspaper of the time, and we will quote once more a communication dated Moscow, May 5, 1881, and published in the Nezperce News:

"Moscow is nicely and advantageously situated in the heart of Paradise valley, on the banks of Paradise creek, and one mile from the south Palouse. Above and below the town stretch the meadows that here skirt the banks of the two streams. The town was laid out four years ago by A. Lieuallen and John Russell; it has been growing ever since, it is growing now and will grow bigger with the development of the country. Its growth has been mainly since last fall; today it numbers a population of 350 souls and is the trade center for the best portion of the Palouse country. The town is located two miles from the boundary, twenty-five miles north of Lewiston, twenty-five miles southeast from Colfax, ten miles south of Palouse City and about twenty-seven miles from Wawawai, the shipping point for this burg. Quite an extensive trade is centered here and every branch of trade and industry is ably represented. The business establishment at present comprises three general merchandise stores, two hotels and livery stables, two butcher shops, two saloons, two agricultural implement warehouses, one hardware store, one drug store, one watchmaker and jeweler, two blacksmith shops, one physician, one dentist, one lawyer, one steam flour mill, etc. McConnell & Company is the leading firm: A. A. Lieuallen, one of the founders of the town and the first settler in the valley, carries a full line of goods and is postmaster, the only Democrat holding such a position in North Idaho; Hayes & Dupuy opened a merchandise stock last November. The two implement houses are run by W. D. Robins and N. J. Shields. W. W. Langdon is the hardware man, and also the Wells, Fargo & Company agent. The Barton House and Fry Hotel monopolize the boarding business. T. J. Craig runs the drug and notion store; G. Weber carries a full stock of saddles, etc.; R. H. Barton runs the feed stable, while J. S. Peterson and True run the two butcher shops. Howard Olsen has his hands full disposing of jewelry and notions, while Doctor Reeder, Doctor McCully and Judge Kribs represent the medical and legal professions. There are more families settled within a radius of ten miles of Moscow than there are in a similar scope of country in the Walla Walla valley. Two churches and four organizations of different denominations are supported by the families of Paradise valley. Last year they subscribed 16,500 bushels of grain as a bonus to M. C. Moore & Company to build a flouring mill. This enterprise started running November 15th of last year and has a capacity of seventy barrels.

"Seven miles from town a sawmill is located on the South Palouse in a belt of timber which extends back northeasterly into the Coeur d'Alene mountains for a distance of 100 miles. The timber embraces all varieties of pine, cedar, fir and tamarack. The mill has a capacity of 15,000 feet a day and is owned by Northup & Company. Moscow is a lively, thriving, enterprising, progressive place, and will take a boom this summer. The people are never tired talking of the Paradise country and they are right, for if there is a better country in the world we have never seen it."

As a matter of special record we will list the pioneers in the various industries now so well represented in Moscow. The first merchant was William Neff, who sold to A. A. Lieuallen, the latter being the first postmaster. The first physician was Dr. H. B. Blake; the first school teacher, Noah Lieuallen, who was also the first Baptist minister; the first mill in the Palouse country was owned by J. C. Davenport and built at Colfax; the first mill in Moscow was built in 1881 by M. C. Moore & Company; the postmaster at Paradise was D. Craig; first Methodist minister, F. W. D. Mays; first blacksmith shop, built by A. Lieuallen and leased by a man named McDougall; first bank, by Baker & Clark, of Walla Walla; first contractor, brick mason and builder, William Taylor; first meat market, John Henry Warmouth; first drug store, S. G. Richardson; first saddle and harness shop, G. Weber; first dentist, J. H. McCallie; first hotel, R. H. Barton, who was followed shortly afterward in this business by J. H. Hamilton and Henry Warmouth.

In 1878 Mr. Curtis, of the Curtis-Maguire firm, sold his interest in the business to W. J. McConnell, afterward governor of Idaho, who visited Moscow at this time, becoming at once greatly impressed with the richness of the country and its future possibilities. A store building was erected, 120 feet deep with a 30-foot frontage, and stocked with $50,000 worth of goods. This building still stands, facing First street. The people in the surrounding country were greatly encouraged by the establishment of this mammoth store and from that time on the town began to grow rapidly. When this store was opened Moscow had a population of 25. The news of the great store at Moscow spread everywhere and people from all parts of the Potlatch and Palouse country flooded to Moscow to do their trading, and it is no exaggeration to say that to no men living in Moscow is the town more indebted for its present size and flourishing condition than to Ex-Governor W. J. McConnell and J. H. Maguire. Moscow has twice furnished the successful candidate for governor of Idaho, and the first United States senator from Idaho, Hon. William J. McConnell, was Moscow's merchant prince.

The story of the Indian scare of 1877 and of the stockade in which the settlers took refuge is told in another chapter. Much interest has always centered about this fort, and many incidents are associated with its construction and occupation worthy of record in the annals of the time, but space does not permit the telling here. It is a pleasure to state that there were no tragedies connected with its history. G. W. Tomer says: "We fought the Indians to a finish without the loss of a man or the death of an Indian."

It is seldom that a town is more prosperous than was Moscow from 1885 to 1892. In 1885 the O. R. & N. railroad came and in 1890 the Northern Pacific. The period from 1890 to 1893 will long be remembered as the time during which Moscow reached the high water mark of prosperity. Everybody made money and everyone had money, and the volume of business transacted here was enormous. Among the great business enterprises which were rapidly building up fortunes for their owners at that time may be mentioned the elegantly furnished and palatial store of the McConnell-Maguire Company; the magnificent establishment of Dernham & Caufiann, carrying at that time a $100,000 stock, the largest amount of goods in any store in the Palouse or Potlatch country; the mammoth business of M. J. Shields & Company, which taxed to its utmost capacity their three-story brick, with its 160-foot frontage. This company was also the owner of the electric light plant, which lighted the city, the Moscow planing mill which gave employment to fifty skilled mechanics, and was, besides, interested in five large grain warehouses outside of Moscow. The Chicago Bargain House was an exclusive dry goods store, owned by George W. Creighton & Company, who had just moved into new and commodious quarters. The plant of the Moscow Mirror was at this time valued at $15,000. It gave employment to fourteen men and had in stock about three times as much printing material as is now needed to conduct the paper. It was then owned by Jolly Brothers, Elmer E. Jolly being the editor. Many other lesser business houses and corporations were flourishing, and all combined to make Moscow one of the wealthiest cities of the Northwest. But, as it is with individuals, so it is with cities, a truism, that prosperity is not a test of stability, and it was destined that Moscow should pass through the final and crucial test of adversity, crop failures and business depression, before it could be proven that the superstructure that had been reared was as solid and permanent as the foundation laid by the pioneers of the 'seventies. In the fall of 1893 a long continued wet season caused almost the entire loss of the wheat crop, and to make matters worse there was a complete demoralization of prices on all products. Wheat dropped from 85 cents to 50 cents per bushel, then down lower and lower, until it seemed to be a drug on the market. Debtors were absolutely unable to meet their obligations; the farmer had no money to pay his bills, the smaller concerns could not settle their accounts with the wholesale houses and money could not be borrowed, even though gilt-edged security was offered. A number of the Moscow business houses were driven to the wall, but the most far-reaching failure of all was that of its largest and most important establishment, the McConnell-Maguire Company, of which there is a full account in the previous chapter.

In 1894-5 wheat was quoted in Moscow as low as 23 cents per bushel, and it seemed as though universal bankruptcy was inevitable, but future events proved that the pendulum of adversity had reached the lowest point of its arc and was slowly but steadily swinging onward and upward to better prices and better times. Since 1896 crops have been abundant and prices fair and prosperity has returned in full measure. Along all lines there is now unusual activity, old debts have been cancelled, old scores straightened up, new business houses opened and old ones have enlarged their quarters. Moscow has truly proven that, unspoiled by prosperity, she can withstand the "slings and arrows" of adversity Nowhere in the Northwest can be found a more thriving city. It now has a population of about 5,000. Its location is favorable to its rapid growth and development, having a site that is both healthy and accessible to the surrounding country. The principal business center is on Main street. Standing at the north end of this principal street and looking southward, without having a definite knowledge of the population of the city, one would suppose, judging from the substantial brick business buildings in sight, that it might be a city of ten or fifteen thousand people.

Moscow has never suffered to any great extent from disastrous fire and flood. In June, 1890, a fire causing the loss of probably $10,000 visited the city, occurring on the 6th of the month. The fire started in the rear of Hamlin's building at nine o'clock, P. M., and destroyed Hamlin's hall, E. Mather's barber shop, F. Yengle's tailor shop, the butcher shop kept by C. H. Jones, the Morris building, occupied by the telephone office and the commission store occupied by H. Fallon, the photograph studio of H. Erickson and the J. W. Lieuallen grocery stock and building. These were all frame buildings and a more disastrous spread of the flames was averted only by the greatest effort. The water works system now in use had just been completed and to this fact alone the salvation of the business part of the town was due. The fire was supposed to be of incendiary origin.

Educational matters have from the first been given special consideration by the citizens of Moscow. In 1871 school district No. 5 was organized in compliance with a petition circulated by George W. Tomer. A history of the log school building first erected in this district has been given in another chapter. This building was located near the post-office of the old town of Paradise. After Moscow was named the first building used for school purposes was known as McDaniels' Hall. It was built in 1878 and was used for church gatherings, schools and public meetings of all character. In 1880 John Russell donated a piece of ground and the first city school building was erected on the site now occupied by the Russell school. It was not long, however, until the young and growing city found that this building was entirely too small, and about the first work of those interested in the welfare of Moscow was the planning and erection of a public school capable of accommodating the school children then residents of the village, making allowance also for a constantly growing population. A second building, accommodating 120 pupils, was erected in 1883, on a site in the northeast part of town, donated by Silas Imbler, one of Moscow's most beificent citizens. The site was and is centrally located, and was admirably suited to the convenience of the residents. In the meantime reports concerning the richness of the country and the productiveness of the soil began to go abroad, with the result that the country commenced to settle up rapidly, and Moscow began to take a leading place among the cities of northern Idaho. In 1889 the trustees of the public school found it necessary to secure additional accommodations. They immediately set to work, had plans prepared and soon the contract was let for the erection of the present Russell school. The cost of this structure was $16,000, and including all furnishings, the total cost was run up to $22,000. No pains were spared to make this not only a commodious but a modern school building. The furniture was all of the most modern and approved patern. The interior of the building was so arranged that each department could be reached with the least possible confusion. The different rooms are so located that each grade can depart from the building without coming into contact with the pupils from other departments. That this has been a successful arrangement is evidenced by the fact that the entire school, numbering over 400 pupils, can vacate the building in less than thirty seconds. Moscow continued to grow so rapidly that during the seven months of the last school term of 1892 the board was compelled to rent a church building and to utilize it for a school in which to place fifty pupils. It was supposed that this state of affairs could not continue longer than the end of the term, but on the reassembling of the school in the fall it was found that the same state of affairs existed, making it necessary for the trustees to secure another temporary building. A room was fitted up in a building afterward occupied as a photograph gallery on Main street, and was occupied during the winter of 1893-4 by one of the grades. In 1894 it was clearly seen that one of two things had to be done, either to overcrowd the present school room, making it impossible for teachers to work advantageously, or to purchase property and erect another building to serve the purpose of a high school. They chose the latter course, and having viewed various properties which were offered for a site for the new building, they eventually purchased a tract of land on Third street, for which was paid $4,000. The plans had already been prepared, and the contract for the building was let for $20,000, exclusive of furniture and heating apparatus. The high school building is of red brick, with stone foundation. It is fitted up with the most modern improvements, both for sanitary arrangements and ventilation. The heating apparatus is of the latest design and cost upwards of $3,000. Although the capacity of this school is 425 pupils, the old trouble confronted the trustees before the close of the year 1900. All buildings were crowded to their utmost. The enrollment for 1899 was 900. To provide further accommodations for the growing school population the Irving school was erected in 1901 The school buildings now in use in Moscow are the Russell school, built in 1888, the high school, built in 1892, and the Irving school, built in 1901. Besides these public school buildings, there is the Moscow Business College, under charge of Professor William Perkins: the state preparatory school and the University of Idaho. Teachers thus far employed for the coming school year are Miss Clara Wethered, Miss Amanda Moerder, Miss Whittmore, Miss Maude Mix, George Fields, Miss Cole, Mrs. Clyde, Mrs. Marcy, Miss Grant. Miss Dixon, Miss Ora Cooper, Miss Daisy Booth. Miss Ranch, Miss Whittworth, Miss Gillette and Miss Hammond. Moscow's school history is not complete without mentioning of the Moscow Academy, which was opened November 6, 1883, with an enrollment of 106 pupils. The first term was reasonably successful, but the town was not quite ready for a school of this grade, and after a second term it was discontinued.

There are nine church organziations in Moscow. The Baptists were organized in 1876 by Rev. Noah Lienallen, who was followed in the earlier days by Rev. S. E. Stearns and Rev. D. W. C. Britt. The Christians, organized in 1883 by Rev. D. B. Matheny, disbanded in 1885. This church was reorganized in 1888 by Rev. William McDonald and a church building was erected in 1891. The Swedish Lutherans were organized in 1886 by Rev. P. J. Carlson, and a house of worship erected in 1889. St. Marks Episcopal organization dates from 1888. Rev. Gill was the first minister, and the building now occupied was erected in 1892. In 1882 Father Teomitie organized the Roman Catholics, who erected a church building in 1886. In 1888 a church building was erected by the Norwegian Methodists, who were organized by Rev. Carl Erickson in 1886. The Presbyterian church was founded in Moscow in 1880. The first minister of this denomination was Rev. Paul Gamble. He was followed in 1883 by Rev. H. H. McMillan, during whose pastorate the present church building was erected. The Methodist Episcopals were organized in 1881 by Rev. Calvin M. Bryan. . The first Methodist church building was erected in 1883. This building was torn down and the present building erected in 1887. This building has proven too small for the accommodation of the growing congregation, and there is now in progress of erection a stone church which will cost, when completed, $25,000. Besides these, there are organizations of the Adventists and the Norwegian Lutheran.

The lodges of Moscow are: Knights Templar, Royal Arch Masons, Masonic Blue Lodge: Eastern Star, I. O. O. F., Elks, Knights of Pythias, Maccabees, M. W. A., W. of W., A. O. U. W., Rebekahs, G. A. R., Artisans, Foresters and Red Men.

At the head of Idaho's educational system stands the State University, located at Moscow. The institution is fortunate in that it combines the work of a state university proper with that of a school of agriculture and mechanic arts. Hence it is that the institution has been peculiarly prosperous, as its work appeals not alone to the classical student, but to the farmer, the professional man and the tradesman. The institution receives the direct support of the United States government from two funds, $25,000 annually from the Morrill fund and $15,000 annually from the Hatch fund, in addition to generous appropriations by the state legislature. New buildings are erected by the state as the growth and needs of the university furnish the occasion, and an ample provision and safeguard for the future is found in the 286,000 acres of public land set apart for the endowment of higher education in Idaho. Some of this land has been located in heavily timbered townships, and the moneys received from the sales of the timber are invested by the state for the benefit of the university. The land itself cannot be sold at less than $10 an acre, and the fund created by the sales of land constitutes an irreducible fund for the permanent endowment of university education in Idaho. In no state has this land endowment been more wisely conserved or more carefully administered, and this gives asurance that Idaho's university is presently to become one of the most potent forces in the educational circles in the West.

A movement having for its object the annexation of the "Panhandle" of Idaho to Washington is responsible for the location of the university. The needs and demands of this, the richest section of Idaho, had been ignored for many years, but when the annexation idea was projected Southern and Eastern Idaho became alarmed. As a result the legislature of 1888-9 passed a bill locating the university at Moscow and providing a building fund of about $65,000. This bill was approved by the governor January 30th, 1889. The original bill vested the government of the university in a board of nine regents appointed biennially by the governor for terms of two years. In 1889 the terms of regents were lengthened to six years and appointments were so arranged that one-third of the board should be renewed bi-ennially. By recent legislative enactment the number of regents was reduced from nine to five. October 3, 1892, the institution was opened to the reception of students. It opened in the unfurnished and unfinished wing of the main building, which stood in the midst of a plowed field. It had a faculty of but one professor and the president, and was without a book or piece of apparatus of any sort. It had not a student in the college grade, but about thirty students appeared to enter the preparatory school, some of whom had come long distances to enter the institution.

BUILDINGS OF THE IDAHO UNIVERSITY AT MOSCOW.

The act of 1889 for the establishment of the university provided:

"The college or department of arts shall embrace courses of instruction in mechanical, physical and natural sciences, with their application to the industrial arts, such as agriculture, mechanics, engineering, mining and metallurgy, manufactures, architecture and commerce: in such branches included in the college of letters as shall be necessary to a proper fitness of the pupils in the scientific and practical courses for their chosen pursuits; and as soon as the income of the university will allow, in such order as the wants of the public shall seem to require, the said courses in the sciences and their application to the practical arts shall be expanded into distinct colleges of the university, each with its own faculty and appropriate title. The college of letters shall be co-existent with the college of arts, and shall embrace a liberal course of instruction in languages, lierature and philosophy, together with such courses or parts of courses in the college of arts as the regents of the university shall prescribe."

In June, 1902, the regents, acting under this law, placed the organization of the university on a collegiate basis. The university now comprises: The college of letters and sciences, the college of agriculture, the school of applied science or school of mines, and the preparatory school. The faculty of each college or school is composed of the president of the university and professors, acting professors and assistants giving instructions therein.

The following courses are accordingly offered, leading to the corresponding degrees: In the College of Letters and Sciences—The classical course leads to the degree of Bachelor of Arts; the scientific course leads to the degree of Bachelor of Sciences; the course in music and the allied subjects leads to the degree of Bachelor of Music. In the College of Agriculture—The course in agriculture and horticulture leads to the degree of Bachelor of Science. In the School of Applied Science—The course in civil engineering leads to the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering, and the course in mining leads to the degree of Bachelor of Engineer of Mines. In the Preparatory School—the classical and scientific courses prepare for admission to the corresponding courses in the college; the English course prepares for admission to the College of Agriculture and the School of Applied Science.

The experimental station, operated under the Hatch act, has been a department of the university since 1892. The original idea was to conduct the experimental work on farms in different parts of the state. Three tracts of 160 acres each were secured by donations from citizens near Grangeville, near Nampa and near Idaho Falls. Later, at the suggestion of the national authorities, these were ordered abandoned by the regents in 1896. That year citizens of Moscow purchased a farm of 90 acres near the college, and donated it to the school for use as an experimental station. June, 1902, the regents adopted the policy of separating so far as possible the work of the experimental station and that of the colleges. It was decided to separate the duties of the president and director of the experimental station and appoint one of the officers of the station as director, which was done. A feature of the work of this portion of the institution is the conduct of farmers institutes in the different parts of the state. Publications are also issued covering the results of experiments and research, which give information of great valtue to the farmers and fruit raisers. Students of the college of agriculture do all the practical work on the farm and are paid for their services. The farm is equipped with barns, buildings and implements suitable for experimentation and instruction. In one building is a butter making room, a cheese room, a laboratory for testing milk, an engine room and cheese testing rooms. And in addition to these are store rooms for seeds, grains and vegetables. A model greenhouse, of glass and iron, 18 by 50 feet in size, is connected with the agriculture building.

The faculty of the university now consists of 14 professors, two associate professors, 11 instructors and two student assistants, or 29 in all, representing in their collegiate and university training 25 of the leading colleges and universities in the United States. The growth in the faculty has kept pace with the growth of the student body. From an enrollment of 30 in 1892 the number of students increased to 248 in 1897, and the enrollment for this year exceeds 400. In the present enrollment 14 counties of the state are represented by students and five other states have also sent pupils. The university alumni includes four graduates of 1896, five of 1897, eight of 1898, seven of 1899, ten of 1900 and 24 of 1901. It is worthy of note that 39 students of the university enlisted in the army during the Spanish war, a larger number in proportion to enrollment than of any other university in the United States.

The faculty of the university consists of the following: James Alexander MacLean, president, B. A., University of Toronto, and M. A. and Ph. D., Columbia; Louis Fourniquet Henderson, professor of botany, Ph. B., Cornell; John Merton Aldrich, professor of zoology and curator of museum, B. S. and M. S., South Dakota Agricultural College, and M. S., University of Kansas; John Edward Bonebright, professor of physics, B. S., Northwestern University; Alfred Stanley Miller, professor of mining and metallurgy, A. B. and A. M., Leland Stanford, Jr., University, E. M., School of Practical Engineering, San Francisco, Ph. D., Heidelberg University, Ohio; Fred A. Huntley, professor horticulture, B. S., Michigan Agricultural College; William W. Baden, professor of Greek and Latin, A. B. and Ph. D., Johns Hopkins, LL. B., University of Maryland; D'Arcy P. Parham, professor of English, M. A., Randolph-Macon, Va.; Jay G. Eldridge, professor of modern languages, B. A. and M. A., Yale; Charles A. Peters, professor of chemistry, B. S., Boston University, and Ph. D., Yale; Charles N. Little, professor of civil engineering, A. M., University of Nebraska, Ph. D., Yale; Isaac J. Cogswell, associate professor of music, B. M., Chicago Musical College; Nina A. Wilber, associate professor of oratory and physical culture, A. B., University of Michigan; W. S. Morley, A. B., College of Emporia, A. M., Princeton; Hal T. Beans, instructor in chemistry, B. Sc. and M. A., University of Nebraska; Miles F. Reed, principal preparatory department and instructor in pedagogy, B. S., University of Idaho; Sarah E. Poe, B. L., Wilbur College, Lewiston, Idaho; Florence P. Moore, instructor in mathematics and German, B. S. Northwestern University; Agatha J. Sonna, instructor in Latin and history, B. A., Wellesly; Mrs. M. E. Young, preceptress and director department of domestic science; Herbert T. Condon, B. S., University of Oregon, LL. B., University of Michigan, registrar and secretary of faculty; Margaret Bryan McCallie, librarian, B. S., University of Idaho.

The university is situated on an eminence overlooking the city of Moscow from the southwest and commanding one of the most attractive prospects of mountain and valley in the Palouse country. The situation is ideal for an educational institution. At an altitude of about 2,700 feet, the air of the locality is pure and invigorating and the climate is healthful. The winters are neither severely cold not prolonged; the climate is favorable to effective study. Students from higher altitudes, from dryer regions or from the more humid climate of the coast find the climate of Moscow agreeable and promotive of work. The university campus, comprising 20 acres, is crossed from the direction of the city by a winding driveway. The part of it in front of the university is devoted entirely to lawn; other parts are used for an athletic field and drill ground. The main or administration building is an attractive and commodious structure of three stories and high basement, finished in California redwood and native tamarack, supplied with artesian water and electric lights and heated by steam. It represents a cost of about $200,000. The school of mines is three stories high, built of brick, with a ground plan of 60 by 108 feet. One side of this building contains a mining laboratory, assay rooms, balance rooms, private laboratory and office for the department of mining and a museum, laboratory, lecture rooms, library and office for the department of geology; while the other half of the building is devoted to machine and wood working shops for the department of mechanic arts. In other rooms are the boilers and engines which supply power and heat to the building. The dormitory is a three-story brick with basement, finished according to the most approved plans. It contains two reception halls, 35 dormers, study halls, sewing rooms, gymnasium, a dining hall for 100 boarders, apartments for the preceptress, an infirmary and many other features conducive to the health and comfort of the young women. The building is heated by steam and electrically lighted. It has an abundance of baths and other conveniences. A wooden building 50 by 125 feet, known as the annex, is located about 100 feet behind the main building. It is used as the armory and for other purposes. East of the main building is the greenhouse. The library, including six departmental libraries, contains about 4,000 bound volumes and a number of pamphlets. The general library occupies a large and well lighted room on the first floor of the administration building and contains works in history, literature, philosophy, art, etc. About 50 of the leading periodicals of the United States and foreign countries are subscribed for and the newspapers of the state are donated and kept on file. The nucleus for the museum was the collection of Idaho minerals, etc., exhibited in the Idaho buildding at the World's fair in 1893. This was donated to the university at the close of the fair. The J. Rand Sanborn was purchased by the state for the university and there have been other important acquisitions, including Philippine articles presented by students who served in the army there. There are about 2,500 specimens in the mineral collection. The animal collection is a large one, and the museum also contains 175 species of birds. Under the act of congress providing the land grant for the university, military drill is required of all male students except juniors and seniors. Each cadet is required to provide himself with the prescribed uniform. The equipment of the cadet battalion includes 100 Springfield rifles, two field guns and ammunition and target materials furnished by the war department. Camp equipage is provided by the state. Efforts are made for an annual encampment, during which the instruction is entirely military and practical and the cadets are put through all the duties of camp life. The three cadets in the graduating class who have the highest grade of merit for the entire course are reported to the war department, where their names are recorded in the adjutant general's office and published in the Army register for that year. In making appointments to the regular or volunteer army from civil life preference is given to those who have their names so recorded.

Among the student organizations are the Alumni Association, which has an annual meeting and banquet commencement week; Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association, oratorical associations which participate in contests and debates with similar associations of other schools of Idaho and Washington; two literary societies, the Websterian and Amphictyon; an active athletic association, with departments devoted to football, baseball, tennis and track athletics, and the following musical organizations: Philharmonic Club, which renders monthly programs, the mandolin and guitar club, two glee clubs of men's and women's voices, and the university band and orchestra.

The university publications include the annual report of the regents to the governor, the annual catalogue, the annual report of the agricultural experiment station, frequent pamphlets and press bulletins from that station and the Farmers' Institute year book, the students' handbook, published by the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., and the Argonaut. The university Argonaut was established during the administration of President J. P. Blanton in 1898-9. At his suggestion a meeting of the student body was called and a committee was appointed to investigate the cost and to draw up a constitution and by-laws. The committee's report was adopted at the next meeting. Guy W. Wolfe, a senior, was elected editor-in-chief and business manager. The paper was named "The University Argonaut," and was published as a monthly. Mr. Wolfe is now a practicing attorney at Moscow. The next year the offices of editor and business manager were separated and Burton L. French and G. O. P. Mix were elected to the respective positions. They were both seniors; in fact, it has become almost an unwritten law to elect members of the senior class to these positions. Mr. French is now congressman from Idaho and Mr. Mix is a successful Moscow business man. In 1900-1 the paper was issued as a weekly, with Jesse L. Rains editor-in-chief and Claude W. Gibson business manager. Next year Henry M. Lancaster, editor-in-chief, and Fred H. McConnell, business manager, got out a twice-a-month edition. Miss Nellie B. Ireton was elected editor-in-chief for 1902-3 and John W. Shepperd business manager, and a weekly was issued. During the latter part of the year a change was made in the constitution, and the offices of associate editor and assistant business manager were created. Officers are elected in March of each year. The editor begins his duties immediately, but the business manager does not take up his work until the following fall under the new arrangement. The officers for 1903-4 are Benj. W. Oppenheim, editor-in-chief, and T. R. Jones, associate editor: J. Loyal Adkison, business manager, and Floyd D. Angel, assistant business manager. Besides these, the editor appoints a staff of four from the college to assist him. The paper is now established as a weekly and will probably continue as such. It will thus be the college newspaper. With the growing needs of the college a monthly magazine, under a separate staff, will be established, devoted to literary subjects exclusively.

The present board of regents of the university consists of President John B. Goode, of Rathdrum; Vice-President Mrs. Wm. H. Ridenbaugh, of Boise; Secretary George C. Parkinson, of Preston; Henry E. Wallace, of Caldwell; and George Chapin, of Idaho Falls. William L. Payne is treasurer. President Goode and Secretary Parkinson are the executive board. All are of high standing and wide knowledge and are laboring enthusiastically and earnestly toward the upbuilding of the institution. The university of Idaho was placed at the outset fairly and squarely upon four foundation piers, viz: Free tuition, sufficient material resources, severe educational requirements and a distinct ethical purpose, consequently the permanence of the state university is almost as well assured as the permanence of the state itself. The state university will live and grow and prosper because it ought to live and grow and prosper forever.

The present city officers of Moscow are: Mayor, J. C. Wolf; Clerk, H. H. Robinson; treasurer, Mrs. Emma Edmundson; police judge, John Craig; engineer, Benjamin E. Bush; councilmen, A. M. Anderson, R. D. Carter, W. O. Griffin.

In 1901 there were shipped from Moscow 759 cars of grain, 150 cars of hay, 56 cars of fruit, 20 cars of stock; total of 940 cars. The business interests of the city are represented by five dry goods stores, three hardwares, four drugs, thirteen groceries, three banks, two railroads, two jewelers, three liveries, four hotels, four newspapers, two harness shops, two bakeries, three meat markets, four implement houses, one cigar factory, three millinery stores, five grain warehouses, one steam laundry, one foundry, one gents' furnishing store, one shoe store, one furniture store, two planing mills, one flour mill, one saw mill, one hospital, electric light works, and waterworks.

The contract has been let for a new system of sewerage; a brickyard has just been established by Frank White and W. C. Laude, east of the Northern Pacific depot; articles of incorporation of the Interstate Co-operative Telephone Company have been filed, capital stock, $10,000; a bill has been introduced in the United States senate providing for an appropriation of $25,000 to be expended in the erection of a federal building at Moscow; a free delivery system has been established with three carriers; the postal receipts at Moscow for 1901 were $10,942.83.

Never in the history of Moscow has there been such a demand as now for business locations. For a year past there has scarcely been an available location to be had. The town's growth has reached a point where Main street will no longer suffice for its business needs, and side street locations are coming into demand. The prosperous condition of the town has brought substantial results and merchants are preparing to enlarge their stocks, while many new buildings are under consideration, some of them now in process of erection. This last fact is conclusive evidence of the substantial growth Moscow has experienced during the past three years. The demand for residence property is no less marked. Although building material was scarce, over one hundred new residences were built in 1902 and the first half of 1903.

Every city reflects the character of its citizens. If the latter are active, wide awake and full of public spirit it is pretty certain that the place in which they reside is progressive, enterprising and up-to-date. If the people of the city are concerned only with their individual private affairs, and are too selfish to give a thought to the welfare of the community as a whole, one is apt to find in that city stagnation, lack of enterprise and municipal lethargy. It is a fine public spirit that has made Moscow what it is today. No city thrives without this spirit and nothing can interfere with the growth of the city that possesses it. No city in Idaho has better prospects today than has Moscow. The sources from which it will draw its support in the future are next to inexhaustible; its citizens are progressive and united in their efforts to advance the general welfare; it is a city of homes, a city of schools, a city of churches, a city of wealth and refinement, and a city where commercial institutions are on a solid basis; it is a most desirable place of abode, either from a commercial, educational or social standpoint.

KENDRICK.

Kendrick, the metropolis of the Potlatch empire, is located on the Palouse branch of the Northern Pacific railway, at the junction of Bear creek and the Potlatch river, on the south boundary of Latah county, and in the center of the Potlatch district. With her strongest competitors,—Moscow, 25 miles northwest, and Lewiston, 30 miles southwest—Kendrick must remain for an indefinite period of time the metropolis of some of the finest agricultural, timber and mineral country in the northwest. In no country can a more enterprising class of people be found than those of the Potlatch. Between the citizens of the town and those of the country the best of feelings exist which harmonize all the plans that enter into the progress and welfare of the Potlatch empire in general. Scarcely had the outlines of the town that was destined to become the keystone of the Potlatch assumed shape ere the energy and enterprise that have characterized its existence were asserted by the building of roads to the various ridges. Today Kendrick's location, with roads leading in from all sides, might well be compared to the hub of a wheel that holds its position through the spokes. Each serves as an avenue of resource which year by year strengthens with the development of the country and contributes toward the healthy progress of the town.

With such a scope of fine agricultural land at her doors, which is the basis of all manufactures, the question of power, space and shipping facilities naturally comes up, and finds answer in the force of her position. Just above the town Bear creek, a beautiful stream of clear water, which has its source in the mountains, enters into Potlatch river. The Potlatch, with its numerous tributaries, taps valuable forests of timber. Fir, cedar, yellow and white pine timber tracts line the banks of both these streams. The current of the river is strong; the waters have about 30 feet fall in every 1,000 yards. Along the banks of the streams are many splendid sites for mills. In the corporate limits of the town the river has a fall of 38 feet for the 1,000 yards, which, with the body of water that runs continually the year round, would furnish power to operate a number of mills. With the expenditure of a little money the stream could be cleared sufficiently to drive logs down to mills where shipping facilities can be had over the Northern Pacific. With such a water power and with mill sites in abundance, Kendrick offers advantages to manufacturers superior to any town in the country. A flouring mill and a tannery are among the successful industrial enterprises established at Kendrick.

Another important and attractive feature of Kendrick's location is in respect to her superior advantages for maintaining a system of water works. With a gradual slope toward the west, the lay of the ground furnishes a perfect system of drainage and sewerage.

Kendrick has reason to be proud of her public schools and her houses of worship. The public schools are chief among the hopes and aspirations of the people and today her schools stand in the highest rank of the educational institutions of the state. The high standard that the public school has attained has been one of the potent factors in making Kendrick a town of homes. There are now 220 pupils enrolled in the public schools. The school property is valued at $5,000. The teachers include J. P. Barrackman, principal; Maud Brilhart, Arsella Emerson and Lucile Fisher, assistants. The school board consists of E. P. Atchison, A. P. Hamley and Rev. J. A. Hedges. There are four churches, each of which has an edifice. These include the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and United Brethren. The secret societies are well represented. The Odd Fellows have purchased a site and propose to erect a two-story brick building, the upper floor of which will be used by the order and the lower floor rented for store purposes. The subordinate lodge has about 75 members and the encampment about 30 members. The Rebekah lodge has 100 members and is the banner lodge of the state. The Masonic lodge has a large membership and is also discussing building.

The town was founded by Thomas Kirby, the first postmaster, in 1889, who named it Latah. In May, 1900, an arrangement was made that the Northern Pacific would build to the town, and on a guarantee that the road would be built there by January 1, 1891, Thomas Kirby gave the railroad a deed to one-half of the townsite of 240 acres. The town was then named Kendrick, in honor of the chief engineer of the Northern Pacific. May 8, 1890, the town was platted. October 15, 1890, the town was incorporated, with the following trustees: Thomas Kirby, J. M. Walker, N. C. Normoyle, Volley Nichols and N. Kaufman. Captain Walker was president of the Hardware & Implement Company, and one of the most progressive citizens; Mr. Normoyle was then proprietor of the St. Elmo hotel, Mr. Nichols was proprietor of the Pioneer city dray and is now at Nezperce; Mr. Kaufman is of the well known firm of Dernham & Kaufman, and is now manager of their large main store at Moscow. These practical business men held the reins of the city goverment and wisely guided its infant steps so that it has been kept free from debt in assuming premature improvements. The advantages of the location for a town were recognized by Mr. Kirby from the beginning, and he displayed his good judgment in his selection of associates to join with him in building the hub of the Potlatch. Aside from the officers of the Northern Pacific, his associates included G. E. Potter of Colfax, since deceased, G. Holbrook of Colfax, Hon. J. C. Lawrence of Waterville, W. White of Colfax, J. P. Vollmer of Lewiston, R. D. McConnell and James Grimes of Moscow. A board of trade was organized on the start. By midsummer of that year the town was in a prosperous condition. Building was going on apace and all lines of trade were represented. The railroad was pushed forward that winter and February 4, 1891, the first train reached Kendrick.

August 16, 1893, came the first big fire. It wiped out 31 business structures and caused a loss of about $100,000. The chief losers and the amounts of their losses follow, the second figures being insurance carried, if any: Advocate office, $3,000; M. C. Normoyle, $7,000, $2,000; L. D. Shattler, $1,000, $600; Joseph Jarred, $200: Wm. Crews, $300. $200; First National Bank, $6,000, $2,500; John Grimes, $2,000, $1,500; A. W. Taygard, $250; G. H. Sutherland, $1,500, $1,000; A. C. White, $4,500, $2,000; Hamley & Co., $2,500, $1,000; G. E. Porter, $1,000, $600; Hamlin & Co., $4,500, $4,300; McCrea Bros., $4,800, $3,500; J. F. Carlton, $1,000, $500; Lincoln Bros., $6,000, $4,500; C. H. Dodd & Co., $2,700, $1,000; J. M. Walker, $4,500, $2,500; J. R. Hall, $1,500, $500; Thos. Kirby, $5,000, $3,900; L. L. Crocker, $1,500, $1,000; C. Kall, $900, $400; W. A. Rothwell, $100; Dernham & Kaufman, $23,000, $20,000; M. S. Freeman, $2,000, $1,000; Jacobs & Toole, $200; Joseph Bryden, $800, $500; Dr. Justice, $100; J. H. Morris, $300; Martin Larson, $400, $300; Chetham, Baker & Co., $1,000, $800; C. A. French, $200; T. Atkinson, $300; Francis Labode, Jr., $1,800, $1,200. These figures are as given in an article in the North Idaho Star, August 19, 1892. Fire could not subdue the energy of the citizens and three months later nine substantial brick buildings had arose from the ashes. January 1893, was marked as the time when the electric light plant opened up for business. In the panic of 1893 the citizens redoubled their activities, determined that the future must be one of progress. An immigration bureau was organized to bring the advantages of the Potlatch country before homeseekers and investors. The fruit growers also organized the Potlatch Horticultural Association. The same indomitable spirit was evident when, in the spring of 1894, two fires, within a week, destroyed much valuable property, only to witness larger and better buildings rise in the stead of those wiped out. A fire this year will probably have a similar sequel. Kendrick is a pull-together town. There are no discordant elements and no legitimate enterprise there has ever gone begging for support. November 18, 1895, 750,000 acres of lands on the Nez Perces Indian reservation were thrown open to entry. Kendrick is one of the nearest railroad points to these lands and has profited greatly from the influx of settlers to that rich district and the bringing of the lands there under cultivation. In 1894 $27,000 was spent for fruit trees for the Potlatch country. In 1898 there were 300 acres of bearing orchards about Kendrick. That latter year the assessed valuation of property at Kendrick was $96,980 and the tax levy was eight mills. In 1898 one hundred and twenty-seven car-loads of fruit were shipped from Kendrick. This has more than doubled since.

The adaptability of the soil and climate to fruit raising has been taken advantage of. The elevation is lower than the Palouse country. High mountains to the north afford protection from the cold winds while the warm winds from the Columbia and Clearwater valleys are an advantage. Potlatch fruit is famous. Irrigation is unnecessary. The fruit from the Potlatch has won first prize at the Spokane interstate fair. At the world's fair at Chicago a medal and diploma were awarded John Hepler for the best exhibit of pomaceous fruits, eight varieties of apples free from blemishes and defects. Apples, prunes, cherries and the berry crop do especially well although all fruits give immense yields.

The soil is a rich black loam from eighteen inches to four feet deep, underlying which is a stratum of clay which keeps the moisture from seeping away. Corn does well, sorghum sugar cane and all vegetables thrive. Wheat yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre. One tract of 80 measured acres returned an average of 60 bushels per acre. Oats, barley, rye and flax return immense crops. Many have already made fortunes on the farms and orchards of the Potlatch country and the district has not begun to be developed. Rich mining and timbered districts to the east are also tributary to the town. A recent summary of the distribution of crops in the country tributary to Kendrick follows: Wheat acreage, 28,000; barley, 5,000 acres; oats, 5,000 acres; flax, 2,000 acres; corn, 1,000 acres; beans, 1,000 acres; other vegetables, 1,500 acres; apples, 3,316 acres; prunes, 684 acres; peaches, 185 acres; pears, 292 acres; grapes, 75 acres; plums, 92 acres; strawberries and other small fruits, 104 acres.

Naturally with such a rich tributary country the business institutions of the town are in a prosperous condition. One of the chief institutions is the flour mill, which comprises a plant valued at $30,000. It is owned and operated by the Vollmer-Clearwater Company and has a large output which finds a ready market. There is a bank, organized in 1890 by Capt. J. M. Walker and his son, R. M. Walker. It was first called the Bank of Kendrick and was run by them until July, 1892, when it was absorbed by the First National Bank of Kendrick, capital $50,000, organized under the national banking laws. F. N. Gilbert was president and Math Jacobs, cashier. The institution May 1, 1899, surrendered its charter, preferring to do business as a state bank and has since operated as the Kendrick State bank. Its officers are Math Jacobs, president; F. N. Gilbert, vice-president. A. Gordon, cashier and P. R. Jacobs, assistant cashier. H. P. Hull conducts a large general store, with complete lines such as are usually found in an interior department store. The telephone office is located in that store. Mr. Hull is also a notary public. There are two large hardware and implement stores, each of which is enjoying a large trade. One is conducted by the Lincoln Hardware & Implement Company and the other by McCrea Bros. & Company. D. J. Rowlands has a large general merchandise store. Hunter Brothers are the leading furniture dealers and have an undertaking establishment in connection. There are two large stores devoted to drygoods and clothing. One is run by Haizlep & Norman and the other by M. C. McGrew. Both carry large stocks and enjoy a prosperous and growing business. The hotel business of Kendrick is in the hands of Mrs. C. S. Miller. She has leases on both the Pacific and St. Elmo hotels. The Star restaurant is conducted by Mrs. Mamie Murphy. Hamley & Co., dealers in harness and saddles, carry one of the largest stocks in those lines of any store in Idaho. A large butcher shop is conducted by the Idaho Meat and Provision Company, of which J. M. Wild is proprietor. Other lines of business are represented as follows: Andrew Hill, dealer in fuel, ice and shingles, who operates a dray and express line; Kendrick livery stables, Charles Chandler, proprietor; William Hunter, blacksmith; Star barber shop, W. B. Crews, proprietor; A. W. Cobb, barber; Kendrick lumber yard, D. S. Hunter, proprietor, recently burned but will be rebuilt; The Palace meat market; Lorang & Wolhtmann, dealers in tobaccos and cigar manufacturers; The White drug store, C. A. White & Co., proprietors; A. P. Hamley, photographer; J. T. Moser, dentist; John Benjamin, livery and feed stables; L. A. Kerr, jewelry; Kendrick brick yard; Potlatch Land Company, real estate, G. W. Suppinger and H. E. Wessels, proprietors; C. M. Lukens, real estate, notary public and justice of the peace; Kendrick Realty Company, C. W. Suppinger, attorney-at-law; St. Elmo bar, O. E. Weymouth, proprietor. Large grain warehouses are owned by the Tacoma Grain Company and Kettenbach & Co., Ltd. There are two excellent papers. The Canyon Echo is owned and edited by E. E. Alderman. Mackintosh & Weber are owners and publishers of the Kendrick Gazette.

The present officers of the town are as follows: Mayor, J. I. Mitchem and J. S. Crocker, J. T. Bibb, H. P. Hull and H. N. Nelson, trustees; Miss Cora Crow, treasurer; Charles Weber, street commissioner; and D. B. Mackintosh, clerk. The salary of Postmaster Hamley has been recently increased from $1,000 to $1,100 per annum by reason of increased earnings of the office. Notice has been received that two free rural deliveries will be established this year running from Kendrick. The present year has been one of great growth and prosperity. New buildings to a considerable number have been erected. C. W. Van Pelt, proprietor of the Leland flour mills, is figuring on putting in a water power plant at a point a few miles up the Potlatch from Kendrick, where he will install electrical machinery and produce current to furnish light and electric power for Kendrick and neighboring towns. This industry will probably be the forerunner of many others which will make use of the abundant water power. In closing it is proper that mention should be made of the Kendrick Business Men's Association, to which great credit must be given for the past growth of the town and its territory and who are active, enthusiastic and determined to continue the good work. The officers of the association are, president, G. W. Suppinger; vice-president, M. C. McGrew; secretary, L. F. Hare; treasurer, A. W. Gordon. The executive committee consists of M. C. McGrew, L. F. Hare, H. P. Hull, T. A. Hunter and M. C. Normoyle. There are subcommittees on immigration, roads, mines and manufacturing, statistics, etc. With such an organization, with its commanding position with regard to the rich territory of which it is the center and trade metropolis, the future of Kendrick seems assuredly a prosperous one.

GENESEE.

Genesee, probably the greatest wheat market in the famous Palouse country, is located at the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railway, 113 miles southeast of Spokane. Built on a hill overlooking the Genesee valley, the "Garden Spot of the Palouse," it commands a view of the snowclad mountains of three states. Its location is healthful, natural drainage perfect, water abundant and of excellent quality. The population is 1,200 and is steadily growing. Most of its business blocks are substantial brick structures. It has excellent schools and churches, a city park, telephones locally and with long line connections and a franchise has been recently granted for an electric light plant. An active Chamber of Commerce looks after the material advancement of the city and under its stimulus street paving and other improvements are projected. There are excellent advantages offered for the starting of new enterprises such as a fruit cannery, straw board factory, paper mill, cracker factory and a starch factory.

The Genesee valley lies directly north of the Lewiston valley. Speaking of the naming of this beautiful little vale of Latah county, Idaho, John P. Vollmer, the Lewiston banker and merchant said: "During the summer of 1870, Alonzo Leland, later editor of the Lewiston Teller, a man named Stone, who was the O. R. & N. agent for their steamboat line, and myself went one day for a drive over the high prairie north of the Clearwater river. There was but one habitation in all that vast country then, Caldwell & Hall's cattle ranch at the summit of the Clearwater bluff. As we drove along we passed down Cow creek and through a sequestered little valley still in its natural state, Stone exclaimed: 'This reminds me of my old home, the Genesee valley in New York state.' The suggestion was made that we so name it and from that time on it bore that name. When Leland started his newspaper he always referred to this valley by the name of Genesee and so it became universally known by that appellation. Some time in 1871 Jacob Cambitch took a ranch on Cow creek, so that he may be termed the pioneer of Genesee.

"Settlement was slow until 1872 and in that year quite an immigration to this prairie country took place and the first large settlement was made. From that time on scores flocked to the 'Hog Heaven' country, as the country around Moscow was known in early days, and soon Nez Perces county north of the Clearwater numbered several hundred people. In 1875 —— Curtis started a town about a mile east of the present town of Genesee, which soon became a thriving village. Our company established the first general store there. Just who owned this townsite I do not remember, as it stood near the corner of four sections, but probably R. H. Beeman, James Hansen, John H. Evans and Mr. Curtis were the men. In 1886 A. M. Cannon, A. W. Newberry, Paul F. Mohr, myself and others organized the Spokane & Palouse Railway. That year the road was constructed to Belmont. Then it was pushed to Marshall Junction and in 1888 we built our terminus at Genesee. About the time we decided to extend the road to Genesee that townsite fell into the hands of Jacob Rosenstein whom, we thought, asked too much for right-of-way privileges and grounds. We naturally objected and the result was that I purchased a tract of forty acres from J. H. Evans a mile west of the old town and laid out the new town, calling it Genesee also. When the railroad came through, it stopped one mile west of the old town. This immediately broke up the old town and Jacob Rosentein headed the removal to the new town by moving his store over on wheels. Soon the old town was a relic of the past. Our company re-established our store in the new town, the railroad company built a roundhouse and laid out quite a yard system and the population of the town jumped to several hundred people within a comparatively short time."

Two pioneers of the old town not mentioned in the above, were A. Levi, who established a general store in 1878, and E. T. Platt who was the pioneer attorney and was also justice of the peace.

The first business structure in the present town was put up by J. S. Larabee, hardware dealer and the second by W. J. Herman, general merchandise. J. J. Owen moved a 16x24 frame house there from Moscow, which was the first shingle roof house in the town. William Brown with his own labor put up a building and opened the pioneer barber shop. C. F. Burr was the pioneer real estate dealer there and George Stelz the first building contractor. All are still residents of Genesee. The first school was established in the old town in 1879. D. Spurbeck, Mr. Markham and William Evans were the first board of directors and Mr. Dent was the teacher. The latter was paid $150 for teaching a three months' term. The town was incorporated October 23, 1889, with the following first trustees: J. C. Martin, W. C. Cox, W. J. Herman, J. J. Owen and E. S. Cameron. The metes and bounds description of the townsite is as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 14, in township 37, north of range 5 west of Boise meridian; thence running south 3,300 feet; thence west half a mile; thence north 530 feet; thence in a southwesterly direction 1,520 feet; thence north 1810 feet; thence east 140 feet; thence north 140 feet; thence east 1380 feet; thence north 1110.95 feet; thence east half a mile to place of beginning. The city's finances are and have ever been in first-class condition, and civic improvements have kept pace with the steady growth of the town. As a home city Genesee possesses many advantages. Climatic conditions are almost ideal. Its location is about 2,200 feet above sea level, but mountains in all directions keep out the storms and cold indigenous to less favored regions and at the same time render the air absolutely pure and wholesome. The population is mixed, consisting of large settlements of Germans, Scandinavians, Irish and native born Americans.

The public schools of Genesee are among the best in Idaho. There are 376 pupils enrolled. A large school house was built in May, 1891, to which an addition was made ten years later. Prof. Hattzell Cobb has been principal of the schools since 1894. His assistants are Miss Bessie Wilson of the grammar department; Mrs. C. Spurbeck, third grade; Mrs. Mary Cool, fourth grade; Miss Lulu French, fifth and six grades, and Miss Maud Burdick, primary department. The salaries paid are $92.50 per month to the principal, $55 in the grammar grade, $50 in the primary department and $47.50 in the grades. The total valuation of public school property is $7,000. A private school is also conducted by Sisters of the Catholic church. The University of Idaho and the normal school of that state and the Agricultural College of Washington are all within 30 miles of Genesee and readily accessible to those desiring the benefit of higher education. The Genesee schools are in charge of the following board: President, Dr. P. S. Beak; secretary, Herman Nebelsieck; William Smolt, Fred Nagel, George Mochel and Paul Cann. Genesee is also favored in the matter of church privileges. It has six church organizations, each of which owns its own edifice and whose congregations are active in religious work. The pulpits are filled by able men. These churches are the Catholic, Methodist Episcopal Church South, Christian, Congregational, Norwegian Lutheran and German Lutheran. Sunday schools and the various young peoples religious societies have good memberships. Fraternal and social organizations are well represented, there being prosperous lodges of the following orders: Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Maccabees, Red Men, Arcanum, Rathbone Sisters, Rebekahs, Ancient Order of Pyramids and Young Men's Institute. There is also a G. A. R. post with the following officers: P. C., J. J. Owen; S. V., Pat Ryan; J. V., George Daggett, and adjutant, J. E. Reed. There is also a Woman's Relief Corps. An excellent weekly newspaper, the News, has aided materially in the growth of the city. It was established in 1889. Charles Powers, the present editor, took charge in 1892. From a small beginning Mr. Powers has built up an excellent paper and has a first class equipment to handle all kinds of printing. The paper is Republican in politics.

Genesee derives its support from the rich agricultural and horticultural districts surrounding it. Its growth has been coincident with the development of these natural resources. The same appearance of thrift and prosperity which characterizes the town and its schools, churches, handsome residences and substantial business structures is apparent in a marked degree in the country. Nice farm buildings are the rule rather than the exception. The Genesee valley is embraced within the eastern part of the famous Palouse district and in extent and production easily takes first rank. The territory tributary to Genesee embraces a considerable area of the best lands on the Nez Perces Indian reservation. This is due to the topography of the country, a long, high hill on the north and deep river canyons to the east and south acting as natural barriers. The country is rolling but nearly all is capable of cultivation and of great fertility. The lands of Latah county produce enormous crops of wheat, oats, barley and flax and almost every variety of tree and small fruits. In the production of apples no section can excel this and few equal it. The trees bear regularly and are loaded with fruit. Size, color and flavor are perfect and make them in great demand for shipping. They find a ready demand in the markets of Montana and further east and at remunerative prices. All kinds of vegetables do equally well with the fruits and cereals. Dairying and poultry raising are sources of great revenue. Of late stock raising has been taken up and with such success that it is growing to be an important industry.

Natural rainfall is sufficient for all purposes. Little rain falls from June until September, but the spring rains have never failed to insure bountiful harvests. No crop failure has ever been known in the Genesee valley. The farmer expects 40 or more bushels of wheat to the acre as his right and is not disappointed. Sandy soil is unknown; so is waste land. The soil is a rich black loam of volcanic origin, lava mixed with clay, a combination which 30 years of severe trial has demonstrated to be of unrivalled productiveness and practically inexhaustible quality. It covers the country, a mantle of fertility from 18 inches to six feet in depth even to the tops of the highest hills. Every parcel of land for miles around can be cultivated and this without irrigation, as the great capacity of the soil for retaining moisture enables it to produce and mature enormous crops even in the dryest years. For all the diversified products of the surrounding country Genesee affords an excellent market. Through it, annually, 1,500,000 bushels of wheat, large quantities of hay, fruit and vegetables are shipped. To handle these shipments there are ten grain warehouses, one hay storage and one fruit warehouse.

Genesee has many business institutions, all of which have a prosperous and growing trade. Its two banks are among the leading financial institutions of the state. The First Bank, of which John P. Vollmer is president and P. W. McRoberts is cashier, has resources of $1,000,000 and was established in 1892. The Exchange National Bank, capital $25,000 and with $9,000 undivided profits, was organized in 1897. It has branches in Troy and Nez Perces, Idaho. E. J. Dyer, president of the Exchange National Bank of Spokane, is president of the institution and Thos. H. Brewer is the cashier. It owns the best safe in the state, a Corliss burglar proof, fitted with a Greenleaf time lock. Among the pay roll institutions of Genesee are two flour mills, a creamery, and the Genesee brewery. Follett & Knapp run one of the flour mills and report an excellent trade. The other mill, which has an elevator and two warehouses in connection, is owned by C. P. Porter and is conducted with ever increasing profit by E. C. Wood. The creamery since it was established a few years ago has enjoyed a profitable growth. There is a ready market for the product at good prices. The output is being gradually increased. The brewery is also most prosperous.

In addition to his interests in the First Bank and his ownership of several large warehouses at Genesee John P. Vollmer is the owner of the largest general merchandise store in the town. From the date of the organization of the town the store has kept pace with the growth of Genesee. The stock carried is a mammoth one. A local manager is in charge, Mr. Vollmer's residence being at Lewiston. He is of the wealthiest and most progressive citizens of Idaho and has diversified interests all over the state. W. J. Herman, the pioneer hardware and furniture dealer, in June, 1903, disposed of the hardware stock to H. A. Morgan, who is continuing the business as the Cash Hardware store. Mr. Herman retained his furniture business and carries a large and complete stock. Mr. Herman has always been prominently identified with the growth and development of the town since its incorporation and served one term as mayor. He recently erected a $5,000 business structure for use by his store. Another former mayor and pioneer business man is Jacob Rosenstein. He was postmaster of the old town in 1884-5 and moved to the new town when it was started. He has increased his stock steadily to keep up with growing business until today he has one of the largest stocks of general merchandise in Latah county. Alexander & Co. also have a large general merchandise stock. The business was established in 1892 with Joseph Alexander, of Lewiston, J. H. Gaffney and Edwin London as partners. They built a large iron store building which they occupied until 1896, when they were compelled to erect their present large two story brick building to accommodate their increased business. The iron building is used by the firm for storage purposes. In 1896 George H. Hobson bought out the business of the Genesee Mercantile Company, which he has since been conducting with much profit as the Bee Hive store. George Stelz, who started first in 1888 as a building contractor, has been conducting a large general merchandise store since 1893 on Main street. R. E. Follett, the pioneer harness maker, is still in business. He carries a large stock and still makes and repairs harness. There are two excellent drug stores. In one of the handsomest buildings in the town, Conant & Conant have a store which would be a credit to a city many times the size of Genesee. The other, the Pioneer Drug Store, was an institution of the old town, established by Cox & Hodgins, from whom T. Kennedy, the present manager, bought the business in 1888. The store carries a complete line of drugs and druggist sundries. Follett Bros., who have been in business many years, carry a complete line of groceries, confectionary and stationery. Driscoll & Thomas opened up in business in 1898, buying out the Bressler & Scroggins hardware stock and have met with great success. George Jamieson, who built the first blacksmith shop in the old town, is in the same business in the new city. Another pioneer is Henry Nebelsieck, a tailor who is still in business. He is secretary of the school board. The leading hotels of the city are the Genesee house, conducted by Q. F. Surby, which caters particularly to the traveling trade, and the Grand Central hotel, run by F. A. Robinson. Both supply comfortable lodging and excellent meals. Other prosperous business enterprises include the following: The Fair, F. A. Marquardsen, proprietor; Cash Bargain store, Quillen & Co., proprietors; John Meyer, dealer in farm implements; T. Driscoll, dealer in barbed wire, etc.; James K. Bell, hardware, harness, implements, etc.; City meat market, Fred Nagel, proprietor; Miss E. E. Borg & Co., millinery; William Smolt, cigar factory and dealer in cigars and tobacco; W. L. Biram, drayman; William Hickman, livery barn; George Stelz, undertaker; George L. Mochel, livery barn; Home bakery, Kemp & Stadler, blacksmith; Rees Pickering, real estate and insurance; Genesee bakery and restaurant, William Brown, barber shop; Clarence Jain, barber; Star and Monarch saloons. The professional field is well represented. Among the physicians are Dr. R. S. Beck, the former mayor; Dr. H. J. Smith, Dr. W. H. Ehlen, Dr. J. L. Conant, Jr., and Dr. W. C. Cox. The dentists include Dr. C. A. Follet and Dr. J. L. Hayes. Among the attorneys are Hans Bugge, who makes a specialty of land office practice and who is secretary of the chamber of commerce, and P. W. McRoberts.

The present town board consists of the following: Mayor, Dr. J. L. Conant, J. K. Bell, C. E. Wood, W. M. Thompson, D. Scharnhorst; clerk, C. F. Burr, who is also justice of the peace, and treasurer, F. A. Bressler, who is vice president of the Exchange National Bank. Among the postmasters of the town have been E. R. Wiswell, who was succeeded in 1897 by J. J. Owen, who held the office until recently. Mrs. Owen is now postmistress.

The future of Genesee appears bright. Conditions which have brought it up from a small village to a thriving prosperous town will continue to all to its growth and importance. With the greater development of its tributary territory will come a corresponding increase in its size, its business and its importance.

TROY.

Fifteen years ago the present town site of Troy was known as Huff's Gulch. It was a deep, dark canyon, so densely covered with forest growths that the sun's rays only penetrated to the net work of underbrush in occasional spots. Only the feet of the venturesome hunter or those of his prowling foe had ever trod the winding trails of the canyon or clambered up its rocky slopes. As soon would one have thought of building a town on the precipitous sides of the Rocky Mountains as in this dismal, inaccessible canyon. But towns are not always built in the fittest, most desirable locations. The new town sprang into existence in 1890, under the name of Vollmer, called for John P. Vollmer, who was instrumental in bringing the Northern Pacific railroad through the Palouse country to Lewiston.

In July, 1890, A. T. Spottswood, Fred Veach, I. C. Hattabaugh and H. Hamlin, of Moscow, knowing that the railroad ran down Huff's gulch and realizing that there would be need of a supply point at this distance from Moscow, purchased from J. W. Seat the quarter section of land on which the town is now situated and in the fall of the same year formed a townsite company and platted the town. Later J. W. Seat and John P. Vollmer became interested in the company. Spottswood and Veach erected the first store building, leasing the same to W. H. Smith for two years at fifty dollars per month. Mr. Smith at once put in a stock of general merchandise. J. W. Seat built a sawmill and also a store building, became postmaster in 1891, and the history of Vollmer began.

Vollmer was incorporated April 19, 1892, and the following citizens were appointed trustees: S. A. Anderson, A. H. Charles, P. J. Scallon, F. H. Finsen, L. Moore. A description of the original townsite is as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of the south half of the northwest quarter of section seven; thence running east on a line between the north half and the south half of the northwest quarter of section seven, 250 feet to a point where said line intersects with the center of Chesnut street; thence southeast on a line through the center of said street to a point where the center of said street intersects the center of Eighth avenue; thence southwest to a point where said avenue intersects with the line between the south half and the north half of the southwest quarter of section seven; thence west on said line to the southwest corner of the north half of the southwest quarter of section seven; thence north on township line to place of beginning, as per recorded plat of the Town of Vollmer; and also beginning at the northeast corner of lot four in section seven, thence running south 40 rods on a line between the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section seven; thence west 80 rods on a line between the south half and the north half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section seven, thence north 40 rods on township line to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section seven; thence east 80 rods on a line between the northwest quarter and southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section seven to point of beginning, being part of Daniels addition to Vollmer, all of the above described land being in township thirty-nine north, range three west of the Boise meridian.

At an election held September 6, 1897, to change the name the result was as follows: For the name "Troy" 29 votes, for the name "Vollmer" 9 votes. It appearing that the name Troy received a two-thirds vote, the Board of Commissioners on Sept. 13, 1897, ordered that the name of the corporation be changed from the "Town or Village of Vollmer" to the "Town or Village of Troy."

The present board of trustees consists of O. A. Johnson, Olaf Olson, chairman, William Duthie, E. E. Jolly, F. H. Christie, B. S. Nelson, clerk, August Johnson, treasurer.

Among the pioneer merchants who, realizing the rich and varied resources of the country surrounding the town and the bright prospects in store for it, invested their money in goods and opened stores of general merchandise, were: W. H. Smith, who started the first store in 1891; T. H. Christie, who built and opened the second store in 1892, and O. A. Johnson, whose business was established in 1893. It was probably about this time that Vollmer of the M. & M. Co. instituted the saw mill which was recently sold to Watt & Bussong of Sprague, Washington. Two saw mills were erected in 1892 by J. W. Seats and Vincent & Boe, both on the creek out of the town. Even in these early days the public spirit of the town was indicated by the sustaining of two vigorous newspapers, both Republican in politics. The Vedette, edited by T. E. Edmondson, was established in 1891. The Vollmer News, now known as the Troy News, began publication in 1894, Charles Moody, editor. He was followed in succession by J. C. Peterson, A. G. Greer, John E. Hoffman and J. C. Peterson. The present editor and owner is B. S. Nelson.

The pioneer school house was built in 1893. It is now a prosperous institution with an enrollment of 190 pupils. The school board consists of T. H. Christie, Olaf Olson and Mr. Greenstreet. Three teachers are employed at present, viz: Prof. T. O. Green, principal, Miss Antoinette Halverson, intermediate department, at a salary of $45.00 per month, and Miss Alta Cole, primary department at a salary of $45.00 per month. The school grounds are located in section thirty-one which belongs to the State University. An addition is promised to the school building this summer. The property is valued at $1,800.

On February 1, 1893, a serious fire occurred at Troy, involving a total loss of $24,000. Lieuallen & Lestoe's loss alone footed $10,000 on which there was some insurance. Erickson & Company's loss on their building was $10,000.

Again on a Saturday night early in June, 1893, Troy was visited by another disastrous fire. Starting in the drug store of C. W. Vail, it was soon beyond control of the firemen. Everything in the block was burned with the exception of the Vollmer Milling and Mercantile Company's store, which was saved by the great efforts of the fire department, whose equipment consisted of an old fashioned engine operated by eight men and with which water was pumped from the creek some distance away. Losses sustained were as follows: C. W. Vail, $2,600; Johnson Lumber Mill Company, $300; H. E. Jacobson, $700; Dr. Butler, $250. Buildings and goods were partly insured. The block was soon rebuilt and business resumed by former occupants.

A little over a year ago, this thriving little village had less than 300 inhabitants. Today it boasts a population of 500 and is building up rapidly, a number of new houses being now in course of construction.

Troy rejoices in an equable climate, experiencing no extremes of heat or cold. Situated about 12 miles from Moscow, on the Spokane-Lewiston branch of the Northern Pacific railroad. Troy comes within the famed agricultural territory of the Palouse country whose rich soil of black loam, ranging in depth from one to six feet, yields bountiful productions of grains of all kinds and fruits of all varieties, for which is found good market, both at Moscow and in the mining camps of the Cedar mountains. What are known as the "Canyon lands" contain valuable timber, pine, fir, cedar and tamarack. On these lands, too rough for cultivation stock graze for several months in the year without other feed or care.

The present business directory of the city includes: L. D. Strahl, J. P. Vollmer, T. H. Christie and O. A. Johnson, who conduct stores of general merchandise; C. A. Sullivan and Reitman, meat markets; confectioners and cigar store; Miss Anna Kuntzer, milliner; Jno. H. Bolton and O. Olson, hardware; Mr. Olson is also postmaster; drug store, Dr. Nest and Alex Charles; the Troy Boarding House, Jno. Peterson, proprietor; and Hotel Reitman; jewelry stores, J. F. Knott and Eric Anderson; blacksmiths, John Simpkins and B. J. Strickling; livery stable, Shepherd & Stoops; two barbers, Hays Brothers and A. F. Hegge; Dr. Olson, physician; Scott Ogden, attorney-at-law. There is a local and long distance telephone exchange; a water system is under discussion. The Bank of Troy has a capital of $25,000, E. J. Dyer, president; Fred K. Bressler, vice-president; Thos. H. Brewer, cashier. It was established March 1, 1891. Scott Bergen is engaged in the real estate and insurance business, as are also Alex Olson and Ogden & Greear. M. Bergerson and W. C. Reitman are interested in buildings and lots, owning considerable property. J. A. Bjorklund deals in farm implements; E. E. Cooper sells flour, feed, wood and posts; there are four warehouses for grain storage, owned by Jolly Bros., Tacoma Granite Co., W. C. Reitman and William Duthy. A cold storage plant accommodates farmers in storing their fruit; the Jacobson Mill began cutting lumber in April of this year; D. A. Wood owns a saw mill. The steam roller process flour mill, owned by J. D. Jolly & Co., is of great advantage to the town and convenience to the farmers, as an immense amount of grain is milled here and shipped out as flour. It has a capacity of 40 barrels per day. The mill is located at the forks of Bear creek, just below town. Lodges and churches are exceptionally well represented in this place, there being three churches, the Swedish Lutheran, the Methodist and Christian, and six lodges: the I. O. O. F., K. of P., W. of W., M. W. A., Yeoman, and Women of Woodcraft, all of which have a good membership.

Centrally located, the headquarters and nearest supply point for the white pine belt which extends across the famous Potlatch-St. Mary's region to the St. Joe river, Troy will soon out-class many of the larger and older towns of the Palouse country.

JULIAETTA.

Juliaetta is a thriving town of about 500 population on the Spokane and Lewiston branch of the Northern Pacific railway, about 20 miles from Lewiston. It is beautifully situated on the banks of the Potlatch river amid the wooded hills, which add to its healthfulness and picturesqueness. It receives its support from a wide range of excellent agricultural lands, on which large crops of wheat, oats, flax, hay and fruit are raised each year. The town was founded and platted by R. Schupfer, who in 1878 filed on a quarter section of land there. The home he built in the improvement of his farm is about one-quarter of a mile from the present business center of town. In 1882 Mr. Schupfer opened the first general merchandise store. Charles Snyder, a pioneer rancher in that vicinity, succeeded in having a postoffice established on his farm, which he named Juliaetta, in honor of his daughters, Julia and Etta Snyder. Later, when Mr. Snyder moved his store and postoffice to the present town the name Juliaetta attached to the village. Later Mr. Snyder built the first hotel there, the Snyder house, which is now known as the Grand Central. In 1885 N. B. Holbrook, attracted by the excellent water power, established the pioneer flour mill. It is still in operation by Mr. Holbrook and his son and the product is shipped as far as Portland and San Francisco. In early days the only transportation was by stage to Moscow. In the winter of 1890-91 the railroad reached Juliaetta. John P. Vollmer and Chief Engineer Hansen of the road were given a half interest in the townsite for bringing the railroad. The grade between Juliaetta and Troy is 160 feet to the mile. With the advent of the iron horse the village began to take on size and importance.

April 19, 1892, the town was incorporated with the following trustees: Charles Snyder, Jr., Rupert Schupfer, H. Nichols, T. R. Carithers and F. P. Zeigler. The description of the townsite follows: Beginning at the point where the south line of section 9, township 37, north range 3 west of Boise meridian intersects the big Potlatch river; thence running in a northeasterly direction along the county line to where said county line intersects the middle line of section 34, township 38, north range 3 west of Boise meridian; thence north to the center of said section; thence west one mile; thence south one-half mile; thence west one-half mile; thence south one-half mile, thence east one-half mile; thence south one-half mile; thence east one-fourth mile; thence south one mile; thence east to place of beginning. Lately an addition of 40 acres has been made to the townsite under the name of Vineland.

The first school was a frame structure called Harmony hall. It was built in 1885 right on the banks of the river. January 10, 1900, when warm rains and a Chinook wind brought on a freshet, the school was washed away. That same high water washed out a number of bridges along the stream, carried away the mill dam and did great damage to the railroad grade. Last year a fine new school house was erected at a cost of $3,000. The present enrollment of pupils is about 130, but this number is expected to be increased to 175 by fall. This will require the construction of an addition of two rooms to the building. The school board consists of: President, N. B. Holbrook; secretary, H. N. Smith, and treasurer, F. J. Fox. Mrs. Mattie E. Headington, formerly county superintendent, is in charge of the schools. The other teachers are Miss Flora Waite and Miss Sophia Schupfer. Four churches are represented in the town. The Catholic and Presbyterian congregations own neat structures. Services are also regularly held by pastors of the German Lutheran and United Brethren denominations. Secret societies and fraternal orders are represented by lodges of Masons, Odd Fellows, Rebekahs, Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World and Star of Bethlehem.

The abundant water power of the Potlatch river is used to some extent. The stream there flows swiftly in a narrow channel, affording easily developed power for all demands which may be placed upon it by future industrial enterprises. The Holbrook flour mill, where is manufactured the celebrated brand of flour, "Pride of the Potlatch," is operated by power derived from the stream. A new sawmill has just started up at a location three miles above the town on the river. The lumber yard, which will have a capacity of 1,000,000 feet, will be on Main street in the town. The entire output of this mill for some time to come will be required to meet the demand in Juliaetta and vicinity, caused by the construction of many new buildings. A brickyard is also in operation and finds a ready market for its product. Seven wagon roads run from Juliaetta up the hills to the farming ridges surrounding the town. There are four grain warehouses. One of these is at the flour mill. Lawrence & Porter, grain buyers and bankers, own the others. One of them is situated at the top of the hill on the edge of the grain growing plateau. This is connected with an elevator on the town level by an aerial tramway for lowering the grain. This same firm conducts a private banking business. There are two excellent and prosperous general merchandise stores in the town, conducted, respectively, by Fox & Debaum and by Kite & Shull. Both carry large stocks. J. G. Redberg has a large store devoted to hardware, stoves and implements. H. G. Schabbel has a well supplied furniture stock. Other stores and business men include the following: U. G. Marsh, who was postmaster in 1885-86, druggist; B. N. Trout, dry goods and notions; J. L. Whitted, barber; Trout & Roberts, painters and paper hangers; Star Meat market, wholesale and retail, W. C. Joslin, manager; I. X. L. Stables, S. T. Dunlap, proprietor; B. F. Bowers, shoes and millinery; Henry Kennedy, blacksmith; Dr. G. A. McKay, optician; T. J. Stephens, blacksmith; E. Mertha, meat market; Dr. J. C. Waite, physician; Dunlap & McKay, real estate. There are two excellent hotels, the pioneer hostelry, the Grand Central, conducted by Mrs. Wm. Kalke, and the Palace hotel, occupying a new brick structure, and run by Taylor & Fox. The town boasts of a first class weekly newspaper. It is Republican in politics. The publication was started Feb. 5, 1903, as the Register by D. T. McMackintosh and H. W. Weber, of Kendrick. Under the management of W. A. Turner, local editor, a bright, readable publication is being issued and is helping wonderfully in attracting people to the town and developing its resources.

Juliaetta has every reason to expect a bright future. With the development of the agricultural and horticultural regions surrounding it the town is sure to grow. The semi-tropical climate makes possible the cultivation of vineyards, a field which promises great development. The pioneer vineyardist is realizing an annual income of from $2,000 to $2,500 from four acres. All the cereals and all the fruits of the temperate zone yield abundantly. Almonds are raised with success. Irrigation is not needed. The present town trustees are Chairman E. W. Porter, S. T. Dunlap, Daniel McGlinn, John Whitted and J. G. Rheberg. B. N. Trout is clerk. Mr. Dunlap is also justice of the peace. The town officials are active in assisting the upbuilding of the town. At a recent session an ordinance was passed providing for the establishing and maintenance of a water system, for which a company has asked a 50 years' franchise.

CHAPTER IV.

DESCRIPTIVE.

—" 'Tis the land that lies
'Neath the summer skies
In the heart of the happy hills."

The hills of the Palouse have a charm for all who see them in their glory of grain and hay fields; of groves and orchards sloping up their sides or outlined against the sky on their rounded tops; of villages and cities with their terraced and shaded lawns and beautiful homes. There is no land where the summer sun paints and decks more lavishly than in this well favored country. Latah county lies in the southeastern portion of what is known as the Palouse country. Its northern half is drained by the Palouse river and its tributaries, the main stream rising in Township 42, range 2 west of Boise meridian. The South Palouse river also rises in Latah county a few miles northeast of Moscow. This and Paradise creek are the principal streams which, with their confluent branches, drain what is known as Paradise valley. The streams of the Genesee valley are Cow creek, Thorn creek and the sources of the Little Potlatch, the two former flowing south and west into the Snake river, and the latter flowing southwest to a junction with the main Potlatch. The main stream of the Potlatch country is the Potlatch river, the east and west forks of which rise in the eastern part of the county. Tributaries of this river from the north are Little Potlatch, Middle Potlatch, Bear creek, Pine creek, Hog Heaven creek and smaller streams; from the east Cedar creek, Elder creek and Ruby creek. The area of Latah county is 1,080 square miles. It lies between parallels 46½ and 47 north latitude, the 47th parallel intersecting its irregular northern boundary. The 117th meridian of longitude west of Greenwich passes east of Moscow. About one-third of the county on the east, northeast and north is very heavily timbered with white and yellow pine, cedar, fir and tamarack. Within the county limits the Potlatch Lumber Company owns 42,674 acres of deeded timber lands and 39,480 acres of timber purchased from the state, from which the company is allowed twenty years to remove the timber. These 82,154 acres have been valued this year for assessment at $251,000. Outside the holdings of this company, the remainder of the lands of the county both timbered and agricultural, are owned mostly by resident occupants, either as unimproved homesteads or timber claims or as improved farms and stock ranches. In many parts of the county are valuable mineral deposits. In another portion of this work will be found the early and late mining history of the county. That these mines will some day be worked with profit there is no doubt. At the present time transportation facilities are lacking in some locations, in other localities improved methods and machinery are needed and in all sections there is a lack of capital that will some day be supplied, and when that time comes mining will become one of the leading industries of Latah county.

The mean annual precipitation, rain and melted snow, ranges from twenty-five to thirty inches, according to elevation and proximity to the mountains. With this precipitation distributed to every month of the year crops seldom suffer from lack of moisture. While there is only a slight precipitation during July, August and September, cultivated crops will thrive and grain crops do not suffer.

The mean temperature of summer is not too high for comfort and yet is high enough to bring a rapid development in all farm crops adapted to this region. Severe thunder storms, cyclones and tornadoes are unknown. Severe wind storms seldom occur and are never known to have done any considerable damage to property. Extremes of heat and cold are unknown. The soil does not freeze to any considerable depth in the fields. Vegetables, such as carrots, potatoes and parsnips, remain in the ground all winter with little danger of injury from frost. Snow falls to the depth of six to fifteen inches; but seldom remains more than four weeks, except in the higher and timbered portions of the country where the inhabitants enjoy several weeks of good sleighing each winter. Plowing and seeding is often continued in the farming sections until Christmas, and again taken up in February and March for spring crops.

The winters are tempered by the chinook winds, and settlers rely more upon these winds in the spring than upon the rains to precipitate the snows from the higher altitudes and take the frost from the soil. We have been fortunate in securing from the weather bureau at Portland a scientific explanation of the Chinook winds, which we reproduce as follows:

The term "Chinook wind" had its origin from the tribe of Chinook Indians (now almost extinct, but which was very strong and powerful some sixty to seventy-five years ago), that had its home in the southwestern portion of Washington, on the Columbia river. Local historians relate how the northwest wind in the winter season, being the harbinger of fair weather, was called by the trappers at Astoria "the wind from over Chinook camp."

As the trappers scattered to the east of the Cascades, they occasionally encountered a warm southerly wind which gradually assumed the name of Chinook wind. It was so named from its mildness, resembling to an extent the mild, balmy wind from over Chinook camp. As the trappers spread over the northwestern portion of the United States, the warm southerly wind of winter continued to be called by them "Chinook wind," until the term becoming common, was finally accepted by meteorologists.

The term was first used, so far as is disclosed by research among the files of the Monthly Weather Review, published by the U. S. Meteorological Service, Washington, D. C., in connection with the warm, south, southwest, west, northwest and sometimes north, winds in Montana.

To the earlier extension of the military telegraph lines in Montana than in Washington and Oregon, is due the fact that the term Chinook was first applied to the warm winds of Montana. The operators or observers employed on these telegraph lines used the local common name applied to the wind by the stockmen in their reports.

The name was thus first applied to the wind in Montana, and yet to a large extent some meteorologists are of the opinion that the Chinook winds are only east of the Rocky Mountains, and the name is erroneously applied to warm southerly winds in winter to the west of the Rocky Mountains.

As the term had its origin west of the Rocky Mountains, really to the west of the Cascades, the writer maintains that the term "Chinook wind" can be and is properly applied to the warm southerly winds of winter west of the Rocky and Cascade Mountains. The Chinook is more readily observed in Montana and to the north thereof, due to the preceding low temperature and the rapid and marked rise produced by the Chinook, though marked rises in temperature west of the Rocky and west of the Cascade Mountains are frequently observed. In the American Meteorological Journal, Vol. 3, p. 469, is to be found the following definition of a Chinook: "Warm, dry, westerly, or northerly winds, occurring on the eastern slopes of the mountains of the Northwest, beginning at any hour of the day, and continuing from a few hours to several days." This definition is perfectly correct so far as it goes; but the writer's idea of the definition of a Chinook is: A warm, dry, or moist wind from the southeast, south, or southwest, west of the Rocky Mountains, and from the southwest, west, or northwest, to the east of the Rocky Mountains, beginning at any hour of the day or night, and continuing from a few hours to several days. Such definition is more in accord with the causes which produce these warm winds and agrees with the original application of the term as understood by those who originated or created it.

Chinook winds, according to the writer's definition of the term, only occur under one kind of atmospheric condition, and without this connection Chinooks are impossible.

Preceding a Chinook, by from two to six days, an area of low barometric pressure is along the Washington and Oregon coast, and an area of high barometric pressure overlies Montana and the British provinces to the north. This area of high pressure has low temperatures, from 10 to 20 degrees below zero. The position of these two opposite atmospheric conditions produces north to east winds over Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, and the temperature decreases and snow falls to the east of the Cascades, extending over Idaho and Montana, and sometimes to the west of the Cascades. At the end of about three days the high pressure moves southeastward to the Northern Mississippi Valley, thence to the Great Lakes and on eastward. When the high pressure begins to move, the low pressure along the coast advances northward to about the 50th degree north latitude; thence along that parallel, or near to it, across British Columbia and Saskatchewan; thence towards the Great Lakes. Coincident with the northward movement of the low pressure along the coast, there appears along the Central California Coast an area of high pressure which rapidly increases in density and moves east and northeastward to Northeastern Nevada, Northern Utah, and Southern Idaho, where it becomes central by the time the low pressure is moving eastward over British Columbia. The low pressure on the north and its passage eastward causes the air to move from the high, central about Salt Lake, to the low. These are the conditions from which a Chinook results.

Many persons, residents of the country affected by Chinook winds, are of the opinion that they come from the warmth of the Japan Gulf currents, but such is not the case. Chinooks are not warm winds from the ocean, but are formed according to the writer's idea, in the manner outlined above.

Situated as Latah county is, almost at the foot of the magnificent Coeur d'Alene mountains, nature seems to have made of the whole section of the country of which it is a part a veritable earthly paradise, for here the breezes from the mountains sweep across the hills, bringing in their embrace an invigorating tonic that gives renewed energy and a wealth of health to all animal life and to plant life as well.

In soil as well as in climate Latah county has much to contribute to the natural resources of the northwest. The study of the soil of the county is of rare interest to both student and agriculturist. The Latah county hills and valleys are different from those seen anywhere else in this country. The hills are gradual in ascent, with the tops gently rounded. There is nothing abrupt or bluffy about them. Another strange fact is that the hilltops are richer than the valleys. The Palouse country appears to have been formed by the wind or, as it may be termed, the æolian process of nature. This is where the entire country, hills and valleys, is formed by the wind carrying particles and depositing them. Aeolian is sometimes very fine, sometimes course, but in the same section it is always of the same fineness. The particles of dust being carried forward by the wind, the heaviest naturally fall first. It is in this way that the desert sections are formed. The finer particles of dust may be carried hundreds of miles further than the coarser ones, and when they are deposited, make rich and practically inexhaustible soil. This is the nature of the soil in Latah county. It is, as all know who have closely examined it, very fine, very soft and absolutely free from grit. Another reason for believing that the soil here is of wind formation is this: In a country formed by the action of water the hills will often have a hollow on top, which is sometimes filled with water. Examples of these hill-top lakes are quite common in the west. There is only one other place in the world where there is a soil similar to that of the Palouse country, and that is in northern China in the provinces of Shanshi and Shenshi, which lie to the west of Pekin. The soil of China is remarkably fertile, and although it has been cultivated and cropped for over four thousand years, it remains to this day unchanged. Scientists who have carefully studied the problem, basing their estimates on the extent, durability and productiveness of the soil, say that fully one hundred times as many people can be well and comfortably supported in the Palouse country as now live here. Another characteristic of the soil of Latah county is the small amount of rainfall needed to grow and mature crops. This is due to the compositon of the soil. It is a volcanic ash having the peculiar property of tenaciously holding moisture and giving it up as needed by vegetation during the growing season. The rolling lands of the county furnish ideal conditons for drainage and yet the soil does not erode or wash as in those sections where it is composed of drift. After a rain in Latah county the farmer does not go out to see how long and deep are the "gullies" down the hillsides of his fields of growing grain.

Scientists have not explained to us how the ancient winds formed these hills nor shall we attempt to inform the reader. We know the mountain ranges were thrown up by subterranean disturbances and that the level plains and many of the level valleys were smoothed out by the action of mighty glaciers from the north; but of the action of the winds that rounded the hills of the Palouse country we can only speculate, and in the light of common knowledge that a straight wind would not likely perform such a wonderful work we may naturally suppose that the winds of the formative period had ways mysterious and peculiar to the atmospheric conditions of the age in which they blew.

Americans laugh at the ignorance of Europeans concerning this marvelous land, but is it not just possible that the "American ignorance of America" is quite as fruitful a subject for mirth? There is truly a dense ignorance—north and south— of the north in regard to the south and of the south in regard to the north. However, the great Civil war was a wonderful schoolmaster for both of these sections of the United States. Quite as inexcusable is the ignorance of the east in regard to the west. Half of the world, a mighty hemisphere, incomparable in grandeur, incomputable in wealth and illimitable in possibilties, lies west of the average eastern geography. What they are pleased to term in derision the "wild and woolly west" is in reality the section where are found the fields of grains and grasses, orchards, vineyards and gardens, prairies and pastures with countless flocks and herds, forests of timber, quarries of stone, mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, coal and mica that contribute almost exclusively to the wealth and comfort of the east. Almost in the center of this mighty westland lies the state of Idaho. Its resources, possibilities and development are quite the same as those of her sister states, with this great exception that Idaho possesses more natural resources and them in greater abundance and riper and fuller measure. Idaho has more timber than Michigan, can raise greater crops of cereals than Iowa per acre; can produce better and cheaper pork than Kansas, has a better climate even than California.

A spirit of unrest pervades the east. Scores and hundreds are taking to themselves that sage advice of Horace Greeley: "Go west, young man." "Westward ho!" is the rallying cry of the investor, the business man and the homeseeker. Almost countless numbers have determined to cast their fortunes with the country of boundless resources and prospects and come west. Nature has strewn rich things and tempting opportunities all over this section, but to certain parts more lavish has she been with her benefactions. This is true to a marked degree of the famous Palouse country, of which Latah county is a prominent part. Here the soil is the richest and most productive in the United States; here crop failures are unknown; here irrigation is unnecessary; here climate is mild and equable. It is a country practically without any winter, without thunder and lightning, without tornadoes or cyclones, and where sunstrokes are unknown.

Latah county is nearly in the productive center of the Palouse country. More acres of tillable land are found within its borders than within those of any other county in the commonwealth. When a crop is matured it can be harvested without fear of constant rains rotting it in shock or stack. There is no government land in the county. All grazing and agricultural lands are in actual use and occupancy. Yields of grain and fruit are so large that the tenderfoot can hardly believe their reports, even when they are backed up by the national department of agriculture. Neither can they be blamed for their incredulity. In 1891 Idaho had the highest average wheat yield of any state in the union according to government reports. In many of the eastern agricultural states where wheat was formerly the chief crop the soils have become exhausted, but the wheat lands of Latah county stand ready to rescue the country from a bread famine. Their yield has steadily increased under cultivation and the wheat has steadily improved in quality. The government crop reports show that the average yield of the Palouse country has advanced from 17.7 bushels per acre during the three years 1892-94 to more than 25 bushels since 1899. A comparison for the same period shows a decrease from 14.6 bushels in Michigan to nine bushels, from 15.7 to 10.3 bushels in Indiana, and other similar reductions in Illinois, Ohio and California. The remarkable increase in the Palouse country yield is doubtless due in part to the larger rainfall following a wider cultivation, but nevertheless the figures bear striking testimony to the strength of the soils and indicate the endurance that may be expected from them under a proper rotation of crops. To show the value of this soil as a permanent resource, the most authoritative statistics are those given in the year book of the department of agriculture for 1901. Take the three most important grains and these records show that in wheat the Palouse yield per acre was 29.1 bushels and the general average for all states was 15 bushels; in barley the yield was the largest in the union, an average of 43.5 bushels per acre as compared with general average of 25.6 bushels for the whole country, and in oats the district also leads all districts of the union with an average of 39.58 bushels as against a general average of 26.87 bushels per acre for all the states. These figures are ten years' averages. The same methods of comparisons applied to other agricultural products, including fruits and vegetables, would give results equally satisfactory. The department reports the average yield of potatoes in this district in 1902 at 136 bushels per acre, while the average for the entire country was only 94.5 bushels. The Palouse average for the ten years from 1892 to 1901 was 124 bushels, and that for the whole of the United States was 75.9. If carried out to the production of fruits the same test would without doubt be still more favorable to the soils of this district, for they contain mineral salts essential to successful fruit culture that are found in equal abundance in no other state of the union. These official returns justify the claim that in no other part of the world does farming find a more substantial and enduring basis in the fertility of the native soils.

The character of the country in Latah county is at first a surprise. Knowing its reputation as a grain producing district one expects to find level prairie lands. Instead he sees a succession of long, softly rolling hills and high bench lands, separated by deep gorges in which the principal streams run. These are the agricultural lands and comprise the western and southern portions of the county. To the north and east are the forests. Here are found what timbermen claim are the finest bodies of white pine and cedar yet standing in the United States. A railroad route has been surveyed to these timber lands from Moscow, which line will be built as soon as the lumbermen begin operations. Some of the largest timber companies of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota have made large investments in these timber lands and will begin to operate in the near future. The rolling prairie lands are all under thorough cultivation. Of the soil much has already been written, but no writer, however prolific in style or diction; no scientist, however learned in chemical analysis, nor farmer, however rich in experience or in the knowledge of soils, is able to describe this wonderful fertility as do the fields of waving grain, the berry patches, and the orchards, or the fat hogs, cattle and horses that roam the hills all silent but none the less impressive testimonials of the land of milk and honey to which the aboriginal has attached the name of Palouse.

The water supply is natural, unlimited and easily obtained. The hill tops are as fertile as the valleys. Everywhere the soil is inexhaustible in its fertility even under methods of farming that in older states would justly be deemed unscientific and shiftless. Many farms in the sections earliest settled have been cropped continuously in wheat for 20 years or more without the use of a fertilizer, and, notwithstanding this was wasteful agriculture, these same farms are still producing from 25 to 40 bushels to the acre. This Palouse country is the only one known where three or four crops of wheat are sometimes harvested from one sowing. In one instance from a single sowing a farmer harvested 37 bushels to the acre the first year, 30 bushels the second year, 20 bushels the third year and nearly 12 bushels the fourth season. Four years' harvests of golden grain, amounting to 99 bushels per acre, from a single sowing!

Nor is this all. The seasons are conducive to good health as well as to abundant crops. To the north the timbered hills and the mountains form a bulwark against the cold winds. From the south and west come the balmy breezes of the ocean up the Columbia river valley. Off the mouth of the Columbia, where the Japanese current makes its westward turn in the Pacific ocean, the famous Chinook wind originates. This mild, warm wind, moisture laden, blows inland and tempers the climate for hundreds of miles. In winter this same warm wind sometimes travels far into Montana and the Dakotas, and under its warmth winter snows melt visibly. Many feet of snow are melted in a few hours. This evidences the strange power of this most unique wind, whose influence for good extends over a wide territory. In the Palouse the rains fall gently, without driving winds, and the hillsides do not wash. The cool nights of the summer always insure the rest required to the day's labor and no matter how warm may be the sunniest day the nights require a blanket covering to insure comfortable sleep. The winters are short and not severe. Any time in the winter the eastern tourist may find herds of stock and cattle on nearly every farm, that are living out in the open and subsisting only on the bunch grass of the hills and the strawstacks of the wheat fields, a condition found impossible in other sections of the United States of similar altitude.

Farming in Latah county has been relieved of much of its unpleasantness by the use of modern and cheaper methods. A leading grain grower has produced figures to show that he raises wheat, threshed and in warehouse, at an average expense of not to exceed 15 cents. This is done by making use of labor-saving machinery. There are no boulders or "nigger heads" to contend with, so gang plows pulled by eight and ten horses are used. Gang harrows, pulled by as many horses and driven by a man riding horseback are also used. When harvest time comes the labor of five men is done by one, for combine machines are used, drawn by sixteen and 20 horses. These machines start through the fields of waving grain and in their wake wheat sacked is left. The machine cuts the heads from the grain, threshes and conveys the cleaned berries into sacks which are sewed and dropped from time to time. Any person knowing of the usual methods of grain growing can readily estimate the saving the use of this plan makes over the old style.

In past years the principal agricultural industry has of course been the growing of cereals, but with the opening of markets for stock, garden truck and fruit there has come a change in methods. The larger farms are being divided into smaller tracts, fruit trees are being set out more extensively and thousands of acres are being put into meadow every year while a number of those who were formerly engaged only in grain growing are now engaged in fine stock raising. Large herds of registered Shorthorns and Herefords and droves of Berkshire, Poland China, Duroc, Jersey and Tamworth hogs can be found. A summing up of the products, agricultural and otherwise, of this rich country, indicates its diversity of natural resources. Wheat yields from 30 to 60 bushels per acre and commands a cash market. Oats yield as high as 80 bushels per acre and weigh about 36 pounds to the bushel and the crop is in demand. Barley yields about 60 bushels per acre of fine quality, well adapted for brewing purposes as well as for feeding. Flax is an abundant producer and yields from 20 bushels per acre up and never sells for less than $1. Rye makes a good crop and is disposed of in the local market. Buckwheat farming has been tried sufficiently to establish it as a standard crop. Fifty bushels per acre is an average season. Speltz, the new rival of the feed cereals, has been grown here experimentally, and has shown the phenomenal result of 85 bushels per acre. Hay finds a ready market at prices from $10 per ton upwards. White beans are a good money crop. In vegetables there is no class which does not beat every eastern record for quantity and quality. Potatoes will produce 400 bushels to the acre, carrots 30 tons per acre, cabbages make big solid heads, and artichokes do well. Sugar beets produce immense crops and the product shows a greater percentage of saccharine matter than is to be found in like products of any other locality. All manner of garden truck grows to perfection. From the days when William Taylor, Silas Imbler and Joseph Howard set out the first orchards and the trees came into bearing the fruit of this favored country has enjoyed an ever increasing fame. Fruit from here won the first prize at the World's fair at Chicago. Everywhere it is shipped it attracts the purchasers and the quality and flavor establish a permanent market. Fruit is shipped regularly in season to the states of the middle west and Montana and brings most remunerative prices. The Palouse leads California for apples, pears, prunes and cherries in quality of the product and bearing capacity of the trees. The orchards show a vigorous, healthy growth and begin bearing at four years. If not taken care of the trees will break down under their loads. An orchard can be started anywhere in the county and it will thrive. The winter apple, "the big red apple of the Palouse," is the most favored fruit owing to its excellent flavor and keeping qualities. The demand for that product has always exceeded the supply. Of small fruits the blackberry, raspberry and currant are great yielders with a fine local market at good prices. Through the tendency to diversified farming, stock is gradually being increased. Blooded cattle, hogs and sheep are to be found on every thrifty farmer's place. There are no animal diseases to bother and all thrive. They can be raised cheaply and bring high prices at all times. Chickens, ducks and geese find a ready home market. Eggs never go below 10 cents and often in winter are quoted in markets as high as 60 cents, with never a supply in excess of the demand. Dairying is a growing industry and a profitable one. The Moscow cream station, which started June 1, 1901, the first month paid $315 to 14 farmers for cream. In June, 1902, 89 men were selling cream there and were paid $2,515 that month. Estimates show returns from $5.60 to $7 per cow for June, 1902. The great crops of tame grasses, especially of red clover, the food of all foods for the dairy, makes this location especially desirable for creameries. The fall pasturage in the clover fields runs well into December in the ordinary years. In the few months when it is desirable to have other crops than clover and grass to feed, the demand is met with corn, millet, rye, rape, sorghum, peas and soy beans, which produce abundantly.

Latah county was created May 14, 1888. Its western boundary is the state line between Idaho and Washington. North of Latah is Kootenai county, and south of it is Nez Perces county. Shoshone county lies to the east. In 1900 the number of acres of patented land was 347,316, valued at $1,725,224, and total assessed valuation of all property in the county was $4,011,387, being the second county in the state in wealth. The stock statistics for 1900 show 1,105 horses, 2,004 head of cattle and 5,027 sheep. There are 35.85 miles of railroad in the county, the lines represented being the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Company. There are three leading farming districts. These are the Paradise Valley, as the country about Moscow is called; the Potlatch country and the Genesee valley. The Moscow country consists of the magnificent valley formed by the south Palouse river and Paradise creek. In the Potlatch country the Potlatch river, with its many branches, and Bear creek are the streams. In the Genesee country Cow creek is the chief stream. Moscow is the county seat. The other important towns in the county are Genesee, Juliaetta, Kendrick and Troy. There are five smaller villages. Throughout the county, as well as in the towns and villages, are excellent schools and churches. The bulk of population is in the southern and western part of the county. To the north and east are the vast timbered areas, which when cleared of their present forest will also become rich agricultural lands.

It is difficult to procure accurate statistics on the crop products of Latah county for the reason that much of them are shipped from Washington railroad points, but a few miles away. For instance, in 1902 Latah county products shipped from Palouse City, Washington, are estimated as follows: Oats, 80,000 bushels; wheat, 40,000 bushels; hay, 3,000 tons; apples, six carloads; potatoes, three carloads.

The Paradise valley, or Moscow country, produces all of the crops mentioned heretofore and in abundance. Grain and hay, of course, are the chief products, but fruits are exported in quantities and the live stock industry in that district is an important and increasing source of wealth. Shipments from Moscow for the year 1901 included 759 carloads of grain, chiefly wheat; 105 carloads of hay, most of which was timothy; 56 carloads of different varieties of fruits, in which apples predominated; and 20 cars of live stock. All of these shipments brought most remunerative prices. The 1902 shipments were proportionately greater in all lines and the future promises a steady and prosperous growth in exports.

Southeast of the Moscow country lies the famous Potlatch. Draw a circle with a radius of seven miles from Kendrick and you include the territory known as the Potlatch empire, being about evenly divided between the counties of Latah and Nez Perces. Nowhere are people more favored than those of the Potlatch, with its rolling fields of rich, black soil and invigorating climate. The gentle zephyrs that steal across the hills to kiss the waving fields of grain are purified and scented by occasional belts of tapering pines that stand as barricades to moderate the hot winds and allow him who toils to reap. Less than 20 years ago the hardy pioneer drove his team across these hills in search of a better land rather than take these rolling prairies, that now annually blossom with the luxuriant crops that have made this section famous. The Potlatch knows no crop failure and her people appreciate the fertility of its soil. But little more than ten years ago the whistle of the iron horse first broke the sombre stillness of these hills and prairies to furnish the transportation facilities for the shipment of her produce to the markets of the world. The thrift and energy of the people soon asserted itself and the fields that once fed bands of cattle were transformed into waving fields of grain. In the springtime the scene on the various ridges is one of unusual splendor with the fields robed in green stretching out to the distant foothills.

The climate is exceptional. High hills protect from the winds. The summers are delightful. The days from twilight to sunset lengthen to about 16 hours. With the going down of the sun a refreshing breeze blows across the country to fan the brow of the weary toiler. The winters are free from severe blizzards, so common to other parts of the country, and last only from eight to ten weeks. Mountain ranges protect it from the chilling blasts from the north, while the warm southwest winds sweep across the country, melting the snows, which soak into the soil for the summer moisture. Here is where the man who toils may sleep with comfort, for the summer nights are ever cool and refreshing.

Almost through the middle of the Potlatch country flows the Potlatch river, one of the branches or feeders of the Clearwater. Emptying into the Potlatch from the north are a number of small, clean streams. These streams flow through gulches which divide the country into what are known as the Potlatch, American, Big Bear, Little Bear, Texas, Fix and Cedar Creek ridges. These ridges are considered the most valuable agricultural and horticultural lands of the north. The section has been hidden to some extent by the large amount of advertising given to other parts of the northwest, but it has needed little more than the practical demonstration of its possibilities to give it proper prestige among the farming sections of the country. Farmers who have come to this district from other parts of the United States and who have seen with their own eyes what it will grow on its fertile fields have lost no time in selling their eastern places to take up their abode in a region where a clause guaranteeing success can almost be incorporated in the deeds of conveyance. Here is a section, of which there are few in the far west, where corn will grow both for the table and for feeding purposes. Ears 12 and 14 inches are the usual lengths. In much of the upper country the nights are too cold for the proper maturing of corn, but here the nights are neither hot nor cold but seem to maintain an even temperature that develops the growth not only of this cereal but of all others.

Wheat here grows to a height of five feet, carrying some of the largest heads that can be found anywhere, with firm, large berries. Potlatch wheat has a reputation second to none. It is first sold on the market because of its fine grade and early harvest. A Potlatch farmer received at the World's fair at Chicago a gold medal for having the finest wheat grown in the world, which, when considered, is an astounding showing for a small district far off in the west. Oats yield here the largest crops of any part of the state or of the world and grow tall and luxuriant. Timothy grows six feet tall with heads 12 inches long, while alfalfa with its immense yields without irrigation testifies to the adequate moisture contained in the soil, which is the foundation for the successful growing of all vegetation. Flax will run on an average over 25 bushels to the acre of a special grade that brings an extra high price. Tobacco does well, as experiments have proved, but has not been raised commercially as yet.

The fruits of the Potlatch country have a national reputation. Apples that are a credit to any community are shipped out in quantities and form a conspicuous part of the wealth of the country. Last spring 8,000 boxes of these apples, which had been stored from the previous harvest in warehouse at Kendrick, were repacked and shipped. The loss from wither and rot from the time the fruit was first stored was shown to be less than two per cent., which is considered a remarkable showing, even for Potlatch apples, which are noted for their keeping qualites. These apples grow large and red and possess a flavor which brings for them the highest prices in the eastern and middle western markets. Some of these apples won the first prize at the Chicago fair. There is such a demand for this fruit that it is no common thing for buyers to purchase the fruit on the trees. One orchard of 110 acres of six-year-old trees produced a crop for which a buyer paid $8,000 on the trees, and such instances are not uncommon. Cherries that compare favorably with the California product in size and flavor, are shipped in quantities. All the small fruits thrive and produce in abundance. Strawberries two inches in diameter are common and are solid and sweet to the center and juicy as can be wished. They lose nothing in flavor by reason of their immense size, an acre of strawberries netting the owner $200 often, and under favorable circumstances and careful cultivation often producing more. Grapes do excellently and vineyards of large size are being planted. At a Spokane fruit fair one year a grape grower of the Potlatch made an exhibit from his vineyard which was an object lesson to all who saw it. From the department of agriculture he secured colored pictures of two varieties of grapes, showing the ideal bunch of those varieties of the fruit. He framed these pictures and beside them in his exhibit he suspended two bunches of grapes he had grown in his vineyard. In size, shape and coloring the Potlatch fruit showed up better than the ideal picture.

Vegetables of all the usual varieties are cultivated and yield abundantly. These products find a ready market in the towns and in the markets of the tributary and mining districts. Dairying, live stock, poultry and kindred pursuits affiliated with agriculture are engaged in to some extent and bring excellent returns. Greater attention is being paid to these branches of late as their possibilties are becoming better known and as the markets for the products are increasing. Lumbering is already an important industry and promises to become a source of immense wealth. The great forests lie along the streams just to the north and east of the Potlatch country. As the timber is cut the logs are floated down the streams to the railroad shipping points in the Potlatch country. Here there is abundant water power available and mills are established to turn the logs into lumber and this lumber is then placed on the railroad cars to be transported to market. The three saw mills on Potlatch creek above Kendrick have about 2,000,000 feet of logs in their boom. Another mill, five miles upstream has 900,000 feet, and another mill further up the creek has 400,000 feet of logs for sawing. There are two other mills in the district. Others will be established ere long as lumber is in great demand.

Three lively towns divide the trade of the Potlatch country. Kendrick is the largest of these. By reason of its location in the center of the district and the further fact that the natural contour of the country makes it easier to haul products to it than to other shipping points, it has become the metropolis of the Potlatch, a position it seems destined to maintain. Juliaetta, in the southwestern part of the Potlatch, has an excellent and prosperous tributary country, while Troy in the northwestern part of the district also enjoys a large and rapidly increasing trade.

The towns of the Potlatch country are situated hundreds of feet below the level of the grain producing ridges, in the canyons of Potlatch river and Bear creek, through which is built the Northern Pacific Railroad. While there are many good wagon roads built from the town, up to the farms, the grades are steep, too steep for ordinary use in hauling grain and other products to the railroads for shipment. In getting grain down to the warehouses, tramways or inclined cable roads on various plans are used. Warehouses are built both at the tracks of the railroad company and at the upper end of the inclined way for the convenience of the farmers. The use of tramways in the Potlatch country has encouraged the farmers to raise more grain and to utilize more of their lands for other produce, as they have proved very successful in expediting the handling of all commodities. Many of the tramways already built are being taxed to their utmost to carry down the supplies delivered to their upper terminals and still more is coming to be handled. The success of this manner of handling farm produce and getting it to transportation points has also stimulated other sections to introduce and maintain tramways. It was at first thought that their operation would be unsuccessful owing to the bad working of the first one built. Improvements having since been made, it is found they save long hauls in getting the grain into the canyons where the railroads have their houses and tracks and so much time is saved as well as wear and tear on teams and wagons. Another item in favor of the tramway is that they are built and operated at very little expense and in most cases by the farmers who have subscribed and have the privilege of sending down their grain in this manner.

The first large movement toward the establishing of orchards in the district was in 1894, when $27,000 was spent for the purchase of trees. By 1898 there were 3,000 producing trees in the orchards about Kendrick and 127 carloads of fruit were shipped from that point. In 1890 the total shipments of cereals from the Potlatch were 50,000 bushels. In 1898 the shipments had increased to 800,000 bushels, of which 275,000 bushels were of wheat. Shipments in later years have grown to immense proportions.

There is a significance attached to the nomenclature of Idaho districts which is of interest. Paradise valley is a most appropriate title to apply to such a beautiful and bountiful land. Potlatch, which is a Chinook (Indian) term meaning free giver of free gift, is most appropriately applied to a district where nature is so lavish in her benefactions. In another chapter of this work we have quoted an interview with John P. Vollmer, of Lewiston, in which Mr. Vollmer tells how the Genesee valley came by its name. It was during the summer of 1870 that Mr. Vollmer in company with Mr. Stone and others took a drive from Lewiston through the breaks and over the hill country north. Mr. Stone, who was at that time agent of the O. R. & N. steamboat line at Lewiston, was a native of New York, and during the drive remarked that the valley reminded him of his old home, the Genesee valley in New York state. Alonzo Leland, afterwards editor of the Lewiston Teller, was of the company and in descriptions of the country in his paper referred to it always as the Genesee valley and the name has ever since clung to it.

The Genesee valley lies to the north of the Lewiston country and adjoins Whitman county, Wash., the original center of the Palouse country, of which this valley is a part. The valley is part of the territory drained by the Clearwater river, and Cow creek, its principal water course, is a tributary of that river. The general character of the country is similar to that in other parts of the Palouse—long rolling hills, which are tillable at their highest points; whose gentle slopes are almost as easily farmed as a level country, and retain moisture better than flat plains. The benches are broken through by deep gulches, in which the creeks and streams run. Generally this part of the Palouse is less broken and contains fewer untillable breaks than other parts of the county.

The productiveness of the soil was in evidence when the first settler arrived as the rolling hills were covered with a wealth of native grasses. Stock raising was the pioneer industry. With an influx of more people attention was given to agriculture and from that day the returns from crops and cereals have been the admiration and delight of the land owners and others. Nowhere in the famous Palouse is produced better quality of grains or more abundant yields. A few words regarding methods of cultivation here, as well as in other parts of the Palouse, may not be amiss. Farms are generally large and many horses are required. The machinery employed embraces single and gang plows, section harrows, drills and broadcast harrows and combine headers and threshers. Following the old biblical custom of the time of Moses the farmers as a rule let half their lands lie fallow each year. Summer fallowing is generally practiced, a plan which experience has proved wise and profitable. A few years ago it was the practice at harvest time to use a header, with three header wagons and using from 13 to 30 horses in all. Some times the headed grain was stacked but often it was threshed as soon as headed. Not every farmer owns a header, many hiring the work done, as well as the threshing. Today the combine does the work of both machines. Big farmers own their own combines. Others hire the work done. Usually as the grain is threshed it is hauled to the warehouses in the city and stored, warehouse receipts being issued and a small charge being made for the handling and storage. This leaves the grower free to hold his crop as long as he chooses and take advantage of any fluctuations in prices.

The comparatively slight labor and more than generous returns from cereal crops have made that branch of agriculture the chief one in the Genesee country. In later years the advantages of the country as a fruit growing section became known and more attention has been paid to horticulture. The rich soil, which is permeated with moisture during growing season, the warm sun and mild breezes combine to give the fruit of this section a size, color and flavor which is excelled nowhere. In no other place are the yields more abundant. In consequence the fruit growing is fast becoming one of the most important industries of the district.

As the district grows in population the tendency is toward smaller farms and more diversified and intensive farming. Dairying, which offers most remunerative returns, is being more and more engaged in, a business which is made unusually profitable by reason of the adaptability of the soil for the growth of large crops of tame grasses and all varieties of forage plants and the abundance of fresh and pure water. These same factors contribute to making the raising of live stock a profitable industry. Small fruits yield large crops of choice quality, as do all the vegetables. Large revenues are received by those who devote parts of their lands to these products. Poultry raising is another branch of farm work which is a money maker.

A new industry in this vicinity is the growing of grain seed. The reputation of Genesee vegetables has become so pronounced that eastern seedsmen have urged that a seed farm be started. Mayor Hermann of Genesee has decided to devote a 100-acre farm to that purpose next season. He will produce seeds of all the usual varieties of vegetables and has already received orders for more than his possible crop. An Iowa farmer secured some Idaho seed oats and this year planted a strip of his oat field with them. The result is that farmers from miles around have viewed that field and have sent orders out west for more of that seed. The Idaho oats stand up about two feet above that raised from Iowa seed, are earlier and carry a heavier berry and more to the stem. The seed industry promises a bright future in the Genesee country as well as in other parts of the Palouse.

In 1888 shipments of cereals from the Genesee country were estimated at 800,000 bushels. The growth in diversity of products and otherwise is shown by the fact that in 1892 the shipments from the district were 1500 carloads of grains, 60 carloads of live stock and 15 carloads of fruit. Those do not take into consideration the large amount of farm and orchard products sold in local markets and at tributary mining and lumbering districts, nor do they include shipments of dairy products, poultry, eggs, vegetables, etc. This year's products will show a large increase in volume, diversity and value over former years.

It is rather peculiar that a pioneer industry of the Palouse country which was abandoned to a large extent has been taken up again with promise of greater profits than the pioneers ever dreamed of. This is the live stock industry. The earliest stockmen raised cattle and horses, letting them run wild over the plains where they fed on the rich bunch grass of the uplands. For their market they drove to the small towns or to the more distant mining camps that were springing up all over the territory west of the Rockies. As a rule no effort was made to secure good breeds of animals, as a result of which the stock was scrubby and of comparatively little value. In the hard times of 1893 the stockmen suffered with the rest of the country and the industry was almost abandoned. Then came an influx of new settlers into the country, taking up farms, and the horsemen found that farm animals were in demand, and few to be had. With the new population came a demand for tame grasses and for the first time experiments were made which determined, as might have been expected, that lands which produced such bountiful crops of native grass would yield equally large returns of the tame grasses and of fodder plants.

The stock industry was revived. From the first there was a desire to secure blooded stock, animals which would give the largest returns for the labor and money invested. This idea was aided and made general through the efforts of the agricultural colleges and the results have been more than satisfactory. Many extensive breeders have visited this section, have seen what can be grown in grasses and grains and have been eager to predict that the Palouse country will soon be furnishing the breeding stock for the far east, where now eastern buyers secure their stock across the ocean. They base these predictions upon the climatic conditions and what is produced here for developing. That this idea is reasonable is evidenced from the fact that an Inland Empire calf, shipped from the Palouse country, at Chicago recently stood first in his class and was sold for the highest price in his class. One reason for the great success of the industry has been that the stockmen appreciate that the best breeds mean the largest returns. Cattle can be raised here cheaper than anywhere else. For at least ten months of the year cattle feed and fatten rapidly without cost to the farmer. They are placed on the summer fallowed lands, where immense crops of weeds and wild oats spring up, which is excellent pasturage but which would injure the land if the farmer was not able to turn his stock upon it. The stubble of the wheat fields afford good grazing and then for the few weeks when the cattle have to be fed in winter there is an abundance of alfalfa and other grasses and fodder plants readily raised in great quantities. Horses do equally well. Heavy draft and general animals, of thoroughbred breeds, are raised in numbers and find an ever widening market. It cattle Herefords and Shorthorns are the more popular breeds, although many others are represented, such as Jerseys, Durhams, etc. Percheron horses have been bred in the Palouse country for years. Sheep raising has long been a profitable industry, but is not progressing in recent years because of lack of range. The great American hog is the big money maker in the Palouse. With agriculture began hog raising, and the industry grew with the growth of the grain farms. For a time it afforded the most profitable outlet for the wheat and barley. Government experts in this section have developed by long and careful experiment that wheat fed to hogs in the Palouse will return better than $1 a bushel and the industry is attracting many, and is already a source of great revenue, which will increase from time to time. In this industry as in others the growers insist upon only the best breeds. A potent factor in educating growers to the value of blooded stock has been the Inland Registered Stock Breeders' Association, covering a territory comprising eight counties in eastern Washington and five in Northern Idaho. At a recent meeting the Latah county breeders present and the lines in which they are specialists included Prof. H. T. French, Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs; Theo. Reed, Hampshire and Dorset sheep, Duroc-Jersey and Tamworth swine; and B. T. Byrns, Shorthorn and Hereford cattle.

Dairying is an important and growing industry in this section. The abundance of cheap and excellent feed, and the further fact that there is a great demand at large prices for the cream to be shipped to large creameries at Spokane have attracted many to engage in this industry with resulting profit. One Palouse farmer five years ago started out with five cows, shipping his cream. Today he milks 50 cows and owns 640 acres of land, all paid for out of his profits from cream.

When one considers that it was but a comparatively short time ago when the first tame grass seed was planted in an experimental way in Latah county it is surprising to learn that in the spring of 1902 estimates made showed that within a radius of ten miles of Moscow there were 10,000 acres in timothy, alfalfa, red clover, orchard grass, tall meadow, oat grass, bromus inermis and other cultivated grasses. Yet indications are this large acreage will be doubled within a year. The development of this branch of farming has come within the last five years and during the same period the stock industry as practiced in sections where no public range remains has been inaugurated and is gaining more and more of a foothold.

M. J. Shields, who has an 1800 grass seed farm near Moscow, has made a success feeding sheep for market, pasturing them on the farm. For feeding the sheep he uses spelts, the grain which is extensively raised in Denmark, which resembles barley in character and produces abundantly in the Palouse country. The straw after threshing is almost as good feed as grain hay. All grasses thrive in this favored land. Clover is the basis of all the grasses and five varieties have been grown successfully—common, mammoth red, white, Alsac and alfalfa. Two crops are harvested each year, in June and September, respectively. Tall varieties grow to more than six feet high. They are hardy and are valuable for early spring pasture and return a second heavy crop. The orchard grass keeps green winter and summer if grazed down; stands frost and has proven a fine grass in that soil. Samples are shown often five feet tall. The average in the Palouse is about four feet. Meadow fescue, or English blue grass, grows to a height of three feet. It is fine, nutritious, hardy and will grow anywhere. It yields four tons per acre and is ready to cut in July. The Russian brome grass yields usually five tons to the acre. It makes good summer pasturage. Rye grasses make excellent pasture but are not heavy hay producers. Two varieties have been tried, the English and Italian. Canadian blue grass also makes a good pasture grass and stays green until the snows fall. Men familiar with the states named declare that grasses of these varieties do better in the Palouse than in Michigan, Iowa, Indiana and other states.

There are some large grass farms near Moscow. M. J. Shields & Co. have the largest, 1800 acres being devoted to raising various varieties of grass seed for which there is ready market. At this place 200 acres are devoted to raising alfalfa seed alone. A new cereal the firm is handling is corn wheat. The kernels are much like wheat, except they are twice as large and the yield runs as high as 70 bushels to the acre. Mr. Shields has raised as high as 128 sacks weighing 120 pounds each from only two bushels of seed. Practically the same kind of meal can be made from it that is made from corn-meal that is palatable and has superior fattening qualities. Even the straw after threshing is found to contain fattening qualities to such an extent that stock thrive on it almost as well as on hay. The firm one year received more than 300 orders for the seed, coming from all parts of the country. Minneapolis parties recently contracted for 1,000 acres for the growth of garden peas. Many of these contracts were made in the Kendrick neighborhood, where peas, corn and beans have long produced large crops. The peas run from fifteen to thirty bushels to the acre and bring from $2.00 to $2.50 per centel. Dairying is made profitable by the excellence and abundance of milk producing grasses and fodder. Nearly 150 farmers are engaged in the business to a certain extent. Hand separators are used and the cream is delivered to Moscow to be shipped to the big Spokane creamery. About $30,000 per annum is paid for cream here. The average price in 1901 for butter fat was 25¼-cents; in 1902 was 26¼-cents and during December last was 31¼-cents, which is nearly double that paid by eastern creameries.

Nothing demonstrates more conclusively the rapid development of this county than some comparative figures from the assessor's returns. In 1890 the total valuation of property was $2,798,603; valuation of 1902, $4,238,845, an increase of $1,440,242. The whole number of acres of patented lands in 1890, assessable and non-assessable, was 298,354; for 1902, it was 416,469 acres, an increase of 118,115 acres, and to this must be added in 1903, 82,154 acres, on which the Potlach Lumber Company pays its first taxes. No lumber was assessed in 1890; in 1902 assessment was made on 15,699,000 feet of lumber and saw logs. No mills were assessed in 1890. In 1902 assessment was made on twenty-six flour and saw mills.

In all essentials of an ideal home Latah county is rich. Draw an air line from Steptoe butte in Washington to Kendrick, Idaho, and it will pass through the heart of the greatest agricultural wealth producing country of the northwest, as fair a land of vales and hills as ever the sun shone on. There is just enough winter to suggest ideas of the Arctics and just enough summer to suggest ideas of the tropics. The golden wheat shares its reign with many rolling fields of other tall grains and grasses, holding the tares in subjugation and beautifying the land with their varied shades of coloring. The groves in the lowlands shade the homes in summer and turn aside the wintry winds, while the orchards on the slopes give abundantly of their fruits and add a peculiar charm to the strange beauty of the landscape. Midsummer scenes are the ones that tell more plainly than all else the secret of the prosperity that reigns in this favored land; the busy crews in the full ripe grain, the stacks of grain and the bales of hay, the forming fruit, the flocks and herds, all tell a tale that he who runs may read. The gates of care were once ajar on the borders of this fair land, but the time of sore trial has been forgotten in the peace and plenty of today. Fortune awaits here all who come, who will to do, and to improve with diligence the rare opportunities the country offers. Prosperous, contented and happy are those who dwell

"In the heart of the happy hills."

DANIEL CAMERON.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

LATAH COUNTY

DANIEL CAMERON is one of the oldest pioneers of this country now living in Latah county, and he has been a potent factor in the development of the resources of the county and in its upbuilding from those early days until the present, being now one of the successful and intelligent farmers. His estate lies three and one half miles north from Moscow. Daniel was born in the highlands of Scotland in 1843, being the son of Finlay and Ann Cameron, natives of the same country, where they labored as agriculturists until the time of their demise. For twenty-five years, our subject labored with his father, and then, led by an adventurous spirit, came to America, where he took up the responsibilities of life for himself. His arrival here was about 1866, and on the upper Hudson in New York state he labored for a time, then went to Pennsylvania and worked in a tannery for a year. After this, he crossed the plains to San Francisco, and thence to Walla Walla, where he labored on a farm for a time and then came to his present place in 1871, being accompanied by his brother, and they were among the very first settlers of the territory now embraced in Latah county. He took a homestead and at once engaged in the commendable work of improving it and raising stock. He has labored faithfully all these years and has been attended with good success, ever manifesting sagacity and a public spirit in all his endeavors, while he has done much for the advancement of the county's interests. Mr. Cameron is entitled to the esteem and confidence of his fellows and this is bestowed in generous measure and he is considered one of the most substantial men of the county.

HARVEY J. BUNDY is a well known representative of the pioneer class in Latah county, and as a business man and enterprising spirt in the development of the county he has done a commendable work, while also in the literary line he has produced a fine volume, entitled, "The Last Voice from the Plains," being the life of W. F. Dranan, the companion of the famous Kit Carson.

Mr. Bundy was born in Washington county, Illinois, on December 16, 1854, being the son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Breeze) Bundy. The father was born in Marion county, Illinois, and is now living at Dayton, Washington, while the mother was a native of Jefferson county, Illinois, and died in Washington county, when Harvey J. was three years of age. When he was ten he had the unique experience of traveling with an ox train from the states to Washington, landing in the vicinity of Walla Walla. They chose a section southwest from Dayton, now known as Bundy Hollow, where our subject received his education from the common schools. In 1876 he took land in Nez Perces county, in the vicinity of Genesee, there being no town there at that time, and he engaged in raising stock. Three years later he went into the big Potlatch country, and four years after that he was back again in Genesee. That continued to be his home until 1895, when he came to Moscow and since that time he has been engaged in mining operations. He is a skilled prospector and his continued study and association with mining in all its phases have made him an expert and his knowledge is utilized to advantage in many sections. He is interested in the well known Buffalo Hump and also in the Moscow mountains. He is general manager of the Providence Milling and Mining Company, and does commendable work in handling its affairs. In 1886 Mr. Bundy was elected county commissioner from the second district, and he served for two years; while from 1894 to 1896 he was deputy sheriff under Frank Campbell. In 1892 Mr. Bundy had run for sheriff on the Democratic ticket, and although far ahead of his ticket, he suffered defeat.

The marriage of Mr. Bundy and Miss Sarah L., daughter of John and Polly (Maxwell) McCall, was solemnized in Waitsburg, Washington, on November 3, 1878, and they have become the parents of two sons: Lyman A., at Granite Falls, Washington; Francis M., clerking in Moscow. Mr. McCall died in Dayton, Washington, in 1888, having come hither from his native state, Indiana. His wife was also a native of Indiana, and she is deceased. It was in 1893 that Mr. Bundy took up literary work, and wrote the work above mentioned, which has been copyrighted and contains many good things, being a production of merit. Mr. Bundy was beaten out of the work by its being copyrighted by another. Rhodes, McClure & Company of Chicago have published the fifth edition, and it is sad that the author should not have the returns of his labor.

JAMES H. COLLINS. This well known and representative business man of Latah county is at present the proprietor of the saw mill which he owns on the mountain seven miles northeast from Moscow, where he manufactures a goodly amount of fine lumber, also having a shingle mill in conjunction with the other plant. James H. was born in Cass county, Michigan, on April 30, 1848, being the son of John and Louise Collins. The father was county treasurer of his county and quite active in politics. Our subject remained in Cass county until 1864 attending public schools. At that time he went with his parents to the vicinity of Elkpoint, South Dakota, where they took up land and were occupied in farming and operating a saw mill. In 1877 he left that country and came to Washington, settling on a pre-emption in Whitman county, just west of the state line and adjacent to Moscow. Mr. Collins states that at that time he could have hauled all of Moscow at one wagon load. He sold his farm in 1900. In 1892 Mr. Collins started a shingle mill at his present place and this grew to the present plants, where he manufactures timber products. He is now removing his mill to a place one mile further up the mountain and there expects to do more business than heretofore.

On December 25, 1868, at Elkpoint, Dakota, Mr. Collins and Miss Hattie E., daughter of John R. and Eveline C. (Palmer) Wood, were married, and they have become the parents of the following children: William H., a farmer and stockman on the Nez Perces reservation; George H., married to Mamie Frazier, and with his father in the mill; Mattie L., at home. Mrs. Collins' father was a farmer in Dakota and served in the Civil war as first lieutenant under Captain Tripp and General Dulley, being in the service for three years. Mr. Collins is a member of the fraternal order of the Royal Arcanum. He is one of the real builders of the county's present enviable commercial standing and development, having displayed great wisdom and energy in his labors here for years, while at the present time he enjoys the esteem and confidence of his fellows.

HANS J. LESTOE is the senior member of the firm of Lestoe & Sherer, one of the leading mercantile firms of Moscow, and handles a large business. Mr. Lestoe is a representative citizen of the county, and a man of keen business ability and possessed of affability and integrity in a happy degree. The birth of Mr. Lestoe occurred in Lolland, Denmark, on April 28, 1851, his parents being Peter and Annie (Peterson) Lestoe. The father was a shipbuilder and they remained in their native land until the time of their death. Our subject was educated in the public schools and labored on a farm in the vicinity of his home until he was twenty years of age, then stepped from the parental roof, and turned toward the new world, determined to seek his fortune there. 1871 was the year in which he landed in Wisconsin and for four years he labored there at different undertakings, then in 1875 came to Portland, Oregon, remaining there until 1878. At the last date mentioned he came thence to Idaho and took up a homestead, where his labors were bestowed for six years. In the fall of 1883 he went into the employ of some general merchants in Genesee, Idaho, and two years later he engaged with Dermhan & Kaufmann, general merchants of Moscow, continuing there until 1891, when he opened a store for himself in Troy, this state. In 1893 he sold that business and came to Moscow, where in company with W. H. Clark he started a hardware store. They did a good business from the start, and in 1899 Mr. Clark sold out his interest to J. W. Sherer, and the firm is now known as Lestoe & Sherer. They handle all kinds of hardware, also paints, oils, crockery, and all accessories, also being agents for some leading heavy hardware houses, thus being able to supply all wants in any branch of business that needs hardware. Of late they have been increasing their stock and their store is today one of the best stocked houses in the entire Palouse country.

On January 25, 1885, Mr. Lestoe married Miss Helena Thompson, a native of Wisconsin, and to them have been born the following children: James C., Henry A. and Frederick. On June 12, 1894, Mrs. Lestoe was called from her home and family by death, and her remains lie buried in the Moscow cemetery. She was beloved by all and her death elicited sincere mourning in a large circle of friends. On August 25, 1898, Mr. Lestoe married a second time, the lady being Elizabeth (Taylor) Johnston, and the wedding occurring in Moscow. Mrs. Lestoe is a native of Oregon. Mr. Lestoe is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Artisans, and the Foresters of America. He owns one hundred and sixty acres of good farm land. He is one of the leading business men of Latah county and is the recipient of the esteem and confidence of his fellows.

WELLINGTON L. ELY. Among the younger business men of talent and enterprise who have domiciled in Moscow, there should not be failure to mention the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, since he has manifested during his stirring career of commercial activity ability and wise management of the resources at his hand which have justly placed him as one of the leaders in the commercial realm of his county, while also his unswerving integrity and stanch qualities of worth have bequeathed him a legacy of prestige that is enviable and of distinct merit.

Wellington L. Ely was born in Stockton, New York, on November 24, 1877, being the son of Mortimer and Genevra (Cooley) Ely. His early life was largely spent in the pursuit of knowledge, and to his credit be it said with such application and precocity that at the age of fifteen years he graduated from the local schools. In 1895 we find him in Pasadena, California, attending the Troop Institute, whence the following year he returned to Stockton, New York, and engaged as salesman in a general merchandise store, where he acquired practical training and valuable knowledge for one year. Then observing that he would be better fortified for the battle of life if he had more educational discipline, he repaired to the Westfield Academy and applied himself once more to the lore of books for a time. Then he launched forth on the sea of life's activities, and next we find him in the bright little town of Moscow. A time was spent in the loaning office of B. T. Byrns, about one and one-half years. Following that period he formed a partnership with F. A. David, and together they opened a general merchandise establishment in the city of Moscow. The enterprise was launched with due counsel and manipulated with excellent wisdom, while the push and energy and sterling business qualities of our subject were fully brought into requisition and there could but be the brilliant success that has attended this venture. They have a store well stocked, and skillfully managed, while the liberal patronage which they have won speaks loudly both of their business ability and upright methods.

The marriage of Mr. Ely and Miss Louise E., daughter of James and Akan Cheney, was solemnized on June 14, 1900. This young couple are valuable acquisitions to the social realm and they are highly esteemed and have the encomiums and good will of all.

THOMAS S. POINDEXTER. The subject of this article is a native of the occident, and has spent most of his life beneath its stars, preferring it to the congested centers of the east. His home is at the present time on a quarter section of fine land two miles northeast from Farmington, which has been the family home for some time. The land has been farmed for sixteen years and is only now open to homestead entry. He raises the cereals and brome grass, with stock, and has a fine orchard. The birth of Thomas S. occurred on May 4, 1863, in Benton county, Oregon, being the son of Thomas S. and Mary E. (Coffey). The father was born in Kentucky in 1821 and died in 1887 and the mother was born in Kentucky in 1842. At the age of eleven our subject went to Macoupin county, Illinois, making his home with his Aunt Louise J. Bronaugh, a sister of his father. He did chores and attended school and the east was his home until he was twenty, and then he longed for the scenes of his native place, and accordingly came thither, landing at Eugene, Oregon. One year later he came to Latah county and in 1885 he worked in the Coeur d'Alene mines and in 1886 he bought the interest of the man who lived on his home place and he then settled on the farm and that has been his home since that time. He has now homesteaded the land.

The marriage of Mr. Poindexter and Miss Sedalia, daughter of Squire and Sarah E. (Stuttwell) Thomas was solemnized in Latah county on April 13, 1887, and to this union there have been born six children: Maxie A., Arrah B., Dean C., Thomas E., Charlotte Gilbert, aged respectively fourteen, eleven, nine, six, three, and the baby. Mr. Thomas was born in Illinois in 1841, is a farmer living at Whatcom, Washington, while the mother was born in Indiana and died in 1882. Mrs. Poindexter was born in California on August 17, 1871, removed to Oregon when a child, and thence to Latah county in 1878, and she has brothers and sisters as follows: James H., in Hooper, Washington; Arthur L., in Colorado; Deborah C., wife of Andrew Smith, now deceased; Eliza E., wife of William D. Haynes, in Whatcom, Washington; Stillwell, at Whatcom; Newton, in Latah county. Mr. Poindexter has brothers and sisters as follows: Roena, wife of William Morgan, in Tacoma; one half-brother, Byrin Coffee, at Kalama, Washington. Mr. Poindexter is a member of the I. O. O. F. and of the Maccabees in Farmington. He has given his services on the school board for years, while in political matters he is allied with the Democratic party.

ALMON A. LIEUALLEN, deceased. One of the earliest pioneers that broke sod in this section of the country, a man of whom all spoke well, and one who wrought here continuously from the inception of his career in this region until the sad day of his demise with manifestations of wisdom, stability, enterprise and display of those manly virtues and an intrinsic worth that characterize the typical man, the subject of this sketch is eminently deserving of this memorial which it is our privilege to grant to him.

Almon A. was born in Tennessee on September 10, 1842, being the son of Paton and Jemima (Smith) Lieuallen, farmers of that state and Iowa. Our subject went in 1858 to where Princeton, Missouri, now stands, remaining until 1860, when he moved to Iowa, whence he crossed the plains in 1867 to Walla Walla and there engaged in stock raising and freighting. He did a large business in the latter industry, handling as high as twenty outfits from The Dalles to the interior mining camps of Idaho, and continuing the same until 1868. In this last year he disposed of his freighting business, repaired to Oregon, founding the town of Centerville, and there and at Walla Walla gave his attention to raising stock. In 1871 he brought forty thousand dollars' worth of cattle to the region now embraced in Latah county, taking a pre-emption four miles east from where Moscow now stands. Success attended his wise business methods, and he owned land in different bodies all the way down to the Snake. He had vast herds of cattle, and he was always a progressive, public minded man, ever laboring for the welfare and progress of the country where he was domiciled. At one time he owned between two and three thousand acres of land in Washington and Idaho and one-half section in California. He homesteaded the land where Moscow is now built, taking it in 1875, and opening up a general merchandise store there. He was the first postmaster of Moscow and held the office until he sold his store. In 1881 he sold the mercantile interests, platted the town site of Moscow, and devoted his energies to placing the young city on a proper basis and to building it up. He was one of the main factors in the development of the country, in establishing the city, in forwarding its growth, and in the general progress of the county's interest, and no man was better known in the country than Mr. Lieuallen. On November 4, 1898, he was called from the scenes of his worthy labors to the realms of another world, and with appropriate ceremonies his body was laid to rest in the Moscow cemetery. He had been a faithful member of the Baptist church since sixteen years of age, displaying the virtues and graces of the Christian, and his example was bright and good, and his death was sincerely mourned throughout the entire county.

The marriage of Mr. Lieuallen and Miss Sarah A., daughter of William E. and Mary J. (Holloway) Good, was solemnized on July 4, 1871, and there were born to them the following issue: Mary A., died December 15, 1877, aged five and one-half years; Lillie Irene, wife of Jay Woodworth; John T., died at the age of eighteen; William B., died January 5, 1888, aged eight years, all buried beside their father. Mrs. Lieuallen is a native of Iowa and her parents were natives of Ohio, but removed to Iowa in an early day, and there remained until the time of their death. Mrs. Lieuallen is a member of the Presbyterian church and has always been a leader in the noble work of missionary undertakings and charitable labors, while the bright Christian life that she has maintained has been the means of doing much good. She is also a member of the Women of Woodcraft, Moscow Circle, No. 192. She owns eighty acres of the old homestead and an elegant residence, which is, as it always has been, the center of refined hospitality, and a model Christian home, presided over by a lady of gracious personality, with manifestation of those lovable graces and characteristics of the real Christian. In addition to this valuable property, Mrs. Lieuallen has a fine farm of four hundred and twenty-four acres, which she manages with discretion and sagacity.

ROBERT H. BARTON. This worthy pioneer and veteran of many a struggle on the fields of battle, both in the Civil war and on the scenes of life's industries, is now the postmaster of Moscow and he has won for himself the esteem and confidence of all who may know him. He was born in Perry county, Ohio, on February 1, 1842, being the son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Biddison) Barton. The father was born in Baltimore in 1811, being the son of Robert Barton, who emigrated from the north of Ireland to America. The mother of our subject was a native of Baltimore and a daughter of William Biddison, a soldier of the war of 1812. The parents came to Perry county, Ohio, and settled on a homestead. They had twelve children, eleven of whom grew to maturity, and six are now living. Robert H., their fifth, acquired his education in the public schools and in the Ohio University at Athens, and in 1861 he left college to enlist in Company D, Seventeenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He served four months under Rosecrans and then the regiment disbanded. He re-enlisted in Company B, First Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, and served with the Army of the Cumberland. His regiment did escort duty with General O. M. Mitchell and later with the cavalry in General Buell's command. Subsequently they were with General Rosecrans at Stone River and until after the battle of Chickamauga, and during the Atlanta campaign were at General McPherson's headquarters until that commander was killed. He saw the genral fall and caught his horse. Later he was at General Howard's headquarters in the same capacity, and after the capture of Atlanta was sent with his regiment on the Wilson raid. They were at Macon, Georgia, when the news of Lee's surrender gladdened all hearts, and on the twenty-fifth of September, 1865, he was honorably discharged at Hilton Head, South Carolina. On July 2, 1862, at Russellville, Alabama, Mr. Barton was shot in the corner of his mouth and lost the teeth, upper and lower, on the right side of his face, and suffered a fracture of the jaw. This occasioned six weeks in the hospital.

After this creditable military record Mr. Barton returned to his home and taught school during the winter of 1865-66, then went to Kansas and took and taught school during the winter months. He was later chosen county assessor and recorder of deeds in that county for six years. He removed to Utah in 1875 and taught school, and in 1877 we find him in Moscow, where he operated a saw mill, which he had brought with him. He was in this business for three years, and in 1881 he built the Barton hotel, which he conducted until 1891, when it was burned, entailing a loss of fifteen thousand dollars. He then erected the Moscow at a cost of thirty-five thousand dollars, but on account of the financial panic he was forced to part with this property on account of an incumbrance of twenty thousand dollars. This is a fine property and a credit to the town. He was appointed as postmaster of Moscow under Harrison and again under McKinley, and is serving with acceptability now. For eight years he was also deputy sheriff of Nez Perces county, and was also the first sheriff of Latah county.

The marriage of Mr. Barton and Miss Lettie Langdon, a native of Illinois, was solemnized in 1869, and to them have been born two children, one deceased, the other, Ed T., deputy postmaster. In 1872 Mrs. Barton died and in 1875 Mr. Barton wedded her sister, Louise Langdon, by whom he has five children: Maude M., attending the university; Earl S., also in that institution; Louise E., at the high school; Faith S. She was named by the Idaho Department of the Grand Army of the Republic during its encampment in Moscow, at which time her birth occurred, and the soldiers presented her with a silver set. Mr. and Mrs. Barton are active members of the G. A. R. and its auxiliary, respectively, and he is past commander and department commander, and she is past secretary and president of the Idaho department. In consideration of his service to Major Anderson Post No. 5, he was presented with a sword by its members, which hangs with his blade which did valiant service for the Union. He has a fine residence in Moscow and he is esteemed by all.

Mr. Barton is a Republican in politics, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He takes a great deal of pride in the fact that he was a personal friend of William McKinley, and was the first one in Idaho to advocate his nomination at the St. Louis convention. He sought to be a delegate to that convention, but the strong sentiment in favor of free coinage of silver in the ratio of sixteen to one shut him out. He has been a member of every Republican convention since Idaho became a state.

ALBERT DYGERT. It is proper that in a list of the leading business men of Latah county the name of the subject of this sketch should appear, both because of his success in the realm of mercantile life, being one of the largest farm implement dealers in the county, and also because he is one of the heaviest real estate holders and prominent agricultural men and is a man of high standing among his fellows, being possessed of good abilty, enterprise, integrity and sound principles.

Our subject was born in McHenry county, Illinois, on May 13, 1855, being the son of Abram and Phœbe (Snooks) Dygert, natives of New York but farmers of Illinois, where the father died in 1899, on February 3, his remains resting at the Woodstock cemetery. Albert was well educated and then taught school at his native place for three years, and in 1877 went to Modoc county, California, engaging in the stock business for five years. In 1882 he sold out and came to Idaho, purchasing a farm six miles south from Moscow. He gave his attention strictly to general farming and stock raising and the original quarter was added to until he now has the princely estate of eight hundred acres in one body and excellently improved. Eight years were spent in this place and in 1890 he went with his family to the old home place in the east, and after visiting for a time returned to Moscow, taking up his abode in the city, where he has an elegant residence. In 1900 he opened an implement house and he does a good business, having one of the leading establishments of the city. He carries a complete assortment of all that is used in the way of farm implements, vehicles, machinery and so forth. Mr. Dygert has the farm, also city property that he rents, his commodious home, his business, and much other property, thus demonstrating his ability in the financial world.

On October 15, 1881, Mr. Dygert married Miss Flora T., daughter of Orsemus and Lucinda (Jackson) Beardsley. She was a native of McHenry county, Illinois, and they were schoolmates. When the time for marriage came Mr. Dygert sent for his bride, and she came to Reno, Nevada, the nearest city to his stock ranch, and there the ceremony was performed. One child, Leslie, has been born to them, his birthday being July 3, 1886, and his native place Latah county. Mr. Dygert is a member of the M. W. of A., Paradise Lodge, No. 5356. He is identified with the Republican party, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist church. They are prominent members of society and capable and worthy people.

GEORGE LANGDON, one of Moscow's best known and popular business men, is deserving of mention in the volume that has to do with the history of Latah county, since he has been intimately connected with the development and progress of it since its organization and was a potent factor in the section before that event, being at the present time in the responsible position of chief of police of the city of Moscow and also conducting a real estate office.

Reverting to his personal history, we find that he was born in McLean county, Illinois, on February 15, 1856, being the son of Samuel and Martha V. (Wilson) Langdon, natives of Ohio. His first education was obtained in his native place and later he completed the normal course in the state institution, and thus fortified for the battles of life he stepped forth, taking up the work of the educator. In 1878 he came west to Moscow, his father having preceded him across the plains in 1873. He turned his attention here to logging, then taught, then worked at logging again, and later engaged in the saw mill business, and in 1884 was appointed deputy sheriff for the county, where two years were spent in the faithful discharge of the duties there devolving upon him. In 1886 he was appointed deputy sheriff, serving under Ezra Baird, and then was deputy sheriff under Sheriff S. J. Langdon. In 1888 he was elected the first sheriff of Latah county. The county was considered Republican by over one hundred majority, and our subject was a Democrat, but the man proved too much for the politics and he polled the handsome vote of four hundred majority, five hundred ahead of his ticket, being one of two elected on that ticket that year. Thus was demonstrated the popularity of Mr. Langdon. He served faithfully his time and then went into the fire insurance business for one year, and in 1892 was appointed chief of police. In 1893 he went to the World's fair and returning accepted a clerkship in the postoffice, and one and one-half years later took the deputy auditorship, where he wroked for four years, then went into the real estate business, and in 1901 was again appointed chief of police, where we find him today, quietly and efficiently discharging his duties. In addition to these enterprises he is interested in stock raising.

In February, 1881, Mr. Langdon married Miss Fannie, daughter of Jacob and Sarah (Shuck) Haines, of Dundee, Oregon, and to this union there have been born the following children: Willis, Mattie, Elma, Gracie and Frances, all going to school. Mrs. Langdon's parents came to Oregon across the plains in 1856, being among the earliest settlers of Oregon. Our subject is one of the substantial and capable men of the county and is secure in the esteem and confidence of all.

LANDON C. IRVINE. On February 6, 1842, in Amherst county, Virginia, to John R. and Lucy (Hobsons) Irvine, was born the gentleman whose name appears above. The father was a merchant and farmer, born in Lynchburg, Virginia, in 1799, and the grandfather of our subject, Samuel Irvine, was born in Dublin, Ireland, and one of the early pioneers of Lynchburg, advising Billy Lynch to start the first store, which, failing to do, Samuel Irvine did himself. At the time of the conflict of 1812 he advised his son, John R., to be ready to enlist, which advice was obeyed, although the lad was but thirteen years of age. Luckily the call did not come. The wife of Samuel Irvine was Mary Rose, born in Amherst county, Virginia, of Scottish descent. The mother of our subject was Lucy Hobsons, born in Bedford county, Virginia, in 1804, and her father was Benjamin Hobsons, who married Miss Moore, both natives of Virginia. Our subject remained at home until nineteen and then joined the Confederate forces and fought under the noted Stonewall Jackson and R. E. Lee. He was in most of the heavy battles, being an artilleryman. At the close of the war he returned to the home place and desolation was spread around. The mother died in 1861 and the father died in 1867. He and his brother and brother-in-law commenced at the bottom again. He soon came to Missouri, landing there in 1867. He settled in Pike county and remained until September 26, 1869, when he came to California, being in and around San Francisco until 1872, when a trip was made to Puget Sound. Not liking the country he started to return but swerved from his course to Latah county and in Latah county he has been since. Mr. Irvine settled on Silver creek on April 1, and in 1876 he bought his present place, two miles northeast from Farmington, which consists of two hundred acres of good land and is one of the best of the county. He has fine improvements, two story house, commodious fruit house, milk cellars and houses, and fine barns. His house and fruit storage building are both supplied, as also the milk house, with fine water piped from a never failing spring, and his premises are up to date in every particular. Mr. Irvine has forty acres of timothy and will seed more. He has fifty acres of orchard, one of the largest in the county, and it is a fine dividend payer. Mr. Irvine assisted to build the stockade at Farmington at the time of the Indian trouble and one of his neighbors was killed by the savages.

The marriage of Mr. Irvine and Miss Adelia, daughter of James F. and Sydnah (Leuty) Ladd, was solemnized on October 26, 1878, in Walla Walla, and they have five children: Fred, Lucy R., Sydnah G., attending normal school at Lewiston; Landonia, attending school; Frances C. The first two and the last are deceased. Mr. Ladd was born in Louisville, Kentucky, on February 19, 1815, and his father was Thomas Ladd. The mother of Mrs. Irvine was born in Ray county, Tennessee, in 1825, and her mother's name was Mary Roddy. Mrs. Irvine was born in Ray county, Tennessee, in April 12, 1858, whence she came to Walla Walla and then to Latah county on June 20, 1875. She has sad recollections of the Civil war as well as her husband. Her brothers and sisters are: Thomas F., in Walla Walla; Mary E., wife of Elliott Perkins, in Spokane; Hannah E., wife of Joel McPherson, in Tennessee; Lida, wife of M. N. Johnson, Charleston, Washington. Mr. Irvine has the following named brothers and sisters: Samuel, in Missouri; Elizabeth M., deceased; Frances, deceased, was the wife of John Pleasants, in Amherst county, Virginia; John H., in Washington; Robert, in Montana. Mr. Irvine is a Mason, and in 1900 he was nominated without his asking for county commissioner, and was promptly elected by an appreciative public. When he asked the Fusionist convention why he was nominated they replied because he was the right kind of a man and could be elected, which was proved at the polls. Previously the county warrants were never at par but he has been enabled with his colleagues to bring up the credit of the county and has served the public well.

THEODORE CLARK. This well known gentleman is one of the leading horticulturists and small fruit growers of the vicinity of Moscow, having labored here for a decade with excellent success, his home being in the southeastern portion of the city. Mr. Clark was born on July 7, 1841, in Van Wert county, Ohio, being the son of Joseph and Nancy (Ankrom) Clark, natives of Ohio. When our subject was three months of age his father died and he was left in the hands of strangers, being raised by them. At the early age of eight years he began to do for himself on the farm, thus learning the hardships and burdens of life while a child. He continued at various employments until April, 1861, when the call came for troops to repel the invasion of Rebellion's minions, and he promptly responded to the first invitation, enlisting in Company D, Twenty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three months, and at the expiration of that time promptly reenlisted in the Seventy-third Ohio Infantry, Company A, for three years, being in the Army of the Potomac. He was wounded in the battle of Bull Run, and again at Gettysburg, and he was one of the noble veterans who fought with courage and intrepidity until the struggle was ended. Being mustered out in June, 1864, at Cincinnati, he went thence to Piatt county, Illinois, and engaged in farming there until 1873, then removed to Iroquois county, the same state, remaining there until 1882, when he again removed, this time to Republic county, Kansas. He bought a farm there and tilled it until 1891, then migrated to the west, settling in Latah county, purchasing a tract of land in the southeastern part of the city of Moscow, where he is residing at the present time.

Mr. Clark was married in Iroquois county, Illinois, in 1874, to Surfroma Grobner, a native of Ohio, and to them were born four children: Thomas K., deceased; Courter, deceased; Grace, and Bertnell.

In March, 1884, Mr. Clark contracted a second marriage, the lady becoming his wife on this occasion being Jennie Maples, and the nuptials were celebrated in Carlyle, Illinois. Mr. Clark is a prominent member of the G. A. R., Major Anderson Post, No. 5. He also affiliates with the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 96, in Belleville, Kansas, being a member of the Rebekah order as well.

ORTON W. BEARDSLEY. Among the prosperous and enterprising agriculturists of Latah county, we must not fail to mention the intelligent and influential gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, since he has wrought out a success here in the line which he has followed that demonstrates his ability; and also he is one of the men who has been selected to handle the responsible affairs of the county, being thus honored by his fellows, a distinction which is in no way undeserved, and the fulfilment of the responsibilities thus incurred are discharged with an acumen, faithfulness and dispatch that demonstrates the ability of the man and conserve the interests of the county.

Orton W. was born at Crystal Lake, McHenry county, Illinois, on July 27, 1861, being the son of Orsemus and Lucinda (Jackman) Beardsley, who are mentioned in another portion of this volume. Our subject remained with his father until twenty years had rolled by and then in 1881 he started for himself, raising stock in Modoc county, California. In the spring of 1884 he came thence to Latah county, purchasing a quarter section of fine land two miles north from Moscow, where he settled and devoted his energies to farming and stock raising. He was rewarded with success, having now a farm of three hundred and fifty acres, well improved and producing abundant returns in crops and having fine buildings, which make it in every respect an up-to-date estate.

The marriage of Mr. Beardsley and Miss Phœbe, daughter of Archibald and Sarah Estes, was celebrated on June 2, 1886, in Latah county. Mrs. Beardsley is a native of Arkansas, and a detailed account of her family appears in another portion of this work. Mr. Beardsley is a member of the Masons, Paradise Lodge, No. 17, while his wife is affiliated with the Presbyterian church. He is identified with the Populist party, and has been since its formation, at the present time serving as county commissioner from his home district. The date of his election was November, 1900. Mr. Beardsley is a man of sound principles, and is dominated by a high sense of honor, being possessed of wisdom and good practical judgment, and he is highly respected by all, being a patriotic citizen and an exemplary man.

WILLIAM CARTER. This well known representative citizen is justly entitled to space in the history of Latah county, since he has labored here for many years, and also because at the time when fratricidal strife lowered over this land he gave himself for the retrievement of the flag from insult and the defense of the beloved institutions of the Union, and fought bravely until the last gun ceased to sound out treason.

Mr. Carter was born in Ashland county, Ohio, on July 24, 1830, being the son of John and Hannah (Figley) Carter. He was taken by his parents to Illinois when quite young, Peoria county being the place, and there he received his education in the country schools, attending them in the winter and working on the parental farm in the summers. This routine continued until he had attained his majority, when he purchased a farm for himself and gave his attention to its cultivation. Five years later he sold out and went to Kansas and there purchased a farm and settled down until 1861, when he quickly responded to the call for men, enlisting in the Sixth Battalion. Six months later he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Missouri Cavalry, serving three years and more until the regiment was mustered out, being in arduous service and participating in the battle of Lexington, Lone Jack, Sibley and several other engagements. At Sibley, the enemy's bullets tore some of the hair from his head, but further than that he was untouched by war's dangers. He was almost constantly in engagement from the time of enlistment until discharged, being among Missouri bushwhackers what time he was not in the other battles mentioned. Soon after being mustered out, in 1865, he crossed the plains and settled in Grande Ronde valley, Oregon, but soon removed to Linn county, the same state. Six years later he came to Whitman county, Washington, where eight or nine years were spent, and then journeyed to Moscow, where he has resided since. For twenty years he has held the office of constable, and for three years has been city councilman, being the incumbent of both offices at the present time. Mr. Carter is active in political matters, being allied with the Republicans, and in 1898, was the only one of that party elected in the county, the Populists gaining the others.

In 1856 occurred the marriage of Mr. Carter and Miss Elizabeth Bruce, daughter of Robert Bruce, of Peoria, Illinois, and ten children were born to them, four of whom are living, as follows: G. W. married to Viola Thurston, living in Moscow and running a dray line; Ray F., single and clerking in the Moter

Wheeler store, where he has been for five years; Emma E., married to N. Haynes, living on a farm in Whitman county: Perry B., single, living with parents and driving delivery wagon for Wolfe & Co. Mr. Carter is a member of the Major Anderson Post of the G. A. R. in Moscow, while Mrs. Carter is a member of the W. R. C. and both belong to the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Carter and William A. Ladd built the Commercial hotel of Moscow, then rented it and finally sold it. Since his birth, which was on the frontier, Mr. Carter has always wrought among the pioneers of the country and he has done his work faithfully and stands well in the estimation of all.

NIELS J. VISBY. Not a few noble and stanch men have come to our borders from the small sea-girt land of Denmark, and they are among the best of those who hold aloft the flag of freedom. As a capable representative of this honored class, we are constrained to mention the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, who is numbered with Latah county's leading farmers, having one of the finest farms in the county, it being located between Moscow and Genesee, and four miles north of the latter town, and being on the rural free delivery, route No. 1. The estate consists of two hundred acres of fertile soil, well tilled and handsomely and tasefully improved with good orchards, buildings, and so forth. This is the family home and it is indeed a scene of thrift and happiness.

Mr. Visby was born in Thisted, Denmark, on December 25, 1837, being the son of Johannes Jensen and Karen Marie (Nelsen) Visby, natives also of the same country, where they spent their days, being now interred in the Thisted cemetery. Our subject received a common school education, and at the early age of fifteen years started for himself. He had a decided talent for music and during the winter months taught in the surrounding country and thus accumulated a goodly sum. In 1860 he enlisted in the army and fought against Germany, serving part of the time as corporal and once being wounded in his right arm, the date being March 17, 1864 at Dopple Bank. After his time for recovering had been spent in the hospital, he rejoined his company and fought until the close of the conflict, being then honorably discharged, the date being 1864. In 1866 he bought a farm and tilled the soil until 1872, when he came to the United States and settled in Michigan, working for a time in the Calumet and Hecla copper mines in that state, then migrated to Moody county, South Dakota, where he spent ten years in the cultivation of the soil and then came to Latah county. He bought a quarter section three miles north from Genesee and sixteen years this was the family home, then he sold it and purchased his present place as described above.

In 1877 Mr. Visby married Miss Oline C., daughter of Martin and Marie Olsen, natives of Denmark. Three children were born to them, Martin B., Johannes C., and one deceased. In 1882, Mrs. Visby passed away and in 1884, Mr. Visby contracted a second marriage, the lady of his choice on this occasion being Olena Johnson, the daughter of John and Jansen Wold. To this happy union there have been born the following children: John O., Karen M., Boord S., Solang A., Emma C., Nellie O., Selmer O., Ludvig M., Viola V., and May A. This worthy couple are members of the Norwegian Lutheran church, and are devout supporters of the faith, being also highly esteemed members of society and patriotic citizens.

ROBERT J. BELL One has but to observe the tidy and excellent premises of the subject of this sketch, which consist of eighty acres of fertile soil one-half mile northeast from Farmington, to realize that the owner is one of the most enterprising and thrifty farmers of the entire county of Latah. Mr. Bell believes that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well, and he practices his belief in a very exemplary manner. Robert J. was born in the county of Perth, Ontario, Canada, on March 17, 1861, being the son of Alexander and Margaret (Parr) Bell. The father was a farmer and merchant in Canada, born in 1833, whose father came from Scotland and mother from Ireland. The mother of our subject was born in Ontario in 1842, and her father, John Parr, was born in England, and her mother in Ireland. Our subject received his education in the excellent schools of Ontario, and at the age of sixteen years came to Manitoba and worked in the Canadian Pacific and one year later he took a homestead and settled to farming in Assiniboia. At the age of twenty-three years he operated a steam pump on the Great Northern, then we find him in Seattle railroading and later in Spokane operating a saw mill engine near there. He went later to Sprague, Washington, and commenced to wipe in the roundnouse and was soon promoted to fireman on a switch engine and then to fireman on the road and after eight years he was running an engine on the road, and at this he continued until 1897, when he quit of his own accord and went to farming, purchasing his present place. In addition, he has a quarter section in Canada. He has fine buildings on his home place and his farm is a veritable model in every respect. Mr. Bell quit the road with a clean record and because he preferred farming.

On October 3, 1894, in Farmington, Washington, occurred the marriage of Mr. Bell and Miss Minnie J., daughter of John W. and Harriet (Parvin) Brink, and they have one child, Minnie, born July 20, 1895. Mr. Brink was born near Chicago, July 23, 1845, and his wife was born in New Jersey, May 12, 1849, and her mother, Mrs. Parvin, still lives in Hastings, Nebraska. Mrs. Bell was born in Bunker Hill, Kansas, on May 12, 1878, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Luella, wife of Charles Moulton, in Farmington; Sarah A., wife of I. S. Stewart, in Farmington; Ora M., wife of William Gumm, in Whitman county; Lila B., wife of Hiram Lance in Wardner, Idaho; John S., in Whitman county. Mr. Bell has the following named brothers and sisters: Eliza J., wife of Fred J. Tripp, in Spokane; Cornelius J., deceased; David, in Wingham, Canada; Marshal J., in Canada; Solomon, engineer on Northern Pacific, living in Spokane; Maggie, deceased; Hiram, deceased; Albert, in Canada; Walter, in Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Bell are members of the Methodist church. Mrs. Bell's father served in the Civil war, enlisting for two years from Illinois. Mr. Bell has fine blooded stock, chickens, cattle, and so forth, and a choice orchard and is one of the most thrifty and up-to-date farmers.

NIELS J. VISBY AND FAMILY.

CHARLES W. YOCKEY. The enterprising gentleman whose name initiates this paragraph is one of the leading men and agriculturists and fruit growers of the county of Latah, being a man of stanch qualities of moral worth, and happily possessed of fine business qualifications, as his possessions abundantly testify.

Mr. Yockey was born in Monroe county, Ohio, on February 7, 1853, the son of Lawrence and Sarah A. (Weaver) Yockey. The father was a native of Germany and died about eight years since, while the mother was a native of Pennsylvania and is still living in Rinard, Illinois. While our subject was a small child of three years, his parents removed to Johnson county, Iowa, and when he was twelve they removed to Wayne county, Illinois. He was educated in the various places where the family lived, and grew up on a farm. When he had reached the age of majority he began farming for himself and for five years he was numbered with the thrifty tillers of the soil in Wayne county, Illinois. It was in 1881 that he came to Latah county, and he soon homesteaded a quarter section five miles south from Troy, where the family home is at the present time. Mr. Yockey has demonstrated himself to be a capable orchardist, having thirty-five acres devoted to choice fruits and he is making a brilliant success in this line, as also he is in all lines in which he operates. He has two acres planted to cherries and it is a goodly sight to see the lucious fruit in ripening. The balance of the orchard is devoted largely to winter apples. Mr. Yockey's residence is the finest in this section, and doubtless the most imposing and beautiful and tastily arranged for both comfort and convenience with beauty, that is in the county of Latah. His whole premises manifest the thrift of the owner and his good judgment is apparent at every turn.

The marriage of Mr. Yockey and Miss Armilda, daughter of Thomas and Rachel (Southerland) Greear, was solemnized in Rinard, Wayne county, Illinois, on February 12, 1874, and they now have three children: Minnie, wife of Zo Krisher, living in Latah county; Myrtle and Lawrence, at home. Mr. Greear was a native of Tennessee and died in Illinois, while his widow is residing with her son. Mr. and Mrs. Yockey are members of the Bethel church on American Ridge, it being a class of the Methodist church, South.

GEORGE W. GALE. No compilation whose purview is to give mention of the leading citizens of Latah county would be complete without an honorable representation of the esteemed and well known gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, and who operates the Del Norte hotel, the leading hostelry in the city, where he manifests the commendable qualities of worth of which he is richly possessed. Mr. Gale was born in Portland, Maine, on October 11, 1859, being the son of James and Ellen (Page) Gale, of Bothwell, Canada, whence they moved to Portland when our subject was young. He was denied the privilege of schools, but made up for that by careful and tenacious study at home in the evenings and by judicious reading. At the age of thirteen he was driving a lumber team, and in 1878 he hired as second cook in a Wisconsin lumber camp. He was an apt pupil and soon had the art well learned and he followed this in the logging camps for fourteen years, and in 1892 took a boarding house where he did business for one year, then he sold that and bought a grocery store where he was found for two years, the location being Washburn, Wisconsin. In 1897 he came to Moscow and took a homestead, and also clerked in the hotel for three years, then went to Everett, Washington. One year later he came back to Moscow and rented the hotel Moscow, where he is doing a good business at the present time. Mr. Gale brings to the business a fund of knowledge gained from practical experience in all departments of the hotel business and he is a host very popular with the traveling public, maintaining a house that is first-class in every particular and that gives good satisfaction, while his untiring care for the welfare and comfort of his guests has won him many friends and patronage that is lasting.

In 1880 Mr. Gale married Miss Hannah L., daughter of George and Katherine (Tynicke) Leslie, of Thorp, Wisconsin, and they have become the parents of three children: Maude M., wife of G. Mix, an implement dealer in the city of Moscow; Mabel L., living at home; James F., with parents. Mr. Gale affiliates with the M. W. A., and the order of Elks, while Mrs. Gale is a member of the R. N. of A.

CHARLES W. McCANN. The enterprise and sagacity of the subject of this sketch is manifest in the manner in which he has labored and handled his business affairs since coming to the west, and he is today one of the substantial property owners of Latah county, having four hundred and eighty acres of fine land three and one-half miles southeast from Farmington. The estate is one of great value both on account of its pristine fertility and because of the excellent manner in which Mr. McCann has improved it, having comfortable buildings and an orchard of twenty-five acres of choice trees. Mr. McCann was born in Ogle county, Illinois, on September 28, 1860, being the son of Richard and Susan (Kidd) McCann. The father was a stone cutter born in Montreal, Canada, in 1832, and died in 1886, while the mother was born in West Virginia, in 1838. Charles W. remained with his parents until he was eighteen years of age, gaining a good education and then he came west, landing first in Sparta, Oregon. He labored there on an irrigating ditch, but on account of the hostilities of the Indians, he was obliged to accompany General Howard to Walla Walla for safety. He there spent three and one-half years at bridge work for the O. R. & N. railroad, learning the trade. In 1881 he went to John Day river, took a preemption and proved up on it and two years later sold it. He continued in the stock business in Walla Walla county until 1891 and then traded stock for a farm in Latah county. He had in 1883-4 taken a trip to Illinois through Arizona, visiting also the New Orleans expedition. In 1897 Mr. McCann sold the half section of land he had bought in Latah county and bought four hundred and eighty acres described above. On account of school facilites, Mr. McCann has removed his family to Farmington, going thence on November 20, 1899.

The marriage of Mr. McCann and Miss Katie, daughter of Elias R. and Isabella (Douglas) Sweet, was solemnized in Spokane county, on January 1, 1887, and they have two children: Leroy O., Gladys. Mr. Sweet is a carpenter, born in Ohio in 1830, and his wife was born in Indiana in 1838. Mrs. McCann was born in Agency City, Iowa, on October 6, 1866, receiving a common school education, and her brothers and sisters are named as follows: Vinn, living at Saint Marys river; Mary, wife of Charles Miller, at Waverly; Anna, wife of John Lathrum, at Oakesdale; William, George, Dee R., at Waverly; May, wife of Albert Long, at Spokane. The brothers and sisters of Mr. McCann are named as follows: Lucy, at Polo, Illinois; Emma, in the same place; John, in Alaska. Mr. McCann affiliates with the Masonic fraternity and the Eastern Star, at Farmington. He was elected mayor of Farmington, but on account of business interests in Latah county did not qualify. He is a Republican, stanch and true, having never swerved and has been central committeeman for six years. Mrs. McCann is a member of the Baptist church.

CHARLES H. GOWER. To the industrious and enterprising gentleman whose name is at the head of this article we grant space for a review of his life's career, being assured that he is one of the substantial and capable men of Moscow and has always manifested moral qualities of intrinsic worth.

Charles H. was born in Janesville, Wisconsin, on February 6, 1862, being the son of George and Eva (Frances) Gower, of Rock county, Wisconsin. In his native city he was favored with a good education and at the age of twenty was out in the battle of life for himself, going first to Kansas where he rented land for a time, farming also his father's land, then went to teaming around Russell, continuing therein for two years when he removed to Janesville, Wisconsin. There he was engaged in raising tobacco for two years when he came to Dayton, Washington, the date being 1889, and for seven years we find him teaming and draying there, after which he repaired to Moscow and embarked in the stage business, operating a line from Moscow to Lewiston and continuing therein for four years when he sold out in 1901 and purchased two lots with their buildings in Moscow, which he still owns.

In 1882 occurred the marriage of Mr. Gower and Miss Sarah, daughter of Frank Russell, and four children were the fruit of this union, as follows, Delbert F., Ella M., Lillie and Etta, all at home. In 1890 Mrs. Gower was called from her home and family by death. In 1892 Mr. Gower contracted a second marriage, the lady being Lulu Ashby, the daughter of George and Jane (Smith) Ashby. Mr. Gower is a member of the M. W. of A. and is well esteemed in the community, being a capable and faithful citizen.

CHARLES W. SHIELDS. There is no better known business man in the county of Latah than the subject of this sketch and he is one of the largest property owners as well, having exerted in the last decade a wonderful influence in the business realm of the county and today being one of the firm of the Moscow Hardware Company, which is the largest establishment of its kind in this part of the country. Referring more particularly to the personal history of Mr. Shields, we note that he was born in Davidson county, North Carolina, July 25, 1861, being the son of Henry H. and Mariam M. (Hill) Shields, natives of North Carolina and farmers of that state. Our subject's father died in the battle of Winchester in the Civil war, in 1864, being in the Confederate army, and the mother died in 1863 and is buried in Forsythe, North Carolina. After these sad events, our subject was taken by his grandparents, remaining with them until their death, he being seventeen years of age. He had then finished the public school course and at once set himself to work his way through the college course. In 1883 he accepted a position as bookkeeper with the Holt Manufacturing Company, cotton dealers, and spent two years, then resigned to accept a position in a tobacco firm in Winston, North Carolina, where he remained until 1887, then came to Moscow, engaging with M. J. Shields, taking charge of the office work, and in 1890 went into partnership with his employer. They did the largest hardware and implement business in the county, and this arrangement continued until 1897. Then the partnership was dissolved and two years later, when the business was settled up, our subject took as partner, C. A. Frantz, formerly of Boise, and the firm is known as the Moscow Hardware Company, and in addition to general hardware they carry building material and plumbing goods, running a plumbing shop also. They have commodious quarters, and carry the largest stock of the kind in the entire county, and do a mammoth business, which is entirely merited by their upright methods and the capable manner in which they handle the affairs of the company. Our subject and M. J. Shields were the founders and are now owners of the Moscow electric light plant, the latter being president and C. W. Shields secretary and treasurer. This plant was started in September, 1889. In company with W. L. Payne, our subject has three hundred and twenty acres of land in the edge of the city and handles much stock. In the days in which he labored with M. J. Shields, they had a large saw mill that supplied much of the lumber which builded a great portion of Moscow.

Mr. Shields married Miss Mary McConnell on August 2, 1893, at Moscow. Mrs. Shields is a daughter of R. D. and Ann (Nickle) McConnell, and a niece of Governor McConnell. Her parents were natives of Michigan and came to this country in 1888. Mr. Shields is a member of the M. W. of A., Moscow Camp. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Shields is one of the most eminently successful men of the county, and the reason is evident from his excellent ability, untiring care of the details of business, wise management of the larger interests, and keen foresight, while his affability and genial personality have won him friends on every hand.

HON. ALBERT J. GREEN. This able attorney-at-law and estimable citizen of Latah county is a living example of what pluck, perseverance, and an indomitable will can accomplish. He has achieved a brilliant success in various lines, having wrought it out by his own endeavors, while he has also done much for his county in many ways. Mr. Green was born in Tipton county, Indiana, on November 1, 1852, being the son of William and Mary E. (Chodric) Green. In the spring of 1853 the family migrated to Appanoose county, Iowa, and farmed there until 1862 when they removed to Sacramento, California, and thence to Lane county, Oregon. The parents removed from that place to Rathdrum, Idaho, and there the father died in 1901. The mother is still living there. Our subject remained with his parents, receiving a good education, until he was twenty-four years of age, then married and came to Whitman county, taking a homestead where he engaged in farming until 1885, also taught school and took a leading part in the politics of the county and its advancement. He also had paid much attention to reading law until that time and in 1885 moved his family to Moscow and established a home there. Then he went to Chicago, where he entered the Union College of Law, graduating therefrom in 1887 and then returned home. The following spring he was elected city attorney, being the first of the newly incorporated city of Moscow. In the fall he was elected prosecuting attorney of the county of Latah, being the first incumbent of this office, the county having just been organized. In the fall of 1890 Mr. Green was elected to the state legislature to represent Latah and Kootenai counties, it being the first legislature of the state. He was chairman of the ways and means committee and was a prominent figure in the house, while also he secured the appropriation which enabled the new university buildings to be erected. In 1892 he resumed the active practice of law, and soon, 1895, he was appointed secretary of the board of regents of the state university. In 1897 he closed his office in Moscow and went to Dawson, but as it was Canadian territory he was unable to practice law, so went to mining with rich success, returning home in the fall of the same year. The next spring he took his family to Dawson and remained there two years, prosecuting his mining with generous returns. In the fall of 1899 he went to Nome, where he practiced law and also did mining, coming out on the Valincia, the last boat out, in the fall of 1901. He has now brought his family to Moscow with the intention of making his home here. Mr. Green will doubtless make some more trips to Nome to attend to his mining interests there.

The marriage of Mr. Green and Miss Mary E., daughter of Allen and Rachel (Robinson) Bond, and a native of Lane county, Oregon, was solemnized on December 10, 1876, in Lane county. Mrs. Green's parents were natives of Indiana and came to Oregon in 1853, settling on a donation claim near Eugene, where the mother died in September, 1900. The father is still living there, having mercantile interests in Irving and being one of the representative men of Lane county, which also he represented in the state legislature. Mr. Green is fraternally affiliated with the I. O. O. F., Moscow Lodge, No. 31, and with the B. P. O. E., Lodge No. 249, being past exalted ruler in this last order.

ANDREW E. HALLIDAY. This well known and representative agriculturist and fruit grower of Latah county, has also a good reputation as an educator, having filled the responsible position of instructing the young in different places while in district thirty-four of this county, he taught steadily for eight winters, making a record for efficiency and faithfulness that is seldom exceeded, and that marks him a man of capabilities, integrity, and thoroughness, coupled with a fine fund of erudition, and dominated with sagacity and executive force.

Mr. Halliday was born in Clinton county, Indiana, on December 26, 1861, being the son of Samuel B. and Emma E. (Avery) Halliday. The father and mother were also natives of Indiana, the mother dying in 1864, but the father remains at the same place a respected and prominent citizen. Our subject gained his primary education from the indispensable common schools and then completed a course in the Ladoga Normal school at Ladoga, Indiana, and the famous school at Lebanon, Ohio. He gave himself to teaching for three years subsequent to his literary course, and then, in 1886, he came to the west. He first pre-empted forty acres north from Troy, later selling it and in 1888, he homesteaded where the family residence is at the present time, six miles south from Troy. He now has two hundred and forty acres of fine land, well improved, and sixty acres of this estate is devoted to a fine orchard. He has one thousand pear trees and the balance of the mammoth orchard is planted to choice winter apples.

The marriage of Mr. Halliday and Miss Mary E., daughter of Frederick and Paulina (Gotch) Hinst, was solemnized on American Ridge on August 21, 1887, and they have become the parents of the following children: Fred E., Clarence, deceased, Mary Audrey, Lylyan N., and Irl. Mr. Hinst lives in this county, north from Cornwall. Mr. Halliday is at present clerk of the board of school directors of his home district and he is an ardent advocate of first-class schools and he has done much for the advancement of the cause of education. Fraternally Mr. Halliday is affiliated with the M. W. A., and the W. of W., Lodge No. 248, both at Troy.

WILLIAM W. YOUNG. The well known and popular gentleman whose name is at the head of this article is one of the substantial men of Latah county, having demonstrated his ability to handle successfully his own private business enterprises and also discharge the duties of public life which his fellows called him to, and it is with pleasure that we accord him representation in this volume. He was born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on October 10, 1853, being the son of Charles M. and Veleria A. (Mahan) Young. The father was a farmer and born in Lafayette county, Missouri, on September 11, 1827, and is still living in Oregon, while the mother was born in Albermarle county, Virginia, in 1837 and died in 1870. The parents moved from the old home place in Missouri to San Francisco in 1873, and thence to Sonoma county and then to Santa Clara county and later we find them in Mendocino county, and our subject worked in a sawmill and then later in the quick silver mines in Napa county. He finished his education in the Napa Collegiate Institute by a two years' course. In the spring of 1879 he went thence to Colusa farms and operated a threshing machine for an old schoolmate, then spent a time in San Francisco after which in 1883 he went to Los Angeles and there sowed ten acres of alfalfa and planted six thousand grape vines. Six years later he sold this land, which cost thirty dollars per acre, for one hundred and twenty dollars per acre. He made a trade for his present place and came thither, the same being a quarter section of good land two and one-half miles southeast from Farmington, which is well improved and handled in a skillful manner. He has one of the finest barns in the entire county and a choice orchard, and this place has been his home since his residence in the county. Mr. Young has brothers and sisters as follows, Jefferson D., living in Whitman county and owns one-half section of good land; Mary E., wife of John H. Crawford and living in Oregon; Alexander, deceased; Iva L., wife of John H. Smith, living in Missouri. The father of our subject was a soldier in the Confederate army. Our subject is always interested in political matters and has always been a Democrat until recently, and now he laconically remarks that in politics he is an American citizen. In the fall of 1894 he was nominated against his wish by the Populist party for county commissioner and without campaigning he was elected, running ahead of his ticket, and then he set himself to fit himself for the office, and so well did he succeed that he has been known as the attorney general by his associates. Mr. Young has refused the office of justice of the peace several times. He is zealous in the cause of education and respected and esteemed by all.

ARCHIE B. ESTES, deceased. We are pleased to grant to the representative and esteemed gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article a memorial in the abiding chronicles of this county, since he was one of the real builders of the county and wrought always with wisdom and enterprise, leaving a record behind him untarnished and bright.

Mr. Estes was born March 2, 1828, near Nashville, Tennessee, being the son of Thomas and Martha Estes, natives of North Carolina, who were farmers of Tennessee and later spent twenty-four years in the state of Arkansas in the same occupation. Until he was twenty-one years of age our subject was occupied with his father on the farm and in acquiring a good education, then in the memorable year of 1849, moved by the rumors of gold in the regions of California, he came thither and engaged for two years in the pursuit of mining. After this time he returned to Arkansas and settled down in Sharp county and engaged in farming until 1874, at which time he came to Idaho, with ox and mule teams, consuming six months on the journey and homesteaded his present place four miles north from Moscow. Here he devoted his energies and time to the development of the estate and in the noble efforts of upbuilding the county, which was organized after that date. He also taught the first public school in the Moscow district. On February 28, 1890, the angel of death summoned Mr. Estes to the world beyond. Mr. Estes was a noble and consistent Christian and had lived a life devoted to the service of the Savior of men, and his death was but the passing of a soul to the joys awaiting on the other side. The remains were interred in the Moscow cemetery.

A widow, Mrs. Sarah Estes, who was married to Mr. Estes in Sharp county, Arkansas, in November, 1856, and nine children, Calvin, Laura, John, Fannie, Thomas, Jasper, Phoebe, Mary and William, are the immediate relatives left to mourn the demise of the good man of whom we write. Mrs. Estes' parents were Calvin and Nancy (Crumback) Pine, natives respectively of New York and Pennsylvania. Mrs. Estes lives on the old home place and her son, Jasper, is attending to the culture of the farm. She, as also was her husband, is a member of the Baptist church, and lives a devoted life in Christian walk, spending now the golden years of a long life in the quietness of the old homestead, a light to all, and esteemed and admired by a large circle of friends.

NORMAN A. STANFORD. Any list of the leading citizens of Latah county would be sadly deficient were there failure to add the name of the subject of this sketch and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to chronicle the salient points in his career.

Norman A. was born in Clay county, Illinois, on November 21, 1856, being the son of David and Mary A. (Miller) Stanford. The father was a preacher and also handled a farm. He labored in the spiritual realm among the South Methodists and about thirty-two years ago he was called hence to his reward. The mother was born in Virginia and died in Illinois about five years since. Our subject was reared on a farm and educated in the schools of his native place and remained there until 1880 when he migrated to Sangamon county, Illinois. He took up farming near Springfield and remained there until 1883 when he decided to come west. He landed in Idaho in due time and sought out a pre-emption about three miles north from his present place and the following year he took his present home place as a homestead. He now has three hundred and twenty acres of land five miles south of Troy. The estate is well improved, has a good orchard of seven acres of winter apples, comfortable buildings, and Mr. Stanford is one of the substantial men of the county. He handles two hundred acres under the plow and the balance of the land to pasture and so forth.

The marriage of Mr. Stanford and Miss Lily B., daughter of William and Catherine (Riggles) Kitley, was solemnized on December 9, 1884, in Moscow, and to them have been born four children, Eva, Bessie, Otto, deceased, and Otis A. Mrs. Stanford was born in Clay county, Illinois, and came west with her parents in 1883. The mother is deceased, and the father is living north from Moscow. Mr. and Mrs Stanford are members of the Bethel church, it being a class of the Methodist church, South. They are worthy and good people and stand well in the community, being kind neighbors and dominated by sound principles and integrity.

HENRY ERICHSON. This representative and well known business man of Moscow is at the present time the leading photographer of that city, having a fine gallery on one of the principal streets and doing a lucrative business, and being a man of capabilities and excellent qualities of moral worth. Mr. Erichson was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, on December 21, 1856, being the son of Andrew and Anna Erichson, natives of Germany. The father was a wagon maker and farmer and remained in his native land until the time of his death, 1876, the mother having died a decade previous. In 1871, in his fifteenth year, our subject came to America, going first to Ann Arbor, Michigan, and remaining there or in that vicinity for four years. He gained a good education during his younger years, and also became proficient in the profession which he follows now. In 1875, he went to California, remaining in Red Bluff for six months engaged in the photographic business, having a gallery of his own and for nine years traveling over the entire northwest, in the photographic business. In 1884, Mr. Erichson settled in Moscow, and at once opened up a gallery, where he has done business since, now having one of the best established businesses in the county. Mr. Erichson is a leader in the art of photography and has devoted himself to it with energy and assiduity and has wrought out a commendable success.

The marriage of Mr. Erichson and Miss Jennie, daughter of James and Ellen (Smith) Fairbanks, natives of Scotland, was solemnized on November 2, 1885, and they have become the parents of two children, Henry Oran and Ward Andrew. Mrs. Erichson is a native of California and comes from the famous Scotch Fairbanks family. Mr. Erichson is a member of the K. O. T. M., Perkins Tent, No. 12; of the Women of Woodcraft, Circle No. 192; W. of W., Mt. Moscow, No. 228; Brotherhood of American Yoemen, No. 860. Mr. and Mrs. Erichson are members of the Presbyterian church and are highly esteemed in society. Mr. Erichson is a member of the city council, and is always interested in the political affairs of the county and state. He owns the building in which he does business and also a fine residence which is the family home.

Mr. Erichson is president of the Photographers Association of the Northwest and is a popular and leading man in his profession, not only with the public but among his professional associates as well.

HON. WILLIAM H. LEASURE. The subject of this sketch, doubtless the largest farmer in the county of Latah, is accorded representation in the history of his county both because of his business ability and success as well as because of his stanch qualities of real worth and uprightness, being one of the leading men of the county and esteemed and admired by all.

William H. Leasure was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, on September 28, 1845, being the son of George and Elizabeth (Crofford) Leasure, who crossed the plains from that state to Marion county, Oregon, in 1851, settling on French Prairie. The mother died soon after this and the father died in 1874, having labored faithfully as a blacksmith and agriculturist. The school facilities in that new country were limited and our subject had scanty opportunity to learn from books, but wisely improved all he had. In 1864, he went on foot from the home farm to Boise, Idaho, crossing the summits of two mountain ranges in the dead of winter, paying one dollar and fifty cents for each meal and sleeping in blankets wherever night overtook him. He worked in the mines about Boise for one year and then returned to the farm, assisting in caring for the younger members of the family and operating the farm. Three years later he started for Boise again, and then stopped to work in a saw mill for eighty dollars per month, later returning to Benton county and buying one half interest in a tannery, which he sold two years afterward and purchased a band of sheep. He started with a thousand and five years later sold six thousand. Then he came to Moscow, buying a quarter section and adding by purchase until he has a magnificent estate of one thousand acres, where he gives his attention to raising grain and good draft horses. He has been blessed with excellent success, having as high as twenty-five thousand bushels of grain to market in one year, besides fruit and vegetables and stock. Mr. Leasure rightly considers the soil about Moscow the very best of the famous Palouse country.

In 1874, occurred the marriage of Mr. Leasure and Miss Nancy L., daughter of George and Lucinda (Ligit) Ross, of Benton county, Oregon, who crossed the plains in 1853. Three children were born to this union, Frank W., married and living on farm; Effie L., married and living in Grangeville, Idaho; Lilly, single, living with parents and attending the university where she is making a commendable record. In the political affairs of the county, Mr. Leasure has always been active, and his popularity is attested in that when he was nominated for the legislature on the Peoples ticket against John Paulson, Republican, Mr. Leasure being also endorsed by the Democrats, he won the day by a large majority. And it may be said, that Mr. Leasure has always fought for the man and not for the name of the party. Mrs. Leasure is a member of the Christian church. It is with pleasure that we have been enabled to epitomize the career of this capable and efficient business man, being assured that his life of enterprise and integrity entitled him to a permanent place in the annals of the county, where he has labored wisely and long for its upbuilding and advancement.

JENNIE PAULSON. It is quite in accord with the purview of this volume that representation should be granted to the estimable lady whose name initiates this paragraph, since she has been a resident of the county for some time and has maintained a bearing and position quite commensurate with her rare endowments, being highly esteemed by all.

La Crosse, Wisconsin, is her birthplace and A. R. and Jane (Andrew) Olsen her parents. The father still lives at Cashton, Wisconsin. Our subject received her education from the schools of her native city and at the age of fifteen was married to John Paulson, a hotel keeper of that city. Two children were born to this union, Elmer M. Paulson, attending business college in Moscow: Mabel H. E., attending the university. In 1880, Mr. and Mrs. Paulson moved to Lewiston where they remained for two years and then went onto a homestead seven miles south from Moscow, which was then but a hamlet, the streams of the county also being unbridged and all trips were made with the inconvenience of fording them. Thrift and good management brought success to the family and soon the estate began to grow by purchase until it is now of the fine proportions of five hundred and sixty acres, yielding as high as twelve thousand bushels per year. Mr. Paulson was a man of activity and energy and took a leading part in the affairs of the county, holding many offices of trust, and being ever characterized with faithfulness and efficiency. Mrs. Paulson is a member of the Rebekahs, No. 15, and also affiliates with the Methodist church. In addition to the fine estate which is well improved and adorned with fine and convenient buildings, she has one of the most elegant homes in the city, being a structure of modern architectural design of fifteen rooms and tastefully furnished. Mrs. Paulson is a woman of gracious personality and presides with dignified grace over the handsome home, which is a center of refined hospitality and she holds with becoming sagacity and modesty her position among the social leaders of Moscow.

FRANK L. LEONARD. One mile southeast from the thriving town of Farmington, resides the subject of this sketch, owning there a fine farm of one hundred and twenty acres, and just south another farm of one quarter section. He has a comfortable home, a good orchard and raises diversified crops, being a thrifty and enterprising farmer and substantial citizen. He was born in Boone county, Illinois, on February 7, 1860, being the son of Jonathan F. and Fannie L. (Nettleton) Leonard; the father was a farmer, born in New York, in 1832, and died August 28, 1890, while the mother was born in 1837, in the Empire state, and her grandfather, Danforth Nettleton, lives in Whitman county. The children of the family, besides our subject, are Leroy, deceased; Byron C., in Whitman county; Effie, wife of W. E. Thompson, in Whitman county; George A., also in Whitman county. Our subject was brought to Osage county, Kansas, by his parents when he was six years of age. He was reared there and gained his education from the public schools and remained with his parents until they came to Whitman county in 1889, the next year being the date when he started for himself. The father bought a farm in Whitman county and remained there until the time of his death. Our subject went to work for the different ranchers and then bought his present home place, which he has handled in a skillful manner since that time, being one of the prominent farmers of the vicinity.

Mr. Leonard married Miss Sadie, daughter of Luther and Almira (Stearns) Thompson, in Whitman county, Washington, on July 13, 1893, and one child has been born to them, Mildred E. Mr. Thompson was born in Newfield, York county, Maine, in 1832, and his parents, James and Sarah (Moore) Thompson, were born in the same place and the fathers of this couple were soldiers in the Revolution. Mrs. Leonard was born in Newfield, Maine, on July 15, 1859, and was educated in the common schools. She came with her parents to Kansas in 1878, and she has taught school for fourteen years. Mrs. Leonard's mother was born in Malden, Massachusetts, and raised in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and the parents of this lady were born in Newfield, Maine, and the great-grandmother of Mrs. Leonard was named Hill. Mrs. Leonard has brothers and sisters as follows, James, deceased; William E., in Whitman county; Leroy, Osage City, Kansas; Luther, there also; Marian, wife of O. J. Swanson, in Blackwell, Oklahoma; Ethel, wife of N. B. Rettinger, near Bossburg, Washington; Guy, deceased. Mr. Leonard affiliates with the W. W. at Farmington. Two of his uncles on his mother's side fought in the Union army and one gave his life for his country.

JAMES T. WILSON. This gentleman is one of the leading stock fanciers of the northwest, and owns some of the finest stock that has ever been exhibited here. His farm is about one mile east from Moscow, which is his headquarters, and he is well known throughout the entire region, both for the success he has achieved in the line mentioned as well as for the real qualities of moral worth that are exhibited in his daily walk.

James T. Wilson was born in Rockcastle, Kentucky, on February 13, 1850, being the son of Charles and Mary A. (Wylie) Wilson, who removed to Carthage, Hancock county, Illinois, while the son was a child. There he was favored with a good high school education, and at the age of nineteen went to Kansas, where he soon took a pre-emption and gave his attention to farming for two years, when he removed to Stockton, California, and engaged in the stock and dairying business for one year. Then he repaired to San Luis Obispo, in the same state, and took up the dairying business for fourteen years. He finally sold this business and went to Kansas, farming for two years, then removed to Fort Scott, taking up the wholesale flour and feed business, after which he went to Atchison county and took up the life of a stock fancier. Then he removed to Moscow, purchasing eighty acres as stated above and this has been his headquarters for his business since. He also owns a quarter section four miles northwest from Moscow, which is being stocked and put in shape for a fine stock fancier's operations. Mr. Wilson has the finest English Shire horse in the west, also a magnificent Shorthorn bull, thoroughbred, which are for stock purposes, and he also has some good Poland China hogs, and he usually has a limited number of fine animals for sale. It is worthy of credit to Mr. Wilson, that he has labored so faithfully and well for the advancement of the stock interests of the county, and surely he has done much in this line, being recognized as one of the leading stockmen in the country.

In 1881 Mr. Wilson married Miss Laura Grewell, and one child was born to them, Claude S., now about to graduate from the high school. In 1884 Mrs. Wilson died, being deeply mourned by all who knew her. On May 25, 1888, Mr. Wilson married again, Miss Julia, daughter of Fred and Sarah Loring, of Carthage, Illinois, becoming his bride, and to bless the union, two children have been born, Ruth, going to school, and the other deceased. Mr. Wilson is a member of the M. W. A. and his wife of the R. N. A., and they both affiliate with the Methodist church, being stanch supporters of their faith, and valuable members of society.

JOHN J. HEICK. Among the representative agriculturists and substantial citizens of Latah county, we must not fail to mention him whose name appears above, and who has labored here before the organization of Latah county for the development of nature's wilds and the upbuilding of the country. In the little land of Denmark, whose sturdy and sagacious citizens have maintained a separate state among the great powers of Europe for an indefinite time, the subject of this brief review was born, the date being July 17, 1853, the place, Agerskov, and his parents, John and Annie (Bunedesen) Heick, natives of the same country, and occupied in farming. Our subject was educated in the schools of his place, and at the age of sixteen years went out from the parental roof to undertake the battle of life for himself, being occupied in working for wages on the neighboring farms until 1875, when he was twenty-two years of age, then embarked for America. He first settled in Chicago, and one year later went to California and took up farming for one and one-half years in Monterey county. Thence he migrated to Yamhill county, Oregon, and from that place came to Whitman county, Washington. In the fall of 1877, he homesteaded his present place, three miles north from Moscow and there he has bestowed his labors in producing the fruits of the field and in raising stock, with the success that properly belongs to thrift and enterprise and wisely directed efforts. He has good improvements and a fine five-acre orchard.

Mr. Heick was married in Latah county, on May 7, 1881, to Mary E., a native of Oregon, and daughter of Henry M. and Pauline Rogers, mention of whom is made in this volume. To this worthy couple were born the following children, Cora, Chester A., Rena and Ruth. Mr. Heick is a member of the A. O. U. W., and is one of the substantial and progressive men, taking an active interest in the political affairs of the county and the welfare of all, while commendable sagacity has been displayed in the management of his business interests.

JAMES L. MILLER. As a pioneer of this section of the west, as a farmer and stockman and especially as a hotel man, the subject of this sketch is well known and he now operates one of the best houses in the city of Moscow, the Commercial Hotel, where he does a thriving business and merits the rich patronage that he receives, because of his affability and careful attention to the comfort of his guests.

Mr. Miller was born in Dauphin county, Pennsylvania, on October 3, 1845, being the son of Joseph and Catherine (Chive) Miller, of Pennsylvania. His education was received in the common schools of his native place and at the age of twenty-one he started in life for himself, working first on his father's farm and in the vicinity until he became desirous of seeing the west and then he started to Iowa, whence in 1875 he came to Portland, remaining there one and one-half years. The next move was to Colfax, Washington, and from there he went to Palouse, where he built the first hotel of the place, naming it the Pioneer. This was in the fall of 1877 and in 1881 he sold out and removed to Cove, Idaho, thence to Princeton, where he took land and later added by purchase until he had a fine large farm. This was his home until February, 1900, when he traded the land for the Commercial Hotel in Moscow, where he is installed at the present time. The building is eligibly situated and has forty bedrooms, besides the living rooms, offices, dining room and cuisine. The establishment is handled with skill and is one of the popular places of the country.

Mr. Miller was married in 1873, on March 6, to Miss Mary J., daughter of John A. and Experience (Redford) Davis, of Indiana, and to them eight children have been born. Alfred H., married to Emma McCoy and living in Moscow; James L., living in Everett, Washington; George O., at home with his parents; Joseph L., married to Venia McCoy and living in Moscow; Winifred, deceased; Sanford L., attending school; Pearl B., going to school; an infant deceased. Mr. Miller takes an active part in the local politics and affairs of the community, being always on the side of advancement and progress. He is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and is highly esteemed by his fellows, and his commendable manner in handling his business affairs has placed him in a substantial position of competence.

JAMES R. STRONG is at present holding the responsible position of probate judge of Latah county, where he discharges with efficiency and faithfulness the duties that devolve upon him. He was born in Sullivan, Ashland county, Ohio, on September 24, 1849, being the son of Oren R. and Amanda (Gibbs) Strong, natives respectively of New York and Illinois. The father farmed in Ohio, Illinois, and Kansas, then served three and one half years in the Fourth Missouri Cavalry, Union army, for his country, after which he retired to farm life in Missouri. Atchison county, that state, was the scene of his endeavors as a farmer and dairyman until 1876, when he removed to Kansas, and in 1892, came to Idaho, settling in Latah county, but now has retired from active life and lives at Garfield, Washington. The subject of this sketch remained with his father until twenty-one years had rolled by, then engaged in farming for himself in Fremont county, Iowa. In 1876 he sold out there and went to Illinois, being married in that state, then repaired to Riley county, Kansas, where his father dwelt. Eight years were spent there as salesman in a general merchandise establishment, and in 1890, we find him journeying to Idaho. He settled in the northern part of Latah county where he has a good farm at the present time. He taught school for some time and then entered the lumber business, being eight years thus occupied. Then he was called by the voice of the people to the office of probate judge of the county, where he is now filling his second term with acceptability. His residence is in the city of Moscow.

On December 15, 1876, Mr. Strong married Miss Mary M. Putman, a native of Illinois, the nuptials occurring in Canton, Fuller county. The fruit of this happy union is as follows: Alvah, Eunice, Ettie, Alice. Mrs. Strong's parents were George C. and Charlotte (Crosthwaite) Putman, farmers of Illinois. Mr. Strong is a member of the I. O. O. F. Mrs. Strong is affiliated with the Methodist church.

JOSEPH R. COLLINS. The subject of this sketch is one of the most popular citizens of Latah county, having demonstrated his ability and integrity in a successful and active business career within its precincts, and his faithfulness and efficiency in discharging in a commendable manner the duties that devolved upon him from the public offices that have been committed to his care by the people. Mr. Collins is a native of Union county, South Dakota, being born on April 12, 1868, to Lycurgus H. and Margaret S. (Wood) Collins. The parents came to that section in 1859, settling where Elk Point is now, and in 1877, they came to this county, bringing the subject of this sketch. The first winter was spent in fort Crumrine west of Moscow, and in the following spring the father took up farming in Whitman county, Washington. Joseph R. assisted his father on the farm and labored assiduously in the acquisition of an education, being successful in both occupations. After reaching his majority, he was engaged in buying wheat through the Palouse country until 1894, then he came to Juliaetta, this county, and there established himself in the mercantile business, handling a general line, also farm implements and grain. He was successful from the beginning and made a record for business that was commendable, and his patronage continued to grow until he decided to sell, which was in the early part of 1899, and in November of that year he was elected sheriff of Latah county on the Republican ticket against M. Driscoll, of Genesee. He made a fine officer, carrying the same uprightness and energy into the discharge of the public duties entrusted to him that was characteristic of him in his own private business operations. He has won friends from every part of the county and his

JAMES R. STRONG.

JOSEPH R. COLLINS.

ELMINA E. FRY.

MRS. MATTIE HEADINGTON.

OSCAR LARSON.

BENJAMIN J. JONES

sound principles, good ability, discretion, and faithfulness are deserving of the encomiums bestowed and the honors given by the franchises of the people.

Mr. Collins was married in Colfax, Washington, on April 6, 1893, the lady then becoming his wife being Miss Avis E., daughter of J. A. Hastings, and a native of California. To this happy couple there have been born the following offspring: Harold F. and Kenneth H. Mr. Collins is a member of the K. of P., Eureka Lodge, No. 24; of the W. of W., Clearwater Camp, No. 203; and of the Moscow Circle, No. 192, Women of Woodcraft. Mr. Collins is a good citizen, a thorough and keen business man, and a highly respected member of society.

OSCAR LARSON. Descended from the world wide famous stock which first discovered the new world, the subject of this article has demonstrated the force of his nature in the admirable work which he has accomplished in Latah county, being a leader among the business men, while also he has discharged the public trusts imposed upon him by the franchises of the people, in a manner befitting the high honor of his personality and the commendable characteristics constantly bestowed by him.

Oscar was born in Waseca county, Minnesota, on September 5, 1860, being the son of John and Christina (Peterson) Larson, natives of Sweden, who came to this country in 1853, settling first in Indiana and then removing to the above place in Minnesota. The mother died in October, 1900, but the father is still living at the home place. Our subject received a good education and assisted his father on the farm until he had arrived at twenty-four years of age, then went onto a farm for himself, laboring until 1887, then migrated to Moscow, where he engaged as salesman in a general merchandise establishment. In 1889 he went into business with O. A. Johnson at Moscow, continuing in the same until 1892, when he organized the Vollmer Milling and Mercantile Company, establishing himself at Troy, Idaho. In 1898, Mr. Larson was called by the franchise of the people to accept the office of county clerk, auditor, and recorder, and for four years he was found in the efficient and faithful discharge of the duties thus incumbent upon him, all being done to the entire satisfaction of an intelligent public. In 1899, Mr. Larson sold out his interests in the business at Troy, to his partner, Mr. Johnson, and is at the present time living in his elegant residence in the city of Moscow. Mr. Larson has a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres seven miles west from Moscow, and he gives his attention to the superintending of this.

The marriage of Mr. Larson and Miss Hilda M. Larson, a native of Sweden, was celebrated in Waseca county, Minnesota, on June 4, 1884, and they have become the parents of three children, Esther E., Elsie C. and J. Clarence. Mr. and Mrs. Larson are members of the Lutheran church and are among the most substantial and popular citizens of the county.

BENJAMIN J. JONES. One of the efficient county officers of Latah county, a capable business man, being engaged in general farming and stock raising, the subject of this article is well known throughout the county, and deserves a place among the real builders of the county in its history. His birth was in Yadkin county, North Carolina, and the date was April 1, 1865, his parents being Benjamin F. and Mary (Chauser) Jones, natives of the same state, his ancestors for four generations being prominent and capable citizens also of the Old North state. Our subject remained with his father until 1888, when he came to the west, settling in Latah county. Shortly after his advent here, he engaged with the O. R. & N. Company, remaining six months in their employ, then he accepted the management of a sawmill company, and for six years he wrought steadily there. In 1895, he purchased forty acres of his present farm; in 1896 one hundred and sixty acres; in 1899, forty acres; in 1900, two hundred acres; in 1901, three hundred and twenty acres. It is an estate of seven hundred and sixty acres, eighteen miles north from Moscow, being composed of fine farming and timber land. Here he gave his attention to general farming and raising stock with creditable success, until November, 1900, when his name appeared on the Republican ticket as assessor and tax collector for Latah county, and the people of the county promptly elected him to fill that position. He is engaged in this labor at the present time, having transferred his residence to the county seat.

On October 14, 1895, Mr. Jones married Miss Eva Johnson, a native of Missouri, whose parents died when she was very young. At the time of her marriage she was living with a married sister in this county. They have become the parents of two children, Opal and Genevieve. Mrs. Jones is a member of the Christian church and Mr. Jones affiliates with the W. of W., Palouse Camp, No. 97. Mr. Jones is a capable and good man, a kind and genial neighbor, an efficient public officer, and is highly esteemed by all, and has manifested a commendable sagacity and thrift in all of his business affairs.

HENRY HOWELL. The subject of this article is one of the doughty pioneers and intrepid frontiersmen who beat back the savages and gave this country to the redemption of civilization, being also himself one who has wrought for its progress and development with wise and vigorous labors. He resides five miles southeast from Farmington, where he has a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres of good land, well improved. Mr. Howell was born in East Tennessee in 1842, the son of Duke and Margaret (Loomis) Howell. The father was a tailor and native of New York, while the mother was born near Knoxville, Tennessee, and her parents were Henry and Lizzie Loomis. The other children of their family were Samuel, in Tennessee; Sarah, wife of William Owens; Harriett, wife of Alex Carnes; Nancy, all in Tennessee.

Our subject remained in his native state until thirteen, when he enlisted in the regular army and was sent across the plains into Nevada, then to Fort Craig, New Mexico, where two years were spent. The next move was to Fort Thorn, on the Rio Grande river, whence he went to Fort Tehone, California, and then to Walla Walla, Washington, and was discharged one year after his arival. At the breaking out of the war he enlisted in Company F, First Oregon Infantry, and served until the 20th of July, 1866. He was engaged in fighting the Nez Perces and Couer d'Alene Indians. Following this service, he started for Tennessee but stopped at Portland and returned to The Dalles, whence he went to Vancouver and thence to Linn county, Oregon. He worked out there and then bought land and farmed until 1882, when he sold and came to Latah county. He took a homestead and lived on it for twelve years and then bought his present place, which has been the family home since that time.

On September 18, 1875, Mr. Howell married Miss Margaret, daughter of Jackson and Elizabeth (Witten) Queener, and to them have been born seven children, Elizabeth, deceased; Mary, in British Columbia; Anna, in British Columbia; William, in British Columbia; Charles, at home; Eva, wife of Clay Noble, living near Tekoa; Clabe, at home. Mr. Queener was born in Tennessee in 1814, and his wife was born in the same state in 1818, and her parents were Elijah and Sarah (Stover) Whitten. Mrs. Howell has brothers and sisters named as follows, Albert, deceased; Martha, wife of Joseph Hill, in Nez Perces county; Mary, deceased; Hulda, wife of Benton Hill, at Kendrick; James, at St. Maries; William, in Oregon; George, also in Oregon; Sarah, wife of John Morris, in Oregon; Claburn, in Oregon; Bell, wife of Charles Caldwell, in Latah county. Mr. Howell is a member of the G. A. R. and his wife is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist church. It is of note that Mr. Howell was with General Wright and helped in the execution of fifteen Indians, ten miles from Spokane, Washington, on a creek that is named Hangman creek from that occurrence. In the battle before this there had been killed about fifteen hundred ponies and twenty-one Indians.

MURDOCK CAMERON. To the highlands of Scotland we have to go to find the birthplace of Mr. Cameron, and 1849 was the date of this event, his parents being Finlay and Ann Cameron, natives of the same country. Our subject is the brother of Daniel Cameron, mention of whom is made in this volume. In 1866 he came to this country with Daniel and they were together in the travels and labors outlined heretofore, and in 1871, together, they made their way into the territory now embraced in the county of Latah. They took homesteads, our subject now living on his four miles north from Moscow. He has added by purchase to the original place until he has four hundred acres of land, which make one of the typical farms of the entire county, being handled in a skillful manner and annually producing abundant returns of good crops. Mr. Cameron has always taken the part of the wise and interested citizen in the affairs of the county and state and has done much for the upbuilding of the same, while he has prosecuted his own private enterprises with vigor and sagacity. He has a fine house, commodious and substantial out buildings and barns, and his farm bears the imprint of good management and thrift in every department.

In 1892. Mr. Cameron made his way back to the land of his nativity, and there on March 15, of the same year, in the town of Roshshire, he married Miss Annie, daughter of John and Maggie McKenzie, natives of Scotland, the daughter also being native to that land. Their bridal trip was the journey to the western home provided by the sturdy labors of Mr. Cameron and here they have been blessed by the advent of four children, Ann, Maggie, Christina and Finlay. Mr. Cameron and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church and are faithful exponents of the faith they hold, while they are valuable members of society and esteemed by all.

MARQUES L. SMITH. This representative agriculturist dwells seven miles northeast from Garfield and owns one hundred and sixty acres of land well improved. He raises a diversity of crops and fruits and also cattle and horses. Mr. Smith was born in Marion county, Indiana, near Indianapolis, on September 8, 1839, the son of Simeon and Hannah (McCoy) Smith. The father was a blacksmith, born in Lincoln county, Kentucky, on March 6, 1810, and died in March, 1876. The grandfather, Hezekiah Smith, fought under George Washington, for six years in the Revolutionary war. The great-grandfather, Hezekiah Smith, was murdered by the Tories and Indians while his son, Hezekiah, was fighting for the independence of the colonies. Our subject learned the blacksmith trade and worked with his father and attended subscription school. He remained at home until twenty-two years of age. The father went to Fremont county, Iowa, in 1857 and opened up a blacksmith shop and there wrought until his death. When the war broke out Marques L. enlisted in Company A, Fourth Iowa, and served two years. Following this he returned to his old home and farmed there until February, 1877, when he removed to Yolo county, California, and there engaged in blacksmithing until 1880. Then he came to Latah county, having explored it in 1877, visiting in the fort at Moscow and Palouse during the Indian outbreak. He took a farm in Whitman county, just across the line from his present farm. Later he bought his present place and has resided there since that time.

On December 23, 1860, Mr. Smith married Miss Sarah J., daughter of McCoy and Sarah (Jones) Malcom, and to them have been born eight children, as follows: Charles S., in Latah county; Carleton R., in Latah county; Thomas, in Whitman county, Washington; Peter, at home; Harrison, deceased; Elberta, wife of J. T. Green, in Farmington; Louisa M., wife of Joseph Martin, in Latah county; Clara, wife of L. E. Harrington, in Nez Perces county. Mr. Malcom was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1818, and his wife was born in Clinton county, Ohio, in 1819. Mrs. Smith was born in Delaware county, Indiana, on February 1, 1842, and her brothers and sisters are as follows: James, deceased, and the others are all in Iowa, John, Isaac, Albert and George. Mr. Smith had one brother, Andrew, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the United Brethren church at Cedar creek. Mr. Smith was nominated by the Populist party for state senator and came within nine votes of being elected. He and his wife were delegates to the national Populist convention in Omaha. In 1898 Mr. Smith was elected for county commissioner on the Populist ticket and discharged his duties with credit to himself and benefit to the county. He is always active in politics and is ever laboring for the progress of the county.

JOHN E. GRINER. This enterprising and intelligent farmer resides on two hundred and forty acres of fine land seven miles east from Garfield, Washington, where he raises abundant returns of diversified crops, having his farm well improved and cultivated. John E. was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, on February 22, 1859, the son of John and Elizabeth (Carnahan) Griner. The father was a farmer, born in 1835, the son of Jacob Griner, while the mother was born in the Keystone state in 1839, and her parents, Samuel and Susan, were born there also. Our subject gained his education from the common schools in Pennsylvania and Kansas. The family removed to Kansas in 1870, settling in Pottawatomie county, where they farmed and raised stock for sixteen years, then decided to come west and landed in Spokane, over the Northern Pacific road, on February 22, 1886. A short stay there sufficed and then the father came to Latah county and took land which he farmed until his death in 1899. Our subject bought a quarter section of land, mentioned above, and to the improvement and cultivation of this he has assiduously devoted himself that time.

Mr. Griner married Miss Maggie Bills, on October 23, 1884, in Kansas, and to this union, four children have been born, Nellie, Grace, Earl and James. Mrs. Griner's father, John Bills, was a miller born in Indiana, in January, 1829, and her mother, Julia (Hill) Bills, was born September 12, 1846 in Ohio. Mrs. Griner was born in Indiana, on March 18, 1862, and she has the following brothers and sisters: Wilber, in Kansas; Allie, wife of George Griner, in Latah county; Ola, wife of John Conkling, in Oklahoma; George, in Kansas; Josie, wife of Elmer Mark, living in southern Kansas. Mr. Griner has the following named brothers and sisters: Henry, in Garfield; Josiah, deceased; Oliver, deceased; George, in Latah county; Mary, deceased; Hettie, wife of Columbus Cockrell, in Latah county; Phillip, on Camas Prairie; Maggie, wife of E. C. Covey, in Washington; Pollard, deceased; Bertha, wife of William Hayden, in Latah. Mrs. Griner is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Griner is one of the substantial men of the county and stands in esteem among his fellows.

JAMES D. KUNES. This enterprising and substantial farmer and intelligent citizen of Latah county is rightly classed among the prominent and progressive men of his section and as one of the real builders of the county and developers of the same, he is entitled to representation in this volume of its history, being also a man of excellent personal qualities and of a good standing among his fellows.

Mr. Kunes was born in Centre county, Pennsylvania, on June 19, 1841, being the son of Jacob and Hannah (Lucas) Kunes. He was educated in his native state and there remained engaged in farming and lumbering until 1878. He was determined then to see the west for himself and to investigate its resources. He accordingly came to Oregon and after one year spent there he made his way to Idaho. He went to work at lumbering on the Clearwater, and there and in other sections he was engaged until 1886, when he took his present place, as government land. His farm lies twelve miles northeast from Kendrick, being near Linden, and in addition to the quarter section in the home place he has eighty acres of land near by, making a total of two hundred and forty acres. He devotes himself to general farming and also has a good orchard, having his farm well improved.

In Cameron county, Pennsylvania, occurred the marriage of Mr. Kunes and Miss Sarah Lupro, the nuptials occurring in 1870, and to them has been born one child, Maud, wife of George Welker, living in Latah county.

Mr. David Kunes, a brother of our subject, lives with the latter. David Kunes was born in Centre county, Pennsylvania, on August 25, 1836, and he and his brother have been together most of their lives. David was married in Pennsylvania, but his wife died in the early seventies. He has one son, George Kunes, living in Pennsylvania. These brothers are well known and highly respected men and have always conducted themselves in a commendable manner, with manifestation of uprightness and goodly virtues.

CHARLES B. TOWNE. This representative citizen and capable agriculturist, and substantial and upright man is entitled to a place among the leading citizens of Latah county and it is with pleasure that we accord him such in this volume, being assured that he is one who has labored faithful and wisely for the upbuilding of this county and to make it what it is at this time, one of the leading counties of the state. Charles B. was born in Clayton county, Iowa, on January 7, 1855, being the son of Ethamer S. and Ellen

L. Towne, natives of New York and farmers there until they came west to Iowa and Minnesota, whence in 1876, they went to California, and eight months later came to Idaho, selecting a homestead adjoining that now occupied by our subject, which is five miles north from Moscow. Here the father farmed until 1891 when he retired from active work and is now living with his son, Albert, in the vicinity of Moscow. Our subject took his present place at the same time his father homesteaded the adjoining quarter. He had remained with his father up to that time and then he continued to live with the parents, working both places until 1887, when he removed onto his own and there he has dwelt since that time. He has devoted his entire attention to farming and stock raising and he has achieved a good success, having now two hundred and forty acres, well improved and stocked, which produce abundant returns in crops.

On May 14, 1884, Mr. Towne took unto himself a wife, the lady of his choice being Miss Jennie E., a native of South Dakota, and daughter of Hezekiah and Mary J. Townsend, natives of Pennsylvania, but now farmers of South Dakota. To this amiable and happy union there have been born two children, Edgar and Nettie. Mr. Towne is a man of good ability and he has manifested commendable wisdom in the manipulation of his business affairs while also he has not failed to evince an active interest in the political matters and local doings, and he has ever shown a broad public spirit and characteristic uprightness and integrity.

M. J. SHIELDS was born in Lockport, Niagara county, New York, on September 15, 1852, being the son of John and Bessie (Tyan) Shields. His early schooling was received in his native place and later he studied in Rochester, New York, but at the age of sixteen went into the sterner duties of life. In 1870, he removed to San Francisco and remained there until 1878, then came to Moscow. He first started as a dealer in implements, also handling mill machinery, and for a time he had the largest distributing warehouse in the entire Palouse country. He established saw mills in addition to this mammoth business and his usual success attended him in this venture, and he handled the products of the forest from the rough logs to the finest finishing material, having the necessary saw and planing mills for the manufacture of all this. In 1899 he confined his efforts to implements alone and growing and handling grass seeds of all kinds. He owns twelve hundred acres of fine land which he devotes to this purpose, and the seeds from this excellent farm find their way all over the country. He handles about two hundred head of cattle on this farm, which are fed from the remnants of the seed productions. The farm has the capacity of five hundred head and he will soon add this number. For the selling of the productions, he has a three story brick building in the center of the city, with ground plan twenty-five by one hundred feet. In addition to his fine business, Mr. Shields owns and operates the electric light plant of the city and also operates a retail store for electrical furnishings.

The marriage of Mr. Shields and Miss Sarah A., daughter of John E. and Mary Henry, and a native of Thomaston, Maine, was celebrated in 1886 and to them have been born four children, namely: Fred M., Madeline M., James H. and Louis H. Mr. and Mrs. Shields are members of the Roman Catholic church, while he affiliates also with the Elks.

HENRY C. SMITH. This capable and substantial agriculturist and stockman is one of the prominent men of Latah county and deserving of mention in this volume of his county's history, and it is with pleasure that we accord him consideration. Henry C. was born in Clark county, Ohio, on January 3, 1845, the son of Peter and Phœbe (Judy) Smith. The father was a school teacher and real estate dealer, born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1802. The mother was born in Ohio, in 1807, her parents being John and Phœbe (LaMasters) Judy. In addition to our subject, this worthy couple had other children, as follows: Elizabeth, deceased; Orlanda, deceased; Ellen, deceased; Matilda, deceased; Alonzo in Wardner, Idaho; Nancy A., wife of Captain E. C. Davis, in Sumner, Illinois; John J., died in service, during the Civil war; Mary, wife of H. H. Burbank, deceased; Rhoda T., wife of George Heath, deceased; Peter J., with the county commissioners of King county, Washington; Samuel M., in Latah county; Phœbe C., wife of Harrison Combs, in East St. Louis. In 1846, the parents took our subject to Lawrence county, Illinois, and he remained at home until 1870, then went to work for himself, engaging in the manufacture of lumber, which occupied him for four years. This labor was in Jasper county, and in 1875 he took a contract for building bridges, and in the fall of that year he came to Puget Sound. He engaged in farming until 1878, when he came to the territory now embraced in Latah county. He bought the right of another man and homesteaded his present place, six miles east from Garfield, and this has been the family home since that time.

The marriage of Mr. Smith and Miss Narcie, daughter of Lorenzo D. and Lucinda (Ray) Jameson, was solemnized on January 23, 1879, in Latah county, and the following named children have been born to them: Phœbe L., an educator in Whitman county; Harry C., attending the university at Moscow; Henry M., at home; Minnie, attending the university at Moscow. Mr. Jameson was a native of Tennessee and his wife was born in 1840, while Mrs. Smith was born in Arkansas, in 1862, and died on September 10, 1888. Her brothers and sisters were named as follows: Zarelda, wife of S. M. Smith, in Latah county; Sarah, wife of J. H. Horton, in Latah county; Cordelia, deceased; Charles, in Wardner, Idaho; Margaret, wife of Thomas J. Woods, in Whitman county; Rebecca J., wife of F. S. Heath, in Latah county; Ralph R., in Mullan, Idaho, an engineer and assayer; Arthur, in Nez Perces county. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are members of the United Brethren church and he has been justice of the peace for sixteen years. He is active in politics, being allied with the Republican party. He is also a member of the school board and is always laboring for the betterment of educational facilities. The farm of our subject embraces one quarter section and is well tilled and a model, producing abundant crops of diversified grains and grasses, while an orchard of five hundred choice trees adds great value to the place. The father of our subject was a man of strong feeling for the Union cause and he labored faithfully for the principles that triumphed. He served as revenue collector in the eleventh district under Lincoln.

WALTER W. BEAN. In Rock county, Wisconsin, on February 17, 1858, Walter Bean was born to Edward and Mary (Vaughn) Bean, the father a farmer and native of Vermont. The parents died when this child was small and he went to live with his brother-in-law, Orin Vilie. He attended school and worked for Mr. Vilie until his fourteenth year, then started the battle of life for himself. However, when Mr. Vilie moved into Lodi and took up the harness business, our subject worked at harness making for a time and then went to the lumber regions of the north. Later he spent one year with the home people and then bought a ticket to Kelton, Utah, and thence he came by stage to Walla Walla, and from there direct to Latah county, to his brother James, whose place is just south of that owned by our subject. It was December 15, 1879, when Mr. Bean landed in Walla Walla and since that time he has steadily labored for the development and progress of Latah county. In 1883 he squatted on his present farm, seven miles east from Garfield, being just in time to save it from falling into the hands of the railroad as lieu land. He has now one-half section well improved, and skillfully tilled, it being one of the excellent farms of the county. He has good buildings and orchard and raises the cereals, hay and stock.

On March 18, 1883, he married Miss Louisa A., daughter of Robert and Eleanor (Hughes) Dailey, the nuptials occurring in Latah county, and to them have been born three children, Elsie, Itha J., Charlie W. Mrs. Bean's father was a farmer, born in Pennsylvania on October 17, 1828, and his parents were natives of Virginia. Her mother was born February 9, 1838, in Pennsylvania, and her mother was Louisa (Strong) Hughes. Mrs. Bean was born in Illinois, on September 13, 1860, and educated in the public schools. Her brothers and sisters are named as follows, James, in Latah county; John L., and Hughes I., both in Nez Perces county; Anna, wife of W. W. Davis; Robert R., Charles M., the last three in Latah county. Mr. Bean has the following brothers and sisters, Enoch, deceased; James, in Latah county, was an old soldier; Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Warner, in Portland; Sarah, wife of Oran M. Vilie; Edward, deceased, was a soldier; Hepsie, wife of Benjamin Howard, in Asotin county; Ira, in Wisconsin; Ellen, in Latah county; Elsie, in Nez Perces county; Hulda, wife of Mr. Spencer, in Asotin county; Willie T., in Nez Perces county. Mr. Bean is a strong believer in the virtues of temperance and a strict adherent of his faith, while he and his wife are members of the Christian church, in Palouse. He has been on the school board for eight years and evinces an ardent interest in the betterment of educational facilities.

WILLIAM P. DALE. This well known and representative business man of Moscow who is handling a first-class dray, bus and mail line is deserving of much credit for the faithful way in which he has wrought not only since coming to Latah county but since he came to the western regions, which dates back for many years, he having passed a life full of the stirring experiences incident to pioneering and hardships that make the frontiersman self-subsistent and fearless.

William P. was born in Nicholas county, Kentucky, on October 9, 1847, being the son of Joshua Dale, now of Ray county, Missouri. His parents removed to this latter place while he was an infant and there he received his education in the common schools, and at the early age of fifteen started for himself, laboring in a manufactory and salesroom of a tobacco house for two years. Then in 1865 he set out across the plains with a mule team. The trains preceding and following his were much troubled by the Indians and many were the gruesome sights of corpses, burned wagons and decaying animals that met their gaze as they journeyed, and at Fort Laramie some detestable white men rigged themselves as Indians and stole the stock. In due time he arrived in Walla Walla and immediately set out driving seven yoke of exen from that city to Rocky bar in Idaho, hauling the machinery for a stamp mill. Three months were consumed in the trip and the dead of winter was on them before they reached the end and our subject suffered terribly, freezing his feet, from which he did not recover for six months, in fact they trouble him to this day. Later he bought mule outfits and freighted to Boise and Silver City until 1868, then to Orofino for one year, then sold the teams and repaired to the territory now embraced in Latah county. He took a preemption and homestead, and one year later went to packing from Lewiston to the mines, and then followed a mining excitement to the Swauk, where he lost one thousand dollars and gained nothing but experience from which trip he returned to Wallula and went to work for Dr. Baker. Soon he came on to Lewiston where he packed for Grosteen & Benard, and in 1877 came back to Latah county where he has remained since that time.

Mr. Dale and Martha C. Robie were married in 1886. He affiliates with the Royal Arcanum. It is of note that Mr. Dale assisted materially in building the fortifications here during the Indian trouble, and at one time, he and three or four others were surrounded by two hundred Indians who demanded their execution on a rumor that one of them had murdered a squaw. Mr. Dale, being able to speak their language, succeeded in staying their murderous designs until an investigation could be held when the charge was shown to be groundless. Mr. Dale has labored in all the various and arduous callings of the frontiersman, and has certainly done a noble part in the opening up of this country, and he deserves the honor bestowed upon the pioneer, and he is esteemed and honored by all.

RICHARD BEASLEY. It is with pleasure that we accord to the representative agriculturist, and capable and substantial citizen and stockman whose name initiates this paragraph, since he has labored here from a time previous to the organization of Latah county with display of energy and assiduity and has accumulated a generous portion of this world's goods as a recompense for his thrift and industry, while commensurate with these excellent qualities are his intrinsic moral worth and unswerving integrity that have constantly been in evidence since that time.

Richard was born in Schuyler county, Missouri, on November 10, 1845, being the son of William and Dulcena (Westrope) Beasley, natives respectively of Tennessee and Kentucky. They went to Missouri in 1840 and farmed there until 1865, when the family came across the plains, settling in Umatilla county, Oregon. Our subject and the father engaged in the stock business together until 1878, when he bought the son's interest. In the same year, Richard came to Idaho, settling in Paradise valley, where he purchased a quarter section and homesteaded another. Here he engaged in farming and stock raising until 1890, when he sold that property and bought a place five and one-half miles north from Moscow. This farm contained two hundred and sixty-seven acres. Recently he sold it and moved to Moscow. The father remained in Oregon until 1884, and then sold and came to Latah county, living with his children until the time of his demise, which occurred in 1891, the mother also passed away in 1894. Both are buried in the Moscow cemetery.

On August 5, 1872, in Umatilla county, Oregon, Mr. Beasley married Miss Sarah E. Looney, a native of Oregon, and to them have been born eight children, as follows: Ida V., Miles M., Robert L., Lizzie J., Alice E., May, Winnefred A., and Bessie B. Mrs. Beasley's parents, William and Jane (Nail) Looney, were natives respectively of Tennessee and Arkansas, and came to Lane county, Oregon, in the early 'fifties, but afterwards moved to Umatilla county, where they reside at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Beasley are members of the Baptist church and are devoted and ardent supporters of their faith, while in general walk they are faithful and given to hospitality and labors which redound to the good of all.

JAMES W. CLARK, better known as Bay Clark, is proprietor of the leading livery and feed stable in the city of Moscow, where he does a thriving business, also buying and selling horses. He holds rank among the leading business men of the city, being capable, upright and enterprising. He was born on July 3, 1860, the son of A. V. and Sarah E. (Hilliard) Clark, his native place being Bond county, Illinois. At the age of five he was brought across the plains by his parents, making the trip with horse teams and settling in Lafayette, Oregon. There he attended the public schools, then came to Walla Walla in 1875, taking there an additional course in educational training. He soon moved to Whitman county and was there during the Chief Joseph Indian war, assisting to build the forts that sheltered the people until the trouble abated. Then he started in life for himself, being eighteen years of age, and rented a farm until he became old enough to take land, then took a preemption, and a number of years later sold it and went into the livery business, also buying and selling horses. He has also farmed some since but has given most of his time with horses, and he is one of the most expert horsemen in this section of the country. In 1898 he went to Pullman, Washington, fitted out a livery and operated it for three years then sold out and came to Moscow, where he purchased the Commercial livery which he is handling in a skillful and successful manner at the present time, having fine turnouts, safe and stylish horses, and bestowing an untiring care for the comfort and safety of his patrons that merits the liberal patronage that he is enjoying now. Mr. Clark takes especial interest in political affairs, was appointed deputy United States marshal in 1892, and deputy sheriff in 1889 under George Langdon, and under F. M. Mix in 1890.

The marriage of Mr. Clark and Miss Lizzie M., daughter of D. M. and Susan Halley, of Bond county, Illinois, was celebrated in 1891, and to them have been born five children, Roy, Earl E., Hollice, Hazel, and Mary A., the baby. Mr. Clark is a member of the W. of W. and he is one of the influential and leading men of the county, having so conducted himself in all his relations, both in public office and private business enterprise, that he merits the esteem and confidence that is generously bestowed upon him, and it is with pleasure that we are enabled to grant him representation in this volume of his county history.

JOHN MANWARING. To this venerable and talented gentleman, who is one of the leading citizens of Latah county, it is with pleasure that we grant a representation in his county's history, and attempt to briefly outline the interesting and active career that he has spent in various business ventures, wherein he has demonstrated both his ability and sagacity with the substantial qualities that have characterized him. Our subject was born in Brenchley parish, county of Kent, England, being the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Barton) Manwaring, and the mother lived to be ninety-seven. The date of this birth was September 27, 1824, and for ten years he sought wisdom in the common and high schools of his land, then assisted his father four years in the mill, he being a practical miller, and then the intervening time until he was twenty-one was spent in the employ of a tradesman, learning, as he deems it, "The tricks of the trade" which were to dampen the tobacco and moisten the sugar, for which his father paid seventy pounds. He quit the business when his apprenticeship expired, and returned to his father and wrought in the mill until he was twenty-three, then hired as a commercial traveler for two years, after which he came, as do the leading spirits, to America to try the new world. Three years were spent in New York in flour milling, then he repaired to Madison, Indiana, and engaged in the manufacture of starch for five years. Following this we find him in Knoxville, Tennessee, in the flour milling industry again, and one year later, he removed to Georgia and in different portions of that state and at various occupations he was employed until the war was in full force, when he again ventured into the starch manufacturing business. But on account of hostilities, the governor of Georgia ordered all aliens into the trenches or to leave the state, and he chose the latter, going with his family to Richmond, Indiana, where he visited with a minister by the name of Wakefield, then took up milling again until the close of the war and at that time returned to Georgia and sold his property and placed a sixty-three thousand dollar claim against the federal government for provisions and mules furnished, for which he received one thousand dollars. After this he removed to Woodham, Canada, and followed the manufacture of flour for five years, then came to Moscow, where he engaged in the same business with the Moore brothers for six years. He now owns the brewery plant and leases it.

Mr. Manwaring was married to Miss Mary, daughter of George and Rebecca (Booth) Wilkes, and she is now deceased. Mr. Manwaring is a member of the I. O. O. F., being the oldest member in Moscow, and also he is identified with the Episcopalian church. He is one of the prominent and distinguished business men of the county and is secure in the esteem and confidence of his fellows.

HENRY M. ROGERS. One of Latah county's venerable and enterprising citizens whose career has been fraught with activities of a commendable nature in various portions of the country is mentioned at the head of this paragraph and he is today one of the representative agriculturists and substantial men of the county. Henry M. was born in Wales on November 25, 1827, being the son of Thomas and Elizabeth Rogers, natives of Wales, and the father was a merchant in that country. In 1832 they came to America, remaining in New York for six months then settling in Delaware county, Ohio, where they followed tilling of the soil until 1838. The father passed away in 1832. From Ohio they removed to Iowa, settling in Lee county, farming until 1847, then came to Oregon, later to California. The mother returned to Iowa from California and there died in 1889. Our subject came to Lane county, Oregon, in 1853, engaged in farming there until 1878, then he migrated to Idaho and homesteaded his present farm, which is two and one-half miles north from Moscow. He has bestowed his labors here since and he has a finely improved farm, with necessary and comfortable buildings and with one of the finest orchards that graces the county of Latah, all of which demonstrates the ability, skill, industry and wisdom of the gentleman who has wrought it out.

Mr. Rogers married Miss Pauline, daughter of Ephriam and Elizabeth Whited, natives of Virginia, their daughter being born in Indiana, in March, 1852, the nuptials occurring in Des Moines county, Iowa, and eleven children have been born to them as follows: James E., Elizabeth, deceased; Marion, M. Eliza, Matilda J., deceased; Milwood, Lucinda, Thomas, Johnson and Minnie. On September 23, 1898, death came to the happy home of Mr. Rogers and took thence the beloved and life-long, faithful helpmate who had traveled with him for nearly one-half of a century. Her remains were interred in the Moscow cemetery. Mr. Rogers and his wife were both identified with the Christian church and they have manifested the virtues of their faith in a true Christian life, and today he is quietly spending the golden days of his lengthened pilgrimage in the retreat of the home which his wisely bestowed labor has builded, and his son Thomas is carrying on the farm in a commendable manner under the supervision of his father.

REES PICKERING. This well known and representative citizen and enterprising business man of Latah county, conducts a real estate office in Genesee, handling also insurance and doing a general loaning business, in all of which capacities he is faithful, upright, and manifests commendable zeal and ability. Mr. Pickering was born in Belmont county, Ohio, on May 3, 1842, being the son of Elisha and Mary (Berry) Pickering, and in his native place he was educated, but at the age of eighteen he was summoned by the call of patriotism to the stern duties of military life, enlisting in the Fifteenth Volunteer Infantry under Captain Halloway in the Army of the Cumberland, the date of this act being September, 1861, and the time of his discharge December, 1865, making a service of four years and three months. In the battle of Stone River he was taken prisoner and suffered the horrors of Libby for two months, then was exchanged and soon was in the Chickamauga conflict. He fought at Missionary Ridge and at Franklin and Nashville, and participated in the major portion of the Atlanta campaign. Then he was sent to Texas and there at the date named was mustered out in San Antonio with the rank of captain, having entered as private. Thus was fulfilled one of the excellent military careers that demonstrates the sound patriotism which stirred our subject in his noble undertakings. Following this he returned to Ohio and embarked as a merchant, whence two years later he went to Iowa and farmed for ten years, removing then to Nebraska where he soon was installed as clerk in the Indian department of the Otoe reservation. Later he went to Indian Territory, having charge of the Pawnees for three years, then returned to Nebraska, the year being 1885, and there he remained until 1889 when he migrated to the Grande Ronde valley in Oregon. He remained there with a brother-in-law for four months then came on to Genesee, where he has wrought in the business world since, having also held many responsible public offices and is at the present time doing the duties of the city clerk.

Mr. Pickering was married in 1867 to Miss Sarah E., daughter of Filo and Maria Mead and seven children have been born to them, six of whom are living, as follows: Fred S., married; Marie, married to G. I. Ingraham and living in Spokane, Washington; Anna, wife of Charles Power, living in Genesee; Edna, with parents; J. L., living in Genesee; A. F., going to school. Mr. Pickering is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he is a man of great faithfulness and manifests integrity and becoming ability in all his walk in life, and is secure in the esteem and confidence of his fellows.

WILLIAM M. HEADINGTON, deceased. The esteemed gentleman whose name is above is eminently entitled to representation in the history of Latah county, and we grant this memorial, being assured that his life of worthy activity well deserves a permanent place in the county annals.

William M. was born on December 6, 1857, in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and early began the noble work of instruction. Even before his college course was done, he had gained a good reputation as an educator. He was a graduate of the Holbrook Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, also took a degree from the Poughkeepsie Law School at Poughkeepsie, New York. In 1883, he went to Iowa, teaching there for a short time, then repairing to Osage county, Kansas, in which place he was principal of the schools until he came to Colfax, Washington in 1892. Two years were spent as principal of the high school at that place and then he took up his residence in Moscow, and the work of the educator in Latah county. In 1898, he was admitted to the bar, and gave promise of a good career, but on April 25, 1899, death summoned him from earth. He was highly esteemed by all, and was a noble and good man. Mr. Headington was a member of the Moscow Camp of the W. of W., having been secretary of it since the organization. He was also a member of the I. O. O. F. at Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

The marriage of Mr. Headington and Miss Mattie, daughter of Joseph and Martha (Luther) Grant, was celebrated on August 22, 1889, in Osage, Kansas, and one child, Sarah Grace, born January 14, 1893, was the fruit of this happy union. On February 13, 1900, the little one died, and her remains lie buried beside the father's in the Moscow cemetery. Little Sarah was an unusually bright and attractive child and won the hearts of all who came in contact with her. Mrs. Headington was born in Erie county, Pennsylvania, on January 7, 1863, her parents also being natives of that state. Her father was a farmer and stockman, and came to Kansas in 1872, he now being retired from active business and living in Osage City, Kansas.

Mrs. Headington is a graduate from the State Normal, at Emporia, Kansas and has taught school since she was twenty years of age. Since her marriage, she was also active in teaching and at Colfax, Washington, she was the principal of the primary department. For four years, she taught in Moscow, and then was elected to fill the office of the county superintendent of schools; a second term was given her, and in that office she is laboring at the present time, being one of the best educators of the region and highly esteemed by all who know her. Mrs. Headington is a member of the Presbyterian church. She is also affiliated with the O. E. S., Ruby Chapter, No. 9; with the Star Lodge, Order of Rebekah; with the Artisans; and with the Moscow Circle, No. 92, Women of Woodcraft.

WILLIAM M. WELCH. At the present time the subject of this sketch is handling a sewing machine agency and operating the Grand Central hotel, the leading hostelry of Genesee, and an up-to-date and first class house in all its appointments and service.

William M. Welch was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on March 24, 1857, being the son of Lewis and Mary (Shea) Welch, and when a child he went with his parents to St. Cloud, Minnesota, where he attended a German school as no other was in reach. At the age of fourteen he was thrown out in the world on his own resources, then went to Cady, Wisconsin, and worked in the woods for one winter, after which he used this money to attend school at Hammond, Wisconsin, working his way along for five years when he took up teaching for three years in St. Croix, Wisconsin. Then he entered the River Falls Normal, where three years were profitably spent. Following this period, he again took up the work of the instructor and taught for four years in St. Croix, then repaired to the St. John's College and there completed both the commercial and classical courses, also carrying off the prize for oratory. Succeeding this, Mr. Welch entered the law offices of Clapp & Woodhard, at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and three years later completed the course in the office of D. W. Brockhard, of St. Cloud, Minnesota, being then admitted to the bar. At this time, Mr. Welch turned toward the west and next we find him in the chair of the instructor in Whitman county, Washington, also taking an active part in the politics of the county and delivering speeches in the campaigns. In 1896 he was appointed chief deputy in the assessor's office in that county. Subsequently to this term of service, we find Mr. Welch in Spokane attending the Casin-Blair commercial college and there he mastered shorthand and typewriting, and then went to teaching for a time. In 1898 he came to Genesee and took up the sewing machine business until 1901, when he decided to take up the business of the public host and so rented the Grand Central hotel. But as this does not occupy his entire time, he also attends to the sale of machines as heretofor. In 1899 and 1901, Mr. Welch took the stump in behalf of the reformed forces and did good work for that cause.

WILLIAM M HEADINGTON.

Mr. Welch married Miss Mary T. Keane, in Genesee, on July 5, 1898. Mrs. Welch, prior to her marriage, had been a teacher of excellent success and much experience, but at the time of her marriage she was operating a millinery shop in Genesee.

JOSEPH M. GREEN is one of Latah county's enterprising and industrious agriculturists, having a good farm seven miles east from Genesee where he has fine improvements and conducts a modern and up-to-date farm, everything manifesting the thrift and enterprise and skill of the owner, while his personal characteristics have been such as to win for him the confidence and esteem of his fellows. Joseph M. was born in Chillicothe, Ross county, Ohio, on April 8, 1851, being the son of T. S. and Nancy (Hurdle) Green, who removed to Sangamon county, Illinois, when their son was small. Our subject gained his first schooling in this Illinois home and later studied winters and worked on the farm in the summers until the age of nineteen and then worked out to gain enough money to take one year's course in the Wesleyan College near his home. Following this he assisted his father in the support of a large family until twenty-one and then stepped forth in the battle of life for himself, renting a farm for three years, at the end of which time he had accumulated one thousand dollars. The second thousand he gained in managing a farm for George Flint, in McLean county, Illinois, then he decided to get married and did so, and rented a farm for two years more, and the third thousand had been earned. For seven years more he rented in Illinois and then sold out and moved to Dayton, Washington, whence one year later he came to Genesee, renting a farm from J. P. Vollmer for eight years, handling a half section. Then Mr. Green took as a homestead his present one hundred and eighty acres, seven miles east from Genesee. He has five acres of orchard, good buildings and everything comfortable and in good order. Mr. Green is active in the welfare of his county and has several times acted as delegate to the Populist and Democrat conventions.

The marriage of Mr. Green and Miss Alice, daughter of Charles and Ellen (Sutherland) Rodgers, was solemnized at Belleplain, Illinois, in 1875, and ten children have been born to them: Thomas, living at home; Mattie E., wife of Granville E. Evans, living in Riverside, Okanogan county, Washington; Walter C., living with his parents; Ella, at home; Frank O., Clara, Wesley J., Melisa, Dick, the last four going to school, and Marie, the youngest. Mr. Green is a member of the Free Methodist church and is a man of stanch qualities of worth, and manifests a commendable life, being dominated by sound principles, and led in the paths of sagacity and uprightness.

J. NICHOLAS HASFURDHER. Among the substantial and prominent agricultural population, mention should be made in this volume of Latah county's history of the esteemed and enterprising gentleman whose name is at the beginning of this review, since he is one of the large property holders and has manifested since coming here commendable ability in business affairs, conducting himself in a manner to command the respect and win the confidence of all. Our subject was born in Germany, on September 10, 1835, being the son of Nicholas and Margaret Hasfurdher, natives of Germany, where also they lived until the time of their death. At the age of eighteen years, this son had finished his education in the schools and started on the path of life for himself, farming in the vicinity of his home for fourteen years, then embarking for America. He settled first in Chicago and worked for eight years in the foundries there and then removed to Carroll county, Iowa, where he purchased land and gave his attention to farming for fifteen years. He was numbered with the prosperous and leading men of that county and in 1890, he desired to see more of the west and accordingly sold his farm there and migrated to Latah county. He selected his present place one and one-half miles north from Genesee, and now has a fine total of two hundred and eighty acres of fine farming land. He gives his entire attention to farming and stock raising and has a success befitting the industry and thrift manifested by him, while his land is excellently tilled and well improved.

In the fall of 1864, Mr. Hasfurdher married Miss Catherine, daughter of Michael and Barbara Huslen, natives of Germany, the wedding occurring in Germany, and to this union were born the following children: Pauline, Victor, Joseph, Andrew, Martin, Mary, Annie, George and Maggie. Mr. Hasfurdher and his family give adherence to the Catholic church, and are devoted supporters of their faith. On August 28, 1896, death seized the loving mother and faithful wife, and her remains are buried in the cemetery near the home place. Mr. Hasfurdher takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of the county and state, and is a broad minded and liberal man, being a stanch supporter of our free institutions, and a loyal and capable citizen.

WILLIAM L. BIRAM. This well known business man of Genesee is deserving of representation in the history of Latah county, since he has wrought faithfully in the material development and substantial progress of the same, manipulating the business enter-

